PREFACE.

By the good hand of our God upon us are we brought through another year. On reviewing the year we see cause for abundant thanksgivings for all the mercies of the way in which the Lord has led us. Multitudes of those who began the year with us, have, during the lapse of its weeks and months, fallen around us. And while bereavement and distress have been the lot of others, we have had a goodly heritage. May our gratitude ever be commensurate with our manifold obligations!

It is, of course, generally known to our readers that during the year the editorship of our Magazines has changed hands. How far that portion of our Connexional polity, which requires a quinquennial change of the London officers, so called, is sound and good, it is not for us here to say; but having been chosen to succeed Mr. Harland in the editorial office, it is our duty and resolve, by the Divine assistance, to exert whatever ability is at our command, to sustain the credit of the office, and of the Connexion, and to promote the intellectual, moral, and spiritual profit of our readers.

We feel it right to express in this place our obligations to our predecessor for the courteous manner in which he acted towards us on our assuming his vacated chair. He volunteered whatever assistance we might desire, and offered a number of suggestions and advices which we have found of advantage. We have no doubt he will rejoice in our success as his successor, as we shall in his in his present sphere. Our thanks are likewise cheerfully tendered to our esteemed correspondents, for the numerous and useful contributions with which they have supplied us. A continuance of their favours is respectfully requested. The numerous readers of our Magazines are under no small obligation to our correspondents, and we trust they duly appreciate such obligation.

To our brethren in the ministry and all the office-bearers in our community we own no small amount of indebtedness. They are our coadjutors in the great work in which we are engaged, and largely does our success depend on their zealous and kindly co-operation. We hope to be assisted by them during the coming year: and that they will not only do their best to secure for us a larger circle of readers, but render us all the aid they can in the way of useful and interesting contributions, and above all, by fervent, continued, and believing prayer.

The Sabbath-schools of the Connexion are now "a great fact," and very solicitous are we to be "a power" among them. May we indulge a hope that our Magazines—Large and Juvenile—will be more extensively patronised by our teachers and scholars than has hitherto been the case? If so, will not 15,000 of our Large and 50,000 of our Juvenile Magazine, be a moderate monthly circulation to expect? Let but our friends, one and all, resolve to push our circulation up to this point, as its minimum, and it is done!

We rejoice to find that many of our friends are disposed to lend us a helping hand for the next year; and we sincerely trust that others will not be wanting. Next to the approval and blessing of the Saviour, we value the approval and aid of His servants. We have to request all our readers to peruse the prospectus attached to the present number, and to give its contents as wide a circulation as possible, in order to obtain for us a greatly increased number of subscribers for 1863. We shall be gratified if our wishes in this behalf be met, and unless they be, we fear our hands will inevitably hang down, and our hopes of increased usefulness be blighted.

There are two other points more or less directly connected with our present Connexional interests, on which we are constrained to offer a word.

The first is the prevailing distress in the cotton district. As a Connexion we shall sustain our full proportion of loss, both in the monetary doings of our people, and in the subscribers for our periodical literature. So far, it is matter of surprise and of devout gratitude, that our afflicted friends have done as well as, we have reason to believe, they have. We pray that their hearts may be comforted, and that they may be liberally assisted by those who have the means within their power. Let all our friends who are in better circumstances think of them, and let both the distressed and their sympathisers remember that the throne of grace should be earnestly importuned for help in time of need. Our wrapper shows that the hearts of Primitive Methodists are touched with the feeling of their brethren's distresses. We shall be happy to report progress in this particular, from time to time. If our subscribers fall off in the suffering district, will our friends elsewhere try to obtain an increase? We hope they will kindly do so.

The second point we wish to notice is the Jubilee Movement. We are afraid that in some parts of the Connexion there has been but little done in this matter. Why not? The objects contemplated are surely of sufficient moment, our obligations to the Giver of all good are unquestionably great, and that this movement would give us a fitting opportunity of giving practical expression to our sense of those obligations, can hardly be doubted. The sincerity of our professed gratitude, our Connexional credit, and the well-being of multitudes of deathless souls, may be compromised by our remissness in this case. Let the time between now and next March be diligently improved, in order that the Jubilee efforts of the Primitive Methodist Connexion may not reflect discredit upon us, but that the glory of God, the interests of our Zion, and the welfare of many souls, both now and hereafter, may be promoted.

Many of our people and preachers have done nobly already—let others emulate their zeal, and hear a voice from heaven, saying, "Go thou, and do likewise."

Hoping that the improvements to be introduced into our Magazine next year will not be forgotten, but that all our readers will on this account be resolved to patronise us again, and that in the best sense of the words they may all enjoy "a merry Christmas, and a happy new year," we now conclude, subscribing ourselves with great respect, yours to serve,

W. ANTLIFF, EDITOR.

A NEW YEAR'S ADDRESS.

DEAR FRIENDS,—During the past year many important changes in the world and the church have taken place. Fierce contentions have been going on. Knowledge has been contending with ignorance, truth with error, and virtue with vice. Nor have the children of men escaped the vicissitudes that are incident to this ever-changing world. Some men in their position or prospects in this life have been lifted up, and others have been cast down: some have been filled with joy and gladness, others have been almost overwhelmed with sorrow and distress: some have flourished in the bloom of health and strength, others have wasted away in sickness and disease. Many an eye that at the beginning of the past year beamed with intelligence has been dimmed, and many a beautiful countenance has become pallid by the hand of death. Many a tongue that spoke in tones of sweetness, and poured forth words of wisdom, is silent in the undisturbed stillness of the tomb: many a happy family has been visited with severe affliction, and called to pass through great distress: many a faithful husband has had to mourn over the unexpected loss of a dear departed wife: many a disconsolate widow's heart has been wrung with anguish over the grave of her dearest, her only earthly protector: many an indulgent father has sorrowed greatly because of the early departure of his beloved son, whom he hoped would have been the staff of his declining years, and would have smoothed for his weary feet the uneven path of life: many a fond mother has wept bitterly because the hand of death has torn from her embrace an affectionate, and perchance an only daughter, who was her parent's solace and her earthly joy. Yes; and as that bereaved mother followed that dear departed one to her final resting-place, such was the keen distress of her bleeding heart, that she was heard to exclaim, "Oh, my child, my child, would to God I had died for thee!"

Such, no doubt, are some of the scenes of sorrow and woe that have been witnessed in the year that is past. The future is impenetrable to mortal vision, unknown to finite man, and can only be seen by the Great Eternal. It is quite certain, however, that in the course of this year, unexpected and mysterious events will take place. Many of the human race will be overtaken by adversity, many by affliction, many by death. But who? Ah! this is an important question. That it is important may be seen and felt, especially when we consider the solemnities, circumstances, and consequences of death. Oh, my soul! it is, indeed, a solemn thing to die. The very idea of being consigned to—

Unpierced by human thought,
The dreary regions of the dead,
Where all things are forgot.”

is calculated to fill the mind with sacred awe. The circumstances of death are sometimes terrible and alarming. The sudden accident, the raging disease, the slowly beating pulse, the pale cheek, the swimming eye, the quivering lip, the cold sweat, are circumstances generally attendant on death, and invest it with an association of ideas from which the human spirit shrinks as with an instinctive dread. But the consequences of death, in many instances, are by far the most awful. Death is to man the avenue or medium out of time into eternity. Indeed at death is fixed man's future state of being. He is then elevated to heaven, or consigned to hell; raised to immortal bliss, or sinks in endless woe. Death is also a matter of uncertainty. To us, at least, its shafts appear to fly promiscuously and at random. It seizes as its victims those whom we thought would not yet have been taken, and some whom we thought would have been taken have been left behind. So that we cannot tell, we do not know, to whom the summons may next arrive. Hence the uncertainty there is in this matter. Yes; and strange to say, on the very fact of this uncertainty is found unjust cause for daring presumption on the part of mankind. Men presume upon time, and neglect the vast concerns of eternity. He who is in the midst of his years, “the prime of life,” talks not, thinks not of death, but refers this subject to the decrepit and the aged. He who rejoices in the full vigour of health and strength, forgets “to number his days and apply his heart unto wisdom;” he leaves this work to the delicate and infirm, whose “heart and flesh are failing.” There is much truth in the following words:—

Certain it is, that the vast majority of human kind are living as though they had come to a positive conclusion that they shall never die,—living as if they had no part to act, no position to occupy, but on the stage of this short fleeting life. Judging from their conduct, we might naturally suppose “their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue for ever, and their dwelling-places to all generations.” Thus they seem to think, thus they appear to act, notwithstanding the many solemn and earnest warnings they have received, while they have been urged to pursue a far different course. Warnings! did we say? Yes, and where is the man who, during the past year, has not been warned in some way or other? Perhaps it has been by the lightning's flash, the thunder's roar, the pelting storm—or by the Word, the Spirit, and Providence of God. Thousands of the unconverted and careless have been admonished of their danger, their duty, and their interest. Some of their neighbours, friends, and relatives have been taken away. They have seen “the king of terrors” marching abroad in his most ghastly forms, cutting down on the right hand and on the left, and hurrying mortals to the bar of God. Yes, and in these dispensations of Divine Providence they have heard a voice, speaking in deep and solemn tones—tones that they could not misunderstand, saying, “Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.”

For awhile these things, in some instances, made impressions, called forth something like serious resolves; but alas! the former are blighted, the latter forgotten, or if not forgotten, disregarded. Regardless of the past, and unmindful of the future, some of them probably are ready to say within themselves, “Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.” They have plunged, or are now plunging deeper and deeper in the sea of earthly care, and are being carried by the fierce winds of popular excitement or worldly folly, with fearful impetuosity down the rapid stream of time; and there is too much reason to fear that many of them, wrapt in fancied security, will not awake to a full consciousness of their awful danger and perilous condition, until death suddenly comes upon them; comes at a time when they least expect it and are most unprepared to meet it. “O, that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!”

Dear reader, have you pursued, or are you now pursuing a course similar to what has just been described? If so, you will do well to reflect on the past, examine the present, and contemplate the future. The performance of this duty may not be found the most agreeable; it is nevertheless binding and indispensable. Sins must be called to remembrance, ere they can be repented of and forgiven. Danger must be really apprehended and felt ere a place of refuge or safety will be sincerely and earnestly sought for. There must be an enlightened contemplation of the future, before a full preparation for the awful realities it will disclose can be effectually obtained. Then shrink not from the task in question; practical attention to it is your interest—your life! If not probable, it is possible that in reference to you the irrevocable decree has gone forth, “This year thou shalt die;” and before its rolling course is closed, you may, with millions more who are now living, be numbered with the dead ! If, then, you have entered upon the last year of your earthly existence, it is not difficult to say what line of conduct ought to mark the general tenor of your life. It ought to be—

“ Your sole concern, your single care,
To watch, and tremble, and prepare
Against the fatal day.”

Remember, that if “ the last enemy ” should come and find you unprepared, the event will be awful and its results tremendous ; inasmuch as it will involve, not only the dissolution of the body, but also the death of the soul ! That punishment which is always progressing, and will never terminate ; hence it has been called, “ The death that never, never dies.”

True follower of Christ, perhaps the decree has gone forth, and it has also been said of you, “ This year thou shalt die.” Well, if it be so, you have nothing to fear ; “ For you to live is Christ, and to die is gain.” Make religion and the momentous concerns of eternity the first and last business of life. Let it be your care to promote to the uttermost of your power the glory of God. Labour with renewed zeal, with unwearied diligence in His blessed service ; daily examine your title to heaven ; seek to be made more fully meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. Henceforth, “ Let your life be hid with Christ in God, that when He who is your life shall appear, you may also appear with Him in glory.”

B I O G R A P H Y.

1. THOMAS SMITH was born at Gevendale, Yorkshire, England, on June 1st, 1818. His parents were among the first fruits of Primitive Methodism in that county. By example and precept they sought to bring up their children in the fear of God, and with prayers and tears to lead them to Christ. Thomas being of a mild and good disposition, and early wrought on by the Holy Spirit, was mercifully kept from the follies of youth ; however, it was not until his twenty-first year that he found Christ, and that at a class-meeting to which he had been led by a friend. He was now a happy man, and could praise the Lord with his whole heart. Immediately after his conversion he joined the Church, and continued a constant member to the day of his death.

In 1833 he married and came to Canada, but alas, both himself and wife were attacked with fever and ague on their arrival ; the attack was so severe and protracted that they got discouraged and returned home, where she soon died rejoicing in God—the God of her salvation. After a while he entered into the marriage state with her who now mourns his loss, and eventually came again to this country to his only brother, who had emigrated a few years previous. But somehow our brother Smith was not very successful in this land—hard labour, toil and trial seemed to be his lot; however, he clung close to Christ and grew in grace and in the knowledge of God day by day. Some years ago he became a class-leader in our Ebenezer Chapel, Markham Circuit, and in the discharge of his duties he was faithful, and kindly respected by all and honoured above many. Truly he was a man of God, and one who walked in all the commandments of the Lord blameless. He was never strong, and during the spring failed rapidly. His disease was beyond the power of medicine to remove. He gradually drooped and died, rejoicing in God, victorious through Christ, and now in heaven he is clothed in white and singing the song of the Lamb. His death took place on the 18th of July, 1861; on the 20th his remains were carried to the grave, followed by a large concourse of sorrowing friends, to whom the writer strove to administer consolation and instruction; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints.

2. JOHN, the son of George and Nancy GEE, was born at Lee Fair, Yorkshire, February 20th, 1796, but he lost his mother when he was only three years and a half old, and got very little education except at a Sunday School.

His father having been left with a small family, John was put to work at a coal-pit when he was very young; and when he was eleven years and a half old he was put to farmer's service, and continued for twelve years. The Holy Spirit strove powerfully with him, and he made many promises to begin to serve God.

He was married on August 10th, 1818, but he still followed his old course of card-playing and other kinds of wickedness, until the Lord sent the Primitive Methodists to Hambleton, in Yorkshire. The first missionary who visited that place was Samuel Laister, in 1819, when he preached in the open air, and was followed by John Harrison and his wife, W. Clowes, and others. John continued to hear the Primitive Methodist ministers, and was much interested with their singing, but remained without God and without hope in the world, until Robert Howcroft was called out to travel by Leeds Circuit, when his brother, William Howcroft, asked John to go with him to Leeds. The Lord was striving with him at the time, and William being a local preacher, they went cheerfully together, the distance being sixteen miles. There was a lovefeast in the afternoon in a factory on Richmond Hill, and at night Robert Howcroft preached in Sally Taylor's cellar, Kirkgate. The Spirit of the Lord strove very powerfully with him, but he did not find liberty to his soul.

dened with sin. William Howcroft had been preaching in a factory, and was conducting a prayer-meeting afterwards in Abraham Wood's house, when he cast his soul upon the Lord, who pardoned all his sins, May 21st, 1820. He said on the Monday morning following, "I thought I had got into a new world."

When he got home he commenced family prayer, and his wife was glad to find the lion was turned to a lamb. He joined the Primitive Methodist Society at Hambleton; and in 1821 his name was put on the Brotherton Circuit's plan. The circuit was large, and William Howcroft being called out to travel, John had to take charge of the class at Hambleton. He was likewise leader of a large class at Selby, a distance of four miles; and they were glorious days to him, to see young souls brought out of darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to Christ.

But he had to leave the place at the end of about five years, which he ascribed to the Providence of God. He went to live at Kippax, in Leeds Circuit, and was a local preacher in that circuit, and remained such for twenty-two years, in which time he did not labour in vain in the Lord. While at Kippax, the work of God got very low for want of a suitable place in which to worship; but the Lord began to revive His work at that place, and the people earnestly prayed for a new chapel, and God heard their cry, and answered it. There was an old barn put up for sale, and he with other five friends entered themselves as trustees, and they bought it, and with much labour and prayer, and the assistance of friends, they got it converted into a chapel and house, in which many souls have been brought from darkness to light. Some of his own family being among the number caused him to glorify God.

He subsequently removed to Newton, in the Pontefract Circuit. His name was then put on their plan, and it continued thereon for four years; but on account of affliction he had to leave his work. He then removed to Drighlington, Bradford Circuit, November 6th, 1850, and was received as a local preacher; and through the blessing of God he had many precious seasons in it. But through affliction for the last four or five years he could not labour as much in the cause of the Lord as he had done; and for the last two years he had to cease from preaching altogether. But He who is rich in mercy gave him grace to bear his affliction with resignation, knowing that at the end of his sufferings there was in reversion for him a great reward.

His experience was very sound as regarded his future inheritance, and his faith strong. He used to say both in class and in private, that he expected his dissolution would be sudden.

The week before he died, he was a great deal better and stronger than he had been for some time, and he said to his wife, "If I continue in this way, I shall be able to take a few more appointments on the plan." He with his wife went to Leeds on the 27th of July, returned in the afternoon, and he got his supper at a late hour, and went to bed, not knowing that he would have to pass through the river Jordan before morning; but it pleased the Lord to take him about twenty-five minutes past four o'clock on Sunday morning, the 28th of July, 1861. He was sixty-six years of age, leaving his family, class, and the Sunday-school to lament their loss, but he has gone to join the Church triumphant in heaven.

The prayer of the writer is, that the whole of his family may meet him in heaven.

He was a trustee for Drighlington Chapel and Sunday School; he had laboured hard as a Sunday School teacher and superintendent for upwards of thirty years; he was much attached to the children, and often told them to be sure to attend his funeral, and a considerable number did so.

3. JAMES BURGESS, late a local preather, Manea, Downham Circuit, was born at Upwell in 1796. During the first twenty-six years of his life he was a stranger to the saving grace of God, ignorant of the plan of salvation, and walked according to the course of this world, gay, giddy, thoughtless, manifesting little or no concern about the things belonging to his everlasting peace. About that time he was induced to attend the Wesleyan chapel, where the Spirit of the Lord wrought powerfully upon his mind, convinced him of his lost and ruined condition, and of the absolute necessity of a personal interest in the blood of the Lord Jesus. At once he sought Divine mercy, believed on the Son of God for redemption, and obtained the peace which passeth all understanding; he united with the Wesleyans in Church fellowship, and for several years was a consistent member and local preacher. But alas! in the time of temptation he turned aside from the path of rectitude, left the fold of the Redeemer, and was driven almost to despair; still the Spirit of the Lord did not wholly forsake him. Often would he repeat the lines beginning with,

"What peaceful hours I once enjoyed!" &c.

About 1835 he removed from Upwell to Manea, and through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists, he was restored to the favour of God. From that important period in his history until his removal to the spirit world, a period of twenty-six years, his conduct was most exemplary; having confessed the name of Jesus, he studied to maintain good works, and adorned his Christian profession by a consistent and holy life.

He possessed in an eminent degree a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. His humility was not feigned, but was exhibited in his countenance, as well as in his general deportment.

He was indeed clothed with it, and it was manifested to all; such were his lowly views, that he regarded himself as being "less than the least of all saints." The Bible was his constant companion; he delighted in the law of God; it was his meat and drink day and night, and he made it the rule and guide of his life. His attachment to the house of God was strong; his attendance at the means of grace punctual and regular, not allowing trifles to keep him away. "He loved the gates of Zion." The cause which he had espoused was dear to his heart; he manifested a peculiar concern for its prosperity, and being in easy circumstances, he contributed liberally towards its support; his house for the last twenty-six years has been a home for the preachers, and under his hospitable roof they always met with a hearty welcome.

As a preacher he was intelligent, pathetic, useful, and always acceptable. His removal from us was sudden and unexpected; all through life he had enjoyed an unusual state of good health, till a short time since, when it pleased God in His unerring wisdom, to take away the partner of his joys and griefs,—this was indeed a heavy stroke; and although he did not complain or murmur in the least at this dispensation of Divine Providence, yet from the time when it transpired he began gradually to decline. He was confined to his room only a few days; he suffered little or no pain, which led him to remark, "O how gently my Father is dealing with me even to the last." His mind was perfectly calm; no tempest swept over his soul, no doubts, no fears relative to his acceptance with God, lingered around to disturb his peace within. He experienced no bursts of rapture, no ecstasies of joy, but a holy calm, a heavenly serenity pervaded his departing spirit. A few hours before his death he exclaimed with great emphasis, "I am a poor unworthy sinner, but my all is in Christ. On Him alone I depend, He is my all and in all." On another occasion he said, "For more than twenty years I have been trying to live the gospel as well as preach it."

Some of his last words were, "It's all right! it's all right! if I die I shall go to heaven and be with Jesus, which is far better." A few minutes before his happy spirit took its flight to the unclouded regions of immortal glory, he said to his daughter who stood weeping by his bed-side, "My heart and my flesh are failing, but God is the strength of my soul and my portion for ever." He then breathed his last, falling asleep in the arms of Jesus.

"Calm was the moment and serene,
When all his sufferings closed;
No agony or struggle seen,
No feature discomposed."

He exchanged mortality for life on the 2nd of August, 1861, leaving a family of ten children to lament their loss. May they all follow the example which his life furnished, and at last meet him in heaven.

W. HAMMOND.

4. JOSEPH BRINDLEY, one of the oldest members and office-bearers in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, died at Belper, August 3rd, 1861, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. He was born at Hulland, a small agricultural village in Derbyshire, in 1794; and being blessed with a pious father, he passed through the period of youth without falling into gross sin. In 1812, the venerable William Clowes paid a visit to the part of Derbyshire where our brother resided; and under his powerful ministry, Joseph was brought to the knowledge of the truth in the eighteenth year of his age. His father, who was a Wesleyan, objected to Joseph's uniting with the Primitive Methodists; among whom, at that time, many strange things were witnessed, and concerning whom startling reports were circulated. The Holy Spirit was poured out in such abundance as had not been enjoyed since the early days of Methodism; and "physical phenomena," much like those beheld in the great Irish revival of 1859, were experienced in the meetings. Under the influence of sudden conviction, strong men dropped suddenly on the floor, writhing in mental agony, or motionless as if dead; women fainted; and new-born believers, in the ardour of their first love, wept or shouted aloud for joy. As is sometimes the case, these effects were ascribed by many to Satanic influence. A farmer not far from the locality under consideration, said that William Clowes was possessed of the devil*; and a woman, when going to a meeting, was heard to say, "I've put t' key in my pocket; but it's 'ardly safe, yo' known; m'appen they'll conjure it out." Perhaps crediting these evil reports, Joseph's father entertained a poor opinion of the new sect, saying, "It couldna stan' long;" and he tried various means to dissuade his son from uniting with it. But having got his soul saved among the people, and feeling an influence among them that he could not find anywhere else, he felt it to be his duty and privilege to cast in his lot with them. This conviction he carried out in August, 1812.

Since that period, nearly half a century has passed away; important changes have taken place; but the Primitive Methodist Connexion, instead of falling into oblivion, has increased full five hundred-fold, and still gives signs of increasing vitality in every part! To God be all the glory.

Having united with Christ and His people, Joseph wished for spiritual employment, and soon he was extensively engaged. Besides having preaching in his house, reproofing sinners, and leading a class, he received a call to preach the Gospel, especially in his own locality. From this important work he shrank for a while, being uncertain as to his Divine call, but increasing light broke in upon his mind, in answer to prayer, till he could refuse no longer, hence he commenced the arduous labour, from which he never retired till death. His preaching, like his dress and general appearance, was decidedly plain. "He didna preich, yo' known," said a country friend who frequently heard him, "he expleened like." Another remarked, "He worner a man as touk much notice o' texes ; his preiching an' his talk were pratty much alike." But if the congregation could not expect an intellectual treat from old Joseph, they could depend on his being there according to plan—there at the proper time—to do his best. Wind and weather did not hinder him. This valuable trait, which characterized his whole conduct, was accompanied with Christian meekness. He was constitutionally placid, and having learned meekness in the school of Jesus, he would rather suffer than contend, except in grave matters. Hence, while some might be falling out by the way, smiting their fellow-travellers with the fist of wickedness, and perhaps falling in, or fleeing from, the contest—Joseph enjoyed uninterrupted peace with God and the brethren, went on his way rejoicing, and daily increased his joy in the Lord.

His life in the world corresponded with his life in the church. Unlike some professors, he conscientiously did his duty to his employers. One of his late masters declares, that "Joseph Brindley always earned his wages." His conduct was blameless. He adorned the gospel of his Saviour in all things. Hence, his life was more eloquent in illustrating and recommending religion than his lips ever were. This course of holy living and hard labouring for God he kept up for nearly half a century. How was it done ? By reading the Bible, and holding communion with God. When Joseph was brought to God he was but a poor reader. He soon procured a pocket Bible, which he carried about with him as a lesson book ; and when the labours of the day were ended, he was seen, frequently in the summer evenings, sitting at the door of a farm-building (for he was a farmer's servant), slowly and reverently perusing the word of God. In this way, amid the scoffs and ridicule of fellow servants, he rapidly improved in reading, and in his acquaintance with the will of God.

From that period through the whole of a long life, he continued the practice of systematically reading the Bible. The word was hid in his heart and kept him from sin. He also taught it successfully to his children, all of whom embraced religion, and became office-bearers in the church. His attendance on the private as well as public means of grace was very regular. In the course of forty-nine years, he was never known to miss the class-meeting without a sufficient reason. He always rose early on Sunday mornings, opened the chapel doors, kindled a fire when necessary, opened the early prayer-meeting, and was the first to engage in prayer.

It is right to add that, though a poor man, he ever took pleasure in dividing his humble crust with the servants of God. Yea, up to the time of his last affliction, he would not deny himself the pleasure, though dependent on charity for support, of contributing his usual quota for the support of God's cause.

Brief and painful was his last affliction. I and my colleague frequently visited him, as did also his fellow-soldier, brother W. Hickenbotham. We questioned him closely about the ground of his confidence in God. His replies were very satisfactory. As during life, so in the solemn hour of death, he was not wrapt in ecstasy, or overflowed with joy. But he had a strong faith in the promises of God made to poor sinners through Jesus Christ. He stood securely on the rock of immutable truth; and hence in the storm of death, which drives so many to despair, and fills others with dreadful consternation, he was perfectly calm and serene—believing, he did not make haste. Calmly he died; and passed from poverty to riches; from a very small cot to a very large mansion; from a plain dress to a white robe and a starry crown.

Reader, let us follow him as he followed Christ, that we may join him in the upper world. His aged widow, who has served God as long as her sainted husband, and who hopes shortly to meet him in heaven, would be glad of your prayers.

JOHN BARFOOT.

5. Mrs. BETTY VICKERY was born at Shepton Mallet, in the county of Somersetshire, September 10th, 1787. Her parents, though strictly moral, lived without that divine change which is necessary to salvation, and hence failed to impress on the minds of their children the necessity of giving their hearts fully to God. But she was blessed with a pious grandfather, whose upright walk, and holy conversation, and fervent prayers greatly checked her in her downward course.

It was customary for the whole family to meet annually at her father's house, which meetings were characterized by much levity and idle talk. At the meeting of 1806, in the midst of their jesting and sporting, her brother Thomas was suddenly struck to the ground, and received such injuries as it was feared would prove fatal. She then thought if her brother should die, God would punish them all, by condemning them to hell. This led to reflection, and a deep concern for her soul's salvation. Her brother, after lingering a little while, died from the injuries he had received; and she ever after said, "The death of my brother was the life of my soul." She did not enjoy the witness of the Holy Spirit, but her deep conviction was manifested by outward reformation. The fashions of the world she no longer followed, the longings of her soul were after the adorning of "the hidden man of the heart in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

She remained under deep convictions till the morning of May 27th, 1807, when, as she humbly and believingly cast herself on the atonement of Christ, she felt her sins were forgiven, and she could joyfully exclaim, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with my spirit, that I am a child of God." She united in Church-fellowship with the Wesleyans, and remained with them a consistent and respected member till 1824.

At the time of her conversion she corresponded with a young man who neither loved nor feared God. But believing she could not continue to do so without endangering her soul's salvation, she sought the advice of Mrs. Martha Budgett, a holy woman, who reminded her of the self-sacrificing spirit of the religion she had espoused, and advised her in the spirit of Christianity "to give him up." She did so, and some time after she was united in marriage with him who now mourns his loss, whose sorrows she ever shared, and whom she ever cheered amid the struggles of life.

In May, 1824, the Primitive Methodist missionaries, Messrs. Harrison and Bonsor, visited Nunney (whither Mr. and Mrs. Vickery had removed) and proclaimed unto the people first of all how that Christ died for their sins, and how, through the preaching of the cross, accompanied by the power of the Holy Ghost, a Church was raised. She and her husband, who was a local preacher with the Wesleyans, listened with much profit to the truth proclaimed in an earnest and affectionate manner by those ambassadors of Christ; not only so, but they welcomed them to their house. The harvest being great, and the labourers few, Mr. Vickery kindly offered to take a few appointments for them. Mr. Vickery was requested to refuse to entertain the preachers of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and desist from taking appointments among them, neither of which would he promise to do. Eventually he united in Church-fellowship with the Primitive Methodists. Mrs. Vickery, when asked what her intentions were, answered that she designed to go with her husband. I have heard her refer to this as a time of great trial, but convinced that it would be for the good of all parties for her to withdraw, she did so; and though the separation was painful, yet by the grace of God she meekly bore it. From that time she became a consistent and beloved member with us, and was in labours more abundant, watching ever to walk circumspectly before her God. In her bosom there ever glowed an ardent desire to be useful. Souls lay near her heart. Some thought her name should appear on the circuit's plan, but when spoken to respecting it, she felt so deeply the importance and responsibility of the position in which she would then stand, that for a while she shrank from it. At last her name appeared on a written plan (for such was then used), and wherever appointed, if possible, she was found there at the proper time, and with that warmth and affection which became her position she spoke, and hardened hearts were affected, and the penitent's cry, "God, be merciful to me a sinner," was not a strange sound in her ears. She oft expressed herself as ever dissatisfied if souls were not saved after the preaching service. And it cannot be gainsaid that her labours were graciously owned of God. In visiting the sick she was eminently useful.

She had seven children, for whose salvation she watched, and often prayed with them. Before the mercy-seat you might have seen seven children kneeling, and their mother in the midst, while her tearful eyes were raised to heaven, with her whole soul beseeching God to make them holy children, and keep them till the day of His coming. It was no wonder that she saw them blest with early piety. Few can ever shake off the mighty influence of a mother's tears, entreaties, and prayers. She had the happiness of witnessing four of them die triumphant in the faith. She was strongly attached to God's house and to the means of grace; especially did she delight in the Sunday morning open-air services, they were to her times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. She felt greatly interested in the temperance cause, and ever sought by example, private conversation, and public addresses to spread its principles.

For many years she suffered greatly from rheumatism, which prevented her from going about doing good, as she did formerly, but when possible she was invariably seen at the means of grace at home. For some time before her death her weakness and sufferings were great, these she bore with Christian fortitude and resignation, and oft repeated the words of Job, "all the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come."

On Sunday, August 4th, she met in class (in which means she greatly delighted) for the last time, when her confidence in God was strong, and her hope blooming with immortality. On Tuesday the 6th, she was taken worse, and on Friday the 9th she arose, but was obliged to return to bed, and continued in great pain till Saturday night. On Sunday, many who saw her thought they saw her for the last time on earth. Most of the day she was unspeakably happy in God, and many times shouted, "Glory! glory!" She joined in singing, "How blest the soul where grace abounds," "All is well," &c. She then shouted aloud,

"I shall be there,
I shall be there,
His glory to share;
And lean on Jesu's breast."

She added, "The Lord is my portion, I am on the rock, I shall soon be at home, soon be absent from the body, and present with the Lord," &c. She very affectionately entreated her family and the friends who visited her, to meet her in heaven. Afterwards she spoke very little, but lingered till Tuesday morning, August 13th, 1861, and then calmly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, in the seventy-fourth year of her age.

"Night dews fall not more gently,
Nor weary worn out winds expire more soft."

She was a preacher thirty-six years, and a member of the Temperance Society twenty-four years. She passed from us “———Like the morning star,

Which goes not down behind the darkened cloud,
But melts away into the light of heaven.”

6. JOHN MEDD was born at North Cave, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, in the year 1826. Early in life he was sent to the Wesleyan Sunday-school, where serious impressions were made upon his mind. When about fourteen years of age he was brought to God during a revival of religion which occurred in his native place. Subsequently, however, he lost his confidence, and continued in a fallen state for some time. In 1844, he entered into the marriage relation, and the same day was restored to the divine favour while wrestling with the Lord in secret. Immediately afterwards he removed to Hull, and united with the Primitive Methodist Society, in connection with Mason Street Chapel.

In 1850 he was authorised by the quarterly meeting of Hull first Circuit, to accompany one of the local preachers to his appointments, and take part in the services. He engaged in this work with a trembling sense of its vast importance and of his own insufficiency; but looking to the Lord for strength, he obtained requisite assistance, his gifts and graces improved by exercise, and subsequently he became an acceptable local preacher.

In 1854, he was appointed to raise a new class. At first he was greatly depressed in mind, and almost despaired of succeeding. But he prayed earnestly to God for help, and diligently employed suitable means to ensure success, and through the Divine blessing he surmounted the formidable difficulties that had dispirited him, and had the happiness of raising a large and flourishing class, many of whose members were brought to God through his instrumentality.

Brother Medd was a consistent, devoted, and zealous Christian. His conduct at home and in the warehouse in which he was employed, was most exemplary. A degree of sternness and an apparent austerity of manner in reproving sin, and in enforcing uprightness among his fellow workmen, might occasionally give pain and dissatisfaction; but his integrity of purpose and purity of intention could not reasonably be questioned. Honesty, trustfulness, and equity marked his course. His manly piety, and consistent conduct produced impressions on the minds of some who associated with him in his daily employment, which through the Divine blessing, ultimately led them to the Saviour.

He was a valuable member and office-bearer of the Thornton Street Society. He studied to promote its spiritual interest, and its constant prosperity. In business meetings he sought to maintain its purity and efficiency. His zeal for its progress and enlargement was not a flickering light, but a steady and constant flame. He diligently attended all the means of grace as far as practicable, set an example of being there in time, and largely aided in promoting their efficiency by his earnest prayers and vigorous faith. He travailed in birth for the conversion of souls, and conducted many an anxious inquirer to the cross of Christ. It was at his suggestion that the leaders' meeting, a few weeks before his death, appointed a special prayer-meeting to be held at six o'clock on Sunday mornings in order to promote a revival of religion, and the conversion of sinners, a meeting at which he assisted with much zeal and devotion.

He loved closet prayer, and spared as much time in this duty as could be spared from others. It was a privilege which he highly valued, and in the improvement of which he took a hallowed delight, and received many a signal blessing.

For some time before his departure he was evidently ripening for heaven, and frequently spoke with much feeling and animation of the glories of the celestial state. On Sunday, June 9th, 1861, he assisted at a camp-meeting at Beverley, and preached an impressive sermon from, "I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better."

On the following Friday evening I called at his house, and conversed with him on the work of God, in the welfare of which he manifested great interest. He accompanied me to the fellowship meeting at Thornton Street Chapel, where he spoke with much warmth and energy of the nearness to God he had felt during the week, of his expectation of a glorious day at the camp-meeting on the approaching Sabbath, and of his blissful hope of heaven. The Sabbath arrived, and many thousand persons attended the usual annual camp-meeting in the corporation field. Brother Medd was at his post of duty, highly enjoying the services. He preached first in the afternoon at the first preaching-stand, to a vast assemblage. His text was, "Never man spake like this man," and with great clearness and force he shewed the matter, the manner, and the results of the Saviour's teaching.

He was not boisterous, but earnest and animated, and his application was very pointed and faithful, in which he enforced with considerable skill and power the doctrine of a present salvation. After singing a verse, brother H. Woodcock, of Hull second circuit, proceeded to address the increasing multitude, and brother Medd made some observations to brother Crow about the amazing multitude of persons present, and did not appear to be particularly indisposed.

But before the sermon was ended he began to tremble, and was caught by brother Crow, to prevent him from falling backwards. I was near him in the waggon, and on hearing a little noise, I looked, and saw Brother Medd gasping for breath, and supposed he was fainting. While two or three brethren attended to him, I endeavoured to maintain as much order as possible under the exciting circumstances, hoping the brother would soon recover. It was, however, deemed advisable to call for medical assistance, and a medical gentleman at once ascended the waggon, and examined Brother Medd; but his pulse had already ceased to beat, and he had breathed his last. Thus had he "ceased at once to work and live;" dying with his armour on, and passed from the field of conflict to his glorious reward. The shock was, of course, great, and the order of the meeting was necessarily interrupted. Regular sermons were dispensed with at the stand at which the solemn event had occurred, but earnest and appropriate addresses were delivered by several brethren with good effect.

The body was at once removed to the residence of the deceased, and a coroner's inquest was holden the following Tuesday, when from the report of a post mortem examination, it appeared that the muscles of the heart had degenerated to fat, and had consequently lost the power to pulsate. Brother Medd had been somewhat indisposed for several months, and had been under medical treatment for a disordered stomach; but he had followed his regular employment, and disease of the heart had not been suspected. On Wednesday, June 19th, a large concourse of persons attended his funeral at the cemetery at Hull. The service was conducted by the writer, at which brother Shaw assisted, by delivering a short address, and the presence of our Divine Master was realized among us.

Brother Medd's sun of life suddenly went down at noon-day, he being about thirty-five years of age; but it set in brightness, and I doubt not that he will shine for ever in cloudless glory in the kingdom of his Father. "Therefore be ye also ready; for at such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

7. WILLIAM HAINSWORTH, an aged sire in our Israel, has recently and calmly closed his eyes in death. His manner of life, after his conversion to God, and his happy death, leave no room for doubt but his spirit unfettered by mortality, is now enjoying the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," which none can enjoy but those whose spirits are made perfect by grace.

It appears that our departed friend was born in the parish of Rocester, Staffordshire. His parents having been extremely poor, he was by the parish authorities placed under the care of Mr. Cope, a farmer, residing at Denstone, about a mile from the place where he was born; and he remained in the same situation until he reached manhood. He then entered the marriage state with her who now laments her loss. After his marriage he removed to Riddings, where he spent the remainder of his life. When about thirty years of age, he was an entire stranger to God, but he was invited by the grandfather of the writer of this sketch to hear the word of life, which was then preached in a house not far distant by the Primitive Methodists. He consented (though reluctantly) to go, and he was convinced that all was not right between God and his soul. The word, to him, proved quick and powerful; he saw himself hanging over the pit of perdition, and suspended only by a slender thread. He cried for mercy, and while the people present were singing—

“I know that my Redeemer lives,
And ever prays for me,” &c., he cast himself by faith on the atoning blood of Christ, and he felt

The Spirit answered to the blood,
And told him he was born of God.

He united with our people, and a short time after he was called to labour in the Lord's vineyard in the capacity of a local preacher and a class-leader. To the best of his ability he discharged the duties incumbent on him until he was laid aside by the affliction which terminated in his death. Brother Rooke says, “I visited him some time before his death, and found him in the possession of a bright hope of eternal life, and longing to depart and be with Christ, which is far better.”

As a preacher, his abilities were but slender, and sometimes his assertions might be questioned with regard to their orthodoxy. But he was a good man, and attended regularly to his appointments. These two traits in his character went far to make him a useful man; and some, no doubt, who have been brought to God through his instrumentality, will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of Christ.

As a class-leader, he was faithful and affectionate; he felt much for the souls which were committed to his care. I have seen him stand for awhile unable to speak, his eyes overflowing with tears, in trying to describe the benefit of having a closer walk with God; those tears showing what he felt and said.

As a Christian, he was a good man, and feared God above many. He was honest and upright in his dealings; he was a lover of the house of God, and believed in the prevalency of prayer: therefore he made it practical,—in fact he was a Christian. He had many difficulties to encounter in passing through life, having reared a large family, and pressed his way up from a state of poverty to ease and comfort. But he is gone; his happy spirit has passed away; death has done its work on his mortal body. Yes, the casket is broken, but the jewel is carried away to the place where it will shine in the sunlight of heaven for ever. He died August 14th, 1861, in or about the seventieth year of his age, having been a member, local preacher, and class-leader among the Primitive Methodists in the Ramsor Circuit, upwards of forty years. “Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace.” May the writer and reader, with his sorrowing widow and children meet him in heaven. Amen.

A MEDITATION ON THE FAITHFUL SAYING,

A SERMON, BY THE REV. THOMAS HARTWELL HORNE,

B.D. OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE; D.D. OF THE UNIVERSITY OF PENNSYLVANIA;
RECTOR OF THE UNITED PARISHES OF ST. EDMUND THE KING AND MARTYR, AND ST.
NICHOLAS ACONS, LOMBARD STREET; PREBENDARY OF ST. PAUL'S.*

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."—1 Tim. i. 15.

VAST preparations presuppose vast designs. When we see a sovereign hold frequent privy councils; increase his navy; muster his forces; and collect supplies of naval and military stores, and of money, we naturally conclude that some great and important expedition is in contemplation. According to this principle, what ought we not to think of the design of the Almighty, in the work of man's redemption! What mighty preparations preceded it! At length, when the fulness of time was come, the Son of God was manifested; even the Word, who in the beginning (from all eternity) was with God, and was God; by whom all things were created that are in heaven and on earth; the First and the Last; who is over all, God blessed for evermore.

Though he was in the form of God, he took upon Himself the form of a servant. He divested Himself of His pre-existent glory, "and was found in fashion as a man." He humbled Himself to be made of a woman; He condescended to share our infirmities; to become a man of sorrows; and to be made subject to weakness, pain, and death. What a depth of humiliation was this! Who, that reads or hears of such preparations as these, is not desirous of knowing the design of the Almighty in making them? For, assuredly, He would not put such mighty springs in motion for a trifling cause. Doubtless, God who is Love, had in view a design worthy of Himself. What that design was, St. Paul has most clearly announced to us. "This," he says, "is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

In these few words we have the sum and substance of the gospel—a summary of sacred truth so plain that any one may understand it—so short that every one may remember it—and so important that it deserves and demands the cordial reception of all who hear it. If we had no faithful saying like this, we must live and die without hope. Let us then receive it, not as the word of man, but, as it is in truth, the word of God. And may it now come to each of us, "Not in word only, but also in power, and in much assurance," while we meditate on the DESIGN for which "Christ Jesus came into the world," together with its CREDIBILITY, and its CLAIMS to be received by all to whom it is made known.

* This Discourse, by the venerable author of "The Introduction to the Critical Study and Knowledge of the Holy Scriptures," was in October, 1861, annexed to a Pastoral Letter, addressed by Mr. Horne to his parishioners, on his entering upon the eighty-second year of his age, and the completion of the twenty-eighth year of his ministry among them. As the Discourse, on account of its earnest and beautiful simplicity, well deserves to be extensively circulated, it now appears in our Magazine, with Mr. Horne's courteous concurrence.

I. The DESIGN for which "Christ came into the world," was "to save sinners."

He came, not merely to vindicate the honour of His Father's law ; or to do away the peculiarities of the Jewish system, as being little suited to mankind in general ; or to set before us an example of obedience and virtue,—He had a still higher design. It was for us men and for our salvation, that he left the glories of His throne, and visited the earth in great humility. He "came into the world to save sinners."

And, who are sinners ? ALL men, both Jews and Gentiles. "They are all under sin ; as it is written ; "There is none righteous : no, not one." The law of God, contained in the Ten Commandments, is holy and spiritual. It reaches to the inmost desires and thoughts of the heart ; while human laws can only take cognizance of human actions.

It was by understanding the spiritual nature of the law, that Paul,—once a proud Pharisee,—became a humble and penitent sinner. Though he had been generally a moral and religious man, "after the straitest sect of the Pharisees," yet he accounted himself to be "the chief of sinners," not only because he had persecuted the church of Christ, but also because he was a transgressor of the holy law of God, and deserved to suffer the punishment of the violated law.

Such was our Redeemer's wondrous love, that He came into the world with the design of saving sinners. He "came to call, not the righteous, but sinners to repentance." "He came to seek and to save the lost ;" and for this purpose He laid down His life upon the ignominious cross. Our sins were laid upon Him ; and He, the Lamb of God, took them all away by the sacrifice of Himself. "He died the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us unto God." His name is Jesus ; and He was so named by an angel of the Lord before His birth, BECAUSE He was to save His people—all who sincerely believe in Him, trust in Him, and obey Him—from the guilt of their sins ; and to deliver them from the wrath to come, which was due to their sins ; that they might "have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of their sins, according to the riches of His grace." He came to save them from the power of sin, that it might not have dominion over them. He saves from ignorance, hardness of heart, impenitency, unbelief, and carnal security ; from the tyranny of Satan ; from furious passions, which war against the soul ; and from the fear of death. And by His word, His ordinances, and His Spirit, He is still carrying on the work of salvation in us, and training us up for the consummation of it in a future state.

II. Such being the design, for which "Christ Jesus came into the world," viz. "To save sinners," let us now, secondly, examine its CREDIBILITY, and its just CLAIMS to be received by all to whom it is made known.

The apostle asserts, that "it is faithful and worthy of all acceptation:" and no one, that ever lived, was more capable of forming a right judgment respecting its credibility and its true nature, than Saint Paul; for its evidences were all before him. Many of the principal facts, upon which this saying is founded, were within his own personal knowledge. He had all the talents, means, and motives, for investigating its Divine authority; and most fully was he convinced. He saw no possible room for doubt. He was ready to stake his life upon the truth of it: and he does not hesitate most solemnly to declare,—

1. First:—That "this is a faithful saying,"—a credible or true report.

If, indeed, it were not so;—if it were not authenticated by indubitable testimony, it could not be received.

Brethren! God, who is infinite in wisdom and mercy, as He is in truth and holiness—God does not demand of us faith without conviction upon rational and moral evidence. This most astonishing saying, which, through the Lord's merciful goodness, is now spread abroad in the earth, comes to us, attested by the fullest and most satisfactory evidences of its veracity. We do not follow cunningly devised fables, when we declare unto you the counsel of God: for it is attested by the fulfilment of prophecy, by miracles, and by the blessed effects produced by the gospel, wherever it is sincerely and cordially believed.

(1.) This faithful saying,—This report, so worthy of credit, is attested by the fulfilment of PROPHECIES, most numerous as well as minute; prophecies, delivered during a long series of ages; prophecies, which no human wisdom could have devised, as no human power—of itself—could fulfil them.

Christ Jesus the Lord, is the centre of the Old and New Testament, in whom all the lines of prophecy meet. "To Him give all the prophets witness." He is the sum and scope of all their predictions. He is the "Seed of the Woman," promised to our first parents, who was to "bruise the serpent's head." He is Abraham's promised seed; Jacob's Shiloh; Isaiah's Emmanuel; Jeremiah's Lord our Righteousness; Ezekiel's Shepherd; Daniel's Holy One, and Messiah the Prince, who was to be cut off, but not for himself; Zechariah's Branch; David's Son and David's Lord; Moses' Passover; the Israelite's Rock and Manna. And all the sacrifices and ceremonies of the Law pointed to Him, as the "Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

(2.) Moreover, this faithful saying was confirmed by MIRACLES, so many and so various, so striking, and instantaneously wrought, in such a public manner, before enemies and friends indiscriminately, that the adversaries of the gospel never could deny the reality of them.

"Jesus went about . . . . healing ALL manner of sickness, and ALL manner of disease among the people." However inveterate the diseases might be, of whatever continuance, or however incurable by medicine, Jesus healed them all, by a touch or with a word, instantly and perfectly. All places, persons, and companies were alike to Him. He exerted His Divine power before them all; and suffered the facts to carry their own force and evidence with them. He gave sight to the born blind, and speech to the dumb. He cured the obstinate leprosy. He made perfect the maimed, or those who wanted a limb, by instantly creating a new one. He made straight those who were bowed double: and those robust who were shaking with palsy. He restored demoniacs to their right mind; and the dead to life and health. Thus He fully proved that He was the Messiah, or Christ; and that the Jews needed not to look for any other. Thus He convinced Nicodemus and many others, that He was, indeed, a "teacher come from God; for no man COULD do the miracles," which He wrought, "except God were with him." Thus, He left without excuse the Jews, who would not believe in Him: and thus also we shall be without excuse, if we do not receive this faithful saying, "that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners."

Follow the apostles in their various journeys, into distant countries, as well as in Judæa. See them—everywhere—confirming the truths they preached by numberless miracles, and converting whole nations from the worship of dumb idols to the obedience of faith. Could these miracles be wrought without Divine power? And would Divine power (think you) be exerted in attestation of falsehood? It is impossible. When it is known that the witnesses to any fact could not be deceived, and that they could have no wish or motive for deceiving others, every one receives their testimony. And such witnesses were the apostles.

But the effects produced by the sincere belief of this faithful saying, are not confined to the apostle's times. Its truth and faithfulness have been experienced by multitudes in every age, who have come to Christ, that they might have life. For "he that believeth hath the witness in himself." "The grace of God, which bringeth salvation to all men, teaches him to deny all ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this world; looking for the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour, Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity.

Thus the Christian believer, practically and savingly, knows the truth ; and the truth makes him free. He becomes a new creature through the regenerating influence of the Holy Spirit. His views, his heart, his hopes, his fears, are all changed. His faith works by love, and by willing obedience to all the moral precepts of the Gospel. He loves God, whose commandments (he knows) are not grievous. He loves his "service," which "is perfect freedom ;" and he loves his brother also. And thus every Christian believer's experience becomes an additional and satisfying proof, that the gospel is true.

II. But this saying, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, is not only faithful, or true. The apostle adds, that it is deserving of all acceptance, or "worthy of all men to be received."

To those who are conscious of their own sinfulness and their need of mercy, (as we have each and all acknowledged that we are), no arguments can be necessary to prove its just claims to our attention and acceptance.

Ask him, who is languishing under slow wasting disease, whether he does not wish for a physician, who can restore him to health ? Ask the convicted malefactor, whose life is justly forfeited to the violated laws of his country, whether his heart would not rejoice at the tidings of a respite,—much more of a free pardon ? And when you have heard their answers, then consider, whether deliverance from the anguish of conscious guilt, and from the sentence of eternal condemnation, ought not to be prized at a rate, with which these temporal benefits bear no comparison.

Most worthy, indeed, is this faithful saying of all men to be received. It is of universal interest and importance to every intelligent and responsible being. Young or old, rich or poor, learned or unlettered, noble or ignoble, the sovereign or the beggar,—Barbarian, Scythian, bond or free,—ALL are equally concerned to know and believe, that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners : " for, as all are sinners, all are most deeply interested in this faithful saying. All are called or invited to believe the Gospel, and to participate in the blessings it proclaims.

What saith the Scripture ? " Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world ; but that the world through Him might be saved. In this was manifested the love of God towards us, that God sent His only-begotten Son into the world, that we might live through Him. For God so loved the world, that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in His name, should not perish, but have everlasting life : " so that none are excluded or excepted, but those who wilfully exclude themselves. Indeed, it is one of the most distinguishing properties of the Gospel, that it can be received by all men ; and that it is adapted to every state of society, as well as to the case of every person. Its simple truths, its saving doctrines, its holy moral precepts, can easily enter into the understandings, and sanctify the hearts of the humblest members of civil society; at the same time they not only extend to, but greatly refine and adorn, those who move in the highest ranks.

But what above every other consideration heightens the value of this faithful saying, is—its power to save the soul with an everlasting salvation. It prepares all that believe, to be the members of a society far more numerous than all the inhabitants of this earth; and infinitely more happy than any state we can hope to attain in this life. Now, who is not interested in these good tidings?

Are we not all sinners? Have we not each violated the holy law of God? Are we prepared, in our own merits, and by our own strength—to stand before the judgment-seat of Christ? Can we save ourselves? Or, is there any other name under heaven given unto men beside the adorable name of Christ, whereby we can be saved? Is there anything in the whole compass of creation, which can satisfy the desires of the immortal soul? What assurance can we find, out of Christ, of a blessed immortality? What consolation to support us under the sorrows and trials of life? None! “To whom,” then, “O Lord, shall we go? Thou ALONE hast the words of eternal life.” Truly, brethren, this is a saying worthy of all men to be received. There is no other Saviour offered to us. There is no hope for the pardon of sin, but through the merits of His cross. There is no life and immortality fully brought to light, but in and by the gospel. There is no other saying worthy to be compared with this—that “Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners,” from the guilt, the dominion, and the penalty of sin, and to save them eternally. O! how shall they who neglect so great a salvation, escape the righteous judgment of God! How many poor and ignorant heathens who have received this saying “with all acceptance” when first proposed to them—will rise up in judgment against numbers in this highly favoured land who bear the name of Christ, and condemn them! It were better for them never to have heard His invitations, never to have mixed with the assemblies of His people, than to do despite to the Spirit of grace, and neglect the offers of salvation. What now remains, brethren, but that we—each—give an immediate and cordial reception to the all-important truth contained in the text? When our Lord commanded His apostles to “preach the gospel to every creature,” He added this solemn sanction to the command:—

“He that believeth shall be saved; but he that believeth not,” he that dis-believeth, or wilfully refuseth to believe the gospel—“shall be damned,” finally condemned at the last great day; when the Lord Jesus will come again with glory to judge the assembled nations of the earth.

On the other hand, the same faithful Redeemer has declared that “he who believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life, and shall never come into condemnation.” . . . . Do you believe in Him? Do you feel that you want a Saviour? Do you feel like a sick man that wants a physician? If so, you will be ready to come to Christ, and to pray—"Lord! heal my soul! for I have sinned against thee." And He will not cast out your prayer.

Finally, brethren, while you take the comfort arising from these Divine declarations, reflect with devout gratitude on the wondrous love of Christ, in coming into the world to save sinners. What, indeed, but the most generous and disinterested love could induce Him to quit the realms of glory—assume our nature in all points (sin only accepted); become "a man of sorrows, despised and rejected of men;" and at last to die the ignominious, lingering, and painful death of the cross; that He might reconcile us to God, and raise us to everlasting life! Should we not love Him, who so loved us, that He gave Himself "for us men and for our salvation?" Should we not praise Him by our lives as well as with our lips? And live to Him, who now "ever liveth to make intercession for us, and for all who come unto God by Him?" Yes, we may each say—

" Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love, so amazing, so Divine—Demands my soul, my life, my all."

"And now unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in His own blood; to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

POOR CALEB.

"The eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayer."

DR. JOSEPH STENNET resided in Wales several years, and preached to a congregation in Abergavenny. There was a poor man, a regular attendant on his ministry, who was generally known by the name of Caleb; he was a collier and lived among the hills, between Abergavenny and Hereford; had a wife and several small children, and walked seven or eight miles every Lord's day to hear the doctor. He was a very pious man; his knowledge and understanding were remarkable, considering his situation and circumstances.

Bad weather seldom kept Caleb from coming to the meetings; but there was a severe frost one winter, which lasted many weeks, and blocked up his way that he could not possibly pass without danger, neither could he work for the support of his family. The doctor and others were concerned lest they should perish for want; however, no sooner was the frost broken than Caleb appeared again. Dr. S. spied him, and as soon as the service was ended went to him and said, "Oh, Caleb, how glad I am to see you! How have you fared during the severity of the weather?" Caleb cheerfully answered, "Never better in my life. I not only had necessities, but lived upon dainties the whole of the time, and have some still remaining." Caleb then told the doctor that one night, soon after the commencement of the frost, they had eaten up all their stock, and not one morsel was left for the morning, nor any human probability of getting any; but he found his mind quite composed, relying on a provident God, who wanted neither power nor means to supply his wants.—He went to prayer with his family; and then to rest, and slept soundly till morning; before he was up he heard a knock at the door, he went and saw a man standing with a horse loaded, who asked if his name was Caleb; he answering in the affirmative, the man desired him to help him to take down the load. Caleb asked what it was. He said, provisions. On his inquiring who sent it, the man said he believed God had sent it; no other answer could he obtain.

When he came to examine the contents he was struck with amazement at the quantity and variety of the articles; bread, flour, oatmeal, butter, cheese, salt meat, and fresh, &c., which served them through the frost, and they had some remaining to that time. The doctor was much affected with the account, and afterwards mentioned it in hopes of finding out the benevolent donor; but in vain, till about two years afterwards he went to visit Dr. Talbot, a noted physician in the city of Hereford.

This Dr. T. was a man of good moral character and generous disposition, but an infidel in principle; his wife was a generous woman and a member of the Church. Dr. Stennet used to go and visit her now and then; and Dr. Talbot, though a man of no religion himself, always received Dr. S. with great politeness. As they were conversing pleasantly one evening,

Dr. S. thought it his duty to introduce something that was entertaining and profitable; he spoke of the great efficacy of prayer, and instanced the circumstance of poor Caleb. Dr. T. smiled and said, "Caleb, I shall never forget him as long as I live."—"What, do you know him?" said Dr. S. "I had but very little knowledge of him," said Dr. T. "but I know he must be the same man you mean." Then Dr. T. related the following circumstance:

The summer before the hard winter, above mentioned, he was riding on horseback, as was his usual custom when he had a leisure hour, and generally chose to ride among the hills, it being more pleasant and rural. As he was riding along, he observed a number of people assembled in a barn; he rode up to the door to learn the cause, when he found to his surprise, that there was a man preaching to a vast number of people; he stopped and observed that they were very attentive to what the preacher delivered. One poor man in particular attracted his attention, who had a little Bible in his hand, turning to every passage in Scripture the minister quoted.

He wondered to see how ready a man of his appearance was in turning to the places. When the service was over he walked his horse gently along, and the poor man whom he so particularly noticed happened to walk by his side. The doctor asked him many questions concerning the meeting and minister, and found him very intelligent. He inquired also about himself, his employment, his family, and his name, which he said was Caleb.

After the doctor had satisfied his curiosity, he rode off, thought no more about him till the great frost came the following winter. He was one night in bed, he could not tell, for certain, whether he was asleep or awake, but he thought he heard a voice say, "Send provisions to Caleb." He was a little startled at first, but concluding it to be a dream, he endeavoured to compose himself to sleep. It was not long before he heard the same words repeated, but louder and stronger; then he awoke his wife, and told her what he had heard, but she thought it could be no other than a dream, and she fell asleep again, but the doctor's mind was so impressed that he could not sleep; at last he heard the voice so powerfully saying, "Get up and send provision to Caleb," that he could resist no longer. He got up and called his man, bade him bring his horse, he then went to his larder, and stuffed a pair of panniers as full as he could of whatever he could find, and having assisted the man to load the horse, he bade him take the provisions to Caleb. "Caleb, sir?" said the man, "who is Caleb?" "I know very little of him," said the doctor, "but his name is Caleb; he is a collier, and lives among the hills; let the horse go, and you will be sure to find him." The man seemed to be under the same influence as his master, which accounts for his saying to Caleb, "God sent it, I believe."—Christian Observer.

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

HOW TO RENDER PREACHING, AS A MEANS OF GRACE, EMINENTLY USEFUL.

THE following extracts are from "Devotional Christianity," an excellent work recently published by the Rev. W. Garner, Primitive Methodist minister :—

"The preacher should be a converted man. Theory, without experience, never did, nor ever will make a man, 'an able minister of the New Testament.' It is a fixed law in hydraulics, that the stream cannot flow spontaneously above its source. It is a settled maxim in education, that a man cannot teach what he does not know. Nor can a preacher instruct his hearers in the saving mysteries of the gospel kingdom, and sympathize with them in their spiritual hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, while he himself is a stranger to experimental Christianity. He may be as distinguished a master in Israel as was Nicodemus, but like him he will contemplate the regeneration of the soul with amazement, confusion, and unbelief. The system of setting apart and training for the ministry, youths who are entirely destitute of vital godliness, is so anti-scriptural, and so fraught with mischief to the Church and to the world, that it deserves the most unqualified condemnation. This scandalous custom reduces the office of the gospel ministry to the rank of a common trade, and obtrudes on the Church of Christ swarms of hirelings from year to year. It is also a fruitful source of lukewarmness, formality, pompous ceremony, intolerance, and schism, by which Christendom is continually disgraced and afflicted. And what is still more appalling, we have reason to fear that this shameful practice has flattered thousands in life, deceived them in death, and conducted them to final ruin, under the sacred profession of guiding them safely to heaven. How, indeed, can it be otherwise? Has not Christ told us that 'if the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch?'"

"The gospel should be preached faithfully. To the prophet Isaiah, God said, 'Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.' In this passage the prophet is not commanded to preach to the Jews about the wickedness of the surrounding nations; but to portray their own characters that they may see their faces as in a glass, and know what manner of men they are. In the same direct and pointed manner the message of God to men should be delivered now. The preacher of the gospel is a watchman upon the walls of Zion, and his responsible office binds him to apprise the people of their danger in the most effectual manner of which he is capable. Those who are at ease in Zion, or who are indolently sauntering about her suburbs, are so unwilling to be disturbed, that they would not have the watchman to sound an alarm, although they are every moment threatened with destruction. But neither the subject nor the manner of the preacher's discourse must be regulated by the inclinations of his unawakened hearers. Their interests require that they be told—not what they prefer, but what they need—whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear. The preacher cannot knowingly shun to declare the whole counsel of God, without placing his own salvation in jeopardy. 'Son of man,' saith the Lord, 'thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked man, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand.' This is a tremendous announcement to the man who handles the word of the Lord deceitfully.

But what inducements has a preacher to be unfaithful in his mission? He may be awed by the fear of man. Some hearers are very cruel to their spiritual instructor. Let him please them well in all things, then they will stand at his right hand and support him with their patronage and influence. But if he shows them no partiality—if he pointedly denounces those sins and follies to which they are addicted, they withdraw their friendship from him, charge him with dealing in personalities, and would be glad to see him make way for a successor, who would be more indulgent to their failings. There was a time when the Galatians admired the apostle Paul so passionately, that had it been possible they would have plucked out their eyes and given them to him; but they appear to have been subsequently so affronted by his faithful dealings with them, that he was led to enquire, 'Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?' But Paul was not the man to be terrified into unfaithfulness by the frowns of mortals. When he expounded the word of God before Felix and Drusilla, who were persons of infamous character, he neither flattered their pride, nor spared their crimes. Paul was Felix's prisoner, and if he offended his judge, he knew not what consequences would follow. In this perilous situation the ambassador of God rose superior to the fear of man, and 'reasoned on righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come,' subjects which were admirably adapted to the moral character of his dignified hearers. This instance of moral courage on the part of the apostle was the more remarkable, as John the Baptist had recently lost his head through his ministerial fidelity. While John said nothing which had a special bearing on Herod's conduct, 'Herod heard him gladly.' But when the Baptist laid his hand on that licentious king's conscience, and said, 'It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife,' to gratify his guilty paramour, "the king sent and beheaded John in prison.'

Another thing which operates against direct preaching, is a misdirected kindness cherished in the heart of the preacher. So anxious is he to draw his hearers to Christ by the cords of love, and so reluctant is he to wound their feelings, that he rarely appeals to their fears, by proclaiming in strong and pointed terms 'the terrors of the Lord.' And when he does venture to discourse on the wages of sin and everlasting punishment, he studiously expresses his sentiments in the most mild and inoffensive language, as though he were preaching to a select assembly of nervous ladies. Whatever meed of praise we may award to such a preacher for his gentleness, we cannot admire him for his energetic fidelity. 'Learn of me,' says our blessed Lord; 'I am meek and lowly, and ye shall find rest to your souls.' But not withstanding the meekness of His spirit, He did not hesitate to paint sin in its proper colours, nor to warn the sinner of his danger in the most pointed and impressive manner. If to the broken-hearted He was a 'Son of consolation,' to the unbelieving and impenitent He was a 'Son of thunder.' His guilty hearers could not but feel that He was preaching to them. It is, however, proper to remark that Jesus Christ sometimes used language of rebuke, which would not become any other person, because He was more than man, and was the only preacher who could search the hearts and try the reins of His hearers."

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

PARENTAL DISCIPLINE OF CHILDREN.

CHILDREN are an important charge, and great indeed is the responsibility of parents in training their offspring for the proper fulfilment of their duties in the present world, and in leading them forward towards future and eternal felicity. To make provision for their many temporal wants is momentous, but it is far less important than paying proper attention to their mental and moral discipline. What, I ask, is so valuable, even in childhood, as a good character? Children have character. "Even a child," says Solomon, "is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right." And is not the formation of their character dependent, to a great extent, under God, to the early discipline exercised in their training? Children are very much what their parents make them. And on parents themselves properly devolves the administering of proper discipline, especially that which is of a religious character. The heaven imposed obligation cannot be properly transferred to others. Neither schoolmasters, teachers, nor nurses can be perfect substitutes for parents. It is, we know, very much the fashion of society to train up children by proxy, but its being fashionable does not make it right. There are fashionable sins, and is not this one of them? Those parents who transfer the training of their offspring to others without proper cause, are unworthy the heritage given them by God; and besides the injury inflicted on their own immediate descendants, they occasion disorder in general society, and cast dishonour on domestic life. Children should be disciplined by their parents who, of all others, must naturally take the most interest in their welfare. King Solomon frequently enjoins this duty in his sententious writings, "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." "Withhold not correction from a child; for if thou beat him with the rod, he shall not die: thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell." "The rod and reproof give wisdom, but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." The necessity, nature, period, and imperativeness of the parental discipline of children is clearly taught in these passages. To a brief consideration of these topics we invite the devout attention of our readers. There is a necessity for the parental discipline of children. Indeed, be it understood, in the absence of a necessity it would be positively wrong to inflict it. A respectable amount of wisdom, therefore, is required by parents to determine this. Children are not to be chastened for any and every foible. Errors in children, as in adults, are not always sinful in character or wilful in design. They err sometimes unwittingly and without criminality. It should be remembered that everything in childhood is necessarily imperfect, and that children are, therefore, very liable to err. Their senses are imperfect, that is in development. Their ideas are imperfect, they don't quickly, or always discern between right and wrong. Their memories are imperfect; they frequently forget what they have been taught. These considerations require due allowance. I have known parents tell a child to do something, and because it was not done so correctly and expeditiously as they themselves could have done it, they have chastened the child. We declare such treatment wrong. It is unreasonable to expect a child to do many things as well as they can be performed by adults. Children must be expected to do things childishly. It is time enough to expect them to put away all childish things when they arrive at maturity. Parents, don't think that everything done by your children contrary to your wishes and words is disobedience; they would often do better if they knew better, or were better able.

Yet there are occasions when it is necessary to discipline children; and when parents should administer such discipline for their children's profit. Every manifestation of bad temper calls for discipline; but mark, it must be bad temper: all manifested displeasure is not bad. Children have a natural and moral right to manifest displeasure at what is evil; and in so doing should be rather encouraged than deterred. Every evidence of evil inclination calls for reproof or correction. Is there seen a disposition to omit prayer and reading the Bible—to break the Sabbath, and neglect the school and sanctuary—to be rebellious against parental authority, and to converse about and practise the evils of the world, then suitable discipline should be administered. All improper conversation calls for the administration of discipline. Some children tell falsehoods, utter oaths, and make wicked remarks. We have more than once been horrified at the language of some even babes. All immoral actions call for the administration of prudent but firm discipline. Children are sometimes guilty of theft, cruelty, and uncleanness. The taking a lump of sugar, or a pin—the torturing and killing of insects, birds and animals, or the fighting and cheating of playmates, are acts needing correction. In fine, whatever is evil in practice or tendency renders the exercise of prudent corrective discipline necessary.

It will be seen that I have not classified rude manners, in the common acceptation of the phrase, as needing discipline. It has not been omitted because I do not think children should practise good manners, but partly because it is somewhat incorporated in what I have already particularly alluded to, and partly because as manners are not morals, children may be of good characters either with or without refined manners, as such are now generally understood. I may, however, here take occasion to express my fears that many parents pay more attention to the manners than to the morals of their children. Certainly I would have them taught the common sense etiquette of life; to reverence their elders and superiors, and to respect all persons; but I must express my detestation of the practice now prevailing in society of making girls into dress dolls, and big boys into babies. Far be it from me to prescribe discipline for children who might fail to be perfect in such etiquette, and truly sorry should I be to incur the guilt of those etiquettial parents who can chastise their children for deficiencies in such manners.

However, undoubtedly, there exists a moral necessity to reprove or chasten children at times. The inbred corruption of their nature, combined with the evil communications of the world, encourage in some of them a spirit and conduct that is iniquitous. All children need correction more or less. Some are naturally better disposed than others. When we hear it said of certain parents that they never chastise their children, I always pity children who are so circumstanced, and I argue much blame is attachable to their parents.

2. HINTS TO PARENTS.

Nor only love your children, but show that you love them; not merely by fondling them, but by being always open to their approaches. One man drives his children out of his shop, because they pester him, another is always too busy to give them a good word. Now I would gladly learn of these penny-wise and pound-foolish fathers, what work they expect ever to turn out, which shall equal in importance the children who are now taking their mould for life? Hapless is that child which is forced to seek for companions more accessible than its father or its mother.

You may observe that when a working-man spends his leisure hours abroad, it is at the expense of his family. While he is at the beer-house or tavern, his boy or girl is seeking out-of-door connections.

The great school of juvenile vice is the street. Here the urchin, while he "knuckles down at taws," learns the vulgar oath, or the putrid obscenity. For one lesson at the fireside, he has a dozen in the kennel. Here are scattered the seeds of falsehood, gambling, theft, and violence. I pray you, as you love your own flesh and blood, make your children cling to the hearth-stone. Love home yourself; sink your roots deeply among your domestic treasures; set an example in this as in all things, which your offspring may follow. The garden-plant seems to have accomplished its great work, and is content to wither, when it has matured the fruit for the next race: learn a lesson, fathers and mothers, from the humble plant. — British

MISCELLANIES.

1. FAREWELL SERVICE.

SHELMANTHORPE, CLAYTON-WEST CIRCUIT.

DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—We held a deeply affecting meeting on Thursday night, October 24th, in connection with Brother Nairn, who was on the eve of leaving this station, to labour in the vineyard of the Lord in Australasia. Great sympathy was manifested towards the young man, so that our chapel was not large enough to accommodate the people; we therefore retired to the Wesleyan Chapel, kindly lent for the occasion, when upwards of a thousand people were assembled to hear our young minister, who ascended the pulpit under deep emotion, and having attended to the preliminary duties in connection with the service, &c., he announced for his text, 2 Corinthians xiii. 11. "Finally, brethren, farewell." Having explained the connection of the text he dwelt upon the kindness manifested to him during his stay with us, the responsibility of his position, and the importance of the work in which he was about to engage. In looking at his own insufficiency, and the duties devolving upon him, he exclaimed, "Who is sufficient for these things?" After service, about sixteen of us retired to the house of the circuit steward, where supper was provided. Before retiring to our separate homes, we presented Brother Nairn with £4, as a token of respect for him, and in appreciation of his indefatigable labours in this circuit. On the following morning he took his departure, when people from all parts of the village came to bid the missionary farewell. Our best wishes and most sincere prayers go with him. May God bless him and make him abundantly useful, and may we eventually meet in heaven, is the sincere prayer of

HENRY WADSWORTH.

PHILANDER TYAS.

[To the prayer of the brethren we add our fervent "Amen." And at the same time we entreat our friends in every part of the connection to bear up before the throne of grace, the brethren Wm. Kingdon and G. Nairn, who took their departure from Gravesend, for Sydney, New South Wales, Nov. 14th, 1861.—ED.]

2. THE VICTORIAN EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

MY DEAR SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the dispatches of the party sent to explore the interior of this country, and in those just received a new and painfully interesting chapter is added to the history of Australian adventure. Cooper's Creek is on the borders of the great northern wilderness, and thence, Messrs. Bourke (leader), Wills (surveyor), King and Gray started on the 16th December, 1860, taking with them three months provision, for the purpose of exploring the unknown desert, leaving a party at Cooper's Creek Camp. Till April 21st, no tidings of the explorers had reached the camp. At that time, the party left that place, having resolved to return to Menindie Station, on the river Darling; and on their route they encountered the residuary party advancing on Cooper's Creek, sadly distressed; and the retreat of the combined parties was exceedingly afflicting and disastrous. Fainting in the desert from lack of water, scourged with scurvy, menaced by hordes of savages, attending by the sick beds of dying comrades, the little band sustained an arduous and terrible struggle, losing four of their number by death, and hence to the distinguished roll which bears the names of Leichhardt, Kennedy, and Cunningham, may be added the names of Dr. L. Becker, Stone, Patton and Purcell. The last visit was paid to the deserted station at Cooper's Creek on May 12th; but there was no sign of Mr. Burke and his party, so that at this point authentic information stops, and the rest is left to ominous conjecture. Prompt measures have been taken to dispatch help to Mr. Burke's party, which we hope will be successful. I have herewith sent you the surveyor's report, which I believe will be read with much interest. If men will endure such hardships in the cause of science, how much more ought Christian men and Christian ministers in particular, to be willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ in order to save souls from hell. May God help us to be faithful to our duty.

G. T. HALL.

SURVEYOR'S REPORT.

The accompanying tracing* will show the course taken by the Expedition party from the Torowoto Swamp, in latitude 30 deg. 1 min. 30 sec. S., longitude 142 deg. 36 min. E., to the depôt on Cooper's Creek, Camp 65, latitude 27 deg. 37 min. 8 sec. S. longitude, 141 deg. 6 min. E.

Water Supply between Toronto and Wright's Creek.—The country traversed to the north of the Torowoto Swamp, and lying between that place and Wright's Creek, is neither so well grassed nor watered as that to the south of the Swamp; the land falls considerably as far as Cangapundy, and a great extent of it is subject to inundation. Nearly all the water met with was thick and muddy; it was obtained from small clay pans, most of which would probably be dry in three weeks. This applies to all the places at which we found water, with the exception of Cannilta, Cangapundy, and the four waterholes to the south of Wright's Creek.

Cannilta.—Cannilta is a water-hole of good clear water in a small rocky creek which runs out on the low mud flats and swampy ground lying between Altolka and Tango-woko; it is situated in latitude 29 deg. 26 min. 42 sec. S. longitude, 142 deg. 40 min. E., by account, nearly a mile from the north-westernmost point of the swampy ground. This point may be distinguished by the growth of a coarse kind of reedy grass, which does not make its appearance on the southern portion of the swamp or lake. The water in the hole was only two or three feet deep, but is well shaded by box trees, and will probably last two or three months. The temperature of the surface of the water at 7 a.m., 2nd November, was 60.5 deg.; that of the air being at the same time 60.0 deg.

The Cangapundy Swamp.—The Cangapundy Swamp is an extensive tract of low clay land, which bears the appearance, as regards the vegetation on its banks, of having a tolerably permanent supply of water; but, unless some portions of the swamp are much deeper than where we passed, the water could not last throughout a dry season. The banks of the swamp are densely clothed with grasses, marsh mallows, polygonum bushes, and shrubs, which shelter numerous kinds of waterfowl and snakes.

* In the following report, reference is made to the "tracing," which we presume was furnished with the original communication, but which we do not possess, we nevertheless deem it right to give the report to which the tracing may be attached, either now or at some future period, in the hands of some of our readers.—EDITOR.

Character of Land.—It will be seen by the tracing that a large proportion of the land between Torowoto and Wright's Creek is composed of low mud plains and clay flats, subject to inundation. Most of these are devoid of vegetation of any kind, and others carry some stunted salt bushes and coarse grasses, which appear to be struggling between life and death. Bounding the mud flats are generally some stony rises well-grassed and sometimes lightly timbered. The more elevated plains are sandy, and support a fine supply of healthy salt bushes, as well as here and there a few grasses. On the rises to the S.S.E. of Cannilta, may be seen great quantities of quartz rock, forming dykes in the schist rises; the latter in some places adjoin and run into hills of loose stone, having the appearance of indurated clay. From Cangapundy to Wright's Creek, the ground is light-coloured and of a clayey nature; it forms a series of dry clay-pans, separated from one another by low sandy banks on which the vegetation was fresh and green. At about seventeen miles from the former place are three large holes with water from two to three feet deep in the deepest part, and at six miles further another large one which might almost be termed a lake, being nearly 1000 links square. About these there were some lines of sandhills running about N.E. and S.W.; and in one of the flats between the sandhills I found several pieces of satin spar in lumps the size of one's hand, partially buried in the ground, and all of them with the plane of cleavage nearly perpendicular to the surface of the ground.

Balloo, or Wright's Creek.—The lower portion of Wright's Creek, called by the natives "Balloo," is situated in latitude 28 deg. 48 min. S., and longitude 142 deg. 53 min. E. by account. At this point, the creek, after breaking into several small channels, runs out on a grassy plain, the water continuing in a southerly direction, probably until it meets that from the Torrens and other creeks at the Cangapundy Swamp. There was plenty of water in this part of the creek when we passed, but I cannot speak to its permanence. The banks are well lined with box timber, as well as with marsh mallows and wild spinach; the land on either side consists of well-grassed sandy rises. At four or five miles above this, the creek is a narrow, dry, sandy watercourse, winding through a grassy valley, which everywhere presents indications of the most violent floods. Beyond this is an extensive grassy plain; and for three or four miles scarcely a trace of the creek could be seen. We then came to a clump of trees, amongst which were two large waterholes surrounded by polygonum bushes, and containing great numbers of small fish. These holes appear to be permanent. We found about sixty blacks camped here. Above these waterholes, which are together about half a mile long, the creek again disappears on the plain. The land for the next ten or twelve miles in a N.N.E. direction is very fine for pastoral purposes, being alternately grassy plains and sand ridges. At twelve or thirteen miles we crossed the creek where it has cut for itself a deep narrow channel the banks of which are densely timbered and well-grassed, but the waterholes are small, and contained very little water. For a distance of six miles the creek is of a very insignificant character. It appears to be divided into several branches, which traverse clay flats badly grassed. Here and there are some lines of low sandy rises, with plenty of feed on them. All the watercourses are distinctly marked by lines of box timber. At about nine miles from where we crossed the creek, and after traversing some loose polygonum ground, which was covered with mussel shells and a shell resembling a periwinkle, we came to a branch of the creek containing a splendid waterhole 150 links broad and about half a mile long. A little above this the creek again disappears for a short distance, and then there is a long narrow channel of undoubtedly permanent water, being nearly four feet deep in the shallowest places; it is only on an average about fifty links broad, and well sheltered by overhanging box trees. The temperature of the water on the morning of the 7th November, at six o'clock, was 68 deg.; the temperature of the air at the same time being 50.5 deg. Our camp at this place is indicated by a box tree marked B over LIV in square. The geographical position of which is by account 28 deg. 26 min. 9 sec. S. latitude, and longitude 143 deg. 0 min. E. In proceeding from here in a N.N.E. direction up the course of the creek, or rather of the water, for the creek is again lost on the plains for five or six miles, we passed the southernmost point of a prominent sandstone range, the nearest portion of which lay about a mile and a half to the westward. At about nine miles we again touched the creek, where it is about three chains broad. The banks are firm and shelving, from ten to twelve feet above the water, and lined with box, acacias, some large gums, gigantic marsh mallows, polygonum, &c. In the creek there is abundance of fish, and the ducks and other waterfowl on it are numberless. From what we have seen of the blacks, I should say the population cannot be far short of 150, and it might be considerably more. From here we proceeded in an E.N.E. direction along the west bank of this fine waterhole, and at two and a half miles found it begin rapidly to decrease in breadth, and a little further on there was nothing but a few small stony watercourses traversing a dense box forest; at this point there is a level bed of sandstone pebbles, close to and over a part of which the creek flows; the blacks have here gone to the trouble of making paths for themselves, along which we turned off from the creek on a N.N.E. course and at about three miles, coming on earthy plains, with no signs of water a-head, we again turned in to the creek and camped at a small waterhole. From here the line of river timber continues in a N.E. direction. To the W. and N.N.W. is a line of sandstone ranges running off in the same direction. The land in the immediate vicinity of the creek on the west side is very poorly grassed all the way up from where we crossed it; that on the east side appeared to be better.

I think there can scarcely be a doubt but this creek is the lower portion of the Warrego river, although I believe that its main supply of water is obtained from the adjoining ranges, which flow down innumerable creeks into the flats through which it flows.

Some latitude observations at camp 53 (the furthest point to which we traced the creek) placed us in 28 deg. 16 min. 40 sec. S., out latitude, by account, being 28 deg. 17 min. 8 sec., and longitude, 143 deg. 18 min. E. On Thursday, November 8th, we left Wright's Creek with the intention of crossing the range to Cooper's Creek. We found the land as we approached the hills well grassed, and in some places densely timbered; it is intersected by numerous watercourses with deep sandy channels, in most of which there seemed little chance of finding water. We camped at a waterhole in M'Donagh's Creek; the spot is indicated by a gum tree marked B over LIV within square.

De Rinsy's Tracks.—Near here we found the tracks of drays; there were four distinct tracks, two of which appeared to be those of heavy horse drays, the other two might have been made by light ones or spring carts; we were unable to make out the tracks of the horses or cattle. I cannot imagine what tracks these are, unless they may be those of De Rinsy, who, I believe, had some drays with him, and reported that he had been somewhere in this direction. From camp 54 to camp 55 we were obliged to take a very circuitous route on account of the rugged and stony nature of the ranges, which were more extensive than we had anticipated—they stretch away far to the N. and N.N.W., and although we kept well out to the N.W., we were unable to avoid the low stony rises which adjoin them.

On the N.W. side of the hills we crossed two dry creeks which flow in a N.N.E. direction; their banks were thinly lined with box trees, and the holes in them were quite dry. From this we took a W.N.W. course across undulating country covered with sandstone, quartz, and (magnetic) ironstone pebbles, so densely and firmly set together in some places as to have the appearance of an old-fashioned pavement. At about three miles we had to change our course to N.W., to avoid a spur of the high range on our left. At two miles further we came to a grassy flat, through which ran a fine looking creek, but the bed was sandy and quite dry; there were, however, a good many small birds about here, which would indicate that there must be water in the neighbourhood. We here again changed our course to W.N.W., and at six miles camped at a dry stony creek, having travelled about eight and twenty miles over the worst ground that we had yet met with.

On the morning of the 10th we continued on a W.N.W. course across stony ground of the same nature as that passed during the previous day, but at a distance of five miles we turned to W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  S., as the ranges appeared to be as low in that direction as in the other, and as they ran nearly N.N.W. there seemed a chance of sooner getting out of them, which we did at a distance of about eight miles more.

From the point at which we emerged from these ranges the view was as follows:—From S.W. nearly up to N.W. were extensive plains, as far as the eye could reach, intersected by numerous lines of timber, the general direction of which was about N.N.W. several columns of smoke were visible along these lines, some of which had the appearance of camp and others of bush fires. From N.W. to N. were lines of ranges running in a N.W. direction, and in the valley between us and the first spur was a line of fine timber, indicating the course of what appeared to be a large creek, probably the recipient of all the small creeks that we had crossed during the morning; in every other direction there was nothing to be seen but timbered sandstone ranges. At noon we crossed a small creek running nearly north, the grass had been burnt on its banks. About half a mile beyond it was another creek of a more promising appearance, and as we approached it we saw several crows, as well as other birds, in the trees. We here found a small hole with the water fast drying up, it contained a lot of young fish about half an inch long, and just sufficient water to replenish our water bags and give the horses a drink; below it the creek took a N.N.W. course, and was dry and sandy for a distance of two miles and a half, at which point we found some large but shallow holes of milky looking water. On the plains near these holes we found large flocks of pigeons; the grass was very coarse and dry, and the water would probably not last more than a few weeks.

Horse Tracks.—On the plains to the east of the creek were the tracks of a single horse, which had evidently crossed when the ground was very soft, and gone in a S.W. direction.

Position of Water.—The water holes are situated in latitude 27 deg. 51 min. S., longitude 142 deg. 40 min. E., by account from camp 55. From here a course of W.  $\frac{1}{2}$  S. took us in a distance of about twenty miles to Cooper's Creek, which we first struck in latitude 27 deg. 49 min. S., longitude 142 deg. 20 min. E. The land through which we passed on the 11th was so low and wooded as to prevent me from seeing the direction of the ranges; the first five or six miles was tolerably open, we then came to a box forest, where the soil was loose and earthy, similar to polygonum ground; there were in every direction signs of heavy floods and frequent inundations; we crossed several small water-courses, in one of which there was a hole of rather creamy water, at which we halted for an hour; from the waterhole we quite unexpectedly obtained a rather fine fish, about eight inches long, of the same description as the young ones we had found in Brahe's Creek.

3. SEVEN SUNDAY SHIPS.

SOME years ago a merchant prince in this city, in the East India Trade, had a million and a half of dollars in silver to send abroad to purchase his stores. On each of seven consecutive Sabbath days he dispatched from this port a ship, with its proportion of the specie, until the whole was forwarded. It required about a year to make the voyages out and back, but at last they were completed, the cargoes arrived safely in this harbour, and the result of the operation was a loss of five hundred thousand dollars. The affairs of the house became embarrassed, and the merchant died insolvent.

It is not for us to say that the result would have been otherwise had the ships been dispatched on any other day. But it is a fact that they were sent out on that day in defiance of the religious sentiment of others, and in contempt for the scruples of his fellow-men on that subject. And although in all other respects his business was managed with prudence and ability, the frown and not the favor of divine Providence attended his venture, and the result was his ruin. We cite such cases with no superstitious feelings. The world is governed by laws—laws of nature, of trade, of mind, and except in case of miracles, all things move on under these laws. But all these resolve themselves into the laws of God. He rules. And in all the affairs of men, great or small, from the fall of a sparrow to the failure of a New York shipping merchant, he works by laws of his own making, and brings to pass those events which seem to us fortuitous, while they are parts of one consecutive and stupendous plan. From the beginning to the present day he has guarded the Sabbath by the intervention of his Providence, and made it plain to all who know his law that he challenges that day for his worship, and on it men must not do their own work. They may if they choose, but in the long run, they will find that it does not pay to trample on the commandments of God.

4. SICILIAN GENEROSITY.

Two of his Sicilian Majesty's galleys being on a cruise, pursued and took an Algerine vessel of twenty guns and one hundred men. The prize was sent to Naples, and whilst lying under guard at the Mole, a young gentleman then bathing, was seized with the cramp, and immediately sunk in the presence of numbers, who did not attempt anything for his relief. One of the Algerine sailors, who was standing on the gunwale of the prize instantly jumped into the water, and having laid hold of the body in its rise, tied one end of a handkerchief round the shoulder, the other end of which he fastened to his own, and swam with it to shore. The drowned person was recovered by proper applications, and the Marquis de Pallierhi, whose son was thus preserved, being introduced to the king, threw himself on his knees, and requested the liberty of the gallant Algerine. His Sicilian Majesty's reply was truly noble. "Your request, sir," said he, "is both reasonable and humane; the Moor is yours, and you may dispose of him as you please. The remainder of the crew are mine, and by the laws of war perpetual slaves; but they are free from this moment. Ten righteous men would have saved Sodom from the wrath of the Almighty, and shall not one gallant and humane man, who has risked his life for an enemy, and restored to me so valuable a subject, merit the pardon of a few companions?" Next day, an order was published for their release, and they departed amidst the acclamations of the populace.

5. HELP THE MISSIONARIES.

DEAR FRIENDS,—By the kind providence of God another year has dawned upon us. With grateful hearts let us look back at the year which is past, and count the blessings God hath bestowed upon us. What a total we behold! Truly, God is good; but what have we done in return? Verily little in comparison. But another year commenced, now is the time to work for God. What shall we do to prove our appreciation of His goodness? Help the missionaries, is my reply. The vast importance of this subject is admitted by many who would manifest towards it the sympathy which it demands. You have a duty to discharge in relation to it, on which momentous interests depend. Let all be up and doing untiringly in this great work. Especially let those who are instructors of the young, seek to be themselves imbued with a missionary spirit, then labour to transfuse the like burning zeal into the hearts of their scholars.

The scholars of our beloved Connexion number 180,064, our teachers 32,738. Here is an army above two hundred thousand! What a mighty phalanx, what a number to be enlisted on the side of Christian missions, to be led on to immortality and honour by our churches.

How solemn the thought, how vast the responsibility! Let our youthful hosts be sanctified by God to the advancement of our Redeemer's Kingdom, and who shall predicate the glorious results? Let a missionary education be imparted now, and who shall limit the mighty conquests of their Christian maturity? It is a cheering feature in the history of missionary enterprise, when the young are extensively ranked among its supporters. It has been often said: "Coming events cast their shadows before," and surely, now that the children in our Zion are so actively engaged, these shadows are extended before us. The propriety of this juvenile movement is now as universally admitted, as its singular prosperity ought to be a subject of fervent gratitude to God. It augurs well for the prosperity of missions in future years. Beginning with the young, the Church is increasing and perpetuating the missionary spirit among all ranks and classes of our people. And the success which has followed the attempt, is only a prelude of what another generation may be expected to accomplish—as the droppings that precede the fertilizing shower, or the twilight that ushers in the full orb of day, such are present efforts to future achievements.

Is it too much to hope, that the efforts thus put forth will be blessed to hasten that period "when all shall know the Lord, from the least unto the greatest?" However near or remote that period may be, let us honour the means which God has employed to hasten its arrival. Would to God that those who now stand aloof from this mighty work, would put their hands to the gospel plough! Would that they all would learn the lesson which the missionary zeal of our Sabbath scholars has set before them—a lesson, which not only all of an equal age, but thousands of riper years and higher attainments, would do well to ponder and imitate!

Men of Israel! help the missionary cause, it is the cause of God. Souls are perishing on every hand; many call loudly for help, for salvation: will you not arise, put forth all your energies, and rush to the rescue? Organize your Sabbath scholars in every society, bring them together, arouse their sympathies in this glorious work, direct their efforts, assist them by your contributions, watch their proceedings, throw in your influence, if their energies seem to flag; pray powerfully and frequently with them and for their success, in collecting and giving according to their circumstances; enlighten them as to the vast importance of the work in which they are engaged. Read to them the monthly missionary notices, acquaint yourselves more fully with the work—its progress and success, and in the burning language of love exhort often the young souls of your various Churches; and glorious will be the results. Your own souls will swell with love to God and man; and if all our preachers, leaders, members, and teachers earnestly combine to carry out this important object, we shall prove ourselves deserving of our name, a "Missionary people."

That God may arouse us fully, is the earnest prayer of

UNCLE ANDREW.

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. Words of Comfort for Parents Bereaved of Little Children. Edited by WILLIAM LOGAN, Author of the "Moral Statistics of Glasgow." With an Introduction by the Rev. WM. ANDERSON, LL.D. Glasgow. London: James Nisbet and Co., 21, Berners-street. 1861.

Words fitly spoken are like "Apples of gold in pictures of silver;" or, as some render the text, a word seasonably spoken is like apples of gold in baskets of silver, were words that seemed to come unsought or sent for on our perusal of this interesting volume. Hard is the heart which heaves no sigh in sympathy with the bereaved, and utterly undesirable is the feeling of that heart which needs no relief from a flood of tears, when surrounded by suffering, affliction, and death. Who that has read the narrative of the favoured family at Bethany; who that has pursued the path of sorrow to the tomb of Lazarus; who that has read or heard these never to be forgotten words "Jesus wept," can doubt that moderated sorrow for the dead is compatible with the loftiest intellect and the most profound piety? Our limits check our pen—the array of talent which Mr. Logan presents, the masterly manner in which the principal subjects are handled, the force of truth, and the gentleness of the kindest sympathy, and amidst all and above all, the death-blow which is given in this excellent work to the abominable doctrine of the eternal reprobation of infants, must very largely contribute to make this book a favourite companion in the house of mourning, especially where parents have been bereaved of infants or pious children. We highly recommend this work.

2. Samuel Drew, M.A.; the Self-taught Cornishman. A Life Lesson. By his Eldest Son. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster-row. Drew, Bodmin, Cornwall. 1861. Price 3s. 6d.

THANKS to the respectable publishers of this very valuable addition to our biographical literature. This "Life Lesson" is so fraught with valuable stimuli to young men of limited means, but of industrious habits, possessing a good staple article in mind, but unaided by the possession of cash, or human patronage, that we feel anxious the volume before us should have a wide circulation among men of this class especially, and among all other classes of society.

The subject of this volume was by no means a promising one during the early stages of his youth, nor even at the time when he attained to manhood. Indeed his antecedents were in some respects repulsive, but he possessed a keenness of penetration and a grasp of intellect that gave him an influence among his shop-mates and neighbours, that was calculated to flatter his vanity, if he was in any measure susceptible thereof. He was blessed with pious parents, but was early deprived of his maternal guide, guard, and intercessor before the throne of grace. Nevertheless young Drew was, doubtless, at times subject to a measure of Divine light and religious conviction, although amid his poaching and smuggling associates he might conceal the secret emotions of his heart.

per day, and his employers becoming insolvent at the end of eight weeks his first earnings were lost. For a considerable time his region of literature seems to have been generally limited to a few numbers of the "Weekly Examiner," "The History of Paul Jones," "The Serapis and the Bon Homme Richard." When he commenced business he had a capital of 14s. His literary desires were aroused and intensified by reading "Locke on the Understanding."

Having been converted under the early preaching of Dr. Adam Clarke, a close and lasting friendship was formed between that learned commentator and the self-taught Cornishman, which we doubt not is now being consummated in eternal bliss. After the time of Mr. Drew's conversion, a fresh impetus was given to his mighty mind, and after publishing several valuable works which are destined to support his imperishable fame, and after ranking among the first metaphysicians of his own and other ages, he passed away to the regions of redeemed and unfallen spirits in the full triumph of faith, leaving an example in the capabilities of a self-taught Cornishman, that we trust will prompt many youth of this and succeeding generations to follow his steps in honourable and arduous toil, until they arrive not only to a respectable but useful position in civil and religious society. We have much pleasure in recommending this cheap and very valuable work to the attention of our numerous readers.

3. Arminianism v. Hyper-Calvinism.—Being three letters, from Philip Pugh to the Rev. Samuel Cozens, Baptist Minister. Second Edition. May be had of the author and R. Davies, Conference Offices, London, and all Booksellers, by order.

WE are glad at the improved state of feeling which exists between Arminians and Calvinists generally, as nothing is more palpable than that saving religion is quite compatible with the various doctrines promulgated by the teachers of the views held by the truly pious of both parties. Again, it is a pleasing fact that asperities of the hyper school are being much modified, and we trust the good work, so well begun, will extend until each shall behold in each a brother beloved in the Lord. We lament, however, that while there is a general improvement, there are instances, and, perhaps not a few, where people are exceedingly officious in urging their eccentricities, peculiarities, and dogmas on parties, whose interests they by no means promote; but, on the contrary, many persons by such conduct become perplexed.

and it is to be feared, such characters have contributed at least to overthrow the faith of some.

If by one party in this controversy unhappy personalities have been had recourse to, the apt, keen, cutting repartee of our author, aided by appropriate scriptures for the defence of truth and the extension of righteousness, must have been felt by Mr. Pugh's opponent, and we will hope that the brethren will henceforward agree to differ.

The work not only furnishes a thorough exposure of many errors, but it also renders lucid numerous passages of scripture, which might have perplexed many minds. Indeed, it is not merely polemic, but is an excellent commentary on many very important passages of divine revelation. See index and synopsis of texts at the end of the volume. We hail the work as a valuable acquisition to our connexional literature.

In order to secure the repetition of this notice in our present number, we have not been able to read the entire volume, which we regret; but we have read so far, as to assure our own mind that we may and hereby do heartily recommend the work.

4. Ordination Charge. By the Rev. W. COOKE, D.D., to the Rev. H. Downes, H. Marsden, R. C. Turner, W. Butterworth, J. W. Williams, S. Meldrum, W. Longbottom, and J. Chadwick, at the Liverpool Conference, 1861. Published by request of the Conference. London: H. Webber, 24, Warwick Lane; and Hamilton, Adams, and Co., Paternoster Row.

At the commencement of this Ordination Charge, the sentiments of Dr. Cooke are especially adapted to impress the mind with the duties and responsibilities of the Gospel ministry, and when these objects have been powerfully enforced in the doctor's clear and convincing manner, he guides his readers from soul-stirring didactics to a lifelike sketch of "the good minister," who is described as "of genuine piety," "of tender sympathy," "of singleness of eye," "of zealous labour," and "of constant prayer." With a facility for spiritual portraiture, and for describing ministerial efficiency, our author prosecutes his object to a very happy issue. Dr. Cooke's remarks on idleness in the ministry are so thoroughly in accordance with our own views, and of such importance is the subject to the weal of Zion, that we transcribe a short extract:—

"An idle minister is a detestable monstrosity, an incubrance in the Church, a stigma on the name, a laughing-stock to devils, and an abhorrence to good men."

From such ministers may the Church of Christ be speedily delivered, and may workmen who need not be ashamed succeed in the rapid extension of Christ's kingdom to the ends of the earth, is our fervent and constant prayer. The work before us is excellent. To our young ministers, especially, we say, read it, with prayerful resolves to attend to its teachings, and extensive and lasting good must be the result.

5. The Cosmogony of Genesis: its Inspiration and Harmony with Science. By the Rev. W. COOKE, D.D. London, H. Webber, 21, Warwick-lane; and Hamilton, Adams, and Co., Paternoster Row.

THIS is another well-timed and valuable pamphlet from the pen of an author whose words evince the accomplished scholar, the sound theologian, and the devoted Christian minister.

The "Cosmogony of Genesis" is a superior work. In treating on the Inspiration of the Book of Genesis, and in answering objections thereto derived from astronomy, geology, chronology, physiology, and spontaneous generation, Dr. Cooke explodes so many fallacies and establishes, what may be regarded, the great central idea of his work on such a foundation as must recommend his efforts to the minds of his intelligent readers, while his pamphlet is calculated to teach men of superficial powers, and of unsettled propensities that, on scientific principles, the Book of Genesis, as an inspired portion of Holy Writ, has the strongest claims to our unshaken confidence. We with pleasure recommend the work to the attention of our readers.

6. The Alarm; or, the Indifferent Church, Described, Warned, and Called to Action. By THOMAS JACKSON, Minister of the Gospel. London: R. Davies, Sutton-street, Commercial-road; J. Thickbroom, 13, Paternoster-row. Witney: E. W. Watts.

THE subjects introduced into this small volume are of exceedingly grave import, and Mr. Jackson treats them in a manner quite in character therewith. The facts and arguments furnished by the Author, both original and selected, are adapted to convince any person, who is not hopelessly sceptical, that sin abounds in our own country, that drunkenness and the innumerable ills connected therewith, still blight the hopes of myriads, and awfully swell the number of those who seek death in the error of their ways. In the church of Christ also, the Author finds much cause for alarm, especially in the lack of love to God, and zeal for his cause.

While some of the views may be deemed as too sombre, and perhaps some of the statistics furnished from other authors may be thought rather extravagant, yet the book is calculated for usefulness, and we hope it will have a wide circulation, and be blessed to many souls.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

VENTNOR MISSION, ISLE OF WIGHT.—The history of the Primitive Methodist Connexion furnishes abundant proof, that the Connexion whose rise and progress it records, is emphatically missionary in its character. The missionary spirit was possessed in an eminent degree by the founders and fathers of our Israel, and I hope the interest in missionary work, whether home, or foreign, has not abated; but I trust the mantles of our ascending Elishahs have fallen upon our Elishas.

May

We who caught them as they fell
Bind those mantles to our breast,
In us may God's Spirit dwell,
On us may His influence rest.

Much has been done; much remains to be done. Onward! is still our motto. Progress! is still our watchword, and on our banners is still inscribed: "The world for Christ!" Nor will we be satisfied until

"People and realms of every tongue Shall sing His love with sweetest song."

While, however, our General Missionary Committee evinces solicitude for souls in distant lands, it has also deep sympathy with perishing humanity at home; hence from time to time new mission stations have been, and still are being opened in our midst.

The Isle of Wight, for a number of years, has received a considerable share of missionary efforts, and in several of its towns and villages, societies have been long established. Encouraged by past successes, stimulated by the Divine command:

"Go ye out into all the world," &c., and cheered by the Divine promise: "Lo, I am with you alway," &c., the General Missionary Committee has deemed it prudent to open a mission in this part of our "Garden Isle;" the writer being appointed to open the same. It may not be uninteresting to give a few particulars relative to my proceedings and prospects, &c.

Ventnor.—This place has been very rapid in its growth. A comparatively few years ago it was a village, but now it is a busy town, with a population of more than 3,000 souls. Much might be said of the beautiful scenery—the numerous picturesque rambles of surpassing beauty and loveliness in the vicinity of Ventnor; but I forbear. At this town I arrived in July last, and on the evening of the 31st of that month opened my commission among its inhabitants. In one of its streets, I gave out and sang as I proceeded through the same, the hymn commencing with:—

"Come ye sinners, poor and needy," &c.

A goodly number of persons having gathered around me, I preached the Word of Life; after which I stated the object of my mission. For several weeks I continued to preach in the open air only, and was much cheered by the attention of those to whom I ministered.

The Wesleyan Methodists having just vacated their old chapel and opened a new one, the former was offered for sale, and has been purchased for £225, and conveyed to trustees for our own Connexion. The chapel which is freehold and capable of seating about 150 persons, is in good repair. After preaching in it for several weeks, we held our formal opening services on Sunday and Monday, October 13th and 14th, 1861. On the former day, sermons were preached by the Revs. W. Baitson, of Newport, and J. Hall. On Monday we held a tea-meeting in the Lecture Hall of the Literary Institution, when about 150 persons partook of an ample repast. On the removal of the tables, a public meeting was held, presided over by E. Warden, Esq. (Independent), when addresses were delivered by the Revs. W. Baitson, C. Foster (Wesleyan), and J. Hall. A collection was made and liberally responded to. The proceeds of the services amounted to £12.

I am happy to add, we are letting a few sittings in the chapel, and a small society has been formed. In this enterprise, I shall doubtless at times have hard toiling, but let me have the smile of heaven, and the confidence of our Missionary Committee, and then I shall cheerfully toil on in my Master's cause, desiring only to spend and be spent for Him. I am truly grateful to God for the help He has thus far vouchsafed, and I am deeply indebted to many kind friends for the aid they afforded me in various ways at the opening services, thereby saving additional expense.

Bonchurch.—This village lies a short distance from Ventnor, and here, amid scenery of the most romantic loveliness, pre-eminent for beauty, I have blown the Gospel trumpet. On my first visit to this place, a kind Wesleyan friend offered me the use of his garden wall for a pulpit—the offer was thankfully accepted, and thence I have repeatedly dispensed the Word of Life to rich and poor,—the learned and the rude. I trust the Divine blessing will accompany my labours, but as yet I have not found in this village a room or house in which to preach during the winter months, still I am full of hope.

"Courage, our Captain cries," &c.

Shanklin.—This village is delightfully situated on the south-eastern coast of the island. Its little antique church, emblematic of quiet and repose; its pleasant cottages embowered in shady groves, and its noble prospect of the sea, form a strikingly romantic picture. Here amid sylvan and rural scenes, I have been wont to tell the story of redeeming love, and while in the name of my Divine Master I have endeavoured to preach a present, free, and full salvation, God has helped me; enquiry has been excited, and most interesting services have been held. A room having been kindly offered to me, I have opened the same for Divine worship. To God be all the praise.

Wroxall.—This village I have also missioned, but have not, as yet, obtained a place in which to preach.

Being alone, without any local help, save a little I receive from the adjoining station, I have not been able to open more places than those already named. I am, however, much encouraged with those I have opened, and am looking for, and expecting, and praying, that my anxiety and toil may be amply repaid. For human help I am thankful, but for Divine help I especially pray; yet while I crave the guidance of the Holy Spirit, I also desire the fervent prayers of the friends of missions.

JAMES HALL.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

1. DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—Missionary services were held at Gravesend, October 20th and 21st, 1861. Sermons were preached on the 20th by the Revs. J. Dawson (deputation), and H. Green. On the 21st, a public tea-meeting was held, followed by a missionary meeting. The meetings were well attended, and a divine influence rested upon us. The chair was taken by J. North, Esq., and addresses were delivered by the Revs. T. Derry (Wesleyan), B. H. Kluht (Congregationalist), J. Dawson, T. Knox, S. Hart, H. Green, and Messrs. Carpenter and Hitchen. The amount realized was £8 4s. 7d. I am happy to say, the missionary spirit appears to be stirred up among our friends here, and they feel determined to do better next year.

May the blessing of God rest on all our missions.

HENRY GREEN.

2. SELBY BRANCH OF SWINEFLEET CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—Missionary services were held in this branch at North Duffield, Cliff, Burn and Drax, on November 10th and four following days, when the Revs. R. W. Monkman, T. Campey, and other friends rendered us efficient aid. The above services were characterized by an increase of missionary contributions and by the conversion of sinners to God. The total sum realized in this branch for the missionary cause, during 1861, amounts to £47 19s. 1d., being £13 15s. 11d. more than was collected for the same object during the preceding year.

JAMES R. PARKINSON.

3. WORCESTER BRANCH.—Dear Brother Harland,—We have recently completed a successful course of missionary services in this branch. On Sunday, November 3rd, 1861, preparatory sermons were preached at Worcester, Kempsey Green, Sale Green, and Wadborough. On the following week meetings were held at Worcester, when the writer presided, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. B. Stubbs, H. E. Sturmer, J. Bartlett, and J. Hall (deputation). The meeting was lively and effective, the proceeds were £8 11s. 9d. The meetings at the other places were also well attended and lively. The Rev. J. Hall (deputation) rendered us acceptable service.

O, may the God of missions continue to bless us. The total collections amounted to £11 8s. 11d., being £4 3s. 6½d. in advance of last year.

E. COOPER.

4. MALMESBURY CIRCUIT.—Dear Mr. Editor,—We have recently held a course of very interesting missionary meetings in this Circuit. On Sunday, the 24th of November, 1861, sermons were preached at Malmesbury, Tetbury, Hullavington, and Startley, and collections were made on behalf of the mission funds. On the following days, we held missionary meetings at the above named places, and were assisted by the Rev. T. Powell, from Motcombe, and the Rev. G. Warner, from Sturminster. The brethren last named served us efficiently. The meetings were of a high order, and the influence from Heaven rested upon us. The amount raised at Malmesbury by collections and boxes was £8 10s. 10d.; at Tetbury, £2 18s.; at Startley, £6 16s. 11d.; and at Hullavington, £2 1s. 1d. Total, £20 6s. 10d.; being about £1 16s. in advance of what was realized at these places last year. The friends intend, by the help of the Lord, to far exceed this amount next year.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. WELLOW BRANCH.—Dear Editor,—We have opened a neat, substantial chapel at Caunton. At an early period in the history of Primitive Methodism, this village was missioned by our people, and a society was formed. In 1823, a small chapel was rented and furnished by our members, and many quickening seasons were experienced, and in it some of our present ministers received the first elements of evangelical truth and Methodist theology, which, incorporated with zeal and perseverance, have issued in extensive usefulness.

The late Rev. Jeremiah Gilbert, the Revs. W. Antliff, S. Antliff, and W. Cutts have all gone out from Caunton.

For several years the old chapel has belonged to the late Mr. Cutts, whose family has manifested deep sympathy with our cause. In consequence of some changes having taken place a short time since, Brother Cutts proposed to sell the old chapel to the Connexion, or, if our friends could obtain a site elsewhere for a new one, he would give £5 towards its erection, providing Messrs. Antliff and the society would make corresponding efforts. Accordingly two cottages, with gardens, were bought at a cost of £170, including conveyance.

A few months back, the foundation-stone of our new chapel was laid by J. Heard, Esq., and Brother S. Antliff delivered an address on the occasion.

October 13th, 1861, opening services were held, when two sermons were delivered by the Rev. W. Cutts. On October 20th, Brother W. Antliff preached twice; also after tea on Monday, Mr. Antliff preached again. The services were generally crowded, and the collections good.

In canvassing the village for donations, we were received with kindness and many good wishes. Very few, indeed, dismissed us without rendering help. Our little sanctuary will accommodate about 130 persons with seats; and while it is an ornament to the village and an important acquisition to our interest in the place, it also serves as a memorial of the worthy men Caunton has furnished for the itinerancy.

The sum total raised gratuitously amounts to about £65, being nearly one half of the cost of the erection. We magnify the grace of God, and are thankful to the friends who have helped us.

THOMAS FLETCHER.

2. BUTTON OAK, KIDDERMINSTER CIRCUIT.—Button Oak is a small hamlet, about three miles from Bewdley, in the county of Salop. For nearly twenty years it has been the scene of Primitive Methodist labours. For some years it was a very flourishing place, and many sinners were converted to God; but of late our cause has been low, and very few people attended the services.

Mrs. Hamar, a lady who has recently come to reside at Button Oak, was much grieved to see so many people who never attended any place of worship (the parish church is about seven miles distant), and one day last winter the writer called on her, and unsolicited, she offered him a piece of land in a most eligible situation, on which to erect a chapel. The offer was laid before the circuit authorities, who, regarding it as an indication of the will of God, gladly accepted it.

The preliminary arrangements were gone through, and a neat sanctuary has been erected, 23 feet by 18 feet. The building is brick, covered with slate, and has four circular-headed windows. The cost of the whole is about £73.

The chapel was opened for Divine service on Sunday, October 20th, 1861, by Mrs. Viner, of Norton, and on the following Sabbath, Mr. and Mrs. Gwillim, of Kidderminster, officiated. The collections were £3 14s. 9d. A tea-meeting was held October 21st, and the trays gratuitously supplied. Messrs. Lewis, Horton, and Beavan gave each a donation of £5, and several others gave £1, each; altogether we have realised by donations, £30 1s. 3d.; tea-meetings, £5 4s.; collections, £3 14s. 9d.; making a total of £40; and we have £6 promised against the anniversary.

We gratefully record our thanks to all friends. May the chapel be a blessing to the inhabitants of Button Oak, and the birthplace of many souls. Amen.

WILLIAM GWILLIM.

3. SHIPDHAM, EAST DEREHAM CIRCUIT.—Shipdham, a large and populous village in East Dereham Circuit, was missioned by the Rev. R. Key, nearly thirty years since, amidst much opposition and persecution; notwithstanding which, the Word went with power to some hearts, and a society was formed, which has continued to the present. Worship has been regularly conducted for more than twenty years in a hired chapel, and a large Sabbath-school has been raised in connection therewith. The building being too small for the increasing congregation and school, an effort was made in the autumn of 1860 to purchase a plot of land on which to erect a Connexional chapel; but we failed in the attempt. After this, our friend, Brother E. Last offered an eligible site for the purpose; efforts were made to obtain subscriptions towards the object, and encouraged by our success, the land (20 yards by 12), was secured by a Connexional deed; and after the usual preliminaries had been gone through, the first stone of the intended new chapel was laid by the writer on the 22nd of May, 1861. The building is 36 feet by 24, and 15 feet from the floor to the wall-plate; the walls are 14 inches thick, of brick and stone. The chapel is covered with slate, and is a neat and substantial edifice.

On Sunday, Sept. 15th, 1861, opening sermons were preached by the Rev. H. Gunns, of Norwich, and the Rev. R. G. Williams, of Dereham.

On Tuesday, the 17th, the Rev. R. Key preached in the afternoon; after service about two hundred persons sat down to tea, which was succeeded by a public-meeting, presided over by Brother J. Andrews. The speakers were Revs. R. Key, J. Scott, J. Dalglish, and H. Turrall. A blessed influence attended the whole of these services.

The entire cost is upwards of £170. By the liberality of our friends, we have raised more than £70, and leave only £100 on the premises. £80 are taken on mortgage, and £20 on note. The latter sum the trustees purpose to pay off at the first anniversary; promises of upwards of £16 towards that amount have been already given. We beg to tender our best thanks to all friends who helped us in this work of faith and labour of love. Praying that this sanctuary may be the birth-place of very many precious souls, we ascribe all praise and glory to God.

JONATHAN SCOTT.

4. CLAYPOLE, NEWARK STATION.—Claypole is a village and parish, with a station on the Great Northern railway, situate on the east side of the river Witham, with a population of about 700 souls. The foundationstone was laid on Friday, August 23rd, 1861, by Mr. William Barnsdale. The proceeds of the day amounted to £13. The following extract is from the Newark Advertiser, Nov. 13th, 1861.—

“It is now 42 years since the Primitive Methodist preachers first proclaimed the gospel in the village streets of Claypole. For several years they conducted the services in various cottages, as they were offered, until a small room was taken of Mr. Lane, for the sum of £1 per annum. Here for a number of years they met, repairing the old room from time to time as it needed, and often unable to find sufficient accommodation, until the 25th of last month, when the present chapel was opened, and about 200 people sat down to tea gratuitously provided. At 7 o'clock, the Rev. R. Parks gave a lecture to a crowded audience. Subject: ‘Martin Luther.’ The same gentleman also preached to crowded congregations on the following Sabbath. These were followed by two sermons on Sunday, Nov. 3rd, by the Rev. W. Richardson, of Nottingham. The total costs of the chapel, including land, will be £120, towards which there has already been raised, including donations and subscriptions, the sum of £50. The chapel is an ornament to the village, and will seat 130 persons. On Tuesday last, the Rev. P. Daykin, of Newark, improved the death of the late Rev. W. Carthy, to a large and attentive audience, and at the close of the service, 52 of the sittings in the chapel were taken. Never have we witnessed a more united effort on the part of friends than has been put forth in the erection and services of this place of worship.”

The chapel fronts the main street, with a little spare land as frontage, which we intend to palisade. The chapel is 28 ft. 6 in. by 22. ft 6 in., and 14 ft. to the ceiling; has an elevation of pews in front: a singers' pew on each side of the pulpit. The chapel is well lighted and ventilated. The seats are all let, and additional ones are needed. The Lord is also blessing us, and members are being added to the society.

We would tender our thanks to all helpers.

May the house of prayer be made a blessing to the present and succeeding generations, is the prayer of

P. DAYKIN.

5. DEAR EDITOR, — We have recently opened a new chapel at COTTINGHAM, in the Hull Second Circuit. The Primitive Methodists first missioned this place in 1820, the year after Mr. Clowes came to labour as a missionary at Hull. During the first ten years, the society rented a small barn, which they fitted up for a place of public worship. This was the day of small things; but it led to something of greater importance.

In 1828, a neat little chapel was erected in a good central situation, capable of accommodating about 120 adults. For several years past the chapel has been too small for the increasing population and our thriving interest at Cottingham; successful pecuniary efforts were made under the superintendency of my predecessor, Mr. J. Petty, with a view to enlarge the old chapel; but we subsequently decided to build a new one in an eligible situation and on a superior tenure. We laid the foundation under propitious circumstances last midsummer, and the premises are now nearly completed. The edifice is a neat, substantial, and well arranged structure, and reflects great credit on Mr. Joseph Wright, of Hull, the architect; and Messrs.

Hobson and Taylor, of Cottingham, the contractors.

All the windows are of ground glass, and the lights are secured by a space of five feet on each side of the chapel. The front will be protected by strong iron railing set in massive stone work. The place is lighted with gas. The gallery is efficiently lighted by fifteen jets in two circles, surrounding the lower extremity of a single shaft suspended from the ceiling. In place of a pulpit there is a neat semicircular platform, capable of accommodating five or six persons at public meetings. The front is built of white brick, and the style is modern Italian. On an emergency the chapel will seat 350 persons. A preacher's vestry is provided, which opens into the chapel at the foot of the platform stairs. The interior furniture is stained and varnished, which presents a very neat appearance. The entire costs, including sufficient land on which to erect a school and chapel-keeper's house, is about £700, towards which we have raised by voluntary contributions, &c., about £230, and we have a prospect of realizing a considerably larger amount. To the worshipful, the Mayor of Hull, W. Hodge, Esq., and his good lady, we are under great obligations for their liberal patronage. The trustees too, and their wives, by their zeal and generosity, set a praiseworthy example to the society and congregation. In our opening services we were favoured with the valuable assistance of the Revs. John Bywater, of Kirton Lindsey; William Whitby, of Beverley; and Miss R. A. Wilson, of Hull. The opening sermon was preached by Mr. W. Garner, the superintendent of the circuit, whose prayer is that the society may love one another; let their light shine before men, and be zealous for the Lord of Hosts; then the glory of the latter house will be greater than the glory of the former.

WILLIAM GARNER.

6. DEAR EDITOR. — APPERKNOWLE is a small village in the Chesterfield Circuit, at which we have laboured for more than thirty years; but for want of a suitable place in which to worship God we have suffered great inconvenience. Many efforts have been made to obtain a site of land on which a chapel might be erected, but those efforts were not successful until last spring, when Mr. Ward sold us a piece of land for £10. The foundation stone was laid June 24th, 1861, by Mr. J. Sharman of Sheffield. The collections and profits of tea amounted to £7 15s.

On Sunday, October 20th, 1861, the chapel was opened for Divine service, when sermons were delivered by Messrs. J. and W. Sharman, who are natives of the village. The son preached morning and evening, and the father, Mr. J. Sharman, in the afternoon. The chapel was crowded afternoon and evening, and many were unable to gain admittance.

On Monday, October 21st, a tea meeting was held, and upwards of 150 persons sat down to an excellent repast; after which, a public meeting was held, and addresses delivered by the Rev. W. Sapcoat and several other friends.

Oct. 27th, Mr. W. Thomas preached two sermons. The collections and profits of the tea amounted to £22.

The chapel is a substantial building. It is 24 feet 10 inches by 24 feet 4 inches, and 13 feet from the floor to the ceiling. It is covered with blue slate; it has four windows, two on each side, with boarded floor and folding doors, and a fan light: the pulpit with a singers' pew are on one side. There are six rising pews, stained and varnished. The chapel is well ventilated, and will seat about 150 persons. The entire cost will be about £150, towards which we shall have raised, when we have obtained a little which is not come in, about £90. We record our thanks to all who have helped us. May the Holy Spirit be copiously poured out, and may this little sanctuary be the spiritual birth-place of many souls.

CHAPEL RE-OPENINGS.

1. STOURMINSTER, NEWTON.—We have recently effected a considerable improvement here by the enlargement of our chapel, the erection of a gallery, and by cleaning and painting the whole. The re-opening services were held on Sunday and Monday, November 17th and 18th, 1861. On the former day we were favoured with the services of Mr. Isaac Humphries, from the Brinkworth Circuit. The word was with power, and several persons accepted the invitation to come forward for instruction and prayer, and they found salvation by faith in the blood of the Lamb. The writer preached in the afternoon. On Monday afternoon Brother T. Powell preached in the Temperance-hall, which has been placed gratuitously at our service during the enlargement of our chapel. About two hundred persons took tea in the chapel after the service, and a spirited meeting followed, presided over by Mr. Walter Bartley, from Motcombe. The writer read the report and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Blackmore, Humphries, and Powell. In order to understand our financial position, it must be known that the premises, consisting of a small chapel, preacher's house and cottage, were, fifteen years ago, secured to the Connexion on the condition that an annuity of £15 per year for twenty years should be paid, and at the end of that term one hundred pounds was to be paid to the vendor. A subsequent enlargement was effected, and a mortgage of £40 taken on the premises. Since I have been here God has mercifully revived his work, and an increasing congregation, Sabbath-school, and church, cried, "Give us room, that we may dwell." The only way to enlarge our borders appeared to be to take the preacher's house into the area of the chapel, but this would seriously diminish our annual income. However, to justify the procedure, Mr. Henry Stroud, a generous old friend, offered to give £100 pounds to the chapel fund, on the condition that he should receive a bond securing him an annuity of £4 for his life. This was gladly accepted, we proceeded with the work, and by this addition and the erection of a gallery, we have provided sittings for more than a hundred additional hearers. The cost of the enlargement is between £60 and £70, towards which we have by donations and opening services raised about £50. Mr. Stroud has made himself very useful in soliciting donations, and he has met with general acceptance. G. Sturt, Esq., M.P., the Hon. W. B. Portman, Esq., M.P., and other gentlemen of the neighbourhood, aided us by donations. So that after paying all expenses and paying off the mortgage, we have a goodly sum in hand as the commencement of a fund to meet the £100 becoming due at five years' end. May God, even our God, bless all who have assisted us, and that the glory of the latter house may exceed the glory of the former, is the prayer of yours affectionately,

GEORGE WARNER.

LAYING FOUNDATION STONES.

1. GREAT BROMLEY, COLCHESTER CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—The friends at this place have for some time past felt the need of a larger place of worship. The cottage in which they have held religious services was too small for them. This led our friends to carry the matter in fervent prayer to the wise Disposer of events, and He opened their way, so that a very eligible site was obtained, on which to build a new chapel; and on Tuesday, October 23rd, 1861, the foundation-stone was laid. At half-past two o'clock p.m. the friends met on the ground on which the chapel is being built. The service was commenced by the Rev. W. Yeadon; a short address was delivered by the writer, and other matters were attended to in order. At five o'clock a gratuitous tea was provided, to which about 120 persons sat down. After tea a public-meeting was held, when addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Yeadon, J. Fortress, and other friends. The proceeds of the day from the tea-meeting, &c., amounted to £14. The chapel will be situated in a very convenient place, and is to be 30 feet by 22, and 11 feet from the floor to the ceiling, and will be well ventilated. The society is in a good state, and additions are being made almost every week.

That the work so auspiciously begun, may be continued and increased, and that the chapel when built may be the birth-place of many souls, is the earnest prayer of

J. FORTRESS.

2. On Monday, November 4th, 1861, the foundation-stone of a Primitive Methodist chapel, now in course of erection, was laid at FRECKLETON, PRESTON CIRCUIT, by Mr. John Lamb, of Preston, who delivered an appropriate address. After the laying of the stone, the Rev. W. Rowe, of Manchester, delivered an address. The company then retired to the old room, and about 250 people sat down to a comfortable tea, which was partly gratuitous. A public-meeting was held after, over which Mr. W. Sowerbutts, of Preston, presided, who opened the meeting with a powerful address, which was followed by addresses from the Revs. W. Knox, of Kirkham (Independent), D. Peacock, of Derby (Baptist), W. Rowe, R. Kaye, J. Graham, E. Stubbs, and Messrs. J. Lamb, R. Dalton, and J. Whittle. The room was crowded. The collections, donations, and profits of the tea-meeting amounted to £26 19s. 2d.

SPECIAL EFFORTS.

1. LANCASTER.—Dear Editor,—I have no doubt you, and at least some of your numerous readers, will be glad to find that special efforts have been made to remove the debt which is on our chapel at this place. The sanctuary was built and opened in 1854, and cost about £458. The debt left on the premises after being opened was £300. When I returned to this station in July, 1860, I found that £34 had been paid off during the five years I had been absent. My first effort was to get the chapel painted, &c., intending after that was done, to commence operations for the removal of the debt. But the way opening for the erection of a chapel at Brookhouse (which was opened during the last summer) the effort for Lancaster Chapel was deferred till a few months ago. Having ascertained what amount could be raised among ourselves, we laid our case before the General Chapel Fund mittee, and that committee promised to give us £25, on condition that we raised £101, to reduce the debt to £140. I am happy to say that we are in a position to claim that grant, and reduce the debt as stated. The following is the substance of what appeared in the Lancaster Observer on the subject :—

“Services in connection with the anniversary of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Moor Lane, Lancaster, were held on Sunday, November 3rd, 1861, on which occasion the Rev. D. Tuton, of Staleybridge, preached in the chapel, morning and afternoon, and in the evening in the Palatine Hall. The services were of a very interesting character, and the attendance (especially in the evening) was good. A collection was made after each sermon in aid of the fund for liquidating the debt on the above chapel; the amount realized was £5 12s. On the following evening the annual tea party was held in the Wesleyan school-room, Edward street, when about 170 persons assembled and partook of the “refreshing cup;” the amount obtained from this source was £6 13s. 8d. In the latter end of August last, the Rev. Thomas Bennett, the respected minister of the station, issued circulars requesting assistance from friends towards this praiseworthy object. Up to the August services more than £90 have been obtained, which, with a grant of £25 from the General Chapel Fund, and the proceeds of the anniversary, will enable the trustees to pay off £126, leaving £140 to be obtained in order to make the chapel debtless.

After tea was over the friends adjourned to the chapel, where a very profitable and interesting public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. W. Jackson, one of the trustees. After the chairman’s opening speech, in which he congratulated the friends on the pros-pest of the great reduction or entire removal of the debt, &c., he called on the Rev. T. Bennett to read the list of donations obtained by him towards paying off the debt. The list contained the names of persons belonging to almost all denominations in the town. Among others we noticed those of T. Greene, Esq., £5; E. Dawson, £5; Mr. C. Turner, £5; Storey Brothers, £3 3s; W. Whelson, Esq., £2; the two members for our Borough, £2 each; the Vicar of Lancaster, £1; &c., &c. We thank God for having succeeded our efforts so far; and we hope before long to have to inform you of a further reduction of the remaining debt, or of its being entirely paid off. If the latter can be done, we have not much fear of soon being a self-supporting station. In conclusion we are happy to say, that during the last several weeks some souls have been saved. O that conversions were more general!

THOMAS BENNETT.

2. WESTON HILLS.—Thanksgiving and reduction of chapel debt.

I know not that I was ever more forcibly struck with the beauty of this portion of God’s word than on Friday, November 15th, 1861, while attending a tea-meeting at Weston Hills. A neat little Connexional chapel was erected at this place in 1854; the debt when finished was £66. It stands in the neighbourhood of a few scattered houses. We have a small society and a Sabbath-school, with many friends. Several farmers who attend this place of worship have for some time felt a desire to have a “Thanksgiving service for their late bountiful harvest.” It was agreed that a social tea-meeting should be held in our chapel, and that each person should give (as the Lord hath blessed him) a donation for the reduction of our chapel debt. Friend after friend came forward with a piece of gold or silver until we had on the table £10, and £5 more are expected from friends that were not at the meeting; so that we shall by this thank-offering to God be able to reduce the chapel debt at the least £15. To God be all the glory. O Sir, if all our rich farmers and friends would follow this noble example, what a great amount of good might soon be done.

R. DUCKER.

[We hope the course pursued by the friends referred to in this article will be extensively imitated. The giving, as the Lord prospers us, is truly scriptural, and ought to be universally attended to by the followers of Christ.—EDITOR.]

3. NEW MILLS.—Dear Editor, —The year 1861 will be memorable to the friends of Primitive Methodism in this locality as the year when our chapel and trust property were freed from debt. About six months ago the mortgagee gave notice for the £200 he had on the property to be paid. We thought this a favourable time to make a special effort to clear off part, if not the whole of the debt. We commenced our proceedings by making the chapel anniversary something out of the ordinary course. On Saturday, August 17th, 1861, we held a public tea meeting, when about 300 individuals sat down to an excellent tea, gratuitously provided by our friends. A public meeting followed, presided over by J. Stafford, Esq. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. W. Sanderson, W. Rowe, H. Beeson, F. Clarke, J. Morton, and Mr. J. Ingham, of New Mills. On Sunday, August 18th, Mr. Sanderson preached two sermons, the Wesleyans kindly lending us their chapel for the evening service. By these services we realized £30. In addition to this effort we opened a subscription list. To facilitate our purpose we got circulars printed, giving Connexional information, and fully stating our object. Mr. J. Ingham generously headed our list with a donation of £20, and his son Mr. M. Ingham followed with £10. J. Schofield, Esq., of Liverpool, did us good service by offering us a donation of £20, on condition we realized £180. This gave a fresh impetus to our friends, and we were not long ere a donation of £10 from W. P. Thornhill, Esq., M.P.; £10 from T. Brindley, Esq., Ireland; £5 from His Grace the Duke of Devonshire; £5 from J. North, Esq., Huddersfield, were added to our list. The gentry in the neighbourhood were waited upon and our appeal was generously responded to by J. Bennett, Esq., J. Ingham, Esq., C. Yates, Esq., and Messrs. Hibbert and Alcock, who gave £5 each, and others gave smaller sums. In this effort many of our friends have laboured vigorously, and I am happy to inform you, and your many readers, that the result is the realization of a few pounds more than is required to clear the trust premises from debt.

On Saturday, November 9th, 1861, as a kind of termination to the effort, we held a social tea meeting at which many of our members and friends were present, and those who had taken an active part in removing the debt, addressed the meeting. Joy and gladness at the accomplishment of our purpose, was manifest on every countenance. We are grateful to the Giver of all good for this timely and delightful success, and the prayer of my heart is that all who have in any way assisted us may be rewarded in this life, and in the world to come be the possessors of eternal blessedness. Amen. JOSEPH MORTON.

TEA MEETING.

SANDWICH, RAMSGATE MISSION.—Dear Brother Harland,—The September quarter-day board of this station gave us permission to commence a fund towards the erection of a chapel in this town; an object the accomplishment of which is a desideratum, our present preaching place being far too small to accommodate the people who wish to hear the Word of Life from Primitive Methodist ministers, and we are unable to obtain a larger place. On Monday, October 28th, we held a public tea which was well attended, and the proceeds were good. A public meeting followed, which was addressed by the Revs. J. Bendle, J. Dash, and other friends; and ere the meeting closed one who had wandered from the fold of the Good Shepherd, was restored, while men and angels rejoiced, because in this case he who was dead is alive again, he who was lost is found. Hallelujah. The total sum, brought in by the collectors, together with the profits of the tea, amount to £15 10s. 2½d. Our society as yet is in its infancy, and is composed of a class of men and women who have to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. The above sum has been realized by the pence of the poor, and not by the pounds of the rich; and we hope the collectors will take encouragement from the success that has hitherto attended their efforts, and go on in their praiseworthy undertaking. May the great Head of the church smile on our humble endeavours, and to Him we will ascribe the praise.

JOSEPH DASH.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARIES.

1. ON Lord's Day, October 6th, 1861, two sermons were preached to crowded congregations, in the Primitive Methodist chapel, EDWINSTOWE, by the Rev. G. Watson, of Gainsborough.

On Monday, the 7th, tea was given by Mesdames Charlton, Anderson, Fells, Freeman, and Willmot. At the public meeting which followed, the chair was occupied by our friend Mr. James Lucas. After a short speech by Brother Masling, Brother Anderson gave us a brief historic account of the chapel funds, and the various plans which had been adopted in order to lessen the debt, and bring it into the neat, clean, and respectable condition it now presents. The writer and Mr. Watson subsequently addressed the meeting.

The net proceeds of the anniversary amounted to £5 2s. 10½d.

T. F.

2. SWINBROOK.—On Sunday and Monday, October 13th and 14th, 1861, we celebrated the anniversary of our little chapel at this place, when sermons were preached by the Rev. H. Yeates, of Witney. On Monday a public tea was provided, and upwards of eighty persons partook of the social cup.

After tea a very interesting meeting was held, which was presided over by the writer, and addressed by Brothers James, Cox, Rose, and H. Yeates.

The sum realised was upwards of £11, which will enable the trustees to pay the interest, meet a few extra expenses, and reduce the debt £5.

GEORGE MAISEY.

3. DEAR EDITOR,—The third Anniversary of our COCKWELLS CHAPEL, PENZANCE CIRCUIT, was celebrated on Sunday, October 27th, 1861, when three sermons were preached, that in the morning by Mr. T. Pascoe, and those in the afternoon and evening by J. Hawkins.

The services were very satisfactory. In the evening several persons manifested contrition for sin, and felt their need of a Saviour. The amount collected was £2 10s. 2d.

J. HAWKINS.

4, CONSHAM, CHIPPENHAM CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—The Anniversary Services in connection with our chapel at this place, were held on Sunday and Monday, October 27th and 28th, 1861.

On the Sabbath, sermons were preached in the afternoon and evening by Mrs. Pinchin, of Market Lavington, to crowded congregations, and a holy influence rested upon the people.

On the Monday afternoon about sixty persons sat down to an excellent tea. In the evening we held a public meeting. Mr. Butler, of Chippenham, presided. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. Pinchin, the Revs. E. Millicent and G. Bromley.

The total proceeds of this anniversary amounted to £7 19s. 7d.

That God may shine upon us, and richly bless us, and make this place the birth-place of many precious souls, is the sincere prayer of
G. BROMLEY.

5. DEAR EDITOR,—The Anniversary Services of the Primitive Methodist chapel, BINGLEY, were held on Sunday, October 5th, 1861. Three sermons were preached on the occasion; that in the morning by Mr. P. Clapham (Wesleyan), and those in the afternoon and evening by Master Dodsworth, of Selby, son of the Rev. J. Dodsworth. The congregations were large, and a gracious influence attended the services. The collections amounted to £15 4s., being about one-third more than was ever raised for the same object before.

Great interest was created on this occasion, from the fact that Bingley Chapel was the spiritual birthplace of the youthful preacher. The first time he attended service in it, the Lord converted him under a sermon on the Prodigal Son, preached by his father; and the second time he attended the chapel was to preach the above sermons.

CHARLES CRATTEN.

6. DEAR EDITOR,—The anniversary of the Primitive Methodist chapel at this place was held October 27th, 1861, when sermons were preached in the public room, Park Street, morning and evening, by H. J. M'Culloch, Esq., and in the afternoon by J. C. Richardson, Esq., from York. The attendance was numerous, and the people heard with much attention the word of life.

On Wednesday, October 30th, a tea-meeting was held in the same place, which was attended by more than four hundred persons. The public-meeting which followed was presided over by Captain M'Culloch, and addresses were delivered by J. C. Richardson, the Revs. T. Waumsley, R. Wrench (Wesleyan), Messrs. J. Dodsworth, T. Cutting, and the writer. Those addresses were interspersed with selections of sacred music.

The total proceeds of this anniversary, including a donation of £1 by J. C. Richardson, Esq., and £5 by H. J. M'Culloch, Esq., amounted to £38 2s., being about £6 more than were collected for the same object last year.

JAMES R. PARKINSON.

7. THOMPSON, BRANDON CIRCUIT.—The anniversary of our Thompson chapel was celebrated October 27th and 28th, 1861. Brother R. Church, of Wisbeach, preached three times on the Sabbath to good congregations.

On Monday afternoon he preached again, which service was followed by a numerously attended tea, and a public-meeting in the evening. Our souls were much humbled, and blessed by more than an ordinary degree of the gracious presence of Him who filleth the upper temple, and who has, during the past year, made bare His holy arm in the salvation of precious souls in this house of prayer. Addresses were delivered to a crowded and deeply affected audience by Brothers Church, Webb, Dunnett, Adams, Clarke, and the writer. The monetary proceeds amounted to more than £14, which will enable the trustees to reduce the debt £10.

Our thanks are due to many of the friends of Zion, but especially to the Author of all good. "Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion."

WILLIAM H. MEADOWS.

SCHOOL SERVICES.

1. HASLINGDEN, Dear Editor,—The anniversary of our Sabbath-school at Haslingden was held October 13th, 1861, in connexion with which we also opened a very excellent organ, built by Messrs Jardina and Kurtland, of Manchester. We had three sermons preached during the day: those in the morning and evening by the Rev. J. Kidd of Douglas, Isle of Man, and that in the afternoon by the writer; the services were remarkably well attended, and a very powerful influence pervaded the whole. Mr. Mellor, of Blackburn, presided at the organ, and by his performances rendered valuable aid to the services of the day. The amount collected in behalf of the two-fold objects, was £171 6s. 3d. We hereby thank our kind friends; may the Great Head of the Church reward them in this world a hundred fold, and in the world to come with life everlasting.

THOMAS HINDLEY.

2. CAMDEN TOWN, LONDON SECOND CIRCUIT.—The eleventh anniversary of the above Sabbath school was celebrated on Sunday and Monday, the 3rd and 4th November 1861. On the Sunday sermons were preached in the morning and evening by the Rev. Murray Wilson, of Reading. The congregations were excellent. The tea on the following day was numerously attended, and a spirit of harmony, and gladness pervaded the whole company. The public meeting after was presided over by Mr. Wilson; recitations were given by several of the scholars, interspersed with appropriate hymns and short addresses by some of the friends and officials of the school. The collections and profits of the tea amounted to nearly £5. We are glad also to report an increase in the number of scholars. Our earnest prayer is that our pious scholars may be greatly increased, and that the work of the Lord may prosper in our hands. Amen.

OBITUARY.

1. Died at Yorton Heath, Hadnall Circuit, May 22nd, 1861, in the twenty-sixth year of his age, THOMAS BRITAIN GREGORY. His parents have been members of the Primitive Methodist Connexion upwards of thirty-six years; consequently he was privileged above many. It appears from his own statement that he was the subject of serious impressions from a child, but as he grew up he pursued with eager steps the path which leads to ruin, and checks of conscience and other gracious influences, until 1860, when he was married, and came to reside with his father. While listening to a sermon preached by his parent, who is a local preacher, on Sunday, October 28th, 1860, the Holy Spirit accompanied the word to his conscience. After service he went home, retired into the garden, and there poured out his soul unto God, and obtained the forgiveness of all his sins, through faith in the blood of the Lamb. He joined our society, and continued to hold fast his confidence until death. His affliction was rather short but severe, but he bore his sufferings with patience. He was often visited by the writer and other friends, who always found him happy in the Lord. A short time before he died he said to his wife, "My dear, don't fret about me," then reminded her that the Lord had promised to be a Husband to the widow, and a Father to the fatherless. Turning to his mother, he said, "Mother, is this dying? If this is dying, this is happy." Then he began to pray for his relatives, but his strength failing, he said, "All, all, all;" and without a struggle, sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a widow and one child to lament their loss. May they, with his parents, brother, and sisters, and the writer, meet him in heaven.

JOSEPH CARE.

2. SARAH ANN, daughter of Joseph and Ruth KINGSBURY, was born at Sutton Waldron, Dorset, January 6th, 1841, and fell asleep in Jesus, at Gillingham Motcombe Circuit, May 17th, 1861. It was the happy lot of our departed sister to be blessed with pious parents, who sought to train up their children in the way they should go. From her childhood she manifested a very amiable disposition, was always truthful, and obedient to her parents. She became a scholar in the Sabbath school as soon as she was old enough to be admitted, and when only seven years of age she had to walk three miles to school. She became a Sabbath-school teacher about four years ago; was attentive to her duties. Her attachment to the cause of God, to the ministers, her fellow teachers, to the people of God generally, and to the services of the sanctuary, was strong. On June 5th, 1859, at a service conducted by Brother Thomas Smith she was converted. Having obtained the assurance of her acceptance, she united with the people of God, and was very clear in expressing her experience at her class. She was a missionary collector for some years, and laboured hard in this department of Christian labour. She was free to give herself, as well as to collect from others; she had doubled her own subscription in order that her box might contain five pounds for the present year. A few days before she died, she gave all the money she possessed to be put into her missionary box. What a noble example! How pure the motive! And now she rests from her labour and is receiving her reward. She loved to read; her favourite books were the Bible, hymn books, magazines, and the lives of holy men and women. She did not enjoy good health for many years. Her last affliction was very distressing; for twelve weeks she was confined to her bed, her complaint commenced with inflammation in the windpipe which descended to her lungs, and soon brought on rapid consumption. Her mind was kept in peace, and the visits of religious friends were gladly received. Having parted her books, &c., between her brothers and sisters, she selected Proverbs viii. 17, as the text from which she wished the writer to preach her funeral sermon.

And when the final struggle came, she met the last enemy, and conquered through the blood of the Lamb.

THOMAS POWELL.

3. JOHN BIRKBECK was born at Penser, in the county of Durham, in 1801, and died at Pitlington, in the Durham Circuit, April 28th, 1861. His parents were unconverted, consequently he had not a religious training. Having a taste for music, he joined an ungodly band, and spent the days of his youth in sin and folly.

In 1839, light broke in upon his mind, and he felt himself a sinner who needed pardon. After some distress of mind, he obtained the pearl of great price, and joined the Wesleyan Church, but soon fell from grace, and was out of society a long time. In 1847, his wife, who was a member with us, died at Pitlington; and in the same year he united with the church, and thus filled up the vacant place in the class-book. He was our leading singer and a Sabbath-school teacher for several years, which offices he filled efficiently. He was punctual in his attendance on the means of grace. His religious experience was deep and progressive; his views of Divine things were clear and comprehensive; he realized a constant peace, not ecstatic joy. His path was that of the just, which is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. He was a constant subscriber for, and regular reader of, our Large and Small Magazines, but the Bible was his chief book; this fed and fanned the altar fire of his heart.

In his last affliction, which was protracted, he manifested great patience and calmness of mind; although his sufferings at times were severe, yet he was never heard to murmur. To Christian friends who visited him, he expressed his unshaken confidence in the Lord, and his full reliance on His word; he said on one occasion to Brother Dixon, "I am waiting for my Lord and Master to release me from my bodily pain."

On the evening before his departure he was asked the state of his mind; he replied, "Happy! happy! not a doubt;" and pointing upwards, he exclaimed—

"Yonder's my house, my portion fair,
My treasure and my heart are there,
And my abiding home."

His end was peace. EDWARD RUST.

4. MRS. SUSANNA ROSE, of Little London, Spalding and Holbeach Branch, departed to her heavenly home, on Friday morning, May 24th, 1861, in the seventy-second year of her age. She was brought to God through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists, while residing at Fulbeck, near Grantham, in 1822; and from that period to her death she was a steady, consistent, and useful member.

In 1841 she removed with her husband and family to Little London, near Spalding. She and her partner at once united with our church there, and both of them strove to support and cement the church of God. Her husband and a daughter died happy in the Lord a few years ago. They were members with us.

A few months previous to the death of our late sister, her health began to decline. which, during the cold of winter, detained her from the means of grace; yet such was her love to God's house and people, that she was at times carried, at her request, to hear the Word, and meet with the people of God in the sanctuary. I took every opportunity that presented itself to visit her in her affliction, and I invariably found my visits beneficial to my own soul. There were no sudden ebullitions of ecstatic feelings, but there was a calm confidential reliance on God, on the part of Sister Rose. When I inquired of her a few days prior to her death the state of her soul, she replied, "I feel myself to be a poor, helpless creature, but I feel that God loves me; bless His holy name. I am His."

As a tradeswoman, she was honest, industrious, persevering, providing for the wants of her household and the Church. As a Christian, she took Christ for her example, and strove to be holy, harmless, and separate from sinners. She generously aided to support the house and service of God. Often have God's servants found shelter, rest, refreshment, and consolation beneath her hospitable roof.

Some of her last thoughts and remarks were directed to the future welfare of the house and servants of God. Her end was peace. The church worshipping at Little London has lost, by her death, the most useful member, the brightest gem; but she lives above; as a glorified spirit, she shines "in the light of God."

P. DAYKIN.

5. MARY, the second daughter of Francis and Mary WHITEHEAD, was born at Burnham, in the Isle of Axholme, August 26th, 1821. Mary was of an amiable temper, generous, courteous, and kind; her deportment was unobtrusive and retiring; her words were few, but well seasoned, cheerful, but not frivolous.

She was very early the subject of religious impressions. In the summer of 1832, the village of Burnham was remissioned by some zealous friends in connection with our society at Epworth. Praying companies were formed, and the people used to sing through the village, and hold prayer-meetings in the streets, and afterwards in the cottages every Sunday morning. These aggressive movements proved a great blessing, especially to the young. In the autumn of the same year, a juvenile class was formed. The first time it met, Mary, her two brothers, and her only sister, the writer, her eldest brother, and several others joined it. And I may just mention that out of that class four subsequently became travelling preachers in our Connexion, viz., John Ducker, the writer's brother, Robert Ducker, cousin of the same, and George and Thomas Whitehead, brothers of my departed friend. Mary received her first ticket in February, 1833; and I believe about May of the same year she gave her heart fully to the Lord, received the pardon of her sins, and was enabled to rejoice in God her Saviour.

From that time to the day of her death she continued a member, and studied to walk circumspectly.

She suffered much from delicate health. About two years and a half ago, she had a severe attack of diphtheria and erysipelas in her face, from which she suffered greatly; but not a murmur ever escaped her lips. From that attack she never seemed to regain her usual strength, and about the 24th and 25th of October, 1861 last, she and a friend went to collect for the missions. It seemed to devolve on her, and though not very able to undertake it, she did so, and took a severe cold, which was accompanied with a distressing cough, from which she never recovered. Her strength gradually failed. To within about a fortnight of her death she was able to get out a little, but from that time she declined rapidly. On Saturday, the 18th May, she was taken suddenly worse, and went to bed to get up no more. I went that day to see her; and continued with her to the time of her death. I expressed my sorrow at finding her so ill; she said, "Yes, it will soon be over, but I am only going a little while before you; you will soon follow, and we shall meet again, I believe we shall." On my saying what a mercy it was that she had not a Saviour to seek, that her eternal interests were safe in the hands of Him who had been the guide of her youth, she replied, "Oh yes. He will not leave me now in the dark valley, He will be with me to the end. When my heart and flesh fail, He will be the strength of my heart and my portion for ever," &c.

The last three days of her life, her sufferings were distressing to witness, and often during her paroxysms of pain we thought she could not live. When she perceived her mother weeping to see her suffer and powerless to give relief, she would say, "Don't weep, mother, pray that I may have patience, 'tis hard work; but it will soon be over, and it will make heaven more sweet at its close." At one time, when her brother George, who had come over to see her, had been praying that if it pleased the Lord, He would smoothe her passage, she remarked after, "I do not wish to be free from suffering, I only pray that I may be enabled to possess my soul in patience." She was grateful for any little kindness shown, or any help afforded. She had a word of admonition or entreaty for those who came to see her, if they were not in the way to heaven, telling them it was time to start; they would soon be in similar circumstances and would need a Saviour then.

On Friday, the day of her death, it was evident that the work of dissolution was progressing rapidly; indeed she remarked to her mother in the morning, "I have entered on my last day." Her cough seemed to be gradually increasing, her struggling for breath increased, and her attacks of pain were more intense. She often cried out, "Help, Lord, help, my Father, help; none but Jesus can help me now,

"He can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Her brother Thomas was expected in the evening. She expressed her fears that he would be too late to see her alive. At one time her brother George thought she was going. He went to the bed side, and whispered, "Is it all well, Mary?" She shouted with more strength than we thought she had, "Glory, glory." At another time she said, "I am going; farewell, farewell, mother, farewell, George, farewell, Ann." To her sister, "Farewell all." She then talked of her joy, confidence, and hope, which was as an anchor cast within the veil, till she was exhausted.

About eight o'clock her brother Thomas and his wife arrived. She said, "Just in time; 'tis almost over, but all is well." She sank gradually, talking a little at intervals, till about twenty minutes to eleven at night, May 24th, 1861, when she fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle.

MARTHA DUCKER.

6. Mr. EDWARD SHARPE, of Holbeach, Spalding and Holbeach Station, left the scenes of time for the scenes of eternity, on Tuesday, June 4th, 1861, in the twenty-eighth year of his age. He appears to have been the subject of Divine impressions in early life, but it was not until a few months prior to his death that he became fully decided to serve the Lord. He then strove to redeem his time by a diligent attendance at the means of grace, and he also became a teacher in our Holbeach Sabbath school. During the last winter the seeds of disease began to develop themselves, and it soon became evident that consumption was bringing him to the house appointed for all living. I and Mrs. Daykin called to see him, and found him labouring beneath a cloud of darkness, having given way to a repining spirit. The cloud, while we were engaged in prayer, was dispersed, and Edward was again enabled to call God, "Abba, Father." His heavy affliction prevented him from rising into that joyous state of soul to which some have risen; but he strove to rest his all on the Rock of Ages, and through faith in the Redeemer, we trust his spirit passed to the paradise above. May his widow and child meet him again in heaven.

P. DAYKIN.

7. THOMAS, the son of William and Elizabeth LAWTON, was born at Mare, in Staffordshire, in 1818, and died at Talk-o'-th'-hill, Tunstall Circuit, April 19th, 1861. Of the former part of the life of our departed friend we know but little, except what we have gathered from his religious experience. His mother died when he was about six months old, consequently he was deprived of the benefits of a mother's gentle hand, and the soothing influence of a mother's loving heart; and in a few years after it pleased the Lord to remove from the earth his dear father also. Thomas, like many others, grew up in sin, became addicted to drunkenness, swearing, and other vices attendant on a life of intemperance: a course which he pursued until, in the order of Providence, he came to reside at Talk-o'-th'-hill. He had then been settled in married life for several years, but there was no visible improvement in his morals. Happily about that time a change was wrought in him. By the kind and pressing invitations of pious friends he was prevailed upon to attend preaching in the Primitive Methodist chapel Talk-o'-th'-Hill, which proved to him the power of God unto salvation. He had reached the position of a champion in sin, and the strong man armed in the palace struggled to keep his goods in peace; but a stronger than he came, deposed him, and spoiled his goods. In February, 1849, he resolved one Sabbath evening, ere he started to the house of God, that if it was the truth which he had heard repeatedly from the pulpit—viz, that the mercy of God could reach the vilest sinner, he would put those truths to the test that night. The text and sermon were adapted to his case; they gave weight to his convictions, encouraged his hopes and led him to the Saviour. He wept and prayed, he believed and rejoiced, so overflowed was his heart with the love of God, that he rejoiced and praised God the whole night. He had now entered on a new life—to him all was new—and he acted out that divine sentiment of the apostle, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." He was an affectionate husband, a tender father, a faithful friend, a peaceable neighbour, a consistent member of society, a regular attendant at the means of grace to which he often had to drag an afflicted body, but against wind and tide he steered to the sanctuary of the Lord. He loved the preaching of the word, he loved the worship of God; in all these he richly enjoyed God. Although, in the order of Providence, he had to experience many reverses, yet his confidence in the Lord never seemed to be shaken, but he was grateful to God and to his friends for any assistance which was rendered to him. Being afflicted with disease of the heart he was laid by from labour for more than two years. This, of course, subjected him to domestic embarrassment, but his tone of piety never appeared to be lowered. He placed implicit confidence in the Divine promise, "Thy bread shall be given, thy water shall be sure." In stating his religious experience, he had told his brethren, in the means of grace, if he should die suddenly, they must count on his final victory, for he could read his title clear to mansions in the skies. As he neared the Jordan his bodily sufferings became intense, but he bore them with Christian fortitude and resignation. The time of his deliverance was at hand, his sufferings were about to terminate. He triumphantly exchanged mortality for life on the 19th of April, 1861. J. JERVIS.

8. Died at Carlton, in the Swinefleet Circuit, May 18th, 1861, WILLIAM CLAYTON, aged seventy-three years. About forty-two years ago he was awakened to a consciousness of his lost condition as a sinner, and while thrashing in a barn he received by faith the knowledge of salvation, the remission of his sins. Subsequently he united with the people of God, and sought, by holy consistency, to adorn his profession. His conduct was distinguished for industry and integrity, and in his religious character he manifested much simplicity, zeal, and constancy. He was ardently attached to the denomination of his choice, and according to his ability laboured to promote its interests. His death, which was sudden, was occasioned by an apoplectic fit, but it is consoling to survivors to know that some of his last thoughts, and his last words were about the heaven he toiled to gain, and into which we doubt not he has now entered. J. T. SHEPHERD.

9. Died at Manea in the Downham Circuit, June 3rd, 1861, SUSAN BURGESS, who for twenty-five years was a consistent follower of the Lord Jesus. Our departed sister was the subject of religious impressions from a very early period, but it was not until 1836, when attending a watch-meeting held in our chapel, at Manea that she found the pearl of great price, and was enabled to rejoice in the pardoning mercy of God. That was a memorable occasion. The presence and power of the Lord was felt in such a wonderful manner that some of our old members say they shall never forget it. From that time till her deathless spirit took its flight to the blissful regions of immortality, she exemplified the character of an Israelite indeed in whom was no guile, she went forth with steady purpose, and her daily deportment evinced the depth of her piety—meek, kind, patient, sympathetic—esteemed by all around her. Her attachment to the cause of God was strong and unwavering. If

When languished she mourned, if the church prospered Susan rejoiced. For many years her house had been a pilgrim's lodge. All found a hearty welcome under her hospitable roof, she ever regarding it as an honour and privilege, rather than a duty, to entertain the servants of the Most High God. The needy poor, the sick room, and death-bed scenes shared in her sympathy and partook of her liberality. She went about doing good. During her affliction, which was short, she was calm, resigned, and tranquil, trusting in the Lord. A few hours before her ascension to the spirit-world, she expressed a desire to see her husband; when he entered the room, she grasped his hand, exclaiming, "O my husband, my dear husband, we must part; my end is very near, I must die; I am dying; but bless the Lord, Jesus is very precious to me. He is more to me than all the world. O Jesus! I love Him! He will not leave me now. He is mine, and I am His." Her last words were, "Jesus! Jesus! O my Jesus." Her last struggle was great: she suffered much from pain of body; but her hope was cast within the veil, whither she is gone to share in the joys which are for evermore.

By her death the servants of Christ have lost a constant and sincere friend, her husband an affectionate wife, her family a kind and tender parent, and the church a pious and useful member. May we all meet her in heaven. W. HAMMOND.

10. In the obituary department of our large magazine for June, 1861, we find recorded the death of our dear sister Mrs. Joyce, of Portadown. Little did we think at the time of her departure to a better land that the same disease which bore her away had marked another of that family as its prey. But so it was: the already bereaved parents were to be tried still further; their youngest daughter was to be taken from them. Consumption smote her. But He who called the loved one home had deprived death of its terrors, and she died in peace, on the 29th of May, 1861. Her Christian journey was a short one. The same night that Mrs. Joyce found peace, Ellen Wright, the subject of our obituary, was enabled to believe, and was saved. Mrs. Joyce returned home from the meeting to tell the good news to her mother and sister, and Ellen said, "Oh mother, if I had gone, perhaps I might have got the blessing too." Mrs. Wright said, "You may have it now." Mr. Taylor entered the house, they engaged in prayer, and before they rose from their knees she was made happy in the pardoning love of God. Her short course was steady. The day of her death was solemn. My father was present and was delighted to hear her give, appropriately, her dying advice to all around her; she said "I have had a good father and a loving mother, who have been very kind to me. I pray that God may reward them." Her end was glorious. Thus another trophy of Divine grace is gathered home.

ELIZABETH C. RUSSELL.

11. ANN STRATTON, of Brinkworth, Wilts, died suddenly, May 13th, 1861, in the seventy-fifth year of her age. About thirty years ago she was deeply convinced of sin and her need of a Saviour. With a trembling heart she went to the throne of grace, and while earnestly engaged in prayer, was enabled to believe in Christ for salvation, and instantly felt God's forgiving love. She afterwards united with the Primitive Methodists, and became a very consistent member. For twenty-five years she was an ornament to our society; her general conversation was in strict accordance with her Christian profession. For some time she laboured under a disease of the heart, which was the cause of her death. The Sabbath previous to her departure, she attended the chapel and purposed doing so again in the evening; but feeling rather chilly her husband dissuaded her from going—still nothing serious, as affecting her complaint, was imagined—no one thought death so near. But next morning, to the great surprise of her husband and friends, her spirit had taken its flight to the happier regions above.

The family will not soon forget the good example she set before them, and the pious and judicious counsels so repeatedly given. They cannot but lament the loss of her presence, advice, and prayers with them and for them. Yet their loss is her eternal gain.

May her sorrowing friends meet her again before the throne in heaven.

J. HILL.

12. MARY MORGAN, of Bleanavon, Pontypool Circuit, was born April 6th, 1842. She was the child of religious parents and from infancy she attended our Sabbath-school. Consequently her youth was kept from the stains of immorality which neglected youth too often exhibit. Nevertheless she remained a stranger to vital godliness till June, 1858, when she was converted to God, in a prayer-meeting after the school was closed. She was a very regular attendant at school, and at the other means of grace, so far as the state of her health permitted. She was a devoted young disciple, steadily aspiring to the plains of light. She was afflicted with a diseased heart, which terminated in dropsy, and ultimately put a period her earthly career. Through faith in the atonement made for all by Christ Jesus, she rose above the fear of death. Her end was peace. She died May 11th, 1861, aged nineteen years.

ROBERT LANGFORD.
WILLIAM DAVIES.

13. Died May 25th, 1861, aged forty years, REBECCA, the beloved wife of John EGGLESHAM, local preacher of Portland-row, Ripley Circuit. She was converted to God and joined the Primitive Methodists August, 1838, and continued a consistent and useful member to the day of her death. She was one of the excellent of the earth; was greatly beloved by those who knew her, but especially by those who knew her best. Her piety was deep and lasting. It is good for the heart to be established in grace. She was a lover of Primitive Methodism, fully believed its doctrines, regularly attended its ordinances, kindly entertained its ministers, freely and liberally contributed to its funds. Her zeal for the Lord of Hosts was great. Religion formed a part of her every day life, and was seen and felt among those with whom she had to do. As a wife and a mother she excelled. Her light shone. She ruled in love—kind, but firm; few homes were like hers: domestic joy, peace, and concord reigned there. The heart of her husband safely trusted in her, she did him good, and not evil all the days of her life. She worked willingly with her hands; her children rose up and called her blessed. She feared the Lord, and therefore shall she be praised. Her influence in the family was great. May her children follow her as she followed Christ. By her death, her husband, the family, the church, and the world, have sustained a great loss; but their loss is her gain. To die and enter heaven under these circumstances is truly honourable. Such honour hath God's saints. She shines in the light of God. His likeness stamps her brow, and through the Valley of Death her feet have trod. She reigns in glory now. Then why should our tears run down, and our hearts be sorely riven?

"There's another gem in the Saviour's crown,
And another saint in heaven."

Her death was unexpected. Many fall as sudden, but few as safe. We have not to mourn as those without hope. Her hope was blooming and full of immortality. Her sudden death would be sudden glory. A change stupendously great; the soul from bondage broke, and the immortal wakes with God. Her husband is our leader at Portland-row, two of her daughters are members, and several of the family are in church fellowship with us, and are among our best friends and supporters in this circuit. May the writer, reader, her family, and friends meet her in heaven.

J. STEPHENSON.

14. Mrs. MARY JACKSON, the wife of Jarvis Jackson, of Markham, Retford Circuit, departed this life, May 30th, 1861, in the seventieth year of her age. For between thirty and forty years Sister Jackson was a steady, consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Society, and for several years prior to her death she had the charge of a class of some ten or twelve members. Although the cause in this place for some years has not made much progress, to the credit of Mrs. Jackson, and a Mrs. Smith, who died twelve months ago, they stood firmly to the struggling interest, and their removal from the church militant is, and will be felt; for they were steady to their purpose. They were affectionate and kind, and made the ministers welcome to their hospitality.

The affliction which terminated the life of Sister Jackson was not very protracted, though severe, but being sustained by the gracious influences of the Spirit of God, she bore her sufferings with patience and fortitude, and furnished evidence that she had not followed a cunningly devised fable, but a blessed reality, which enabled her to exclaim in her greatest sufferings—

"There I shall bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest," &c.

May each member of the family, whose salvation she earnestly desired, meet her in the better land.

HENRY KNOWLES.

15. Died, May 21st, 1861, at Chiseldon, Brinkworth Circuit, SARAH CHANDLER, in the sixty-first year of her age. She was first awakened to a sense of her danger as a sinner before God many years ago when hearing a Wesleyan minister preach. She carried her burden a long time, until hearing a Primitive Methodist missionary, her mind was more enlightened. She saw the simple plan of salvation with greater clearness, and was led to the Lamb of God as a humble penitent seeking pardon. Before she left the chapel she was enabled to believe and rejoice in God. She immediately united with the society, and for eighteen years lived a consistent Primitive Methodist. For about fifteen months past she was remarkably drawn out to serve God; attending as much as possible every means of grace, possessing great zeal for Christ and souls, endeavouring to the best of her ability to win her family to religion. Neither was she unsuccessful, for it pleased God to answer her prayers in the conversion of a very rebellious son, who is now as earnest in piety as he was before determined in wickedness. She was seized with affliction which terminated in death within a fortnight, during which she manifested much patience and resignation. Her end was peace. May her husband and daughter, who remain to mourn their loss, meet her in heaven.

16. AMY LEE, of Silchester, changed mortality for life, May 30th, 1861, in the seventy-first year of her age. She was a subject of religious impressions early in life, but still lived many years a stranger to vital godliness. When the Primitive Methodists visited Silchester, about twenty-seven years ago, our sister was among the first that went to hear them, and was remarkably struck with their plain, pointed, earnest preaching, and she and her husband were the first to open their door to admit the then persecuted servants of the Most High; and under their roof preaching services, prayer-meetings, and class-meetings, were held, till our present chapel was built. Our sister was a mother in Israel, her house was a home for the preachers, not only when appointed to preach at Silchester, but when they could not get entertainment at any of the places around, which was not unfrequent in those days of opposition and persecution. At the second class-meeting held in her house, she cast in her lot with our people, with whom she remained a consistent member to the day of her death. As a Christian she was sincere, humble, and devout. Her attachment to the means of grace remained unabated to the last. During her protracted illness she had many sharp conflicts with Satan, and her mind at times became exceedingly beclouded; she nevertheless retained her integrity, having a well-grounded hope in the Saviour. The thought of having to leave behind several of her children unconverted was a great trial to her mind. The river of death for some time presented a formidable appearance. When she looked at the dark and chilling waters through which she had to pass, she felt an involuntary shudder, but the clouds eventually dispersed, her fear subsided. To Brother J. Ford, she said, "I have dying grace now." And when speaking about the re-union of Christian friends in heaven, she exclaimed—

"We'll shout and sing,
And make the heavenly arches ring,
When all the saints get home."

After lingering a little longer on this side the river, she passed away, apparently unconscious, from this world of affliction and toil, to the land of joy and rest, leaving her husband, after living together fifty-two years, to battle with life till they meet in that glorious land where—

"Sickness, sorrow, pain, and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

May the reader and writer meet them there. Amen.

17. Died at Ashill, Brandon Circuit, May 22nd, 1861, SARAH BLYTH, aged twenty-three years. In very early life the gracious Spirit affected her tender heart, and gave her mind a religious bias. But by the influence of youthful companions, &c., her religious impressions were for some time resisted. She became gay and trifling. In the spring of 1857 she entered our chapel a careless young woman. It was on a Sunday evening, and a lovefeast was in progress. While the children of God were relating their religious experience, she sat laughing and otherwise evincing the enmity of the carnal mind. During the prayer-meeting which followed a remarkable display of the power of God was realized. The long-grieved Spirit, with additional force arrested her. Deep conviction for sin seized her conscience, and in a short time she was upon her knees in an agony of prayer for mercy. In a few minutes after she obtained the forgiveness of all her sins, and praised aloud a pardoning God. On the following Sabbath she went to class and became a member of the church; and ever since has ornamented her profession by a holy, consistent life. She loved the means of grace and was regular in attendance. The cause of God lay near her heart and she felt a pleasure in supporting it according to her ability, and variously promoted its interests. She grew in grace and sought a fitness for her Eden home by "perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Thus she was found ready when the Master called. Her death was brought on by consumption. Her illness was protracted and severe, but grace sustained her. She was grateful that she had sought the Lord in health, and could now trust him for promised aid amid the failings of heart and flesh.

When it was my privilege to visit her, I found her confidence strong and her hopes blooming. Her leader and some of her class-mates were often much blessed while conversing with her on the deep things of God. At one time, when so engaged, she exclaimed with a beaming countenance, "My hopes rest secure on the blood of the cross." On another occasion, she shouted aloud, "The blood of Jesus cleanseth me. Glory, glory. I believe." And again, in a rapture, she sang,

"I am going home to glory,
Where pleasures never die."

To her husband and friends she said, "Meet me in glory." A short time before she closed her eyes in death, Satan strove, with much malice and power, to shake her confidence, but prayer was her weapon, and she overcame him by the blood of the Lamb. She and a few pious friends pleaded till victory came; the heavens were opened, the glory-cloud burst upon all present, and filled the room, as she in an ecstasy cried, "The blood of Jesus cleanseth me. Glory! glory! glory!" This was her victory-shout; her last shout on earth; and soon after she was with the harpers in glory.

18. JANE, the beloved daughter of Mr. Stephen CLARK, of Brompton, was brought to a knowledge of the truth during a revival of religion which took place in Brompton Circuit, in 1859. Our departed sister had been for years previous to her conversion, a regular attendant on the ministry of the word. She had received from her parents religious instruction, and no doubt was the subject of their prayers. To all human appearance nothing was needed but decision for God. She became the subject of deep and genuine impressions, yielded her heart to the Saviour, and was made happy in his love. The influence spread in the family. Two sisters with a brother were made partakers of the same grace. Jane having counted the cost became a decided servant of Jesus Christ. She was more constant in her attendance on the services of the sanctuary, and made progress in her course to Zion. Incidents in her brief career are not numerous; however, it may be remarked that she was a helper in various ways in the cause of the Redeemer. It was evident that previous to her illness she was becoming more devoted to God. She said to one of her sisters, That she had looked all around her, and over the world, and she did not see much worth living for. Calling one evening after service on Mr. Fulton, she was asked, if she had had a good meeting? She replied, "O yes;" and added, "O, how pleasant it is when one gets lifted above the world, and how hard and dark it is when one has to come down again. It is like coming back from the other world." About the close of 1860, she was seized with a severe cold, which made inroads on her frame. Yet no one imagined that the fell destroyer was preparing for her his final stroke. It was noticed during her affliction that there was an unearthly tone about her conversation. Often she said she did not see much worth living for. A sermon preached by the writer on the "many mansions," produced a powerful impression on her mind. That sermon was often referred to in after conversation. Heaven seemed to be unveiled to her view, and its attractive influence was more intensely felt. There was evidently a loosening from earth, and a growing attachment to heaven. When she was told that there was little hope of her recovery, she, with calmness replied, "For me to live is Christ, and to die will be gain." From that time to her death she was a great sufferer. Yet no expression of impatience, no murmur escaped her lips; "in patience she possessed her soul." Her confidence was strong in the wisdom, goodness, and mercy of her heavenly Father. During her illness she often repeated,—

"When pain o'er my weak flesh prevails,
With lamb-like patience arm my breast," &c.

I visited her frequently during the day on which she died. She suffered much. Death had a hard struggle to break down her frame; but in the midst of her sufferings she was full of joy. The enemy was not permitted to touch her. Her confidence was in Jesus. She sung frequently,—

"Jesus, lover of my soul," &c.

She was nearing the boundary line over which she was soon to pass. It was a pleasing, though sad scene to us. We gazed on her beaming eye and calm countenance, while she was scanning by faith her future home. The scene was worth an angel's visit. Standing on the brink of the river she exclaimed,—

"No condemnation now I dread," &c.

I retired from her bedside deeply impressed with the value of Christianity. O how grand is the passage of the saint to the tomb. When the shadow of the destroyer falls upon the spirit, and when bonds of earth break one by one from the heart, confidence in God remains unshaken. The spirit passing into clearer light; rising higher until earth's scenes are eclipsed by the splendour of the house with many mansions. Thus it was with our dear sister Clark. Like Moses on Pisgah, she gazed with rapture on the promised land, ere she passed over the Jordan to inherit it. She said, "O how happy I am. I shall soon be there." When asked if she "felt Jesus precious?" she replied, "Not a cloud, not a cloud. Dying is nothing to the joy I shall realize afterwards." A very short time before she died, she requested those who were around her bed to leave her a short time. On returning they asked her if she had been sleeping? She replied, "No; I have been near heaven. I am happy. O, my sweet Jesus, come away!" Before dying she bade her father farewell, telling him not to mourn for he would soon follow her. She afterwards called each of the family present to her bedside, and cheerfully bade all good bye; told them to live near to the Lord, and meet her in heaven; and then fell asleep in Jesus, April 20th, 1861, aged twenty years.

W. FULTON.

19. Mrs. ANN BRESTON, of Muggington, entered the joy of her Lord, June 3rd, 1861, after being a member at Weston Underwood, in the Belper Circuit, twenty-five years.

We know but little of her early life, except that she is said to have been of a very amiable and unassuming demeanour, and that in a thunder-storm she first found Christ "mighty to save." She had painful reverses in her circumstances, with eleven children to look up to her; but she never forgot her resting-place, nor whence her succour came. She was a strict observer of the Sabbath-day, and a lover of prayer; nor did she pray in vain, for she prevailed. She saw several of her children brought to God, and join her in Church fellowship.

Her son, John, was a local preacher for many years. He was much esteemed by those who knew him, and well received in our pulpits. He finished his course with joy in August, 1860. His removal gave the already enfeebled constitution of our departed sister a shock from which she never rallied—their separation was but short—they have met where parting is unknown. The last three years of her pilgrimage she was not able to attend the public means of grace, but continued to support the circuit and missionary funds as before. Her guinea was always there long before the meeting for the spread of the Gospel among the Gentiles. She drew consolation from the fact, that when able she never allowed distance, darkness of night, or inclemency of weather, to keep her from the house of God; yea, such was her love for the prayer-meetings that she has started after a fall of rain, and the waters being out she has had to creep over the narrow bridge with lantern in hand; for she loved the habitation of her Lord's house.

When it appeared evident that she was approaching her end, she possessed great composure of mind. Her language was prayer and praise. Mrs. Walker, her daughter, informed her of a dying missionary who said, "I am going to heaven through no forms, but through the blood of Christ." With much rapture she exclaimed, "Ah! that is the title deed!"

May all her children think of her maternal advice and follow her to heaven, is the prayer of
THOMAS ROBERTS.

20. MARGARET KENNERLEY, of Over-Lane, Burland Circuit, exchanged mortality for eternal life, on Sunday, April 21st, 1861.

She was born at Winsford, in Cheshire, in 1794. From a child she was mild and unassuming. She was blessed with a pious mother, who offered many prayers to God on her behalf, which she happily saw answered in the salvation of her child. She was sent to service at the age of fifteen, and two years after she obtained the pearl of great price; and for fifty years she adorned the doctrines of God her Saviour by a consistent life.

I have had many happy seasons while visiting her. She could look back on the past with pleasure, though she said when she got converted she had not many instructors, but she sought after the Great Instructor, making the barn and the hay-loft her closet. Often when she had retired to those hallowed places her cup ran over. In contemplating the future, she was wont to say, "He who had supported her hitherto would support her all her journey through." In the morning and evening, in health and affliction, her language was, "My Jesus is sufficient."

I have been acquainted with her for the last ten years as a member of our society, and I always found her panting after righteousness as the hart panteth after the water-brook. She was continually struggling for the whole armour of God.

Her last affliction was asthma, from which she suffered severely for the last two years of her life, but in patience she possessed her soul. I was summoned to her bed-side a few hours before she died, and I asked her if the religion she had enjoyed so many years was sufficient for her then. She said, "My Jesus is all-sufficient." Her last hours were spent in praising the Lord; and when her voice failed, from the motion of her lips we inferred her last words were, "My Jesus." May we meet her in heaven. Amen.

1. THE HAPPY COTTAGER.

THOUGH humble my state as the violet that grows,
 Scarce peeping to view in some deep sheltered spot;
 I feel not the storm of ambition that blows
 High over the roof of my little thatch'd cot.

'Twas a cottage my Saviour at Bethany sought,
 While splendour and palaces tempted Him not;
 They were cottagers there whom He lov'd and taught—
 He delighted to visit that favourite spot.

Though pride may regard me with scorn-looking eye,
 The contempt of the haughty will trouble me not;
 If the High and the Lofty One bend from the sky,
 And smile in His love on my little thatch'd cot.

Though shining like stars in the splendour of state,
 And envied by all as most blest in their lot;
 I ask not the pomp with the cares of the great,
 If Jesus in spirit be here in my cot.

Let worldlings heap wealth as the sand of the sea,
 Poor objects of pity; 'tis all they have got;
 If the love of my Saviour be granted to me,
 I am richer than they in my little thatch'd cot.

The rude hand of time will pass over the world,
 Its scutcheons of glory with darkness will blot;
 It will not avail when to ruin 'tis hurl'd,
 Whether mine were a palace, or little thatch'd cot.

The poor in the annals of Heaven may shine,
 When the memory of sinners shall wither and rot,
 Grant, Lord, that a portion in heaven be mine,
 When Thou callest me hence from my little thatch'd cot.

2. THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

BY H. KIRKE WHITE.

"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men."—Luke ii. 14.

WHEN marshall'd on the nightly plain,
 The glittering host bestud the sky,
 One star alone, of all the train,
 Can fix the sinner's wandering eye.

Hark! Hark! to God the chorus breaks,
 From every host, from every gem;
 But one alone, the Saviour speaks,
 It is the Star of Bethlehem.

Once on the raging seas I rode, [dark;
 The storm was loud—the night was
 The ocean yawned—and rudely blow'd
 The wind that tossed my foundering bark.

Deep horror then my vitals froze,
 Death-struck, I ceased the tide to stem:
 When suddenly a star arose,
 It was the Star of Bethlehem.

It was my guide, my light, my all,
 It bade my dark forebodings cease;
 And through the storm and dangers'
 thrall,
 It led me to the port of peace.

Now safely moored—my perils o'er,
 I'll sing first in night's diadem,
 For ever and for evermore,
 The Star—the Star of Bethlehem!

1. CHARLES PARKER, Primitive Methodist Preacher, was born at Preston, Holderness, in the county of York, April 22nd, 1817. In October, 1835, he was converted through the instrumentality of the late Mr. W. Howcroft; and in October, 1836, he began to preach the gospel. He did not labour long as a local preacher before he was called to Hull to preach a trial sermon, and was accepted as a candidate for the itinerant ministry.

On the 26th September, 1838, he left his native place, as a missionary for the Isle of Wight and Portsmouth. The three following years he laboured on the Brighton, Bedford, and London Missions of Hull Circuit, and success attended his efforts.

In 1842, he was stationed at Canterbury, where Primitive Methodism was not only despised, but persecuted; but in the face of many difficulties, success attended his labours in the city and neighbourhood.

While his energies were taxed in breaking down obstructions to the progress of the cause of God, he was not unmindful of proclaiming the name of the Lord both in and out of doors. Some of the members on the station were turned out of their employment, and others were intimidated and persecuted on account of their adhesion to Primitive Methodism.

Before he had been on the Canterbury Mission six months, he was, with anxiety and toil, reduced almost to a skeleton. He had great sorrow of soul; but God's work prospered in his hands; he believed that he was occupying the post to which the Captain of his salvation had sent him, and he was resolved that the cause of God should have the sacrifice of his body, soul, and spirit, if his life should be extinguished in the offering, and he never revoked this sentiment. Since his death, upwards of eighteen years after he left that place, Mr. Symonds, of Canterbury, says of him, "His name is as ointment poured forth; many were converted; several of our best members, and some of our most efficient local preachers were brought to God through him, and no doubt they will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord."

He was truly a Primitive Methodist, a Connexional man; by some he was thought to be austere, but he was not without sympathy; his eyes shed tears of sorrow over Canterbury, and other places; he had joy and sorrow. "My sorrows," said he, "have not been hid from the Lord, and my tears are in His bottle."

In 1843, he was stationed for York Circuit, and the two following years he laboured in Grimsby Circuit. In 1846, he [was stationed at Gainsborough, and the following year at Brigg.

He was stationed in Hull Circuit in 1849 and 1850, when the cholera was raging; the visits made by himself and his wife to dying men and women, and the appropriate sermons preached by him in the chapels were productive of much good. Great Thornton Street Chapel was built during his two years station in Hull, in which he took a great interest. And the friendship which had before existed between him and Mr. W. Clowes was increased. And Charles was thankful to God that he enjoyed the friendship of one of the founders of the Connexion.

The next six years found him in the Scarborough, Pocklington, and Driffield stations, where he suffered affliction both of body and mind; but he was still ardent for the cause of God.

In 1856, he was stationed at Bridgford, where he remained one year, and eighty persons were converted and added to the church; but there were many free-gospellers on the station who were bitterly opposed to an itinerant ministry; and what with that, and other causes over which he had no control, he had a decrease of nine. This was the first and only decrease that he ever had. His health was somewhat restored, and the Lord was about to show him greater glory. By the conference of 1857, he was stationed for Ashby-de-la-Zouch Circuit, in which he spent two of his most successful years. During these two years, chapels were built, souls were saved, and believers were sanctified.

Brother Joseph Foster, the Circuit steward, says "He was a real Primitive Methodist, a good disciplinarian, and an excellent superintendent minister; his talents were far above mediocrity. To all that would do right, he was a substantial friend; his moral character, as far as I am capable of judging, was without a stain. He was firmly attached to the temperance cause. He warned the drunkard, and on every opportunity, whether in the pulpit or out of it, cried down the sin. He was a powerful preacher; the lukewarm professor did not like his home strokes, for he brought out his thoughts in words that burned, and did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God."

He was adapted to lead men to God, and to keep them in the good way. He was not a man who belonged to this world; whosoever loved the Lord was his mother, sister, and brother. God had given him a suitable partner, who had consoled him in his suffering, and cheered him in his griefs.

At the conference of 1859, Leicester Second Circuit, earnestly requested his services, and the conference stationed him thither. It was well for him that he obtained this station, as he was nearing the spirit world, and death was hastening on. He needed an especial friend while death was doing his work of taking down the tabernacle, and he found one at Leicester, in the person of brother Edwin Kellett, surgeon, who proved a friend indeed. He was the only person that ever discovered the nature and cause of my brother's affliction.

Charles preached for a few months on the station; prosperity attended his labours, and he grew in the affections of the people. He formed a Bible class, which made great progress under his care. He was active in the temperance cause, and was acceptable and useful as a preacher.

His friend and medical adviser, Mr. Kellett, had conversations with him on the relative position he bore as a Christian minister in health and sickness, and also as a dying man. His opinions which he had held, and the faith he had promulgated, he said he had no reason upon reflection to change. He repeatedly expressed strong faith in God, both in relation to his own salvation, and the success of Leicester Second Circuit. When Mr. Kellett first announced to him the improbability of his recovery, he was calm, and in his usual style of expression, exclaimed, "Be it so," and frequently remarked, "Doctor, it's all right." The doctor heard him pray and shout but a day or two before his dissolution, with an earnestness which he will never forget, and on one occasion when brother Lawrence, Mrs. Kellett, Mrs. Smith, of Donnithorpe, in the Ashby Circuit, and Mrs. Parker were present; such was the strength of his faith in Jesus, that the room seemed anything rather than a sick chamber. Tears and shouts, praises and prayer, hosannas and hallelujahs, with bursts of rapture from the dying saint, characterized that happy season. In his affliction his Scripture quotations were apt, and his confidence such as the doctor says he never before witnessed. The night before he died, Mr. Kellett on leaving him, said it would be the last time he should see him alive. "All right," was the reply, and the same faith as usual showed itself, accompanied with the assurance that they would see each other in heaven, and "hallelujah," "farewell;" and afterward the usual shake of the hand was the last act before their final separation in this world.

His affliction was one which had a tendency to depress the spirits, but he was cheerful, calmly relinquishing the hope of life; he met death with a moral bravery, which nothing but religion can inspire. It was a hard struggle in death to give up his wife, but after specially laying the case before the Lord, he was enabled to do so, and gave her his blessing and benediction.

He then prepared for the final struggle (not as one who was going to die, but) as though he intended to take a long journey; and peaceably, and calmly, while in the act of rejoicing, he unexpectedly stepped off the borders of time into the eternal world, and left his tabernacle which he put off in the arms of his brother and friend, the Rev. J. Brownson (since deceased), on the morning of the 12th March, 1861, at ten minutes before 7 o'clock, and Mr. Brownson in conjunction with Messrs. Tims, Jefferson, and Meadows performed the ceremony of depositing it in the cemetery at Leicester, on the 15th of March, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends and a weeping widow. Mr. Kellitt says, My brother was a lover of the church of his choice to which he was always deeply attached. From his habits of study, he had attained to considerable knowledge of Biblical literature, and one eminent preacher has expressed his belief that he was before the times. His preaching was of the explanatory, controversial, and pathetic order; his pronounciation distinct, his voice clear and harmonious; his style and gesture solid and zealous, as it becometh ministers of Christ; he was a lover of order and rule, while he strove especially to promote the prosperity of that section of the church with which he stood identified.

2. Departed this life, August 13th, 1861, at Wrockwardine Wood, in the fifty-first year of his age, HENRY RALPHES. The general deportment of our departed brother's life, previous to his conversion, the writer is not prepared to portray; but I have been informed he was led to a discovery of his fallen state by nature, sorrow for sin, and a confession of the same at a prayer-meeting held by our people at Donnington Wood, in this circuit. He was directed to the Saviour of sinners, as a pardoning God; and through believing he obtained the remission of his sin, the renewal of his spiritual nature, and the restoration of the Divine favour.

From that time it was obvious to the believer that saving grace had changed his heart, thoughts, views, desires, and practices; that he had been with Jesus, and that light from heaven had shone upon him. As soon as he enjoyed this inward change—as soon as he realised the hallowing influence of this baptism of fire, he united himself with the despised followers of the Lamb, and began to devote his time, strength, and talents to the best of purposes, the glory of God. As a husband, he became affectionate and considerate; as a father, attentive and conciliating; as a member of a Christian Church, regular in his attendance, consistent in his conduct, liberal in supporting the cause of Christ, likewise earnest and persevering in his endeavours. His ardent love to God, his constant zeal in disseminating the blessings of religion, the holy influence which he diffused among those with whom he laboured, the fidelity and integrity which he at all times manifested, and his aspirations after holiness, all combined to prove that the change effected in him by the Holy Spirit was a new creation, or a transformation from evil to good.

He spent twenty years of his life in the service of Jehovah, and he delighted himself in feeding the lambs of Christ's flock in the Sabbath-school. Five years he sustained the important office of a class leader, and the mighty power that he had with God in prayer, the engaging addresses which he delivered, together with his sweet counsel and deep practical piety, gained him the esteem of those souls over whom he had the care. But that duty he had to resign through his sickness, which continued till he left the shores of mortality to enter the regions of bliss. During the writer's visits to his dying couch, his growth in the Divine life, his humble submission to the will of God, his patience in his sufferings, his interest in the prosperity of Zion, and his love for the people with whom he stood identified, were indisputable. Being long debarred from the public means of grace, and feeling an anxious desire to hear the word of life, he requested that Divine service might be held in his own house. To gratify his wish, therefore the writer, the Sabbath morning previous to his death, spoke in his room on the Christian's desire to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better. He heard the word with gladness; his soul seemed raised into an ecstasy of joy, and after the remarks on the subject, whilst his lips were quivering, his body trembling, and his tears streaming, he poured forth a sincere, fervent, and pathetic prayer, which brought down the power of God, and melted many into tears who were present on the occasion.

For five years and ten months he suffered severely, but his fortitude was admirable; humbly did he submit to the sovereign will of God, and triumphantly did he pass through the valley of the shadow of death, crying, "I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." And when he felt himself upon the threshold of eternity, his eyes being-filled with glistening pearly tear drops, and his countenance beaming with joy, he exclaimed, as his wife stood sorrowing by him, "Do not weep, my prospect is as clear as the day, and as bright as the morning star."

Shortly after he departed, having before him a fulness of glory, and within a blooming hope of immortality. That his aged father, who still lives, his bereaved widow and children, may meet him before the throne of God in heaven, is the sincere prayer of

J. BUTCHER.

3. WILLIAM NEWSTEAD, of Itteringham, in the Aylsham Circuit, was converted to God about twenty years ago, through the labours of the Primitive Methodists. He immediately identified himself with our people and continued a consistent member to the day of his death. When he had been converted about four years, manifesting as he did an anxiety for the welfare of others, and a becoming zeal for the glory of God, his name was put on the local preacher's plan, that he might seek the wandering sons of men, and he continued a local preacher through life. His addresses were distinguished for their plainness, fervour, and scriptural character. I visited him twice in his affliction, and found him resting on the blood of Christ. Just before his decease, he said, "I shall soon be in heaven." He died in peace August 17th, 1861, aged forty-four years, leaving a wife and a family of children to lament their loss. May they all meet him in heaven. Amen. G. DAWSON.

4. JOHN BRADLEY, the subject of this brief memoir, was born at Linley, near Bishop's Castle, Shropshire, and until he was about thirty years of age, he lived without a knowledge of salvation. He often attended the means of grace with the Wesleyans, and was convinced of his state as a sinner in the sight of God. About forty years ago he removed to Churton, a village seven miles from Shrewsbury, and soon after he heard Mr. J. Bonser, one of the first Primitive Methodist missionaries who preached at Shrewsbury, and the surrounding villages. While Brother Bradley listened to the word of life, his heart was pierced by the Spirit of God. He wept, prayed, and by faith on the Atonement, made by Christ, he received the assurance of the pardon of his sins, and he became one of the first members of our denomination in the Shrewsbury Circuit, and he soon established a small society in the locality where he resided. He also opened his house for divine service, and used his influence in helping on the infant cause, going from house to house exhorting and inviting the people to come and hear the "Glorious Gospel of the blessed God." Many attended, and not a few believed in the Lord Jesus Christ to the saving of their souls. Subsequently his name appeared on the Circuit's plan, and he retained his official standing as an accredited local preacher to the day of his death. When Primitive Methodism was in its infancy in this part of Shropshire, the journeys were long and the labourers but few. Brother Bradley had to work hard, often walking twenty or thirty miles on a Sabbath to preach the everlasting Gospel, in which work he took a delight, feeling conscious that he was doing the will of his divine Master. He was appointed class-leader of the Society, which office he faithfully fulfilled until disease prevented him. During his life he was subjected to much domestic affliction and sorrow, having had removed, by death, two wives and several children. About twelve months ago his health began to decline, and his tabernacle gradually tottered till death ended his earthly career. He was quite resigned to the will of God, although at times severely tempted by the wicked one, yet he held fast his confidence in Christ, who gave him the victory again and again. The writer and several friends visited him frequently, to whom he gave satisfactory evidence that all was right, and he could say—

“When at thy bidding, I yield up my breath,
The blood of the cross will refresh me in death.”

He was a plain humble man, a kind husband, and an affectionate father, striving to lead his family in the path of holiness; before his departure he called his wife, sons, and friends to his bedside, and exhorted each of them so to live as to honour the Lord, and strive to meet him in heaven. After he had requested them to continue family worship (which he had so long conducted), he commended them to God and bade them farewell. His sufferings were very severe towards the last, but he patiently endured the pain until Sunday morning, August 11th, 1861, when his happy spirit took its flight, to be for ever with the Lord. He had attained the age of sixty-eight years.

“There was death’s dark valley, drear and cold,
And the hoarse dash of an o’erwhelming wave—
Is there no earthly hold,—
No friend—no helper—no strong arm to save?”

5. In the humblest walks of life, amid the rude incrustations of poverty, ignorance, and suffering, in the cottage of widowhood, the lowly home of the hard-tolling labourer, in the chamber of the uncomplaining sufferer, there are many examples of sincere piety, which are worthy of record in the annals of Christian biography, even where we cannot chronicle any very striking facts respecting those who have “died in the faith,” in these “common walks of virtuous life.”

WILLIAM GUYMER, the subject of this brief sketch, was born at Stody, Norfolk, in 1806, and died at Lynn-Regis, “in the Lord,” May 9th, 1861.

He followed “the course of this world” until he attained his 23rd year, when he was arrested in his sinful career, under the ministry of the Reverend R. Key.

The deceased, a few months after his conversion, became a local preacher, and had to endure much opposition and trial. He was deprived of employment, and rendered homeless, penniless, and breadless, for his unflinching adherence to Christian principle. Under these trying circumstances, he was compelled to seek shelter for a short time under the roof of a workhouse. Once, when preaching in the open air, he was savagely knocked down and dragged on the road, torn, and bruised.

For about twenty-five years, he was connected with the Lynn Station, as a leader and local preacher. Until a few months prior to his death, when in a painfully emaciated state of health, he frequently attended his class, which was one of the most important in our Lynn

Society. For eleven years he was in the crucible of a very painful affliction. As the shadows of mortality gathered around him, he frequently said, "All is right,—I am going home!" Thus his shattered, bestormed bark safely passed through the surges of death, and he dropped his anchor in the calm tide of Heaven's crystal sea.

"Saviour, in whatsoever form
Death comes to me,
Oh! grant me in Thy Word to see
A risen Saviour beck'ning me:
No evil then my heart shall fear,
In the dark valley."

6. WILLIAM MARSHALL, of Kintbury, in the Newbury circuit, departed this life, September 8th, 1861, in the forty-eighth year of his age. In his childhood he was afflicted with the measles, through which he lost his sight. Some years subsequently he gained admittance into the Blind School in London, where he learned the trade of basket-making, which furnished him with means of obtaining an honest livelihood. He lived according to the course of this world for several years, but ultimately he was converted through the instrumentality of a Wesleyan local preacher. He united with the Primitive Methodists, and remained with the people of his choice until death. Shortly after his conversion, he became a local preacher, and laboured successfully for more than twenty years in that capacity. He was extensively known, and generally beloved for his practical piety. He was unable to labour for more than twelve months prior to his death, but that Being who had been with him through life sustained him in dying circumstances, and as he drew near the margin of the river, the effusions of his soul were, "glory, glory, glory be to God!" Thus died the subject of these remarks,—may all who read them be equally happy, is the prayer of

GEORGE BLACKWELL.

7. CHRISTOPHER GLIDELL was born at Steventon, Bedfordshire, August 14th, 1828, and died at the same place, August 27th, 1861.

His youthful days and energies were spent in the service of sin. He possessed considerable muscular power, and was the admitted champion of the neighbourhood. His mental powers were respectable, while in his moral conduct he never descended to the more open, base, and vulgar depths of ungodliness. He was arrested by the truth during the services of a camp-meeting, held at Oakley, in May, 1857, and the next morning, on his way to his week's employment, he found mercy in the midst of the solitude of a wood. Shortly afterwards he became a member of society, and sustained a thoroughly consistent character up to the day of his death. His sound piety, his mental capacity, his youthful vigour, and the general respect which the decisive change wrought in him had secured, induced the Bedford Circuit Quarterly Meeting to put his name on the circuit's plan. In fulfilling his appointments he was well received, and a long life of usefulness was anticipated for him, when typhus fever, permitted by Divine Providence, prostrated the strong man, bereaved his wife and young children, and disappointed the hopes of his brethren and friends. His death was deeply felt, and sincerely mourned by all who knew him. "Be ye also ready."

8. It is our painful duty to record the death of Mr. RICHARD CORFIELD, of Pennerley, Minsterley Circuit, which took place September 5th, 1861. Our departed brother was born at Issington, Salop, in March, 1804. His conduct was regulated by the strictest rules of morality, and being of industrious habits he was generally respected, but was a stranger to saving grace till he heard Brother E. Davies, who was preaching at Perkin's Beach, in the above named circuit. The word reached his heart, and brought about the salvation of his soul. Not long after this he had appointments given him as a local preacher, and in that capacity he laboured successfully eight or nine years; he also sustained the office of class-leader about six years with great success. On the above date his labours were suddenly brought to a close by death, and our much respected brother was taken to his reward in heaven. JOHN THOMAS.

9. The design of biography is not to eulogise the dead, or to raise a frail memorial of affection to the memory of a beloved friend, but to add another testimony to the power of divine grace, to encourage the weak and humble believer "to be faithful unto death," and to record

"Another gem in the Saviour's crown, Another saint in heaven."

We are assured, by the highest authority, that "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance." A loving, devoted Christian is like the rose, beautiful in life, but sheds a fragrance after its leaves are dried and shrivelled, and its tints of beauty are faded and gone. In reading of the purity, zeal, self-denial, and charity of the pious dead, how many faint and feeble minds have been cheered and stimulated, while the careless and ungodly have been admonished! "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh," and although no earthly escutcheon emblazons their virtues, no marble statue immortalizes their names, yet their "record is on high," and they will be distinguished on that day when the Redeemer shall come to number up his jewels.

The subject of the present sketch, MARY HAIGH, the beloved wife of one of our brethren in the ministry, John Haigh, was born January 3rd, 1822, was converted in 1841, was married July 6th, 1848, and died August 5th, 1861.

From a child she was docile, humble, neat, and orderly. She never occasioned her parents the least uneasiness or grief, and the traits of character in her early days, became more developed and matured in after life, so that her house was always "set in order," and was a picture of peace and purity. As soon as the Lord had opened her heart, and had done such great things for her, she began to enquire, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" "Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do?" A right sphere of action and usefulness was soon found in the sabbath-school. "To teach the young idea how to shoot, allure to brighter worlds, and lead the way," and for this "work of faith and labour of love" she was well fitted, by temper, disposition, and mental qualifications. She found real interest and enjoyment in her work, hence nothing could prevent her attendance. In all seasons and in all sorts of weather, she travelled from Ardsley to Barnsley, the distance of two and a half miles. No words can equal actions in this matter. The devoted Sabbath teacher is an ornament to the Church and a blessing to the world. In becoming the wife of one devoted to the work of the ministry, she felt a solemn weight and great responsibility. By the proper discharge of all her relative, social, and religious duties, she honoured the position in which God by his providence had placed her, and, by her amiability, disinterestedness, and conciliatory manner, she secured the love and admiration of those who were intimately acquainted with her in their several stations.

By the demands on her time from her young and rising family, she could not continue her labours in the school; but still to be of some use to the Church, more than by the soft, benign influence of her example, she usually took to a class, and a soul so full of love, gentleness, and good sense could not but be useful in such a sphere of labour. I need only say, that her qualities as a wife and a mother were in keeping with the other traits of her amiable, Christian character.

Some years prior to her death her health began seriously to decline. Extreme nervous debility occasioned violent palpitation of the heart, so much so that the least startling event, or surprising circumstance, would have caused her to fall to the ground. Having given birth to her seventh child, she languished, but in the strength of grace, and with her armour on, she entered the valley. When she knew that her end was nigh, she said, with a firm, unfaltering voice, "He lighteth it up; bless Him; how good He is." Again she added, "He lighteth it up." Pausing a moment, she looked round on her weeping friends, and said, "My sister, my husband," then calmly fell asleep in Jesus.

"As fades a summer-cloud away,

As sinks the gale when storms are o'er,

As gently shuts the eye of day,

As dies the wave upon the shore."

W. J.

10. JOHN BUSHELL, the subject of this memoir, was born March 21st, 1802, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, at Little Snoring, Fakenham circuit, September 17th, 1861.

In the former part of his life, he manifested the depravity of his nature by living in the neglect of the salvation of his soul, and in the pursuit of those things only that accord with the propensities of the carnal mind.

Drinking, swearing, and fighting were his usual practices; indeed, he was one of the foremost in the rank of drunkards and pugilists; but his course was not uninterrupted; there were seasons, when under the influence of the Divine Spirit, conscience started from its slumbers, and charged him with exceeding sinfulness; yet he struggled against his convictions, until he was alarmed by an awful dream, which led him to reflect on his sinful course, and after experiencing the deepest distress of mind, bordering upon despair, he resolved to turn from his evil ways, and seek redemption in the blood of Christ; and God, who is rich in mercy, graciously met him, pardoned all his sins, and filled him with peace and joy, through believing.

From that important era in his history until the close of his life, his conduct was such "as becometh the Gospel of Christ."

Without delay, he joined the Wesleysans, with whom he continued a consistent member until about twenty years ago, when he cast in his lot with the Primitive Methodists, with whom he lived and laboured until he exchanged mortality for life.

About twelve years ago, his name was put upon the Fakenham Circuit's plan. Although his preaching abilities were below mediocrity, yet such was the opinion entertained of his piety, that he was generally received by all classes to whom he had the honour of preaching the word of life, and his zealous and faithful labours will long be remembered by saints and sinners, many of whom were specially benefited thereby.

He also sustained the office of class-leader for about twelve years; his affectionate and holy zeal for the welfare of his members, caused him to be much beloved by them, and he was rendered very useful in the promotion of their spiritual growth.

He was highly esteemed for his piety, which was manifest to all who knew him; when pursuing his calling, and mixing with men of the world, his conduct recommended that Christianity of which he made a profession.

In his own locality he was much respected among all classes of the community, for his integrity and uprightness, to which his employer bears the following testimony:—"I never expect to have another workman in all respects equal to him."

He was a trustee for our chapel at Little Snoring, in the erection of which he took a deep interest, had the pleasure of worshipping in it a few times before he was laid aside by that affliction which ended his mortal career.

He endured his affliction, which was a tumour in his body, with holy submission, and fully sensible that he was approaching the bar of God, he looked forward with a solemn confidence that he should inherit an eternal weight of glory.

The enemy of souls often threw his darts at him, but understanding the nature of his temptations, he was enabled to resist him ; and, through the blood of Christ, he had the victory.

A few days before he left this world of care, a prayer meeting was held in his chamber, when enrapturing manifestations of the divine presence were made to the sanctified sufferer, and all felt that,—

“The chamber where the good man meets his fate
Is privileged beyond the common walk
Of virtuous life ; quite on the verge of heaven :

and while the friends were singing,—

“We’re bound for the land of the pure and the holy,
The home of the happy, the kingdom above,” all felt that it was the very gate of Heaven. But while singing,— “March on, happy pilgrims, that land is before you,

And soon its ten thousand delights you shall prove :
Yes ; soon you shall walk o’er the hills of bright glory,
And drink the pure stream of the Eden above,”

“It seemed as if an Angel shook his wings,” the divine glory was manifested in such a manner. On the Sabbath before he died, his friends, who had until then cherished hopes of his recovery, saw that his earthly race was nearly ended. On the same day, hearing several portions of Scripture read to him, he frequently added, “I know that my Redeemer lives.”

The following day the pain of his body was agonizing, and the exercises of his mind many and severe ; but his heart was fixed, and his anchor was cast within the veil.

A little before his departure, he exhorted his wife and those who were with him to cleave to the Lord, and said “Though I cannot return to you, you can come to me,” and then said, “Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.”

On the Tuesday, the day of his departure, he was able to converse but little ; nature was giving way ; the earthly house of his tabernacle was dissolving ; but his confidence in God was unshaken, and, in the faith of Him who is “the resurrection and the life,” he died, in the 60th year of his age.

11. GEORGE DAVIES, son of John and Sarah Davies, was born at Brince Jeffreston, Pembroke Mission, South Wales, October 15th, 1821. The first twenty-one years of his life were spent in estrangement from, and hostility against, God. He was a sinner of no ordinary character. He delighted in sport and mirth-making. Being possessed of a very retentive memory and great powers of mimicry, he was wont, after leaving the sanctuary, to entertain his ungodly associates with recitations of the sermon which he had heard, and which he would deliver with as much earnestness and mock-gravity as if he were one of the most devoted of God's servants.

In the summer of 1844 a camp-meeting was held at Creselly, conducted by the Rev. G. Lee. At the lovefeast, which was held afterwards, the subject of this memoir bowed at the throne of grace as a suppliant for Divine mercy, but he left the chapel without finding "the pearl of great price." For more than three weeks he groaned beneath a ponderous load of conscious guilt. At times his anguish was so great that his sleep fled from him, and fears were entertained by his friends that reason would be dethroned; however, deliverance came at last. One day, while in conversation with the Rev. H. Allen, who was on a visit to his friends, he professed to obtain remission of sins through faith in Christ Jesus. Immediately he identified himself with our society at Creselly, and thenceforward his conversation was such as becometh the Gospel of Christ.

A philosopher has said, that "God in making the Christian does not unmake the man," does not obliterate that variety in the temperament and disposition of our active powers which distinguishes one man from another. The truthfulness of this was exemplified in the after career of our departed brother. In the conversion of George Davies, a miracle of regeneration was wrought, but the constitutional peculiarities of his character remained unchanged. He longed to be made instrumental in the salvation of perishing souls by whom he was surrounded. Perceiving that he possessed talents which fitted him for usefulness, the proper authorities gave him appointments on the mission's plan, and ever afterwards it was his delight to cry, "Behold the Lamb of God," &c.

For more than twenty years he was the subject of affliction. Frequently his life was despaired of, but through the divine blessing on the means employed, he was partially restored. About five weeks before his demise, he was again laid aside by that complaint from which he had suffered so long and so severely. At first hopes were entertained of his recovery, but the disease baffled all medical skill.

For several years the days on which the missionary meetings at Creselly were held, were high days with our lamented brother. He considered it a great treat to have the deputations at his abode, especially the fathers in our Israel. Last year he greatly enjoyed the services and society of the Rev. W. Harland, and he looked forward with interest to this year's services, and hoped, if unable to attend the meeting, at least to have the pleasure of entertaining and conversing with the Rev. M. Lupton. But, alas! he was deprived of that privilege, for when on our way to Cresely, on the day of holding the missionary meeting at that place, we were informed that his redeemed spirit had on the preceding day fled to the realms of the blest. This saint, trusting in Him who is "the resurrection and the life," could defy death, and with magnanimity he could sing,

"Happy day that breaks my chains!
That manumits; that leads from exile home,
That leads to nature's great metropolis,
And re-admits me through the guardian band
Of elder brothers to our Father's throne."

To his relatives and friends our deceased brother gave many assurances that he was going "to be with Christ." He exchanged the sorrows and sufferings of earth for the glories of heaven on the 24th of September, in the fortieth year of his age. The last words he was heard to articulate were, "Where am I?" and instantly the tenement of clay was dissolved, and his happy spirit, freed from the prison house of mortality, winged its flight to regions of bliss.

Some of the more prominent traits in Brother Davies's Christian character were:—

1. Firm attachment to the people of his choice.—Having once said, "these people shall be my people," &c., he remained with them through obloquy, feebleness, &c., till he quitted the Church militant for the Church triumphant.

2. Efforts to improve the moral condition of the perishing of our race.—This he did more especially by publishing redemption's wondrous story, and setting forth Christ as the only hope of sinners. His discourses were eminently scriptural. As a preacher he was superior to many and was everywhere acceptable. Moreover, it is believed that some received permanent good through his labours.

3. Hospitality to those who ministered in holy things.—For some time his residence was the preachers' home, when in that part of the mission, and ever towards them he evinced the greatest kindness and hospitality.

4. Patience and resignation under affliction.—During his affliction, especially towards the last, his pains were severe indeed; yet no single word of murmuring or complaint was he ever heard to utter. Though the Lord slay me, yet will I trust in Him, was his experience.

12. ROBERT HEATH, the subject of this brief sketch, was born at Sheatley, in the county of Berks, in 1793. During the early part of his life he was much addicted to sin; but after his removal to Aklworth, he was prevailed upon to attend the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodists, at Compton, about two miles from Aldworth. Under their ministry Robert was awakened to a sense of his danger, and sought the pardon of his sins through faith in the blood of Christ, and not in vain, for he obtained a knowledge of sins forgiven. He united with the Wesleyan society at the above place, and continued a faithful member with them until the Primitive Methodist missionaries visited Aldworth. Robert went to hear them, and was much blessed under their labours, and when a society was formed at Aldworth, he united with them, as it was most convenient for him to meet at his own residence. Soon after he joined the society he was appointed to the office of a class-leader, which office he sustained until death terminated his earthly career. Nearly thirty years since his name appeared on the preachers' plan, and he laboured in a local capacity with considerable success. His talents were not great, neither was he a man of letters, but a plain, unassuming, holy, and devout Christian. He was rather reserved in his manner, but his words were reasonable, and a divine influence generally attended what he said. He was a deeply pious man, his life adorned the Gospel, and all who knew him were constrained to say that he was a good man; his conduct was truly exemplary, and he delighted in communion with God.

One of his neighbours states that the first thing which he was wont to hear in a morning was Robert at prayers. He was remarkable for humility, his place was at the feet of Jesus; he was in great request to visit the sick, and he was often sent for to administer instruction and consolation, as well as to pray for the afflicted and the dying. The affliction which terminated his life was fever, supposed to be brought on by over exertion and anxiety, in attending to his wife in the affliction which terminated in her death about a week previous to his own demise. His sufferings were severe, but of short duration. Satan made some attacks on him in the midst of his sufferings, but he was enabled to conquer through faith in Christ. He told those who visited him that he had not a shadow of doubt relative to his acceptance with God. He died in peace on Saturday, September 28th, 1861, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. His death affected the inhabitants of the village generally, and a considerable number of them attended his remains to their last resting place. He was interred in Aldworth churchyard, on Monday, September 30, 1861. The clergyman performing the ceremony gave out some of our appropriate hymns for the occasion, which were sung by the deeply affected assembly. May his family, friends, and classmates meet him in heaven.

THE POSSESSIONS OF CHRIST, AND THE MANIFESTATIONS THEREOF.

A SERMON, BY J. A., PAISLEY.

“All things that the Father hath are mine : therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you,”—John xvi. 15.

CHRIST was about to leave the disciples whom he had chosen to be his followers and successors in the great work of publishing the glad tidings of salvation. The separation proved to them of the most painful description, for though repeatedly forewarned, they understood not the nature of His kingdom, nor the way in which it was to be established. Brought up with all the prejudices of Jews concerning the promised Messiah, they fondly hoped that the person whom they had acknowledged as the Christ, would perform the great work of restoring the kingdom to Israel, and would set up a throne before which all the princes of the earth would stoop to do homage. Their fond hopes were soon to vanish. The cross, with its appalling accompaniments, was at hand. They were to be scattered, and their Master taken from them to die the most ignominious of deaths. They were, apparently, to be left to all the bitterness of disappointed hopes ; the sorrows of love looking on the suffering of its object, yet unable to save it ; and the taunts and mockeries of a host of enemies, who, not satisfied with the death of the Master, would persecute His servants and followers, as accomplices of what they counted His crime, or mock them as dupes of His cunning. Such was the night of sorrow which was beginning to throw its shades over the disciples. Such the season of sorrow on which they were about to enter.

To prepare them for it, and to fortify them in some measure to meet its terrors while He is yet with them, He discourses on subjects most likely to cheer their hearts, and to cast a ray of hope and joy over their gloom. His own love, His Godhead, His speedy return, the Father's care, and their own glorious reward—he cites as reasons why they should not let their hearts be troubled. Without seeking to hide from them that they would meet with persecutions, trials, and sorrows, He animates them by the thoughts of those comforts that would cheer them in the night of their weeping, together with the joy that would come in the morning. But chiefly among the comforting assurances which He gives them, he dwells on the coming of “another Comforter,” One who would remain with them, and lead them into all truth—One whom He would pray the Father to send, even the Spirit of truth whom the world could not receive, who should dwell in them, and be with them for ever. It was for their good that He was about to leave them. “For if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you ; but if I go away I will send Him."

After a description of the works which the Spirit would chiefly perform when He came, He goes on to tell them of many things which He has yet to say which they are now unable to bear : "Howbeit he, the Spirit of truth, when he comes shall guide them into all truth, shewing them things to come." To reconcile them yet more to this Comforter and enlist their love to Himself on behalf of His reception, He proceeds to say that this work should be the glorifying of Himself. "He shall glorify me, for he shall take of the things that are mine, and shew them unto you." Immediately, as if this lesson required some illustration or explanation, He adds the great and consoling, the Christ magnifying, and soul comforting truth of the text, "All things that the Father hath are mine, therefore said I, he shall take of the things that are mine, and shall shew them unto you." The same truth which was thus uttered to comfort the disciples is applicable to us. We have the same Saviour; the same dominion he then had he exercises now; and the same Spirit continues to be with the children of God, that He promised to send unto them. That Spirit's aid we now need as much as they did; and that aid is bestowed in a manner much similar to us as it was promised to them; therefore as we are poor like the disciples, and Christ rich now as then, and the Spirit performing the same office still, let us seek to find the same comfort in the truth of the text as our Lord intended the disciples to derive from it, when He breathed it into their sorrowing hearts.

With prayers, therefore, that the Lord would bless our meditations, we purpose to consider, I., THE POSSESSIONS OF CHRIST, "All things that the Father hath are mine." And, II., THE HOLY SPIRIT'S OFFICE IN CONNEXION THEREWITH.

I. The possessions of Christ, "All things that the Father hath are mine." The right to this universal possession consists, first, in Christ's own Divinity; and secondly, in the gift of the Father to Him as Mediator. 1, In Christ's own Divinity. All things are God's, for He is the Maker and Preserver of everything that has an existence. The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, the heavens also, and all the host of them. All things are mine, saith the Lord, every beast of the field, every fish of the sea, every fowl of the air. The riches of vegetation that deck the earth, the costly minerals that lie hid in its bowels, the pearls that are bedded in the depths of the ocean, all silver and gold, every thing, whether in heaven, in earth, or even in hell, is the property of God. Every intelligent being, from the loftiest archangel that bows the nearest before the supreme glory, to the most unthinking and foolish of men, is the property of the Most High. All time, all truth, all riches, all power, all honour, all glory; all that mind can conceive, or tongue can describe—belong of right to Him, who brought them into being, and upholdeth them by the word of His power.

But the possessions of God are the property of Christ, for he is God, co-equal and co-eternal with the Father. Though He appeared upon earth, poor and without a home in which to lay His head, or a beast whereon to ride, He is the rightful owner of all things that belong to Divinity. "For He thought it no robbery to be equal with God," Jehovah Himself declared Him His fellow. The same names of dignity that are applied to the Father, are bestowed upon the Son. By Him were the worlds made. By Him they are all sustained. The same glory which belongs to the Father is His; the same power the Father has He is able to wield. All things are His. If His Divinity cannot be proved then indeed His right to universal possession as God may be denied. We feel that upon His Divinity rests all our hope. We believe that no doctrine is more clearly taught in the Word of Divine truth. We hesitate not to admit His claim to be God—Jehovah—the Creator, the Preserver, the Governor of all. And, admitting this, we are led to the conclusion, that as God all things must be His.

But 2ndly, all things are Christ's by the gift of the Father. Christ is not only the Son of God with power, but likewise the Son of man. He appeared as God upon earth, clothed in the garb of humanity. He now appears in heaven as man, invested with the glory and the honours of Divinity. We are told that, though He was with God, and was God, He made Himself of no reputation, took upon Himself the form of a servant, and became obedient unto death; took upon Himself the office of Mediator, that He might fulfil the eternal scheme of human redemption; he became a man like unto those whose salvation He undertook to work out. Became a man in all things, tempted as we are; subject to poverty, to pain, and to sorrow, in order that He might redeem us from death, and bring us to inherit eternal life. The first Adam, our representative, fell when assailed by temptation, thereby dishonouring the law, and bringing ruin upon his race. The second Adam, Christ, our greater though voluntary representative, stood when assailed by fiercer temptation, thereby repairing the breach made in the law, and rolling back the overflowing tide of man's ruin. The first Adam sinned, and by consequence brought death into the world; the second Adam died, and by the merit of the act, delivered men from death, and introduced a life more glorious and more secure than that we had lost. The first Adam disobeyed, and thereby lost God's favour; the second Adam obeyed, and thereby restored it. And all this, as I have said, was voluntarily done. There was no necessity laid on Christ to undertake the work of our salvation. The virtue of His act consisted not only in the complete manner in which He accomplished it, but in His voluntarily submitting to the toil, and shame, and suffering, and agony, and death, with which it was accompanied. It was grace to man, and love to God—love to His own Divine attributes, that made Him submit to it. It was meet, then, that such virtue should receive a proportionate toward; it was meet that the Mediator's sufferings and humiliation should meet with a proportionate exaltation and triumph; it was meet that, as He stooped to the very lowest depths of humiliation and abasement, the highest honours and the most exalted glory should await Him as His recompense. Accordingly, we are told, that because He submitted to the humiliation of becoming a servant, and stooped to be obedient to death,—God hath also highly exalted Him, and hath given Him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that He is Lord. If there appeared an abasing of his Divinity by stooping to ally it with humanity, the Father rewarded Him by exalting that humanity to all the glory which the Divinity had with Him before the world began. If He became poor, laying aside all His riches, and, as it were, enshrouded Himself in the poor garb of our nature, the Father rewarded Him by bestowing on the man Christ Jesus, all the riches, and glory which the God Messiah had before He became poor. For when the man Christ Jesus appeared in heaven after having purged our sins by the sacrifice of Himself, God said to Him, "Thou art my beloved Son:" and again, "Let all the angels of God worship him:" and again, "Sit thou at my right hand till I make all thine enemies thy footstool;" "For thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity;" "Thy throne O God, is for ever and ever, a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." "For," says Christ, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand, "All mine are thine, and thine are mine." In the same spirit, and while contemplating the awful end, near to which He was drawing, He added, "Thou hast given me power over all flesh. Glorify me with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." And now glory has been given to the risen Saviour; "For Jesus is gone into heaven, and is seated on the right hand of God, angels, and authorities, and powers being made subject to Him."

Thus by the gift of the Father, all things are bestowed upon the Son as Mediator; all things in heaven and in earth, all authority and power: all people, and nations, and tongues, all the riches of earth, all the thrones in heaven; all kingdoms, and all right to judge, to teach, to save, and to bless. Everything, in short, that belongs to God is in the hands of the Saviour. Exalted to the right hand of God, He who lay in the stable of Bethlehem now possesses the wealth of the universe; He who had not where to lay His head, now governs all worlds. He who was mocked, buffeted, spit upon, and crucified—now holds the reins of all power, and commands all homage; He who was despised and rejected of men—is now adored, crowned, and acknowledged the rightful Lord and Governor of all. He the Son and the Saviour of man is clothed with honour and glory, and has given unto him a kingdom, as the Son and Heir of all that is God's.

What a vast possession is this! what a might is this! what an authority is this! We are accustomed to wonder at the wealth of some of the potentates of earth, who can command the riches of mines, and the obedience of millions of subjects; but what is it compared with the riches of Christ? We are accustomed to be dazzled with the glory of an Alexander, at whose feet lay the power and riches of the east; to be amazed at the might of a Cæsar, before whom the mistress of the world, imperial Rome, bent her lofty head, and encircling his brow with the wreath that proclaimed him her Master and lord. We are astonished at the splendour of a Napoleon, who held nearly all Europe under his sway, before whom crowned heads bent in homage, from whom kings took their sceptres, whose steps were followed by thousands to whom his word was law.

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

"To engage the hearts of hearers the Gospel should be preached affectionately.—There is a peculiar incongruity in publishing the glad tidings of the Gospel in a strain of indignation. If a preacher frowns and scolds and threatens his hearers with eternal fire, in the hardest language which he can command, and declares at the top of his voice that he is determined to clear his blood of them; it will be well if his moroseness and vociferation do not harden some of them in their sins. If we give him credit for the purity of his motive, and commend him for his earnestness, we cannot approve of the harsh style of his address. We do not desire him to soften God's truths, or to smoothen his tongue and accommodate his manner and expression to the vitiated tastes of fastidious hearers. We desire nothing of the kind. Were he to fall into these errors, he would incur the charge of handling the Word of the Lord deceitfully; but we do wish he would avoid a method of preaching which exposes him to the suspicion that he has not the common feelings of humanity. The preacher should never forget that he was once led captive by the devil at his will, and consequently liable to all the horrors of hell. And the recollection of these awful facts should inspire his soul with sympathy and compassion for those who are now in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity. While he faithfully utters the thunders of a violated law, and 'justifies the ways of God to man;' he should manifest an earnest desire that the transgressor may find immediate refuge from the pending storm. No man was more cruelly treated by his countrymen than was Paul, yet he was so far from cherishing any hard feelings towards them that he showed the tenderest concern for their welfare.

"They falsely accused him, they pursued him from place to place with the most malignant designs, they repeatedly scourged and stoned him, they secretly conspired to assassinate him. More than forty of them bound themselves by an oath that they would neither eat nor drink till they had murdered him. After all this barbarous treatment, he would have cheerfully laid down his life for their salvation. In the most solemn manner, he testifies how intensely he yearns over them in the bowels of Jesus Christ. 'I say the truth in Christ, I lie not; my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great sorrow and continual anguish in my heart. For I could wish that I myself were accursed from Christ, for my brethren, my kinsmen after the flesh.' He does not say my inveterate enemies, my murderous persecutors, but 'my brethren, my kinsmen after the flesh.' Such was the profound and unaffected concern which Paul felt for perishing Jews. And no man will accuse this holy and zealous apostle of unfaithfulness.

"We have still finer examples of affectionate preaching and compassion towards perishing sinners, in one who is greater than Paul. What a gracious spirit, and what a captivating sweetness there is in our Lord's Sermon on the Mount. No marvel that 'the common people heard him gladly,' and 'wondered at the gracious words that proceeded from his lips.' And who can conceive what he felt when he shed tears over obstinate Jerusalem, at the contemplation of its approaching ruin? 'And as he drew near, he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying,

O that thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things that are for thy peace! But now they are hidden from thine eyes.' From these examples it is evident that the greatest tenderness is consistent with inflexible fidelity, nor should the former qualification ever be sacrificed to the latter. Let the Gospel trumpet invariably utter a certain sound, but let its intonations be modulated by the law of kindness.

"The Gospel should be preached in a plain style.—Words are pictures of ideas, if they are unintelligible it is impossible for them to represent distinctly those thoughts which they are designed to convey. If the plate of a looking glass is perfectly level and clear, it will reflect an accurate likeness; but if it is waved or knotted, it will exhibit nothing but distorted images. It is just the same with language. A sermon, every sentence of which is understood distinctly, is a clear and faithful transcript of the preacher's sentiments, provided he expresses his views accurately. But a discourse which is fraught with unusual terms and knotty forms of expression, exhibits to many of his hearers nothing but a succession of deformed pictures. A few, perhaps, admire the preacher for his learned barbarism, and mistake his darkness for depth; but the more sensible part of the congregation feel ashamed of his affectation, or lack of judgment. It is a vulgar prejudice to regard an elaborate style as an indication of superior learning. A man of very superficial attainments may easily charge his memory with a collection of hard words, and profusely besprinkle his diction with them to the amazement of the illiterate. On the other hand profound learning is very frequently associated with the greatest simplicity. During my residence in London, I occasionally listened with great delight and profit to some of the most talented ministers, both natives and foreigners, every one of whose preaching was characterized by a clear and easy style. Dr. A. Clarke was a giant in literature; but however profound and elevated his thoughts, he was never 'hard to be understood.' One of the most honourable compliments, which was ever paid to a great scholar, was unwittingly paid to the Doctor by a poor woman in the Zetland Isles. She had heard of his celebrity, and went to hear him at Lerwick. On her return home, she remarked with mingled simplicity and surprise, they say, that Doctor Clarke is a learned man, and I expected to find him such; but he is only like another man, for I could understand every word he said.'

"A tribute of praise of the same kind was once paid undesignedly to Mr. Wesley. It is admitted by competent judges that Mr. Wesley was an accomplished scholar. But like good Archbishop Usher, he employed his stores of learning in simplifying truths which otherwise would have been obscure and complex. In his advanced age, some men attributed the plainness of his style to intellectual decline. But they mistook the man, and the dignified motives by which he was influenced. In reply to their criticism and apology, Mr. Wesley said, if he did not use a more learned style, it was not because he could not do it, but because he durst not do it; and that he durst no more use a fine style in preaching than wear a fine coat."

We say to our young ministers, ponder well the above; and while doing so we trust none of our junior brethren will deem the sentiments of Mr. Wesley as beneath the dignity of the man, his attainments as a scholar, his experience as a Christian, or his office as a minister. A fop in the pulpit is despicable. A minister of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who, faithful to his trust, sets his heart on declaring the whole counsel of God, will not be in danger of forgetting that there is such a Scripture as "Be ye not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." Rom. xii. 2.

But despicable as is foppishness in the pulpit there is a danger of a still greater evil resulting from ministers who sacrifice sense and sound doctrines to measured sentences and rhetorical flourish, in which the truth is not unfrequently garbled but heterodoxy promulgated. When a minister so far forgets his awful responsibilities as to devote his mind to the draping of his subjects in highly painted rhetoric, without due regard to "the truth as it is in Jesus" he by such a course is likely, if not speedily reclaimed, to dishonour his office and disgrace the cause of God.

We do not wish for a moment to insinuate that all preachers who use a florid style are unfaithful to Christ or will inevitably fall from their ministerial status; such a sentiment be far from us. Every man has his proper gift of God. But after making all allowance for constitutional peculiarities and educational habits and prejudices, we cordially recommend the preceding extracts to the serious consideration of our junior brethren, and emphatically urge St. Paul's advice to Timothy on the attention of each of them:—"Study to shew thy self approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." and again, "But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."—Editor.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

LINES BY THE WAY; OR, ENCOURAGING WORDS TO SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

DEAR TEACHERS,—I rejoice that the estimation in which Sabbath schools are held by the various sections of the Church of Christ, was never higher than at the present time, and among the various institutions formed and efforts put forth for the improvement of youth, Sunday schools stand among the first. When we remember that our Sabbath schools continue to increase, and that many among our youth who spent the Sabbath in wickedness, ignorant of God and His word, have been by some kind teacher led to the Sabbath school, where they have been taught to read the word of truth, and have been instructed in things which make for their eternal peace, while we feel assured that many among them have been made the happy partakers of the salvation of the Gospel, and by a holy conversation and consistent conduct have honoured the cause of Christ, our hearts beat high with delightful emotions, and our souls rejoice within us. Again, when we remember that many who have been trained in our Sabbath schools have joined our band of local preachers—many who had their training in Sunday schools have been called to enter fully into the work of the ministry, and not a few have left home, country, and kindred, to proclaim to the sons and daughters of Adam, in foreign climes, the unsearchable riches of Christ; we say, when we think of these things, our joy scarcely knows any bounds, and we call on our souls and all that is within us, to praise God's holy name.

Dear friends, do not now sit down, believing that your work is finished, that your labour is done :

remember the claims of the rising race on your sympathies, their demands on you for religious instruction, are as great and urgent as ever. Your work is still honourable, great, and glorious: you give instruction to the young and thus prepare them for the duties of after life, that they may be made useful to society, a blessing to mankind, and shed a holy influence on all around them. The character of our nation for the next half century will depend greatly on the training of our youth. Let the oak grow crooked, and let age mature it, you will then find it is most difficult to make it straight; but while the tree is young, train it aright; when it has grown to maturity, you may lean against it, but it cannot be bent by you. So with children; if you impress the doctrines of Christ on their young minds, and they grow up in the fear of the Lord, they will be less liable to fall into error and be led astray from the paths of virtue and holiness into the ways of profligacy and sin.

A Sabbath school teacher, if successful in winning the souls of children to Christ, does a work which is honourable and great, and which brings much glory to God. I do not say that a minister should not teach children, that be far from me, but his principal work is to lead sinners, sinners in general, to Christ; he stands on the bank of the river of worldliness and sin, which carries so many precious souls down the rapids of destruction; with the gospel-rope in his hand he stands, and watches on the bank of that river, and when he beholds souls being carried down the stream, he throws the rope, exclaiming, "Lay hold on eternal life." The Sunday school teacher is higher up, where small streams empty themselves into this great river; it is there the teacher stands with outstretched arms, ready to catch precious souls as they come floating past; and should he save one soul, what an amount of anxiety, suffering, and sin will be prevented thereby. Humanity is a wreck far off at sea: the minister hears the shrieks, groans, and cries of men and women, he jumps into the life-boat, springs to the oars, and pulls through the foaming surges to where men are battling with the mountain billows of the deep, and where the breakers of sin are rolling over them, and the mighty waves of their evil practices are sinking body and soul into "hell, which is moved to meet them at their coming;" he throws out the life preservers of repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ; many grasp them and are taken on board, and then placed upon the rock of ages, where they sing new songs of praise and thanksgiving.

The Sabbath school teacher goes when the sky is getting black, while the storm is yet coming on, and saves them before they are placed in the most imminent danger. Is it not written, "that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his ways, shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins," and he who trains up a child to know and love the Lord, does he not save a soul from death and, what is still better, prevents a multitude of sins? Yours is a great work,—a work which angels would gladly do, if they were commanded to do so by their Master. Teachers, prove faithful in your work, and let nothing of a worldly nature separate you from it.

To whom must we go, to what quarter must we look for the religious instruction of many of our youth, but to you and to your blessed institutions! Give a child secular knowledge, let him learn the sciences taught in the various seminaries, but keep from him the Bible, which should be the guide of his early youth, and thus send him forth into the world, and what is he like? like a ship with anchor weighed and canvass crowded, but without rudder to steer and helm to guide the vessel which driven by a tempest, swift as an arrow, and as wild as the wind across the trackless deep, now plunging the watery valley, now climbing the sides of the frightful mountain wave, drifts on and on towards destruction.

O liberty, O sound delightful to the ear of every Briton, what blood has been shed, what suffering endured for thy cause, for the cause of liberty—both civil and religious. For liberty men have suffered separation from their families, yea, more, banishment from their native land; more still, they have been chained to the stake and burned, and their ashes cast to the four winds of heaven; they have sealed the cause of liberty with their own blood, and when burning, dying in the flames, have still cried, liberty! Yet, how many there are with tyrant hearts, who would place their feet upon the neck of liberty and trample her in the dust—who would take the Bible from the children's hands—their spiritual bread—and deprive them of the privilege, the blessing of religious instruction! Has not the Bible been a blessing to families, villages, cities, yea, more, nations! and shall the rising generation be deprived of such a boon? Never, no never. Take the Bible from Britain, deprive her children of biblical instruction, scatter her Sabbath school institutions, and then, like Samson, she will be found shorn of her strength, spoiled of her glory, and Ichabod will be written on her walls. I have endeavoured to show the greatness of your work, and the value of the instruction which you seek to communicate to those who on Sabbath days are placed under your care.

In the prosecution of your labour of love, you may meet with many things, which (if you allow them) will have a tendency to discourage you; but where is the person who has not his disappointments and discouragements? Is it he who is in search of wealth? No. He who is seeking after fame? No. The minister of the Gospel: ah! many and sad are the discouragements which the minister of the Gospel has to meet. In your work expect to meet such things; arm yourselves against them; be determined not to give up. Some of the children may seem dull in learning and slow in reformation, but if you can see any signs of improvement, be encouraged, "despise not the day of small things;" drops precede the April showers: the grain of mustard seed cast into the earth, grows until it becomes a tree, and the birds of the air lodge in the branches thereof. Some of our most useful men and holiest women were once children in Sabbath schools.

And perhaps you are now teaching some the rudiments of Christianity, who shall, at a future date, instruct others in the deep things of God? You may be training some who shall become valiant soldiers of Christ, standing foremost in the army of God, who shall grasp the sword of the Spirit firmly, and fight manfully the battles of the Lord. Teachers, we wish idolatry, superstition, and ignorance to be driven from the world: we wish those veils which are cast over the minds of men to be torn away; we wish those strong citadels, which men by their depravity and wickedness have erected, and behind which they have retreated, to be demolished. We pray that these walls may be sapped, these towers cast down, and these fortifications shattered and levelled with the dust of the earth. Among the many instruments employed for the accomplishment of this work, not the least nor the last are Sabbath school institutions; these, properly sustained, become powerful means for good. Teachers, you have the weapons, use them; you have the sword, wield it; you have the trumpet, blow it; before the blast of which the walls of Jericho shall fall. Aim at the conversion of the souls of the children committed to your care; train them up to know and love the Lord. Let these facts that your work is great and your position honourable, with the success of the past and the bright prospects of the future, stimulate and encourage you to go on with a determination never to give up labouring for the welfare of the rising race, until your heavenly Master shall say, "It is enough, come up higher."

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

PARENTAL DISCIPLINE OF CHILDREN.

The Nature of the Discipline to which we refer shall next be considered. In the passages already cited it is described by such terms as "chasten," "correction," "rod and reproof," and certainly these are very significant and pertinent. The plain intimation is that the discipline should be of a moral and physical character. And the very nature of the children requires such discipline. Which should be the first in order will appear obviously to all intelligent minds, certainly the moral. Give the child who is guilty of wrong proper reproof. Tell him the nature, evils, and consequences of his errors. Set clearly before his mind the personal disgrace of evil doing, and what must inevitably follow if such a course be pursued. Be sure to let this be done in an earnest and faithful way. If it be necessary to threaten him with corporal punishment on a repetition of his wrong, do so in a manner that he shall see you would be exceedingly sorry to inflict it; and that it would be a very great wrong in him to give you the painful occasion. There are some parents, we regret to say, who reprove and threaten their children in a way that only hardens them. "There," cries out a passionate mother, "if you ever do so again, I'll give you such a beating: I will: you nasty little thing you." Is that the way to reprove children, we respectfully inquire? Can that be called training up a child in the right way? Ah! kindness is infinitely better than harshness, and hath a greater power over human nature than anything else except divine grace. As a first step in the discipline of children there should be kindly reproof and instruction, and should that fail to accomplish amendment, then another step of a more stringent character should be taken. What next? As a second step in moral discipline, we advise, a temporary deprivation of their liberty and privileges. There is not a greater moral punishment to children than to be kept from play and to be debarred the use of their toys. Usually this is a class of chastisement so humiliating and mortifying that very soon there are tendered promises of amendment, and it is not too much to hope, of a genuine character springing from inward resolutions not to incur that punishment again.

There are one or two modes of discipline practised by some parents to which we seriously object. One is, that of making their children abstain from food. I think this to be wrong, and without sanction in either natural or Christian philosophy. Our Heavenly Father gives to his disobedient children their daily bread; and surely we, who are fathers after the flesh, should not act contrary to his example. Such punishment is both moral and physical; the mind is pained, and the body is pinched.

Another mode of discipline with some parents is that of setting their children to learn portions of the Bible. Excuse me the remark, but I do utterly detest that mode of punishment, from personal experience. While at school, so repeatedly was I set to commit to memory, and to write out the fourth chapter of Proverbs, as a species of punishment, that ever since I have felt considerable indifference towards that chapter, and must confess that I seldom read it; and when I do, the aversion of my mind has to be struggled against. The influence of such a mode of discipline is really baneful, as it gives an aversion to the sacred volume. And while there are so many excellent forms of chastening children, I sincerely trust that parents will henceforth and for ever discontinue the practices of pinching their bodies and sickening their minds against the Scriptures.

Next to the moral there is a physical discipline of children. The back sometimes must feel the rod. Cases have occurred in which kindly reproof was a waste of words, and deprivation of liberty and privileges a mere game, and as the last resource, stripes have had to discipline the rebellious child. To have spared the rod would have spoiled the child. The fable of the old man and the boys in the apple-tree is familiar to many. First the old man kindly asked them to come down, at which they only laughed. Next he threw tufts of grass at them, at which they were very impertinent. But at last he said, "I'll try what virtue there is in stones," and pelting them with such missiles, he succeeded in bringing them down. The moral of the fable is the truth that we seek to inculcate, that the rod in some cases is alone virtuous. But the use of the rod must not in any case be brutal. A child is not a beast that requires a bludgeon, or a horse that needs a whip. The chastisement need not be with Jewish exactness, forty stripes save one, nor inflicted within an inch of the life. A father's hand should use the rod; as then, governed by a father's heart, the punishment would not be unjust. It is not cruelty that a parent, deserving the name, would inflict upon even the most refractory child, but simply correction. And permit the remark, that a constant use of the rod is too severe discipline in any case. Shame to those parents whose common punishment for any offence is beating. A blow may be reason to a brute, but a child is not a brute. Physical discipline should be the last resort of parental government, and then it should be as severe only as the circumstances demand. At what period this discipline should commence and when it should terminate is a question of some importance. I have carefully considered the question, and as my deliberate opinion I state, that parents should begin to discipline their children as early as the necessity arises, and continue it during their non-accountability. When only a few months old, children know whether their parents are pleased or displeased. On their recognition of this we submit their discipline should commence. Many parents make great mistakes as to the capabilities of infants, and on the plea that they are so young, allow the buddings of wrong to go unnnipped. "As soon as ever there appears a corrupt disposition in them, then it should be checked, or it will get head, and take root, and be hardened into a habit." Long before children can talk or walk, they should be chastened if necessary. A look, or a single word, or a finger-pat may be sufficient; but for the want of these correctives the evil inclinations may increase and strengthen, the bud may blossom. According to the age of a twig you can bend it easily; and so according to the age of a child can you govern it easily. While your children are young, there is great hope of your accomplishing your designs in regard to them, but that hope becomes less and less strong as age increases. "Chasten thy son while there is hope."

And you may safely continue necessary discipline until your children shall become personally responsible to God. At what age they become responsible agents it is difficult to determine. General consent places it at fourteen years;* some, no doubt, know good and evil much earlier. There is on record an instance of a youth, ten years old only, who was hanged for setting fire to a corn stack: the argument of his accountability being that he afterwards concealed himself. Accepting the age of fourteen as the period when all children are accountable—then up to that period parents should discipline them. Beyond that age I submit physical discipline should not extend. It is well to reprove their evil ways, and to withhold certain things which they may desire; but to use the rod to a boy or girl after that age has the tendency to render them more callous and wicked. Besides, being then personally accountable to God, should not He be allowed Himself to correct? A story is told of an open-air preacher in Ireland, who was pelted with stones by the Romanists. He caught several of them, and threw them back at the mob, some of whom he hit. A gentleman standing near said, "Sir, do you know what you are doing? Do you not know it is written, 'Vengeance belongeth unto me, and I will repay, saith the Lord.'" "O yes," replied the preacher, "and do you not see I am helping the Lord?" Parents should be careful how they use the rod, in correcting their children, after the age of fourteen years.

Certain objections might be started by some parents against physical discipline altogether, but the voice of Scripture makes this quite as imperative as the moral. "Thy soul is not to spare for their crying." As Dr. Clarke remarks, "This is a hard precept for a parent. Nothing affects the heart of a parent so much as a child's cries and tears. But it is better that the child may be caused to cry when the correction may be healthful to his soul than that the parent should cry afterwards when the child is grown to man's estate, and his evil habits are sealed for life." If the point can be gained without correction, well and good; but if you find, as it often proves, your forgiving them once on a dissembled repentance and promises of amendment doth but embolden them to offend again, especially if it be a thing that is in itself sinful, in such a case put on resolution, and spare not the rod. It is better that he should cry under the parental rod than under the sword of the magistrate, or what is more fearful, that of Divine vengeance. The future as well as the present welfare of children should be the consideration of parents, and it is an ascertained fact, that generally those children who are well disciplined by their parents become, when adults, well-ordered and moral members of the community, not to say members of the Christian Church. WILLIAM WHITBY.

2. DON'T SWEAR.

A LABOURING man who was extremely addicted to profane swearing was one day at work with a yoke of oxen near his house. The oxen not working to suit him, he began to whip them severely, at the same time uttering volleys of blasphemous oaths. The oxen breaking loose from their harness ran away, while the man in a passion pursued them, and coming up with them at the house, began to whip them again, and to swear as horribly as before. His little boy who was at this time just old enough to begin to talk, began to prattle his profane oaths over after him. No sooner did the father hear this, than his feelings were powerfully wrought upon. He paused for a moment, dropped his whip, and sat down and wept bitterly. A flood of keen reflections at once rushed upon his conscience, which produced such an effect, that he found no rest to his mind, until he found peace where forgiveness can alone be had, at the footstool of mercy.—British Workman.—[Parents, never forget your position and influence on your offspring. ## MISCELLANIES.

The late Prince Consort.

THE advanced state of our January magazine at the time of the lamented death of H. R. H. the late Prince Consort, on the 14th December, 1861, deprived us of an opportunity of furnishing a notice of the illustrious dead ; but by postponing our remarks the privilege has been afforded us of obtaining better information for our present article, on a subject which, at this time, is so deeply and painfully interesting to the sorrowing millions of our country.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert Francis Augustus Charles Emanuel, of Saxe Coburg and Gotha, K. G., was the younger of the two sons of Ernest, the late reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg, by the Princess Louisa, daughter of Augustus, reigning Duke of Saxe-Gotha.

Prince Albert was born at the castle of Rosenau, near Coburg, on the 26th of August, 1819, so that he was a little more than three months the junior of our gracious Queen. The late Duchess of Kent was sister to the father of the Prince ; hence, the illustrious pair were first cousins ere they became united in the endearing relationship of husband and wife.

The early education and youthful training of the Prince, however excellent and whatever the celebrity of those to whom these important matters were entrusted, have all been honoured in their eminent success as manifested in that felicitous life, the abrupt termination of which, when the sun of his mortal existence had just attained its zenith, has plunged our nation into unparalleled grief.

The first interview with which her Majesty and the Prince were privileged took place in 1836, at which time it appears a friendship was formed, that ripened into a union of the happiest character. The intended nuptials were made known to her Majesty's Privy Council on the 23rd November, 1839, when she made the following communication to the members of that body.—“I have caused you to be summoned in order that I may acquaint you with my resolution, in a matter which deeply concerns the welfare of my people, and the happiness of my future life. It is my intention to ally myself in marriage with Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. Deeply impressed with the solemnity of the engagement which I am about to contract, I have not come to this decision without due consideration, nor without feeling a strong assurance that, with the blessing of Almighty God, it will at once secure my domestic felicity and serve the interests of my country.”

Certain preliminaries having been duly attended to by the august parties and their friends, the happy marriage of her Majesty and the now lamented Prince, was consummated on the 10th of February, 1840, nearly 22 years ago. We now contemplate the Prince in his new position and relationships, and in so doing shall be under the necessity of drawing to some extent on the various articles published in the pages of some of our contemporaries.

Having become a naturalized Englishman, the first subject of the crown, and the husband of the most popular sovereign in the world, he had attained a giddy altitude among people jealous of foreign intervention, and ever wakeful to privileges, civil and religious, which had been won at the expense of the greatest sacrifices, the severest persecutions, and after large effusions of the best blood which had flowed through the veins of our most devoted patriots, most pious citizens, and of not a few of the most celebrated servants of God.

In such a position, among such a people, and at a time when monarchies were shaking and dynasties were crumbling to decay, our beloved country, favoured of God under the judicious conduct of her Majesty, undoubtedly very much assisted by his Royal Highness, our island home, with its glorious institutions of local and general interest, stood firm as the rock, which forms a natural bulwark around our hearths, our homes, our sanctuaries, and which, amid the surgings of revolutions, and the tempests which whirled sovereigns from their thrones left England firmer, richer, happier, and much more elevated than when these tempests arose. We again state it as our deep conviction that, under God, coupled with the noble heartedness and superior judgment of the Queen, this country is laid under a debt of ceaseless gratitude to the departed Prince for his exemplary prudence and unwearied perseverance in the pursuit of those objects which were best calculated to promote the nation's weal.*

Prince Albert's patriotism for his adopted country was of the most exalted order; this has of late years more especially become so patent, that the embodiment of slander was abashed at his approach, and jealousy became blind in his presence. Nor was his anxiety for peace among the least of those numerous virtues which crowned his valuable life.

Perhaps others with ourselves will be impressed with certain happy coincidences between Alfred the Great and our late illustrious Prince; and we anticipate that in time to come the names of Alfred the Great and * Within two years of the Royal marriage, the late Sir Robert Peel, recognising the high qualities of the Prince, advised her Majesty to associate her husband with her in the cares of the Empire; and from that time onward to his lamented death he was always present by the side of the sovereign in her official interviews with her ministers, listening to, and discussing with them, high questions of State policy, and occasionally making suggestions which the wisest admitted to be pregnant with instruction. Of his abilities in this point of view, indeed, we need no higher testimony than that of our present Prime Minister, who is reported to have said that His Royal Highness held all the tangled threads of foreign policy in his hand, and was better able to separate them than any other statesman in Europe.—Evangelica

Albert the wise and the good, though severed in the dates of their birth by a thousand years, will, we doubt not, become associated in history with the most illustrious of our race, and among the greatest benefactors of mankind.

As a citizen, the Prince Consort stood at the head of his class, and in this particular he certainly was a brilliant example. He had scarcely become initiated into the state of the respective classes of society in this country, before his benevolent heart conceived, and his superior mind was busily engaged in seeking to elevate and bless down-trodden humanity. Model lodging houses for the houseless, and model residences for the labouring poor are only parts of plans in which he so heartily engaged for the benefiting of the sons of toil, and for making comfortable our cottage homes. While his perseverance in the cultivation of the soil, and the amazing improvements which he succeeded in making on some very barren land, furnish practical lessons which our agriculturists may study with especial profit, and which connoisseurs may contemplate with as much pleasure as that which we have enjoyed in surveying some of the Prince's domains.

His prudence in the management of his monetary affairs, in perfect character with the ability displayed in this matter by the court generally, and his liberality in aiding proper objects of charity and benevolence, might well have demanded a lengthened notice at our hands, but space forbids all approaches to prolixity.

The example and efforts of his Royal Highness were not confined to the improvement of the lower strata of society; through every class, from the base to the apex of the moral cone, all were benefited; hence, in connexion with her Majesty, a sublime influence pervaded the Court of these kingdoms, that banished licentiousness with its thousand ills, and made the Court of Great Britain one of the most, if not the most virtuous Court in the world, and the effects of Royal prudence and moral purity on the aristocracy of this country, and the several grades of society in this land have, by the blessing of the Most High, raised royalty in the nation to a proud position, when compared with the demoralization which cast its deadly shadows over our country's best interests during some former reigns. Toward the Prince as a husband, a father, and a Christian, we turn our attention with peculiar pleasure, and as the space for our remarks is limited, we will try to bring this sketch within as small a compass as is at all compatible with our sense of duty as a chronicler of a few things out of the many that are being made known concerning His Royal Highness.

Of the happiness of the married life of the Queen and Prince Albert, mutual love unquestionably constituted the basis, and this was so ceaselessly manifested that it has become known through the length and breadth, not of England only, but to the ends of the world.

A speech delivered by the Earl of Shaftesbury, at the Dorset Quarter Sessions, reported in the Morning Chronicle of the 3rd January, 1862, contains the following passage which, from the position occupied by the noble speaker, and his thoroughly religious character, we the more readily transcribe :—"The married life of the Queen and Prince Albert is one of the most remarkable pictures in the history of this or any other country. I doubt whether history can furnish a parallel of twenty-two years conjugal purity and felicity between any in such a circle of society." In the exercise of his parental duties his Royal Highness assumed what all properly disciplined and enlightened minds will admit, that a father ought righteously to rule in his own house. Of Abraham, the father of the faithful, it is said by the Lord, "For I know him (Abraham) that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment."

So the Prince Consort ruled not with rigour, but in the fear of the Lord, making use of the incomparable lessons of the Scriptures as a medium of correcting evil and enforcing good ; nor did his truly paternal heart cease to foster the interest which was evinced in his conduct towards his children in their childhood, but the same pious anxiety characterized his conduct towards them as they approached maturity. We have lately read an interesting anecdote in reference to the Prince of Wales, which we cannot omit.

It is stated that a beautifully executed statue from the studio of Baron Tosqueti, a prominent and distinguished man among the French Protestants, stands at the top of the Queen's staircase in the private apartments of Windsor Castle. This statue represents the boy-king Edward VI., marking with his sceptre a passage in the Bible, which he holds in his left hand, and upon which he intently looks. A closer inspection discovers the following text upon the open page—"Josiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem ; and he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left." This statue was executed by the desire of the Prince Consort, who intended it to convey to his son a constant and most significant suggestion of the Divine will by which the future Sovereign should fashion his heart and life.

LEEDS.—"A special sermon was preached in Brunswick Chapel, in the morning of Monday" (the day of the funeral) "by the Rev. W. B. Pope, who said the Prince was, without exaggeration or fear of contradiction, the pious head of the Royal house ; indeed, he had been informed, by one who had excellent opportunities of obtaining information of the private life of the Royal Family, that the Prince offered up extempore prayer at the family altar, surrounded by the various members of the household."—From the Wesleyan Times of December 30th. 1861.

The Prince was an enlightened, liberal, and firm Protestant. The following anecdote appears in perfect harmony with his general conduct :—

The Prince, we have lately read, was solicited by a celebrated dignitary of the Established Church to support the claims of a man of doubtful opinions to a bishopric.

He demurred, expressing his misgivings of the candidate's orthodoxy. Shortly afterwards the disappointed clergyman went over to Rome. The next time the Prince met the dignitary referred to above, he observed how fortunate it was that he, the Prince, had not recommended the renegade to ecclesiastical advancement, to which the indiscreet answer was, "Had your Royal Highness done so the apostasy would not have happened."

The lines below, the music of which was composed by the Prince, and in which they were sung at his funeral, are characteristic of the state of pious feeling which he had long exhibited.

"I shall not in the grave remain,
 Since Thou death's bands hast sever'd;
 By hope, with Thee to rise again,
 From fear of death deliver'd.
 I'll come to Thee, where'er Thou art,
 Live with Thee, from Thee never part;
 Therefore to die is rapture!
 And so to Jesus Christ I'll go,
 My longing arms extending;
 To fall asleep in slumber deep—
 Slumber that knows no ending,
 Till Jesus Christ, God's only Son,
 Opens the gates of bliss—leads on
 To heaven, to life eternal!"

We have been informed that His Royal Highness was impressed with a conviction that his dissolution was near, and, while he was attentive to the solemn ordinances of our holy religion, out of the fulness of his heart he frequently repeated that beautiful hymn beginning with,

"Rock of ages, cleft for me,
 Let me hide myself in Thee," &c.

From the well authenticated anecdotes relative to the Prince Consort, we doubt not, in common with many who have had superior opportunities of knowing his private character, he is now a king and a priest in the presence of God, enjoying that fulness of bliss which shall be the inheritance of the faithful world without end.

While our nation weeps as it never wept, and while Britannia is clothed in sackcloth and ashes, and while we ought as a nation and as individuals to be deeply humbled before the Most High, we should also indulge a deep sense of our obligation to Him who rules not a nation, but the universe, and who at His pleasure controlleth all events for the good of them that fear Him. We say again, we ought to be grateful to him for the loan which He granted to this nation in the person and virtues of His late Royal Highness. And although a PRINCE and a GREAT MAN has fallen, his works for the benefit of Great Britain and the world, will prove more durable than marble, and more valuable than all the wealth that the proudest monarch can boast.

Nor should we forget the bereaved widow and the fatherless children. If the Prince was of inestimable worth as a husband and a father, who shall say to what extent he was indebted to the Queen for the formation and establishment of a most brilliant though contracted career? Dear readers, let us all attend to the Divine injunction in praying more frequently and more fervently for our incomparable Queen, that the God of her wedded life may be her comfort in her widowhood, the stability of her throne, the constant portion of her soul, and her salvation in death; and may the entire family of the Sovereign of these realms form an unbroken circle of redeemed spirits at the right hand of Jehovah for ever. Amen.

To the Memory of Prince Albert.

BENEATH an avalanche of sudden woe—
 A crushing weight of sorrow unforeseen—
 The mighty heart of England bleeding lies:
 A glory hath departed from her midst,
 The pillar of her throne is rent in twain,
 And Death holds sov'reign sway o'er all the land.
 There is no fitting tongue for grief so deep,
 No words wherewith to clothe so dire a blow
 As that which now hath smote the country's breast;
 The kingliest man she ever saw is dead—
 The kindest heart she ever knew is still!
 A surging sea of sorrow Europe fills,
 And o'er the wide-extended world shall flow,
 In countless streams of undisguised regret.
 No splendour borrowing from rank or power,
 He added lustre to the British Crown,
 And dignified its honour by his worth:
 His brief, yet bright career for ever closed,
 Shall henceforth be a model for the great,
 Who would be truly so, like him we mourn:
 His affluence of urbanity and grace;
 His nobly bland and mildly courteous mien;
 His richly stored and cultivated mind;
 His high regard for intellectual worth.

His deep devotion to our native land ;
 His princely patronage of peaceful arts ;
 His aid to social progress, marked by deeds ;
 His liberal heart and ever-generous hand ;
 His prov'd domestic virtues, shrined in love ;
 His blameless life, and peaceful, Christian death !
 For many a widow'd one She oft hath wept,
 Whose royalty is now the seat of woe ;
 And many a tear She striven hath to dry,
 Who now Herself must weep heart-welling tears.
 If mortal consolation aught avail
 In such an hour of deep, unfathomed grief,
 A Nation's sympathy o'erflows tow'ards Thee,
 Our dearly loved, bereaved, and widowed Queen.

The Nation's Prayer.

LORD GOD, on bended knees
 Three kingdoms cry to Thee,
 God save the Queen !

God of all tenderness,
 Lighten Her load, and bless,
 Deep in Her first distress—
 God save the Queen !

Hold Thou our Lady's hand,
 Bid Her arise and stand—
 God save the Queen !
 Grant Her Thy comfort, Lord ;
 Husband ! Thy arm afford ;
 Father ! fulfil Thy word—
 God save the Queen !

Thou hast given gladness long,
 Make Her in sorrow strong—
 God save the Queen !
 Dry our dear Lady's tears,
 Succour Her lonely years,
 Safe through all woes and fears,
 God keep the Queen !

Sweet from this sudden gloom
 Bring Thou life's perfect bloom,
 God save the Queen !
 Thou, who hast sent the blow,
 Wisdom and grace bestow
 Out of this cloud of woe—
 God save the Queen !

2. THE VICTORIAN EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

COOPER'S CREEK.—At the point at which we first struck Cooper's Creek, it was rocky, sandy, and dry, but about half a mile further down we came to some good waterholes, where the bed of the creek was very boggy, and the banks richly grassed with kangaroo and other grasses. The general course is a little north of west, but it winds about very much between high sand hills. The waterholes are not large, but deep and well shaded, both by the steep banks and the numerous box trees surrounding them; the logs and bushes high up in the forks of the trees, tell of the destructive floods to which this part of the country has been subjected, and that at no very distant period, as may be seen by the floodmarks on trees of not more than five or six years growth.

From camp 57 we traced the creek in a W.N.W. direction about six miles, it then runs out among the sand hills, the water flowing by various small channels in a south-westerly direction. The main channel, however, continues nearly south until it is lost on an extensive earthy plain, covered with marsh-mallows and chrysanthemums.

Creek.—In one of the valleys between the sand hills, at a distance of about ten miles in a south-west direction, we found a shallow waterhole, where a creek is formed for a short distance, and is then lost again on the earthy plain beyond. W. by N. and W. from here, about twelve miles, there are some splendid sheets of water, in some places two and three chains broad; the banks well timbered; but the land in the neighbourhood so loose and rotten that one can scarcely ride over it. I expect this is the reason why we saw no blacks about here, for it must be worse for them to walk over than the stony ground. From camp 60 the general course of the creek is N.W., but it frequently disappears on the earthy plains for several miles, and then forms into waterholes again finer than before. At our first depot, camp 63, in lat. 27 deg. 36 min. 15 sec. S., long. 141 deg. 31 min. E., there is a fine hole about a mile long, and on an average one chain and a half broad. It exceeds five feet in depth everywhere that I tried it, except within three or four feet of the bank. Two or three miles above this camp we saw the first melaburus growing around the waterholes, some of them as large as a moderate sized gumtree.

Earthy Flat.—The feed in the vicinity of camp 63 is unexceptionable, both for horses and camels, but the herbage on the creek generally down to this point is of a very inferior quality, the grasses are very coarse, and bear a very small proportion to the other plants. By far the chief portion of the herbage consists of chrysanthemums and marsh-mallows, the former, to judge from their dried-up powdery state, can contain very little nourishment, although some of the horses and camels eat them with great relish; the latter, I need hardly mention, are at this time of the year merely withered sticks. A few small salsolaceous plants are to be found on some of the flats, but they are scarcely worth mentioning. In some places, where the bed of the creek is shallow and dry, there is an abundance of good grass and rushes of several kinds. The polygonum bushes are also fresh and good in such places.

Stony Rises.—The stony rises are generally bare and barren, but some of those on the north side of the creek carry a fair crop of light grass.

Sand Hills.—Wherever there are sand banks or ridges the seed is almost invariably good, the salt bush is healthy and abundant, and there are a variety of plants on which cattle would do well. For camels, these hills are particularly well adapted, for there is scarcely a plant grows on them that they will not eat, with the exception of porcupine grass, but there is very little of that until one gets many miles back from the creek.

Character of Ground.—I have mentioned three distinct kinds of ground—the earthy plains, the stony rises, and the sand ridges. The latter which is by far the most agreeable, whether for travelling on, for feed, or in respect to the freedom from flies, ants, mosquitoes, and rats, is simply a series of hills composed of blown sand of a red colour, very fine, and so compactly set that the foot does not sink in it much; in some places the ridges have a uniform direction, in others the hills are scattered about without any regularity; the average direction of the ridges is N.N.E. and S.S.W. In the valleys between the hills are shallow clay pans, in which the water rapidly collects, even after slight showers, but when full they seldom exceed five or six inches in depth, so that in summer they are soon dry again.

Stony Rises.—The stony ground, in contradistinction to the Sandstone Ranges, appears to have been formed from the detritus of the latter, deposited in undulating beds of vast extent. The greater portion of this ground appears almost level when one is on it, but when viewed from a distance the undulations are very distinct; the stones are chiefly waterworn pebbles of sandstone, quartz, and ironstone; in some places, the rises approach more nearly to the nature of the Sandstone Ranges, and here the stones are less waterworn, and are mixed with large blocks of rock. I found the magnetic polarity to be very distinct in some of the ironstone pebbles on these rises.

Earthy Plains.—The Earthy Plains, which are such an important geological feature in this part of the country, will, I fear, greatly interfere with its future occupation; when dry they are so intersected by chasms and cracks that it is in some places dangerous for animals to cross them, and when wet they would be quite impassable. Cattle would, perhaps, do well on them for some time after an inundation, and the ground might improve after having been stocked. The boggy nature of the banks of the creeks passing through this ground would be another impediment to settlers, from the losses of cattle it would sometimes entail. To give one an idea of the danger in that respect, I may mention that there are places where, for two or three miles, neither a bullock nor a horse could get to the water with safety, and it was with difficulty that we could approach it ourselves; the safest spots are at the lower ends of the waterhole, where the creeks run out on the plains. A peculiar geological feature that I have never seen so strongly exhibited elsewhere is, that the watercourses on these plains have a strong tendency to work away to the S. and S.W., the fall of the ground, as shown by the flow of the flood-water, being to the W. and N.W. I found that at almost every place where a portion of the creek ran out, the small branches, into which it split before disappearing, struck off at nearly right-angles to the creek, and that the flow of the water on the level plain was invariably in a westerly or north-westerly direction, whereas the creeks generally had a course considerably to the south of west, more especially before running out. The branch creeks and waterholes are always lined with box trees and polygonum bushes; they are generally situated between or near sand hills, and have doubtless been formed by the rush of water consequent on the interference of these hills with the general flow. In some places, the direction of the sand ridges were the course of the creeks, tending to the southward; but I allude to the tendency as exhibited on the open plain, with no sand ridges near the creek.

Country to the North of Camp 63 (Cooper's).—During our stay at camp 63, from which spot we found it necessary to remove, for several reasons, but chiefly because the rats attacked our stores in such numbers that we could keep nothing from them, unless by suspending it in the trees, four excursions were made to the north of that place in search of a practicable route to the Gulf. The first attempt was made with horses, which were soon knocked up from the strong nature of the ground and the want of water; the others were made with camels, by the help of which the country was well examined to a distance of nearly ninety miles. Water was found at two places, at distances of about seventy and seventy-three miles north of the creek, but it was fast drying up, and would not last beyond Christmas. No blacks were seen, but a column of smoke was observed to the N.N.E. at a distance of about fifteen miles, as ascertained by some bearings, from the point at which we turned back. The chief portion of the land traversed consists of land-dunes and flats of the same nature, the latter clothed with porcupine grass, the former with salt bushes, grasses, and a variety of shrubs, sometimes intermixed with mesembryantheums and porcupine grass. The sandy ground is bounded on either side by sandstone ranges, from which numerous small creeks flow east and west until they are lost in small flats and clay pans amongst the sand hills. Their course is marked by an acacia, which is somewhat analogous in its general characteristics to the common wattle; a few are favoured with some box trees, but we only found water in one. The whole country has a most deplorably arid appearance; birds are very scarce, native dogs numerous. The paths of the blacks on the strong ground look as if they had not been used for many years. Ant-hills and beds are to be found everywhere in great numbers, and of considerable size; the paths to and from them are better marked and more worn than any I have seen before, but nearly all of them are deserted, and those that are inhabited contain a small and weakly population, that seems to be fast dying away. Neither about the flats nor the ranges did we see any signs of the heavy floods that have left such distinct marks in other parts, and the appearance of the whole country gave me the idea of a place that had been subjected to a long continued drought. At the northernmost end of the eastern line of ranges, and on the west side of them, in lat. 26 deg. 30' S., long. 141 deg. 40' E., is a low detached line of range about seven miles from north to south. On passing inside this range at its southern extremity, one enters a flat, bounded on the south by high red sand hills, to the west and north by the low range, and running up to the N.N.E. until it reaches the main range.

On the lower part of the flat there is no creek, but on proceeding up it at a mile and a-half there are three water-holes with a few bushes growing around them; the water was fast drying up when we were there. There were some ducks, anipes, and pigeons about them: the former always returned to the holes after having been disturbed, so I imagine there is not much more water in the vicinity. In continuing up the flat, the main creek appears to be that along which the box timber grows, but the bed is sandy and quite dry. By keeping off a little to the left, at a mile above the water-holes, one comes on the bed of another creek, with only here and there a gum tree and a few bushes. Up this creek, at a distance of three miles nearly north from the three holes, and where the creek emerges from the ranges, is a large hole well shaded by heavy box trees; it contained only a small quantity of water when we passed, but I fancy that in ordinary seasons the water would be permanent. This creek has been much frequented by blacks at one time, but not lately. Hundreds of hawks and a good many crows and magpies were in the trees near the waterhole.

Geographical position. — The geographical position of the three waterholes is by account from Cooper's Creek, latitude 26 deg. 34 min. south, longitude 140 deg. 43 min. east.

Meteorological remarks. — It would be rather premature for me to offer any opinion on the climate of Cooper's Creek on so short a stay, and my other duties have prevented me from making any observations that would be worth forwarding in detail. I may mention, however, that neither on the creek, nor during the journey up, have we experienced any extreme temperatures; the heat although considerably greater here than in Melbourne, as shown by a thermometer, is not felt more severely by us. The maximum daily temperatures since our arrival on Cooper's Creek have generally exceeded 100 deg.; the highest of all was registered on November 27th at Camp 63, when the thermometer stood at 109 deg. in the shade. There was at that time a strong wind from the North, which felt rather warm, but had not the peculiar characteristics of a hot wind. One of the most noticeable features in the weather has been the well marked regularity in the course of the wind, which almost invariably blew lightly from the E. or S.E. soon after sunrise, went gradually round to north by two o'clock, sometimes blowing fresh from that quarter, followed the sun to west by sunset, and then died away, or blew gently from south throughout the night. A sudden change took place yesterday, December 14th; the day had been unusually hot, temperature of air at 1h. p.m. 106 deg., at which time circum clouds began to cross the sky from N.W., and at 2h. p.m. the wind sprung up in the S.W., blowing with great violence (force 6); it soon shifted to south, increasing in force to (7) and sometimes (8); it continued to blow from the same quarter all night, and has not yet much abated; once during the night it lulled for about an hour, and then commenced again; it is now (4 p.m.) blowing with a force of (5) from S. by E., with a clear sky. Before the wind sprung up the sky had become overcast, and we were threatened with a thunderstorm; rain was evidently falling in the W. and N.W., but the sky partially cleared in the evening without our receiving any. Flashes of distant lightning were visible towards the north; during the night the thunderstorm from the north approached sufficiently near for thunder to be distinctly heard; the flashes of lightning were painfully brilliant although so far away. The storm passed to the S.E. without reaching us, the sky remained overcast until between 8 and 9 a.m., since when it has been quite clear; the temperature of air, which at sunrise was as low as 72 deg., has reached a maximum of 92.0: it is at present 89.0 deg., and that of the surface of the water in the creek 78.0 deg. Two other thunderstorms have passed over since we have been on the creek, from only one of which we have received any rain worth mentioning.

Mr. Brahe, who remains here in charge of the depot, and from whom I have received great assistance both in making meteorological observations and in the filling in of feature surveys, will keep a regular meteorological register. I have handed over to him for that purpose an aneroid barometer No. 21543, and four thermometers, two for dry and wet bulb observations, and the others for temperature of water, &c.

With regard to hot winds, the direction of the sandridges would seem to indicate a prevalence of East and West winds here rather than of northerly.

3. HAPPY DICK.

"HAPPY DICK" was an old blind negro, who walked with God. He was another man's chattel, but his master happened to be a kind one, and kept Dick in his old age for the good he had done, allowing him a free hut, and maintenance for himself and his wife. Dick's cheerful piety and invariable contentment, procured him, by universal consent, the name he bore. His little cabin stood under a great magnolia-tree, and there his song might be heard from morning till night, as he sat in the doorway, weaving osier-baskets, or whittling tiny playthings for the picaninnies of the plantation.

A Christian lady once asked him if he never felt uncomfortable, when he thought that he was a slave; and if he never longed for the independence of other men, so that he might know what it was to lay up his earnings and have something to call his own.

"O missus, don't ask me dat," said the grey-headed negro, "dem days is all gone by, and I's longed for freedom mightily, but I long for heaben too, and dat's a great deal better. I nebber allows myself to 'flect on de bad tings dat happen to me, nor the good tings dat I nebber had; and when I tink about sometin to call my own, it seems as if I had a big treasure right here, dat I don't owe any man for."

"How is that, Dick?"

"When all de rest of de world, Missus, are saying, 'Dis is my hous,' 'Dat is my sugar mill,' 'Dere is my great cotton-patch,' I say, 'Dere is my hope, and dere is my Saviour; and when I own de Lord Jesus, it seems as if I owned all de rest; for de eart is de Lord's, and de fulness dereof. De air is mine, and I can bread it; de sunshine mine, and I can sit in it; de eart is mine, and I can lie down on it to sleep."

"But would'nt it be nice to own a great farm, like Job, and have cattle and horses, and things to give away?"

"Ah, old Dick couldn't take care on't. Tell ye, missus—what a man has, beyond enough to take care on and look out for his own soul too, de same time, is stealin' de Lord's. But I beliebe ebry ting is ordered for de best; and I s'pose de good Lord made some folks to hab de first pick, and some to take de leabins, and some to get both; and Massa Job was one of dat kind; and I s'pose de Lord made me to take de leabens. Den why should'n't I be tankful? I get de leabens ob de tables, I get de leabens ob de time, I get de leabens ob de money, de leabens of my strength, de leabens ob young massa's learnin', de leabens ob de old camp-meetin', and de leabens ob heaben; and why should'n't old blind Dick be happy?" And the tears ran down his black face.

"But if the Saviour is yours, Happy Dick, and He owns everything, you ought to have first pick if you want it."

"Dear missus, I do git de first pick in de way I mean, but not in de way de world understands. I lib like de good old Paul, 'as habin' notin' and yet possessing all tings.' De more world I want, de less Christ Jesus I get, and de more Christ Jesus I get, den I come nearer to habin' all tings; for all tings are His, and I hab de first pick because I hab Him."

"You mean, then, my good old friend, that your interest in the world's people and property is a spiritual one, not a money one?"

"I s'pose you call it so. You see, men hab a conscience and dat gibs de humble good man a power ober dem in spite ob demselves. Massa Hammond, oberseer ob de plantation, is berry proud and wicked, and laughs at my religion; but I know if de day of judgment should come now, he'd ask me to pray for him fust."

"Do you think that this Scripture will literally come true, 'the meek shall inherit the earth?'"

"I s'pose so, missus. Dere is a deep-down-in-de-heart respect, now, in de world, for de good and meek man; and by-and-by, when de Lord shall bring forth dat man's righteousness as de light, and his judgment as de noon-day, dey won't be ashamed of dere respect, and so de meek man will get de big offices, and den pretty soon after de millennium will come."

"Happy Dick" has long since gone to rest. He sleeps—

under the shadow of a pine that has numbered far more years than his. He inherits his spot of earth, and, better than all his hopes, he now reposes in a free country, where there is no more hard work, and friends never part, and flowers never fade around the cabin door.

A PRESENT SALVATION; OR, A SOLDIER'S EXPERIENCE.

THE night before the battle two soldiers were talking together. One was a Christian young man, the other was not. The unconverted man was in great heaviness of mind. He had been for some time anxious about his soul. He went to his friend to open to him all his heart, and said to him,

"I do not see as there can be any mercy for me."

"Why not mercy for you?" inquired the friend.

"Because I cannot find it."

"What do you want to find?"

"Want to find! I want to find relief, I want to find happiness."

"Is that what you want to find?"

"Surely it is. What else should I want to find?"

"My poor friend, happiness is very desirable, but you will never find it if you seek it as an end. You must find"—

"Find what?"

"Why you must find Christ. You must be cleansed from sin in order to be made happy. You must be renewed and sanctified and purified by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. You must find Christ here and now. You have no time to lose."

"Well, how shall I find Him?"

"Believe on Him with all your heart. Tell Him you renounce all your sins and are sorry for them, and consecrate all you are and all you have to Him. Give everything away for Him, and take Him to your heart instead of everything else."

"And shall I then be saved?"

"Believing in Christ you cannot be lost. You may depend on it I tell you the truth. He says, if you believe, you shall never perish—neither shall any be able to pluck you out of His hand. Him that cometh unto me, He says, I will in no wise cast out. Now can you not believe and trust your soul to Him?"

The two friends were separated for the night, or that part which was given for rest. But before daylight they found themselves together again. They were marching towards the field of battle, shoulder to shoulder, and knew not when nor where they would meet the enemy.

"How do you feel now?" said the pious soldier to the other.

"Oh, unspeakably happy!" he replied.

"Happy, what makes you happy?"

"Oh, I have found Christ."

So the new convert revealed to his pious companion how he had found his new joy in the early morning of that fatal 21st of July.

The soldier said: We went upon the field together, he talking and I listening with glad surprise to his rich experience of forgiving grace in Jesus Christ. By-and-by we were in the midst of the roar of cannon and musketry, and my friend was shot dead at my side.—Christian Journal: slightly abridged by the Editor.

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. Sermons by Jabez Bunting, D.D. Volume I. London: John Mason, 27, City Road; sold at 66, Paternoster Row. 1861.

The name of Jabez Bunting, as connected with Wesleyan Methodism, will long be held in veneration by a great number of individuals, both within and beyond the limits of that Connexion of which he was long a very efficient and honoured minister. If in the volume before us hypercriticism finds some little thing at which it is disposed to carp, men of sound judgment and deep piety, will find much to instruct, arouse, direct, and assist them in the pursuit of that holiness of heart without which no man shall see the Lord; and they will also find in this volume very much to aid them in their desire to promote the best interests of others.

The name of the author is a guarantee for the soundness of the theology, according to Methodistic views, and the fact of the work having passed through the hands of the Rev. W. L. Thornton, assisted, to some extent, by the Rev. W. M. Bunting, will add increasing confidence, if such were needed, that the present is no ordinary volume. The point, the power, the pathos, the thoroughly evangelical and decidedly practical character of the "Sermons," render them a valuable acquisition to that class of works which are suitable to Biblical students, heads of families, Sunday-school teachers, &c., &c.. We cordially recommend the work before us.

2. The Deity: an Argument on the Existence, Attributes, and Personal Distinctions of the Godhead. By William Cooke, D.D. Second Edition of "Theiotes," revised and enlarged. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co., Paternoster Row, and H. Webber, 21, Warwick Lane. 1862.

Dr. COOKE commences his preface to the volume before us as follows:—"The author's aim, in the first and second books of this volume, is to adduce evidence from nature on the existence and perfections of God, and to shew its harmony with the more luminous teachings of Revelation. If there be a God, the universe is His work; and, if His work, it will both attest His being and unfold some of His attributes. If the Bible be Divinely inspired, its declarations and revelations respecting God will harmonize with His works; and therefore, both should be consulted by those who are anxious to know the truth."

Book the First is on the Existence of God; Book the Second is on the Nature and Attributes of God; Book the Third is on the Holy Trinity.

From what we have read of this volume, we can promise a rich intellectual and spiritual feast to such persons as prefer "sound doctrine," to vain philosophy, and solid truth to the gossamer figments of the unsanctified hearts, feeble heads, and misguided judgments of many who aspire to authorship.

We hope to be able to furnish in our future issues, a few extracts from this excellent volume.

We are always happy to find in the writings of our author, in connection with a superior judgment, extensive and varied learning, and comprehensive research, a profound reverence for the Holy Scriptures; and in company with Doctor Cooke, we walk confidently on a path which has been trodden by the best Methodist and Arminian theologians of the present or past ages. The aim of the author of "The Deity" is evidently not to raise quibbles, but to solve difficulties, and enforce truth, and this is done very successfully in the present work, which we trust will have an extensive sale, and we pray that it may be made a great and permanent blessing to the Church and the world.

3. The Christian Ambassador. Conducted under the auspices of the Primitive Methodist Preachers' Association of the Sunderland District. Parts I. and II. New Series.

OUR contemporary from the north is increasingly welcome, as we either see, or think we see, developed in its pages a more ardent desire to promote the best interests of man. WISDOM IS THE PRINCIPAL THING. This is a great truth, and the highest wisdom is the knowledge of God, manifested by the consecration of all our powers to glorify His grace. The time is not remote when men will learn more fully to estimate all things in proportion as they are adapted to elevate the noblest powers of the human family. The style, character, and usefulness of the Ambassador, as a whole, and the superior excellence of some of the articles contained in the parts now on our desk, not only afford us much pleasure but real profit.

The work is also cheap, very cheap, only sixpence, each part of which contains sixty-four octavo pages of letter press. We cordially recommend the work, while we congratulate our esteemed brethren on the improved tone of the despatches brought to us by "The Christian Ambassador."

4. The Shadow of the Almighty. By NEWMAN HALL, LL.B. London: James Nisbet and Co., Berners Street. Price Sixpence.

This very interesting little work by the effective pen of Mr. Hall, abounds with marrow and fatness, and is worthy of being ranked with the very popular works by the same author, viz., "It is I," "Come to Jesus," &c., &c. We shall rejoice in its wide circulation.

5. The Prayer Meeting Hymn Book. Containing 190 suitable hymns for Revival Services and Social Worship. London: Henry James Tresidder, 17, Ave Maria Lane, E.C.

THIS little book contains many valuable hymns well known to many of our readers, and which are frequently sung in our congregations, viz., "All hail the power of Jesus's name," "Before Jehovah's awful throne," &c., and also many with which we are less familiar. We can cordially recommend the work.

6. Aids to the Development of the Divine Life. By the Rev. J. BALDWIN BROWN, B.A., minister of Clayland's Chapel, Clapham. No. 1. The Decree accomplished at Jerusalem. London: Henry James Tresidder, 17, Ave Maria Lane, E.C. 1861. Price 2d.

THIS manual is the first of a series of pamphlets, which the author intends to issue on the first day of every month, and if the future numbers be equal to the present, the object of the author, we trust, will be fully realized, the best interests of many of his readers promoted, and the knowledge of God extended.

7. Infidelity: the Cause and Effects Ascribed: the Bible and Divine Revelation Defended. By CHARLES HOWCHIN, Yarmouth.

WE cannot doubt the sincerity of the author of this pamphlet, but when we say the work is glaringly ungrammatical, illogical, unphilosophical, and in some grave matters anti-scriptural, our readers will not expect from us any commendation of the work, on the contrary we warn our friends against the pernicious doctrine of universalism, &c.

WORK OF GOD.

1. SOUTH MOLTON MISSION.—Dear Brother Harland,—Between three and four years since, this town and its vicinity was missioned by our people, since then many precious souls have been brought to God; some of them are men who were a few years ago noted for wickedness, but they are now distinguished for piety, and often do we hear them say, “We are thankful that ever God directed the Primitive Methodists to this place; before they came we were in darkness, but through their instrumentality we have been brought to God, have obtained pardon, and are on our way to heaven.” When the Rev. W. Hayman entered on this mission, he had to preach in the open air, but now we have a Connexional chapel at South Molton, and were able to report 103 members at our last Quarterly Meeting. To God be all the praise. Of late we have been blessed with many refreshing seasons; Sunday, December 1st, 1861, was a remarkable day; the writer preached twice at Bishop’s Nympton, God vouchsafed His blessing and manifested His power to save, penitents were weeping their way to the cross, and ere the meeting concluded, eight persons professed to have obtained salvation through believing in Christ Jesus. On the following evening I preached at the same place, and we could say, “Lord, it is good for us to be here.” One soul sought for, but did not obtain, pardon until a few days after; he is happy now, and has become a member among us. We are still holding our meetings—several are deeply impressed. We are thankful to say that ten of those who have been recently converted have become members among us at Bishop’s Nympton. Our congregations here are excellent, and we have taken a larger room to preach in, which will accommodate about 150 persons. May the Lord help us, and mercifully save the people.

At Ash Mill we have had a few conversions during the past quarter; we have a very united and interesting society, numbering fourteen members, and we hope the time is not distant when we shall have a Connexional chapel at the place.

At South Molton God has saved a few souls of late. One man (about sixty years of age) was induced to attend a class meeting, he was made happy, and has joined our society. We are praying for, and expecting, greater things. May God bless us abundantly, baptize the whole Connexion, and let the whole earth be filled with His glory. Amen.

2. SWANSEA CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—Your being personally acquainted with our late struggles in this circuit in important chapel buildings and efforts to obtain and support a second preacher, you, and many of your readers, will rejoice in the following instances of progress. A few weeks ago our society at Aberavon made a request for a week’s special services, to be conducted by my colleague, Mr. T. Shields. These services were commenced on Sunday, November 24th, 1861, and two souls were saved on the first day, and others were seeking salvation. During the week the work had so progressed that a request was made for Brother Shields to remain a second week, this was granted, the results of which have fully justified the arrangement, and the names of sixteen individuals were entered on the class-book as candidates for membership. Some sailors from a Cornish port were also made happy in the Lord, and some other persons who have not yet been admitted into Church fellowship. The subjects of this work are chiefly young married people, whose simple hearted testimony to domestic reformation, from inebriate strife to pious order and devotional quietude, bespeaks the character of the work. The writer being appointed for the third Sunday and three following days, was happy in witnessing several individuals, who professed to have obtained salvation by faith in Christ, added to the church. It is also pleasing to add that while the work was breaking forth at Aberavon, the writer and his fellow-labourers were reaping fruit at our new chapel at Swansea, where the society and congregation have been steadily improving since its first opening in March last. The circuit's accounts report more or less increase either in members or money, or both for the last three years and a half (one quarter only excepted). By the aid of £20 from the General Chapel Fund, the debt on the Aberavon Chapel is being lowered £54. At Reynoldstone, where a new society has lately been raised, a plot of land for a new chapel has been promised by C. R. N. Talbot, Esq., M.P., Lord-lieutenant of the county. Having realized such progress, under many discouraging circumstances, we will thank God and take courage.

3. DEAR EDITOR—"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

LANGTHORNE, THIRSK CIRCUIT.
—The Primitive Methodists have a good interest here. The little sanctuary erected in 1846 by the indefatigable efforts of the few members who then composed the society, was too small for the increased congregations; hence it was enlarged in 1849, and within its walls many believing penitents have found peace, and of those who are now in church fellowship it may be said, The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this (and that) man, &c., were born there. For some time a cloud has hung over our Zion at Langthorne. Conversions were few, and the last September quarter-day having appointed a week's protracted meetings, they became the subject of conversation among the members, and all agreed something must be done. Accordingly on Sunday afternoon, December 15th, 1861, Mr. Armitage preached, and in the evening a prayer meeting was held, when a divine influence pervaded the minds of the members, and they prayed in the spirit and with power. One of them, a local preacher, spoke briefly on Christian love. We were reminded of the prayer meeting prior to the day of Pentecost, when the disciples "were all with one accord in one place." On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, Mr. Armitage preached: on Thursday, Brother Stone; on Friday, Brothers Wilkinson and Braithwaite: on each night the attendance was good, the prayer meetings after preaching were well supported, and it was good to wait on the Lord. On Sunday afternoon, December 22nd, Brothers Jackson and Dale took part in the service, and in the evening a public lovefeast was held. It was conducted by Brother Dale. The chapel was crowded, the members spoke pointedly and in quick succession. A solemn awe rested upon the congregation, and many wept, and better still some were moved to penitence, for at the close five souls were converted, others were deeply affected. We pray that this revival may spread throughout the circuit.

4. CHURCH ASTON, WROOKWARDINE WOOD CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We held special services at the above place, Dec. 22nd, 1861, the effects of which we think are worthy of notice. The singing was short, and so were the praying and preaching. In the morning the service commenced at ten o'clock, and in the afternoon at two. The Spirit and glory of God rested on the assembly. In the evening we held a lovefeast, the house was densely filled, and many believers related their experience, after which a prayer meeting was held. When the meeting closed we were gratified to find that sixteen souls professed to have found peace with God. JOSEPH DERRICOTT.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

1. ANDOVER CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—On Sunday, November 24th, 1861, and following days, missionary services were held in this station. On Sunday, sermons were preached at Leckford by Brother T. Jackson, of Basingstoke; at Longstock, by Brother Butcher; at Whorwell, by Brother Smith; at Lower Clatford, by Bro. Blandford; and Kingsombourne, by the writer. Missionary meetings were held during the week, when the claims of the missionary cause were advocated by Messrs. Jackson, Obern, and Hunter. The meetings were characterized by a gracious influence, and several souls obtained salvation through faith in Christ. The amount realized was £8 1s. 10d., which sum is in advance of what was realized at the same places last year.

During the last three weeks we have been holding special services, at which several souls have been converted.

Hurstbourne Tarrant has partaken of the revival influence. On Sunday, December 1st, at a service conducted by Brother Hunter, seven souls professed to be brought into the liberty of the children of God. That the whole Connexion may be copiously baptised with the converting glory, is the prayer of

GEORGE OBERN.

2. SCARBOROUGH CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We have recently held at Scarborough and Filey a course of interesting missionary services.

On Sunday, December 8th, 1861, preparatory sermons were preached by the Revs. T. Lowe, J. Bootland, and J. Gibson.

On Monday evening, Dec. 9th, a missionary meeting was held in Sepulchre Street Chapel; the chair was efficiently occupied by H. Fowler, Esq. Addresses were delivered by the above mentioned ministers, and the circuit preachers. The meeting was one of an earnest and thoroughly Primitive Methodist character. The proceeds amounted to £37 11s. 5d. The box of our old friend, Mrs. S. Harker, contained £10 2s. 11d., to obtain which she has plodded many a mile.

On Tuesday evening, December 10th, a missionary meeting was held in the Jubilee Chapel; the chair was taken by the writer. The congregation was very large, and the interest intense; indeed a more deep-toned and spiritual meeting I have seldom attended. The sum realized was £26 4s. 5d. The total raised at Scarborough was £63 15s. 10d., being £5 7s. 3d. less than the sum raised last year. This, Mr. Editor, will perhaps excite the surprise of some of your readers, who will be ready to exclaim, "How is it that with two chapels you have raised less missionary money than when you had only one?" In reply, allow me to say that, it is not because the friends are doing less, but because they have had to struggle hard, and labour earnestly in behalf of the funds of the new chapel.

At Filey, on Wednesday, December 11th, an excellent tea was gratuitously provided by the friends, in the spacious bath saloon. The friends at this place, have made a good effort for their chapel fund, as well as for the missionary cause. After tea a powerful missionary meeting was held in the chapel, which was crowded. On Thursday afternoon, in the same place, a sermon was delivered by the Rev. T. Lowe; and in the evening another missionary meeting was held. Both the meetings were all that one could desire—lively, earnest, and spiritual; calculated to fan the flame of piety, and to stimulate to Christian activity. The sum raised towards the missionary cause amounted to £44 4s. 9d., being £2 12s. 5d., in advance of the sum raised last year. Thanks to all our noble-minded friends. May God bless and preserve them.

THOMAS GREENBURY.

3. HULL SECOND CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—With the efficient assistance of Brothers T. Ratcliffe and D. Ingham, we have recently held our village course of missionary services for 1861, at Sutton, Wawne, Preston, and Hedon. At Wawne our financial condition transcended that of the previous year; this exceeded our expectation. Last year a number of our friends perambulated the parish at Christmas, singing suitable hymns and soliciting donations. They realized £1 5s. 4d., which they generously devoted to the missionary fund. This year their missionary meeting was held before Christmas, in consequence of which the "singing money," as it is familiarly termed, was not forthcoming. But our hearty friends, instead of complaining that we were going to hold a second missionary meeting in the same calendar year, and threatening to withhold their accustomed contributions, which they might have been tempted to do, very generously advanced £1 as Christmas singing money, believing as they did that their patrons would indemnify them against loss by their generous speculation. We wish a similar spirit of benevolence animated Christmas choristers in general. Were it so there would be a great deal less "singing money" expended than there is in rioting, drunkenness, and revelry. It is a scandalous affair when men profess to celebrate the goodness of God for the unspeakable gift of His Son, in hymns of adoration and thanksgiving, and then devote the proceeds of their musical efforts to the praise and glory of Bacchus. Let those who are guilty of this shameful inconsistency learn a useful lesson from the disinterested benevolence of our Christmas singers at Wawne.

At Sutton we had a very excellent service; but our funds were a little down. This was partly attributable to the serious illness of one of our kind female collectors. In this pecuniary loss we had a proof of the great obligations under which we are placed to our female friends.

At Preston, too, we suffered monetary loss through the absence of one or two able and generous friends.

At Hedon we were upwards of £1 in advance of last year's revenue. For this we are indebted to the Sabbath-school. Encouraged by the superintendent and teachers the children contribute cheerfully to a box which is placed in the school. Last year the school raised 5s. 4d.; this year it has raised £1 6s. 4d. Under proper training the dear children feel it to be a privilege and a luxury to drop their little savings into the Sunday-school missionary box; thus they both acquire and do good at the same time. With one hand they freely receive, with the other they freely give. The total proceeds of the four places amount to £25 8s. 4d. Praying that the blessings of God may rest on the missionaries and on the work of their hands.

WILLIAM GARNER.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. BOSTON CIRCUIT.—FOSDYKE is a small and pleasant village on the Holbeach Road, eight miles south of Boston, and about half a mile from the Great Wash, over which King John crossed, losing his baggage, &c., in going from Lynn to Swineshead. Fosdyke has its name from the great Roman Fosseway, which here crossed the stream and swamps of the Welland.

In 1826, a chapel was erected, but last spring we perceived the walls were giving way, consequently we determined to take it down, though there remained on it a debt of £25. W. Bett, Esq., coming to our help, offered us twenty yards of land adjoining the chapel for one shilling; we thought it a providential opening and began operations forthwith. The chapel was opened September 2nd. 1861. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, the Revs. J. W. Matthews, and J. Cholerton, assisted at the opening services. The chapel is 34 feet by 19, built of press brick: at one end is a neat inscription stone; the chapel is lighted by four windows in the sides, and two circular-headed ones, with a margin of stained glass at the gable end: there is a fan-light over the door. The inside is fitted up with elevated pews containing 72 sittings. The chapel is lighted at night by paraffin lamps. The situation is good. The sittings are all let. The entire cost is about £95. We have raised about £26, and shall not stop in our efforts until we have raised one third as required by rule.

J. T. NEALE.

2. CASTLETON, WHITBY CIRCUIT.

—The dales of Yorkshire have a wide reputation; and if the constant recurrence of picturesque and romantic scenery, stretching out for miles, skirted on the top by the dark line of moorlands, with a pure and salubrious air, can give places a reputation, then these dales richly deserve it. Castleton stands on a lofty eminence on the south of the river Esk, and was the capital of the ancient barony, taking its name from the old baronial residence. Primitive Methodism was introduced into these dales about forty years since. It must be acknowledged, however, that progress has not been proportionate to the time and labour expended, at least, so far as this Circuit is concerned. Yet, we have had a quickening at this place. So low has the cause been at Castleton that several times preaching has been withdrawn. Soon after the coming hither of myself and colleagues, an effort was made to establish ourselves firmly. Receiving a few additions to our ranks we began to lift up our heads; once beginning to move, we went on, God blessing our labours. A chapel was a desideratum. At once we applied to Mr. W. Langbourne, who generously gave us land in a most eligible situation.

We canvassed the neighbourhood, and such was the encouragement we met with that we commenced building in July last. Several things delayed the progress of our work, so that we were not ready for opening till October 27th, 1861. On that day, my colleague, the Rev. J. Barnes, preached morning and evening; and Mr. S. Stott, of Thirsk, in the afternoon. The chapel was filled each time. On the following day, at 2 o'clock, p.m., Mr. T. Clegg, of Whitby, preached to a large audience; and immediately after, about 150 persons sat down in our old preaching room to a sumptuous tea, gratuitously provided by the ladies of Castleton and its vicinity. And it was most pleasing to witness the order and good feeling which prevailed. The public meeting was held in the chapel, which was crowded. Mr. T. Clegg took the chair; and speeches were delivered by Revs. E. Hall, J. Barnes, R. Clementson; and Messrs. S. and J. Stott. The meeting was one of the highest order. The opening services were concluded on Sunday, November 3rd, when two sermons were preached by Mr. G. Tweddle, of Guisborough. Tea proceeds and collections at the opening amounted to £15 10s. 7d. The chapel will seat about 170 persons, and will cost about £160, towards which we have already raised £53, and have set a bazaar on foot for the spring. The four windows and fan light are circular-headed. Instead of a pulpit we have a platform. Our building is a substantial one, and we are happy to say that on the first night of the opening one person was brought to God. The leading of the materials was done gratuitously by the farmers and tradesmen in the neighbourhood.

E. HALL.

3. ASHWELL, BALDOCK.—Dear

Brother Harland,—We are grateful to God, and feel much pleasure in informing you and your numerous readers, that we purchased two freehold cottages and a large garden at Ashwell, on a part of which we have built a new chapel. It was opened October 6th and 13th, 1861, and the services in connection therewith were extended to the 17th, and 24th of November. The following persons officiated, viz., the writer, C. G. Robson, Esq., of London; Revs. E. Masterman, T. Griffith (Baptist), S. Perry (Independent), Mr. T. Tomer, (Baptist), and the Rev. R. F. Hilton. The chapel is 29 feet by 24 feet 2 inches, and 16 feet high from the floor to the ceiling. It is built with bricks and covered with slate. There are two windows in each end. The floor is laid with red deal on oak slippers. The walls are stuccoed to imitate free-stone. There are four piers in front, and four on each side, projecting 4½ inches wide from the wall by 18 inches. It is well ventilated. The total cost will be something more than £200, towards which we have raised by donations, tea meetings, and opening services about £47. This, with the proceeds of a bazaar, which is now in progress, it is presumed will amount to one-third of the entire outlay, as required by rule. The Lord has done great things for us, for which we are glad. The trustees are thankful to all who have helped in this laudable effort. May God bless them.

E. W. MATTHEWS.

4. WYNDHAM-ROW, WHITEHAVEN CIRCUIT. The foundation stone of the above chapel was laid March 11th, 1861, by Mr. William Murray, of Harrington, when we had an interesting tea and public meeting; and on November 3rd, the chapel was opened for Divine worship, and sermons were preached morning and afternoon, by the Rev. J. Taylor; and in the evening, by the Rev. D. Kirkbride, of Maryport. On the following day, a tea meeting was held in the granary of T. Walker, Esq., at which upwards of 180 persons were present; the provisions were gratuitously furnished by our friends and well-wishers. In the evening a public meeting was held in the chapel, presided over by Mr. Joseph Fletcher, of Maryport; and addresses were delivered by Revs. Kirkbride, Dodds, and Taylor; Messrs. Jopling, Hine, Auld, and G. Coatsworth.

The chapel is built of brick and strongly cemented; it is 30 feet by 24 inside, and 15 feet 6 inches from the floor to the ceiling; and is capable of accommodating 172 persons; 78 sittings are in rising pews, and the rest are free. The pulpit is of the platform order. The total cost is about £180, towards which we have raised nearly £90, and hope to realize £10 more in a few weeks. The sittings are nearly all let.

We have connected with the chapel an excellent Sunday School. We hereby thank our numerous helpers, and especially William Buchanan, for his valuable and gratuitous services in drawing the plan, and superintending the erection of the building, which, as stated in a provincial paper, "For neatness, compactness, and economy, may be regarded as a model." May this sanctuary be the birth place of many souls.

ADAM DODDS.

5. CHARLTON, RADSTOCK CIRCUIT.—Charlton is a pleasant little village, about ten miles from Bath. The Primitive Methodists missioned this place in 1833, and their labours were owned of God. About ten years ago, through the good offices of Mr. and Mrs. John Cox, a cottage was rented, and it was converted into a chapel at a considerable expense. The Lord smiled on His servants, but the place was too small to accommodate the increasing congregation and Sabbath-scholars. Arrangements were made to see the Rev. T. R. Jolliffe, who is lord of the manor, to know if he would sell us the chapel and ground attached to the same. After much delay, we succeeded in procuring a lease for ninety-nine years, at the annual rent of £1. The old chapel was immediately taken down, and the foundation stone of the new chapel was laid July 30th, 1861, by the Rev. T. Drew, of Bristol, who delivered an address on the occasion. The tea and public meeting were good, and the proceeds amounted to £10 12s. This sanctuary was opened for divine worship on Sunday, November 17th, 1861; the Rev. T. Barker preached in the morning, the Rev. J. Rought in the afternoon, and the Rev. J. Davis in the evening. The congregations were very large. On the 19th, two sermons were preached by the Rev. T. P. Bellingham of Bath, and a public tea meeting was held, attended by 223 persons. On November 24th, three sermons were preached by the Rev. E. Powell: the entire collections amounted to more than £19, and a few precious souls received the blessing of salvation. This chapel is built of stone, is covered with blue slate, has six large windows, four are circular headed, with circular headed fanlight over the doors of chapel and school-room. The school is under the chapel. The chapel front has a beautiful appearance; it is built of white limestone, hammer dressed random range work, and pointed with black mortar. The windows and door-jambs, plinth, string courses, and quoins are of Bath stone, with red brick relieving arches over the windows and doors, give the whole a very beautiful effect. The chapel is palisaded in the front with a flight of ten steps to the side entrance. It is 32 feet by 25, and from floor to ceiling it is 18 feet; a neat moulding, and a beautiful ventilator in the centre; the walls are finished with rough stucco; the pews and seats are stained and varnished; there is a gallery at one end and a rostrum at the other, the fronts of which are painted oak and varnished. Mr. J. Lambert, of Bristol, the builder, kindly assisted at all the opening services. We owe a debt of gratitude to many friends. The farmers have helped us, in leading stone, lime, and other materials; and the trustees, with others, have worked hard to get up this house of God; the ladies very generously assisted us with our work. May the great Head of the Church reward all our helpers. The cost will be above £300, towards which we have raised £96, and shall, we hope, very soon get considerably more than one-third of the entire expenditure. May this house be the birth-place of many souls, is the prayer of

JOHN WILSON.

6. ROCK, DAWLEY CIRCUIT.—Rock is a village that has been noted for wickedness. The Primitive Methodists have preached here for nearly thirty years, and a few souls have been saved, and a little society has reflected some light on the surrounding darkness. Last spring the tiny church was aroused; a deeper anxiety was felt for the salvation of their neighbours. Prayer was made to Him who has the hearts of all men in His hand. Their Heavenly Father heard the voice of supplication, and poured His Holy Spirit on His children; a revival followed, and the house where the services were held was too small to accommodate the congregation.

In September last we arranged to build a chapel 30 feet by 24. On December 8th, it was opened for the celebration of divine worship. Three sermons were preached on the occasion; that in the morning by the writer, Mr. J. H. Poole preached in the afternoon, and Mr. R. R. Pearse in the evening. The amount collected was £9 4s. 1d.

JOHN PORTER.

7. FAKENHAM.—Dear Editor,—At the Conference of 1824, six travelling preachers were appointed to Fakenham Circuit, affording evidence that this station was prosperous and extensive.

In the following year an old barn was purchased and fitted up as a chapel, and opened for divine worship by the late S. Atterby and W. G. Bellham, which place has since undergone several alterations and improvements, and has been the spiritual birth place of many precious souls.

But "change is our portion here!" "They shall perish," is the brief chronicle regarding everything on this side heaven. The sanctuaries of the Most High are not exempt. The dilapidated state of the old chapel led the trustees and managing committee to resolve to pull it down, and build a new and larger sanctuary on the site.

The foundation stone of a new chapel was laid on Tuesday, Sept. 10th, 1861. The opening services commenced on Friday, November 29th, 1861, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. M. Lupton, of London. On the same day a public tea was provided at half-past five, and about 200 persons sat down to the social cup. On Sunday, December 1st, two sermons were preached by Mr. Lupton, and one by the Rev. W. M. Anstey. On Lord's-day, December 8th, the Rev. T. Thomas preached in the morning and evening, and Mr. W. Gooch in the afternoon.

On Monday, December 9th, a public meeting was held, at which Mr. Lynn presided, and addresses were delivered by T. Thomas, S. B. Gooch, W. M. Anstey, W. Gooch and J. Winkfield.

The congregations, during the opening services, were encouraging, the sermons full of soul-saving truth and power, and the collections were good.

The chapel is 52 feet by 30 feet, and 18 feet from the floor to the wall-plate; it has a gallery on each side, and at one end, and will comfortably seat 500 hearers.

The backs of the pews and rail-back seats recline about two inches, and pew doors are dispensed with.

Instead of a pulpit we have a rostrum, 8 feet by 4 feet 6 inches. The school-room is underneath the front gallery, and opens into the chapel by means of sliding doors.

We have obtained, by means of subscriptions, donations, and collections, about £100.

We have formed a ladies' sewing society, which is doing well; and their bazaar, which is to be opened in a few weeks, will add considerably to the amount. Our benefactors are many, and, of course, too numerous to be named in these lines.

The trustees and managing committee are very thankful to all who have rendered them assistance in this enterprise. O. O. BRITAIN

CHAPEL RE-OPENING.

BELPER CIRCUIT.—Dear Mr. Harland,—We have had our chapel at Over Heage cleaned, coloured, and painted, the total expense of which amounted to £7; and on Sunday, Oct. 13th, 1861, we had our re-opening, when Dr. Barlow, of Derby, served us well. He preached in the afternoon in our own chapel to a very attentive congregation, and we had a good time; in the evening he preached again in the Wesleyan chapel, kindly lent for the occasion, it being much larger than ours, and the chapel was crowded; a good influence was felt.

On Monday, Oct. 14th, we had a tea-meeting, and 180 persons were convened at the social repast which was gratuitously provided. After tea, the Rev. J. Barfoot delivered a lecture on revivals of religion. A blessed influence was felt. The proceeds of the tea and sermons amounted to £9, for which we are unfeignedly thankful; and we pray that Heaven's choicest blessings may rest on all our kind friends in this life, and in the world to come may they be blessed with life everlasting.

TEA MEETING.

LACEBY, GRIMSBY CIRCUIT.—We held a tea-meeting at Laceby, on the 25th November, 1861, which was well attended. Our friends at this place have resolved to lower or remove their chapel debt, as a step towards securing a better and larger chapel. Many persons willingly responded to the call for help. The proceeds of the tea, etc., amounted to about £8, and the friends hope to lower the chapel debt £15.

SPECIAL EFFORT.

DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—You will rejoice to hear we have made a successful effort for the trust of

CLOWES' CHAPEL, HULL. This very spacious and beautiful sanctuary, affording 1,400 sittings, was erected in 1851, at a cost of £4,296. The debt left on the chapel when it was finished, was £3,350. This heavy debt involved the payment of a large amount of interest, which kept the funds of the estate low. Besides during the first eight years the debt increased considerably.

In December 31st, 1859, it amounted to £3,610, early in 1860, it was reduced to £3,530. A further small reduction was effected before the expiration of the year. The financial progress of the estate was repeatedly checked by unforeseen and unanticipated circumstances.

For several years, Mason street chapel with a debt of £750 was connected with Clowes Chapel, and was a constant burden, as it could neither be let nor sold. About five years ago, a person quite unexpectedly claimed heavy damages on the trustees, on the ground, as he stated, that the erection of the chapel had depreciated the value of his adjoining property. The settlement of this question cost the trustees about £250. About two and a-half years ago, an excellent organ was placed in the chapel at a cost of £300, the whole of which was raised by voluntary contributions and collections. A further outlay of £60 was required to repair damages effected by the dry rot, through a deficiency of ventilation. Had the trust estate not been liberally assisted by Alderman W. Hodge, and H. Hodge, Esq., and a few other liberal gentlemen, the liabilities would have pressed inconveniently on the responsible parties. But when wealth and generosity combine to sustain a financial burden, the mountain at once becomes a plain.

For several years past the want of a new chapel on Holderness road, Hull, has been very sensibly felt. The rented one which we now occupy, is not permanently suitable for our purposes, although it answers pretty well as a rallying point for that locality. As the erection of a new chapel on Holderness road, would doubtless draw a considerable number of hearers from Clowes Chapel, it was wisely suggested that before we attempted to build on the east side of the North Bridge, we should make an effort to liquidate the debt on Clowes chapel. With a view to accomplish this benevolent object, a bazaar was projected. The subject was taken up warmly. In June we issued circulars and invited co-operation. To encourage parties to furnish stalls, our untiring friends, Messrs. W. and H. Hodge, generously offered to assist them in commencing operations. Many friends gratefully availed themselves of the liberal offer, while others with equal readiness began to work on their own resources. In five months a vast assortment of useful and ornamental articles was provided. The public rooms were engaged for three days, and in due time tastefully decorated with evergreens and floral devices. Next the stalls were set out in elegant order, and well laden with the valuable produce of combined skill, industry and liberality. In the side room there was a spacious refreshment stall sumptuously furnished, and presided over by Mesdames S. Beecroft, Whittaker, Gray and Dixon. In one of the side rooms there were a butcher's stall and a fruit and oyster stall, which are not usually witnessed at bazaars. They jointly realized nearly £20. There was one stall in the interior of the hall, of a somewhat novel character, which excited much admiration. It was furnished with beautiful figures in plaster, and iron castings, glittering in bronze and gold, engravings, paintings, &c., of exquisite workmanship. This stall was prepared by Messrs. Render and McCollin. Another stall deserves our special notice, this was furnished with toys, confectionery, juvenile garments, &c., and managed by a few of the Jarratt street Sunday scholars. And our young friends were evidently delighted with their benevolent employment. Indeed all the parties who have taken a prominent part in getting up the bazaar, are entitled to our gratitude and admiration. They have toiled hard and skilfully, and successfully for a noble object, the reduction of debt on the voluntary principle, of one of the noblest houses of God in the land. Although trade in Hull is flat, and the month of November is not the best in the year for a bazaar, we have nevertheless realized, after all expenses are paid, about two hundred and sixty pounds. A large surplus of goods is left on hand, which we purpose to offer for sale in the ensuing spring, provided it be not disposed of before that period.

During the last two years there has been an unusual demand for sittings, and the congregations have, on an average, been good. The trustees have therefore been enabled to reduce the debt £200 apart from the present effort, and if no untoward event check our prosperity, the ordinary revenue of the chapel will gradually lighten the pecuniary incumbrance without special exertions. For this state of things we praise Almighty God, and thank our numerous friends. WILLIAM GARNER.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARIES.

1. WORKSOP, RETFORD CIRCUIT.

—Dear Editor,—We have great pleasure in being able to inform you and the friends of our beloved Zion, that on Sunday, Nov. 17th, 1861, three sermons were preached in behalf of our chapel in this town, by the Rev. W. Sanderson, who preached morning and evening; and the Rev. T. Shaw, Wesleyan, in the afternoon. We engaged the Corn Exchange for the services, and notwithstanding the severity of the weather the congregations were good in the morning and afternoon, but it was crowded in the evening with respectable and attentive hearers. On Monday, Nov. 18th, a tea meeting was held in the Wesleyan school-room, and a public meeting after, which was of an evangelical character. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Hoyle, an Independent, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. H. Knowles, R. Glazebrook, Free Methodist, T. Shaw and W. Sanderson. The total money raised on the occasion was about eight pounds. May better days soon dawn on our country and the world; and may mankind be induced to live and labour for each other's spiritual and eternal welfare.

HENRY KNOWLES.

2. NORTHAMPTON CIRCUIT.—The anniversary services of Northampton chapel were celebrated November 10th and 11th, 1861. On Sunday, Nov. 10th, three sermons were preached in the Baptist Chapel, Princes-street, kindly lent for the occasion. The writer of this article ministered in the morning, the Rev. G. Taylor, Wesleyan, in the afternoon; and the Rev. J. Nicholls, minister of Princes-street Chapel, in the evening. The services were well attended, and the collections for the day nearly double those of the previous year. On Monday a tea meeting was held in our own chapel, after which an interesting meeting, a kind of miniature Evangelical Alliance, was held. The chairman, Mr. W. Lowe, Baptist, gave an interesting speech; after which the Revs. J. Brown, and J. Nicholls, Baptists; G. T. Taylor, Wesleyan; and Messrs. Rutherford, Lee, and W. Gent, addressed the meeting. The proceeds of the anniversary were as follows: public collections, £7 4s. 6d.; profits of tea meeting and donations, £1 15s. 6d.; total £12. At a meeting of members and friends held since the anniversary, we have received promises for the next anniversary to the amount of nearly £13, so that by combined effort, we hope our chapel difficulties will be surmounted, and our trust property soon placed in easy circumstances. Thanks to our friends who have helped us in our time of need.

P. COATES.

3. TITNEY, GRIMSBY CIRCUIT.—On the 16th and 17th of November, 1861, we celebrated our chapel anniversary at the above place. Our friends provided a sumptuous tea; the day was stormy, and the company not large; yet we did well. At the public meeting, after tea, the writer was assisted by Brother H. Clarke.

The proceeds of this anniversary, including money raised by the "golden system," amount to £16 10s. We purpose paying £30 off the chapel debt. Since the anniversary we have had several souls converted.

C. KENDALL.

4. ST. GEORGE'S, WROCKWARDINE WOOD CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We celebrated the 1st anniversary of our Jubilee Chapel, St. George's, on Sunday, Dec. 8th, 1861, when sermons were preached by the Rev. C. Temperton, of Shrewsbury, morning and evening, and the Rev. Joseph Fergusson, one of our circuit ministers, preached in the afternoon. Through the inclemency of the weather, and stagnation of trade, our hopes were blighted, in a measure. On the Monday evening the Rev. Robert Bowen preached, and the whole of the collections amounted to £6 11s. which we think is good, considering the state of the country. I am also glad to tell you, sir, that about a dozen friends, with a part of the trustees, agreed to give or raise, by the next anniversary, a pound each.

JOSIAH BOOTH.

FOREIGN RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

1. FORTITUDE VALLEY, BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA.—Dear Brother Harland,—I have much pleasure in transmitting to you information concerning the opening of the first Primitive Methodist chapel in Queensland.

The chapel is situated in Fortitude Valley, a populous suburb of Brisbane. The ground on which the chapel stands, was kindly given by brother James Graham, who purposed in his heart, years ago, that if ever a Primitive Methodist minister should come to this part of the country, this spot should be given to the church of his early choice; he has lived to see his wish carried out, and I trust he will never have cause to regret the kindness he has manifested.

The chapel is built of champered boards, fitting very ingeniously one over another; the roof is covered with ironbark shingles, and the building throughout is substantial and well finished. It is 35 feet long, 20 feet wide inside, and 12 feet high to the wall plate. It is lighted by two windows on each side, one in the back gable, and a fan light over the front door. It is capable of accommodating about 130 people comfortably. The seats have backs attached to them. Instead of a pulpit we have a platform 5 feet wide, 8 feet long, and 18 inches high, with beautiful cedar palisading, and pulpit board in front. The contract for the chapel, including a few little sundries is £150, but if we reckon the worth of the ground, title deeds, door steps, elegant pulpit cushion, handsome Bible, beautiful chandeliers, all of which were given, it will be seen the property is worth fully £200. The title deed is connexional, and is the gift of Mr. Lilley, M.P. for Fortitude Valley. And now for the raising of the £150. I am happy to say every shilling was begged before we entered the chapel to hold the first service. The following brethren have begged, including their own donations, the sums attached to their names, — Brother James Graham £20; Brother Betts £10; Brother Harding £10; Brother Payne £10; Brother Dart £8; Brother Hodges £5; and while my brethren have laboured well in this good cause, I have not been inactive, my list amounts to £87, which with the £63 raised by the trustees, just settles the matter at once.

The first opening service was a prayer meeting on Sunday morning, October 13th, 1861, at 6 o'clock, led by Brother Payne. The Rev. B. G. Wilson (Baptist), preached at 11; the Rev. J. H. Fletcher (Wesleyan) preached in the afternoon; and I had the pleasure of preaching in it in the evening. The congregations were too large for the chapel, and the collections were £11 16s. 2d. We had a very blessed prayer meeting after the evening sermon. Altogether the Sabbath was a high day for our cause in Queensland.

On Tuesday evening, the 15th, we held a tea meeting, on which occasion, the chapel was crowded. The people course after course, were taking tea from 6 o'clock till 8; there was a great deal of crowding and squeezing, but nobody grumbled; they did not come to grumble, but to enjoy themselves, and help on the cause of God; of course all the provisions were given and the sum raised by the sale of tickets amounted to £15. After the tables were cleared, a platform was erected near the door, so that those outside as well as inside might hear the speakers. We had the Wesleyan ministers, Presbyterian minister, Brother Payne and Brother Jarratt: the collection at this service amounted to £7 2s. bringing up the entire amount raised at the opening services to £33 18s. 2d. We intend paying the rent (£30) of our city chapel with the surplus, and, if possible, present a respectable donation to the quarterly meeting. In my list of subscribers are the following, which I think should be recorded; Messrs. Cribb and Foote £10; His Honour, Mr. Justice Lutwyche £5; Dr. Fullerton £5; J. B. Stevens, Esq. £5; J. Lancaster, Esq. (a member of my class) £5, each member of the Colonial Government, and nearly all the heads of departments have contributed; indeed from beginning to end it has been a nice success. While we are thankful to all the people who have helped us, we are especially grateful to the Giver of all good, who always maketh us to triumph. To His adorable name be endless praise. Amen.

WILLIAM COLLEY.

O B I T U A R Y.

1. EMERSON HUMBLE was born at Lanehead, Westgate Circuit, in 1793. He had not the advantage of a religious training. At the age of twenty-three he entered into the marriage state with Elizabeth Kidd, the daughter of a pious Wesleyan. About that time the Primitive Methodists visited the neighbourhood of his residence. That man of God, Thomas Batty, was one of the pioneers in this blessed work, and among the many who flocked to hear him was Emerson, to whom the word went with power: he saw himself a sinner, and that without an interest in the blood of Christ he should be lost for ever. He began to pray, and the Lord set his soul at liberty. For thirty-seven years he was an upright member of society at Lanehead, a firm believer in all the doctrines of the Gospel taught by our ministers, and a diligent attendant at the means of grace. Soon after his conversion, his mother's house became a home for the preachers, and they preached there until 1834, when a small chapel was built, of which he became a trustee and a Sunday-school teacher. He was very attentive to the school and was greatly beloved by the children.

As a husband and father he was affectionate and tender, ruling his own house well. He lived near to God, and prayed earnestly for the conversion of his children. His prayers were not in vain.

In 1853 a revival broke out, and five out of six of his children were converted, the other was from home at the time. One daughter has since died in the faith, and has gone home to heaven.

Through the course of the winters of 1860 and 1861 it was evident that his tenement of clay was sinking toward the grave. Yet while the outward man failed, he was strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man. Being his leader I often heard him speak of the goodness of the Lord. He was clear in his experience, often expressing himself in these words, "When the earthly house of my tabernacle is dissolved, I have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." The disease that terminated in his death was short but severe. He took to his bed on Thursday, April 25th, 1861; the nature of the complaint rendered breathing difficult, so that he could not talk a great deal; medical aid was resorted to, but in vain, death had marked him for his prey. The good man bore his affliction with patience and resignation, and when asked if he was happy, he replied, "Yes." He lingered until Tuesday morning, April 30th, when his spirit left his mortal remains in the embrace of death, and took its flight to be with those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. He was much respected by the society, and in him they have lost a friend; but we believe that our loss is his eternal gain. W. E.

2. ELLEN SMITH, the subject of this obituary, was born at Edge Green, in or about the year 1796. Her parents trained her up to habits of industry, economy, and strict morality. She was watched over with true maternal tenderness by an excellent mother, to whom she was greatly indebted. Suffering, destitution, and sorrow always had a voice that spoke to her inmost soul, awaking her sympathies and rousing her energies to try to do good. Many of her old neighbours can testify how ready and willing she was in every case of emergency to sacrifice her own ease and comfort for the good of others.

Nothing particular appears to have transpired during her early religious career. She grew up, alas! indifferent to her eternal interests, and contented herself with the outward forms of religion, suffering herself to be carried away with the tide of popular opinion, which was then greatly in favour of the Established Church, at which Sabbath after Sabbath she was found; but apparently with little benefit as to the enlightenment of her mind, and the renewal and sanctification of her nature; to these things she was an entire stranger. In this state she remained for a number of years, but God, who is rich in mercy, had not forgotten her, and when His messages of love seemed to have no effect, she was visited by some very painful providences.

During that time she entered into the marriage state, and became the mother of several children, some of whom she committed to an early grave. Her husband, to whom she was devotedly attached, being a miner, went to his work as usual, in the enjoyment of perfect health; but, alas for the frailty of human life, before noon she received him mangled and bleeding, with scarcely a ray of hope as to his ultimate recovery. He lingered in the greatest agony for a short time, and then expired, leaving her with the care of several helpless children. This was a severe blow to her sensitive nature, and almost overwhelmed her with sorrow.

Some time after this, God was again pleased to visit her personally with a very painful affliction, which it is believed sapped the foundation of her constitution. She was brought to the gates of death; the realities of the eternal world burst upon her vision, and there can be no doubt this affliction roused her from her lethargy, and induced her through the Holy Spirit earnestly to seek the pearl of great price.

About that time the providence of God brought her under the ministry of the Rev. George Spencer, Independent minister of Ashton, and by his heart-searching ministry she became fully awakened to a sense of her condition as a sinner, and, led by the Spirit of God, she fled for refuge to lay hold on Christ as her only Saviour, obtaining that peace of mind that passeth understanding.

Having given her heart to the Lord, she gave herself to His people, and remained for some time in connection with the Independents. Subsequently the Primitive Methodists commenced a mission in the immediate neighbourhood, and with their usual zeal and diligence, called at almost every house in the village, inviting the people to come and hear words whereby they might be saved. Our departed sister went with her son-in-law, and several branches of the family. To her son-in-law the word preached went with power. His rocky heart was broken, he sought and found mercy, and was made happy in the Saviour's love. This rejoiced her exceedingly. She at once cast in her lot with the Primitives, saying with a glad heart, "This people shall be my people, and their God shall be my God." It pleased God soon after in the inscrutable order of his Providence, to take her son-in-law away with a stroke, (he was killed in a coal pit). She murmured not, but meekly bowed her head, saying if not in words, by her conduct, "Even so, Lord, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." One reason, no doubt, that caused her patiently to submit to the stroke, was the impression that sudden death to him would be sudden glory, that the irreparable loss his family sustained would be his eternal gain. Over the bereaved ones she watched with maternal tenderness and care even to her latest hour, and her death no doubt has left a vacancy in their hearts and affections that will not easily be filled up.

During her last illness, the class-leaders and friends visited her, and found her in a very peaceful, calm, and happy frame, being perfectly resigned to the Divine will.

The leader called one day when she was fast verging to the gates of death, and on inquiring how she was getting on, "O," she said, "never so comfortably in my life." Sometimes her mind was thrown backward on her past history, when she would say with such a look of patience and submission, "My life has been a chequered scene, but all has been in mercy. I have not had one trial too many, and if the Lord is about to call me away from this mortal struggle, He could not take me at a better time," evidently referring to her children. As she neared the Jordan of death, she conversed freely on the subject, making every necessary preparation as though for a journey, with as much calmness and composure as though it was an ordinary business.

A few days before her death, she had a remarkable dream, that greatly encouraged her. She dreamed that a very splendid personage clothed with armour from head to foot, was accompanying her on her journey from the city of Destruction to Mount Zion. While in her company, he requested her to sing, but she replied, "I have no voice and cannot." "O," he replied, "you shall have a better voice by-and-by," and then broke out himself in the most delightful strains, and she awoke. "O," she said, "the rapture I felt!" In that happy frame she continued until the morning of Friday, 3rd June, 1861, when without a struggle or a groan, she peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, aged sixty-five years, being the thirty-seventh year of her widowhood.

JAMES OPENSHAW.

3. WILLIAM HILL died at Eastleach Turville, Highworth Circuit, June 17th, 1861. William was born of honest and industrious parents at Shrivenham, Berks, April 1st, 1788. His father was blind for thirty years. About 1810, William removed to Eastleach. He was strictly moral, a regular Church-goer and psalm-singer for several years. But, alas! he lived a total stranger to the new birth till about thirty years ago, when he heard the Primitive Methodists; and under their preaching he was brought to feel his need of a Saviour; and by repentance and faith he obtained the blessing of salvation. He united with the infant and much persecuted society, and retained his membership therein till death. His attendance at the means of grace was regular, until he was prevented by bodily infirmities, being for seven years deprived of sight. He was also in a paralysed condition for nine days, which considerably shook his frail and earthly tabernacle. But he bore his affliction patiently and cheerfully, as seeing Him who is invisible, and often rejoiced in the prospect of the bright and better land. He was blest with a judicious and loving wife, who paid strict attention to his welfare amidst the storms of forty years in the wilderness. His end was peace.

E. HANCOCK.

4. ANN BROCKLEHURST, of Doveholes, Bradwell Circuit, was born at Wormhill, Derbyshire, September 25th, 1835. From her earliest years she appears to have been thoughtful and affectionate, but lived without Christ until about four years ago, when, through attending a Wesleyan religious service, she was made sensible of her lost condition, after which she speedily

"Heard the glad sound,
And liberty found
Through the blood of the Lamb."

From that time she steadily pursued her way to heaven, and those who knew her best declare her to have been a

"Meek, simple follower of the Lamb."

Being of few words she made but little noise by her profession, content to be

"Little and unknown, Loved and prized by God alone."

When speaking of her religious enjoyments her testimony was unwavering. Only a few days were spent by her in the furnace of affliction, during which time being visited by her leader and others, she appeared quite calm and collected, her will was lost in God's will, hence, when asked if she wished to recover, her answer was, "Just as it pleases God." On being told by her mother that she was likely to die, she replied, "Then the Lord will take me, I put my trust in Him, and you, mother, must do the same. Her prospect being bright, and her anchor cast within the veil she went to enjoy the bliss of the heavenly state, June 6th, 1861. May her death be made a blessing to her parents, and contribute towards stirring up the society of which she was a member. May they all have a joyful meeting with her in heaven. Amen.

5. GEORGE, son of Robert and Susanna FERRIS, of Bradwell, Derbyshire, was born at Bradwell, July 18th, 1824. Although the subject of many good impressions, he remained a stranger to renewing grace till about his twentieth year, when he and others had been engaged in a Sabbath ramble (too common formerly, and even now, among people who are not decidedly pious).

"And Satan finds some mischief still,
For idle hands to do."

So for wicked sport they had been throwing down walls, removing gates, &c. On their way home, they met a man whose property they had injured, "As I looked at him," said George, "he might easily have seen something was wrong; I felt guilty and ashamed of my conduct." From that time he left off Sabbath rambling, and soon after he was more deeply convinced of sin, and under the ministry of the late Mr. Bottomley he found pardon and peace through Jesus' blood, joined our church, and remained a staunch friend to the last. In his religious experience his language was very explicit, he would say, "I always get on best and do well when I am living near to God."

In the Sabbath-school he took great interest, gaining thereby the good will and affection of all connected therewith. He had much sympathy with the temperance movement, and was a steady and prudent supporter thereof to the last, and wished that his children might avoid the misery of drunkenness; he reasoned with them on its evils till their tears flowed apace. His last affliction laid him aside for months, during which he was frequently visited by sympathizing friends; various medical efforts were put forth, but in vain. Perhaps the thoughts of an affectionate wife, and five young children, made him slow to recognize the approach of death, not that he feared it; no, he could say,

"O Grave, where is thy victory?
O Death, where is thy sting!

And yet he had very low views of himself, "boasting was excluded," hence when a friend said, "I think George if any one in this place is ready for death, it is you," he blushed and said, "Well, I don't know." "There has been no singing," said a friend, as the last prayer-meeting was held in his house. "I shall be singing next Sunday," he replied. The visits and kindness shown by our friends deeply affected him, and led him to ask again and again, "What am I to have such kindness shown to me?" Then, as tears rolled down his face, he would exclaim, "They are my companions." When on the morning of his death his wife said, "I can give thee tip." He said, "Bless God for that, I think thou art right, Hannah, and thou must stick to it, then by and by we'll rally round the throne." To another friend he said, "I am just going to put my feet in Jordan, and shall land safe on the other side." After this he was much troubled with doubts and fears, but gained a complete victory. Seeing his children from the window, he said, "Yonder are my poor bairns on the hill-lock, but they are the Lord's now." Every effort being difficult, he said but little more. His happy soul had plumed her wings ready for her upward flight, and we doubt not but that this "heir of glory" had an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, June 18th, 1861. He might have had faults, he never reckoned himself free from them; but having been intimate with him for two years, and never having heard a whisper against his Christian character, I speak as I have found. From the pious example and blessed testimony he has left, may many be saved of the Lord, and finally meet him and his pious widow and children in heaven. Amen.

T. Doody.

6. ELIZABETH BEBBINGTON, of Whitchurch, the subject of the following account, died June 1st, 1861. In early life, she attended our ministry at Lower Wych. When nearly seventeen years of age, she was convinced of sin, and saw the necessity of a change of heart. After a few weeks of deep sorrow, she obtained a consciousness of reconciliation with God through faith in the Redeemer. She hesitated not to unite herself with the Lord's people, became devout, and in an eminent degree spiritual, giving evidence of her growth in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Hence in her practice she exhibited the consistency, loveliness, and purity of the Christian character. In her dress she was a model of plainness, cleanness, neatness, and modesty. Her conversation was becoming and Christian. The means of grace were duly and highly appreciated by her, and consequently her place in the house of God, was generally occupied, and her class-meeting cheerfully and regularly attended. In fine, all the various relations of life, she was called to sustain, whether as daughter, sister, servant, wife, or mother, and also as a member of the church of Christ, she showed the genuineness of her religion. Her last affliction was protracted and severe, but in the midst of bodily sufferings she experienced the supporting power and sweets of Christianity. As the time of her departure drew nigh, she found it hard work to have severed the ties which bound her to her two children. But at length she was enabled to yield cheerfully, and committed them with her numerous relatives to the Lord, believing he would take care of them. From that time her prospects of heaven incessantly brightened. On the morning she left this world she was asked if she felt Christ precious; she replied, "Yes, yes; He is precious." When she felt a fit of coughing coming on, apparently thinking it would be the last struggle, she exclaimed,

"Farewell, dear friends, adieu, adieu,
I can no longer stay with you,
The glittering crown appears in view,
All is well, all is well."

A friend in attendance said,

"Ready wing'd for the flight, to the mansions of light.

The horses are come, the chariot of Israel
To carry me home."

"Yes," she replied "my feet are in the waters, I shall soon be across this Jordan," and in a minute after she "entered into the joy of her Lord," in the thirty-ninth year of her age, having been a cheerful, consistent Christian and Primitive Methodist twenty-two years.

MATTHEW BENNETT.

7. DIED June 9th, 1861, at Bourton-on-the Hill, Faringdon Circuit, CHARLES MOXHAM, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. Although he had not the advantages of early mental culture and pious parental restraint, nor had he ever attended a Sabbath school, yet his character was not stained by those gross moral delinquencies which, unhappily, mark the career of many. He had the semblance of religion, but was minus the power; of this he was convinced when about thirty-seven years of age, by a remarkably solemn dream, which induced self-examination, a rigid scrutiny of his principles, motives, and conduct. As he looked at these in the light of divine truth, he discovered his spiritual deficiencies and danger, and sighed, wept, and prayed for deliverance, until, while listening to a sermon preached by Mr. May, he was enabled to take shelter in the "cleft-rock," Jesus, the refuge of penitent sinners. He then united himself to the Primitive Methodist Society, and continued a consistent member and liberal supporter till his departure to the land of promise. Among the pleasing traits which adorned our brother, we may notice his Stability. However uneven and fitful others might be, he remained faithful to his profession, to God and His cause. He held his principles too sacred and dear to sacrifice them on the altar of expediency, or selfish policy. Through evil report as well as good he pursued an undeviating course. Benevolence was another distinguished feature. During a number of years, God's servants, jaded and care-worn, bent their steps to his hospitable abode. Their reception was not stiff and formal, but kind and hearty. They were made to feel how welcome they were. The spontaneous flowings of his generosity ran in channels, some of which may never be published in this world. And yet his means were not so ample as some persons might suppose; it was his frugality and economy that enabled him thus to act. But the most prominent trait in his character was Humility. He exhibited no air of self-importance. He would cheerfully "take the lowest seat." His abnegation of self, his manifest desire and efforts to make others comfortable and happy, rendered him conspicuous in spite of himself. If true humility is a mark of greatness then Charles Moxham was great—great in his lowliness of mind and spirit. On one occasion when the writer visited him he said, and the tears ran down his cheeks, "I am a poor worm, but Jesus died for me." The affliction which terminated his mortal existence was long, but not very painful; it gradually wasted his by no means robust frame until it sank into the arms of death. His last hours were spent in calm repose. If there were no exultant shouts, there was peace, joy, and confidence. His prospects of heaven were unclouded. To some who stood around he said,

"We sing of the realms of the blest,
That country so bright and so fair,
And oft are its glories confessed,
But what must it be to be there!

An esteemed Baptist minister living in the neighbourhood, frequently visited him, and was cheered by his rich Christian experience, and sweet submission to God's will. Just previous to his exit, his daughter, seventeen years of age, stood by his bedside with an aching heart, and well it might ache, for she was soon to become an orphan, her mother having died years since, she said, "Father how are you now?" He extended his thin trembling hand, and grasping hers, said with a look of tenderness and affection, "'Tis better on before." For her he had often prayed, and for the other branches of his family, but now his lips are sealed in the silence of death, his prayer is turned into praise. It must have encouraged him to know that two of his sons are converted and members of that society of which he was a bright ornament. JOHN WRIGHT.

8. At Bampton, Bridlington Circuit, May 24th, 1861, died, aged eighteen years, JOHN BARNETT. John was brought to a knowledge of the converting grace of God under the preaching of the Primitive Methodist ministers, when he was about fifteen years of age, and he joined the society, continued a steady, consistent, useful member—had begun to exhort, and was likely to become a useful local preacher.

But how mysterious are the ways of Divine Providence! When he was working at a steam sawing machine, he met with a dreadful accident.

While he was lying on his bed, full of pain, he requested his father, his brothers, and sisters, to come and bid him farewell, he told them that he was going to glory, "Do not weep for me," said the dying young man, "I am going home to heaven, do pray much, get converted, so that I may meet you all in heaven."

He told those who visited him, that he was going where sickness and sorrow could not come, adding "I believe, and am sure I am going to heaven." At another time, he said, "I shall soon see my mother (she had died in peace a few months before) my mother will be ready to hail me welcome, I have fought the good fight, and I shall soon finish my course with joy."

He greatly rejoiced that he had got religion in health, and while young, for it supported him under his great affliction; though his agonies were so severe, that it took three men to hold him, yet he was enabled to bear testimony to the truth of those blessed promises which every believer in Christ can claim as his own. When he became speechless, his friends told him if he was happy, to hold up his hand; he waved his hand, and in about five minutes afterwards expired.

His character was excellent for steadiness, industry, and constant attention to the means of grace. His death was deeply felt by his aged father, relatives, and the members of our society at Bampton. A funeral sermon was preached to a crowded and weeping congregation by Mr. Bennett, our superintendent preacher, and two souls at that service found mercy.

HANNAH BENNETT.

9. ELIZABETH, the eldest daughter of James and Elizabeth WILES, was born at Shaftesbury, Dorsetshire, May 11th, 1827, and died May 30th, 1861, aged thirty-five years. In early life she was the subject of divine impressions; her mother occasionally took her to the Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, and when there she frequently thought she should like to be converted, but having no one to take her by the hand, as her parents were not at that time converted, Elizabeth remained a stranger to the pardoning mercy of God until 1845, when she was taken by a friend to the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Enmore Green, Motcombe Circuit; and there in the midst of a powerful revival of religion, and while listening to the glorious gospel she became powerfully convinced of her state, and in a short time she was enabled to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and could with joy exclaim,

"My God is reconciled," &c.

She immediately joined the society at Enmore Green, and remained a member until 1849, when the family removed to Cann, and Melbury being the nearest place she united with the society and remained a consistent member until the day of her death. She was for many years the subject of much affliction, suffering from a complication of diseases which baffled medical skill, yet in patience she possessed her soul. She was frequently deprived of the public means of grace, yet when able her place in the house of God was always occupied. She took great delight in the public services of the sanctuary, and in the society of God's people. For the last five years she was unable to attend her class-meeting, but though deprived of the means of grace, she regularly supported the cause of Christ, and paid her class money up to the last quarter. She was remarkable for her patience and resignation. She was visited by many friends, who found her calmly resting on the atonement of Christ. At times she was much tempted by the enemy of souls, at other times her joys were great. On one occasion her joys were so great, she said to her sister, "I wish I had strength how I would sing! It's glory, glory, all the way to glory." Her soul was filled with joy, and she exclaimed, "O, bless the Lord, I will not doubt again."

In this state of mind she exchanged the afflictions of the present life for the country where the inhabitants are no more sick. She has left behind her sorrowing parents and one sister to mourn their loss. The life of our departed friend terminated happily. May her parents and sister meet her in heaven.

T. POWELL.

10. Died at Sporle, Swaffham Circuit, in the eighty-third year of his age, ROBERT CHEASON, after about thirty years' membership in the Primitive Methodist Society in his native place. In 1831 our missionaries visited Sporle, and under the ministry of the Rev. J. Oscroft, our brother was brought to God. In those days, when labourers were few, only a short time elapsed between the time of his conversion and his being employed in the vineyard; and in about three months from his conversion his name appeared on the circuit's plan. The duties of his office he discharged punctually, allowing neither weather nor distance to deter him. In the early days of his converted life, his house was thrown open for the heralds of the cross on their visits to Sporle.

For several years he was unfit for active service in the Church, and for the past year and a half was unable to follow his employment in consequence of affliction. Indeed he never left his room since November, 1860, suffering at times mental as well as physical prostration.

On the 18th of June, the weary wheels of life stood still, and his spirit disburdened of its load, was called to join the number "Which no man can number," of holy happy spirits, patriarchs, and prophets, men who waited long, and bore their witness for God." His end was peace. G. B.

11. SARAH ANN YOUNGS was born 1838, and died in the Lord, June 24th, 1861. From her childhood she was moral and very thoughtful, her general deportment securing the respect of those who knew her. In 1858, she removed from her native place to Great Dunham, in the Swaffham Circuit. Here she attended our services, and was brought to enjoy the pardon of her sins.

On returning to her native village, she identified herself with our society at Helhoughton, in the above station, and continued to adorn the religion she professed, by consistency of Christian conduct, till her death. In her last days she proved the power of religion to remove the sting of death, and

"Make a dying bed
As soft as downy pillows are."

Her faith was firm, and when chided for having left the true church in which she had been baptized and confirmed, she answered that she "belonged to Christ's Church," and Christ was all and in all to her. Thus resting alone on Christ for salvation and heaven, Sarah Ann left this world of affliction for the Eden above, where

"No sickness can reach them,
For the saints are all healthy."

GEORGE BELL.

12. Died at Wood Dalling, in the Aylsham Circuit, June 2nd, 1861, ESTHER ELMER, in the ninetieth year of her age. She was among the first-fruits of Primitive Methodist labours in Wood Dalling. She identified herself with the society, of which she was a consistent member till her death. Her house was always open for the reception of the Primitive Methodist travelling and local preachers. Her former husband, Mr. Reynolds, gave the land on which our chapel at Wood Dalling is built, where many precious souls have been brought to God. Her class-leader, Brother J. Neale, states that, "On my visiting her, in her last illness, her confidence seemed firm in the great atonement. Her end was peace." G. DAWSON.

13. Died May 4th, 1861, aged fifty-five years, Mrs. ANN HARPER, wife of Mr. E. Harper, Swanland, Hull First Circuit. She was the daughter of Mr. Thomas Carlill, and was born at Hull. Soon after her birth, however, the family removed to Swanland, where she ever afterwards lived, and at which place she died. When her parents finished their earthly course, she took charge of the surviving children, and brought them up with the care and kindness of a mother.

When about twenty-six years of age, she was convinced of sin under a sermon preached by an Independent minister, but found liberty from her burden of guilt at a fellowship-meeting among the Primitive Methodists. She immediately united with the society, and soon afterwards made a home for one of the travelling preachers, which she continued to do till she removed from earth to heaven. Not long after her conversion she entered into the marriage state, but in less than a year she was left a widow. In her seven years' widowhood she trusted in the Lord, and found Him to be her husband, and the Holy One of Israel to be her Friend. At the expiration of this period, she entered into the marriage relation with her surviving husband.

Mrs. Harper was well known and highly respected at Swanland and in the neighbourhood, for her Christian consistency and motherly kindness and sympathy. She was always ready to attend to the afflicted, and minister to the relief of the suffering. She had always a word of comfort to the sorrowful, and often succeeded in assuaging their grief by her comforting language, soothing manner, and her affectionate disposition. She was a good Samaritan to the extent of her ability, and secured the affection and gratitude of her neighbours in general.

About twelve months ago her health began to fail, and she gradually grew worse. She was shortly afterwards confined to the house, and was called to endure a long and severe affliction.

During her illness, numerous were the tokens she received of the kindness both of rich and poor, and great was the solicitude expressed for her recovery. Her mind was mostly kept in a calm and grateful frame, though she felt deeply humbled that she had not lived nearer to God while in health.

Her Christian conduct had been exemplary, but such were the views she entertained of herself in the prospect of eternity. As her weakness increased, she suffered for a time considerable depression of mind, but towards the close of life, she became truly happy and even jubilant. She resigned her husband, son, and other beloved relatives and friends into the hands of God, and peacefully waited for her change. Her last words were, "Hallelujah! Jesus is precious." Thus died Mrs. Harper, in the triumph of faith, leaving a name like ointment poured forth. JOHN PERRY.

14. ELIZA LEWIS, late of the Leeds Sacred Circuit, the subject of this obituary, was born April 27th, 1828, in the town of Bury, in Lancashire, soon after which her parents removed to Leeds. At an early age she became a scholar in the Primitive Methodist Sunday-school, Prince's Field, Holbeck, and there she received such impressions as ultimately resulted in her conversion to God. Her besetting sin was the love of dress, and being apprenticed to the millinery business, this desire for gay apparel increased, and she was led away from her Saviour. O, how many have been put to silence through the follies of the day, and, like my dear departed wife, have been kept from the fold of Christ.

In this state she remained only a short time, and on many occasions while the thunder was roaring and the lightning flashing, she prayed to Him who has said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee;" and, blessed be His name, she was brought to know His salvation, and continued to live in that state of mind,

"Till called by Him from earth away,
To regions of eternal day."

She was naturally of a timid disposition, but on one particular occasion, soon after I became acquainted with her, while in the class-meeting, the power of God came down, and she was so filled with the Spirit, that she suddenly rose from her seat, and shouted the praises of Him who filled her soul. She was much attached to the house of God, and regularly attended its ordinances. The loss of her father, T. Pearson,* who died December, 1860, preyed much on her mind; and frequently while taking her meals, when there appeared nothing to disturb her, she would burst into tears, and when asked what was the matter, she would say, "I cannot help thinking about my father," whom she dearly loved. About the time of his death, it was impressed on her mind that she should soon be with him in glory, and often she repeated the same to me, which I tried to remove, but failed to do so.

As she drew near death, she ripened for the kingdom of glory, by closet prayer and reading the sacred Scriptures. About six times a day she retired to pour out her soul to Him who hath said, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet," &c. A few weeks before her death, she was heard to pray in the house of the Lord with such power, that her leader was constrained to make a remark on the same, and these expressions, especially—

"Bread of heaven, bread of heaven, Feed us till we want no more," sounded in the ears of her class-mates for about a week after.

* See Mag. for May, 1861.

As she drew near her confinement, it was strongly impressed on her mind that she would never recover. Convulsions prostrated her. She finished her course on earth on the evening of Saturday, June 8th, 1861, aged thirty-three years, after being a member of the Church on earth about twenty-three years. She went to join her father, and adore her Redeemer and Lord for ever. She has left a husband and three children to mourn their loss. Oh, that God may enable me so to train my little ones that we may meet her on Canaan's peaceful shore. Amen.

THOMAS LEWIS.

15. WILLIAM GOUGH, of Bushton, in the Brinkworth Circuit, died happy in the Lord, June 13th, 1861, in the fifty-third year of his age. About seventeen years ago, through the persuasion of his wife, he attended a Primitive Methodist preaching service held in a cottage at Tockenham. His attention was arrested, and his conscience awakened. He had not come many times before he became a humble penitent at the feet of Jesus, he earnestly sought for mercy, and happily found pardon through faith in the blood of the Lamb. He immediately united with the society, and remained a consistent member for some time. Through unwatchfulness he fell from grace, and while in a backsliding state, his soul was miserable, and his conscience severely tormented. This unhappy condition was not to be endured. He returned to the meeting with a broken heart, and in deep distress he sought forgiveness at a throne of grace: the returning prodigal was restored to the favour and family of God, and continued a zealous follower of the Lord Jesus up to the time of his death. For some months he had been in a sinking state; being asthmatical, his weakness could not stand the strong attacks of cough. On one occasion he ruptured a blood vessel, which produced such debility as to soon bring life to a close. During his illness Mr. Hill visited him, and found him very happy in the Lord, relying on Jesus, not afraid of death, though conscious of its approach. He seemed full of confidence and glory, and after waiting patiently till his change came, when he died in peace. He was a liberal supporter of our little cause at Bushton, and a lover of our large magazine. While his partner and the church is bereaved of a good husband and a devoted member, he has "gone to be with Christ, which is far better."

THE CHOICE OF THE SOUL.

Nor all the gold of richest climes—

Not all the gems of earth—

Not all the pomp of other times

Flung round a monarch's birth—

Not all the pearls beneath the wave
Of the deep rolling sea,

Whose waters palm-tree islands lave,
Can bring delight to me.

Ye point me to the tinsell'd wealth

That glitters at my feet,

And tell me in the rosy health

Of beauty, joy to greet

Ye bid me beckon fading fame,

Around my brow to twine,

And all the honours of a name

To come, and circle mine.

Ye speak of happy days that hide

In future's misty night,

And say that they shall nearer glide,

On circling wheels of light;

And thus ye bid my spirit roll

On a calm ocean's breast,

And thus ye tempt my rising soul,

To sit her down and rest.

How should she rest with things like these?

How should she look on earth?

How should earth's toys a spirit please,

Blest with a heav'nly birth?

Hadleigh.

Earth's toys more transient than the flush,
Aurora overflings,

When the glad day ascends to brush

The light from off her wings.

The faint perfume that clings upon

The breath the breezes bring—

The softest down that's dusted on

An insect's velvet wing—

The light that flasheth on the steel

A trampling army bears—

The tiny flower that opes to feel

The touch of April's tears

Live but a moment, and are gone,

Yet live in loveliness:

Earthly delights are sooner flown,

Nor leave such fair impress.

How should a bird of passage stay

Where summer cannot come?

So heaven calls my soul away,

For heaven is her home.

Then doth she turn in firm disdain,

From sought of mortal years,

While glorious in its blooming reign,

Eternal life appears;

And palms, and harps, and angels too,

And kingdoms fading never,

And pleasures tracing on her brow—

"For ever and for ever."

B I O G R A P H Y.

THE REV. J. BROWNSON.

“Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?”

THAT the late Mr. Brownson was a great man in our Israel will not be questioned by those who are acquainted with his ministerial career and success. He was at least great in deeds, in grand and successful efforts to promote the glory of God, the extension of Messiah's kingdom, and the highest good of men; a greatness this which immeasurably surpasses all worldly and mere mental greatness, and which will appear resplendent with majesty and glory when the fleeting shadows of time shall have vanished, and all secular grandeur shall have perished; a greatness which will be recognised by the Judge of all before the assembled world at the last day, and will then meet with its great reward. “They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever.”

At the request of surviving friends, we essay, though with a trembling hand, a brief sketch of Mr. Brownson's life and character. We should have felt less timidity in the undertaking had we been furnished with more ample information, or been more intimately acquainted with him. We bespeak the candour of the reader while we present such a view of our late brother as our scanty information and imperfect acquaintance with him will permit.

Mr. Brownson was born at Brailsford, Derbyshire, and was blessed with pious parents and a religious education. His father, the late Mr. James Brownson, was a zealous and laborious local preacher in our Connexion. He became united with it in 1818, and was a pillar in the society at Brailsford till his removal to the pure and spotless society of the heavenly world in 1848, a period of thirty years. In the earlier part of his religious career he sometimes walked thirty miles on the Lord's day, and preached three times. Besides taking regular preaching appointments in Belper Circuit, to which he belonged, he extended his gratuitous and acceptable labours to Derby, Burton, Ramsor, and Winster Circuits.

In his general deportment he was exemplary as a Christian, and in the domestic circle he properly exercised his parental authority to restrain his children from evil, and to "command them to keep the ways of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." Mrs. Brownson was also a believer in Jesus, and died in the faith and hope of the Gospel in 1834. For many years this pious couple hospitably entertained the Primitive Methodist preachers, whose devout conversation and prayers could not fail to exert a beneficial influence upon the family.

Thus highly favoured, having both pious parents, and frequently enjoying the society of devoted men of God, Mr. J. Brownson was happily made a partaker of the inestimable blessing of early piety, being brought to the Lord in the thirteenth year of his age. Growing in grace, advancing in religious knowledge, and possessing promising talents, he was in his seventeenth year called upon to exercise his gifts for the edification of others, by giving a word of exhortation in public. Proving acceptable and useful as a local preacher, and giving promise, as his mind expanded and gifts improved, of becoming equally acceptable and more useful in a wider and more important sphere of labour, he was called into the itinerancy in the twenty-first year of his age, and was appointed to Welton Circuit, one of the poorest and least promising stations in the Connexion.

He entered upon his labours in that unfruitful and discouraging field of operations in the spring of 1830, without the help of a colleague, the support of a single preacher being almost more than the poor and feeble societies could sustain. Considering his youth and inexperience, some of the leading men did not unnaturally doubt his fitness for the superintendency of the station. We distinctly remember a letter written to them on the subject by the late Mr. Hugh Bourne. Being at the time at Bemersley, assisting him in some Connexional matters, he very kindly handed the letter to us for perusal. It expressed a high opinion of Mr. Brownson's fitness for the ministry, and the fullest confidence in his ability to manage the affairs of the circuit in a satisfactory manner. Mr. Bourne's discernment of the characteristic excellencies of Mr. Brownson was clear and correct, and the confidence he placed in him proved to be well founded. Mr. Brownson laboured in the circuit, amidst many trials and privations, with general acceptance and a measure of success to the Christmas of 1831, when he removed to Leicester Circuit under the superintendency of a senior preacher.

In 1833, he was appointed to Loughborough Circuit, to which he was re-appointed in 1834 and 1835. We are unable to furnish any information respecting his labours and success in these two circuits. During his continuance in Loughborough Circuit, the authorities commenced missionary operations at Melton Mowbray and the neighbourhood, and succeeded in establishing several societies, which were formed into a separate circuit, and Mr. Brownson was appointed thereto as the superintendent in 1836. In this new circuit he had to contend with many serious difficulties and trials, but he remained there two years, and met with an encouraging measure of prosperity and success.

In 1838, we find him appointed to the superintendency of Nottingham Circuit, from which period his ministry became distinguished by greater efficiency and more abundant usefulness. He laboured two years in this important circuit with great acceptance and success. The work of the Lord prospered in every department, and 200 members were added to the societies.

In 1840 and 1841, he travelled in Barnsley Circuit, both years being favoured with a measure of success.

In 1842, he was appointed to the superintendency of his native circuit, Belper, where he remained three years, and had the happiness of witnessing a gradual improvement of the station, and an encouraging increase of members.

In 1845, he was again stationed at Nottingham, after an absence of only five years. The circuit had reported to the Conference of that year 1,279 members, which, in the next two years, rose to the number of 1,454, including the two circuits into which the station had been made. In Nottingham First Circuit, to which Mr. Brownson was re-appointed, there were 806 members. Here he remained two years longer, the good work continuing to progress, so that 1,062 members were reported to the Conference of 1849. At this Conference Mr. Brownson was appointed to Nottingham Second Circuit, where he remained four years. Here, too, the work of the Lord prospered as it had done in the first circuit. Mr. Brownson had the pleasure of leaving above 300 members more than he found.

After eight years of continuous and highly acceptable and useful services in Nottingham and the vicinity, Mr. Brownson removed to Sheffield, to which he was appointed in 1853. In this large town he found sufficient scope for the exercise of his various gifts and graces, and he devoted himself to the work of God with enlightened and glowing zeal and unabated energy. He continued here four years, pushing forward the work of God in all its departments, and happily realizing his wonted success. The number of members rose from 1,035 to 1,467, including the two circuits into which the station was now divided, being an increase of above a hundred a year on an average during his superintendency. The heavy labours of this important station, however, were somewhat above his strength. On leaving it, he complained in a note to the writer, of his strength being considerably impaired, and intimated the necessity of a little relaxation. But another important station awaited him, whose demands soon called forth all his energies. Leicester First Circuit gratefully received him in 1857, where he laboured with his usual acceptance for four years; and though his health began to fail before the termination of this period, and his strength further to decline, he was again cheered with the prosperity of that work to which all his powers were constantly devoted, about 200 members being added to the societies during his superintendency.

We now come to his last station. He was appointed to Leicester Second Circuit at the Conference of 1861; and it was hoped that this station, which had unhappily passed through many severe trials for several years, would for a considerable time reap the benefit of his wisdom, piety, and zeal, and, like the other circuits in which he had laboured, rise into prosperity and strength. But his devoted and acceptable services were drawing to a close; his work in the vineyard of the Lord was nearly completed. The excessive labours of above thirty years had worn down his strength, and produced a grinding effect upon his naturally good constitution. Though at the Conference he appeared to many to be healthy and vigorous, there was already in his frame a latent feebleness, which began to manifest itself in an affecting manner soon after his removal to his new station. He could no longer labour with his accustomed energy. His strength rapidly declined, and it became evident that entire repose was absolutely necessary. He hoped, however, that rest from labour, coupled with change of air and scenery, would, with the Divine blessing, restore his health and repair his wasted energies. Arrangements were therefore made to enable him to avail himself of these means of recovery, and he went into South Wales in hope of improvement. But the anticipated benefits were not realized. He got worse instead of better, and soon returned home, to share indeed the sympathy and kind attention of his numerous friends, but also to suffer and to die. All the means employed for his benefit proved unavailing, and he rapidly sank under a wasting fever. During its progress he was mostly insensible, but happily he had some lucid intervals, when he conversed in a satisfactory manner on spiritual and Divine things, and of his personal religious experience. He frequently requested the friends who visited him, to pray with him, and generally responded to their petitions.

He breathed his last September 17th, 1861, aged fifty-one years. On the day of his interment a religious service was held in George Street Chapel, attended by numerous ministers of various denominations, and a large concourse of mourning friends, who afterwards followed his remains to the railway station, whence they were conveyed to Brailsford, his native place, and there committed to the grave in sure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection to eternal life.

In this rapid sketch of Mr. Brownson's labours, nothing is said of the numerous chapels built and enlarged under his auspices, nor of the increase of congregations and Sabbath-schools, nor of the financial improvement of the respective stations, all of which were considerable, being equal in proportion to the augmentation made in the number of Church members. These gratifying and important results are easily named; but what prayerful solicitude, incessant toil, and well adapted efforts were required to secure them! A considerable amount of prayerful and diligent labour is usually requisite to obtain such a number of conversions as will supply the vacancies in the societies caused by death, removals to localities where we have no churches, and by numerous other causes.

When, then, we consider the large additions made to the societies under Mr. Brownson's superintendency, some idea may be entertained of the painful solicitude, constant diligence, quenchless zeal, earnest prayer, and strong faith through which this great success was effected. We do not, of course, overlook the labours of his respective colleagues, nor of those of the office-bearers and other members in the various circuits in which he laboured. Many of them largely shared in his labour and toil, and to them is to be attributed, under God, a considerable amount of the great prosperity and success which Mr. Brownson had the happiness to witness. But notwithstanding their praiseworthy co-operation, so large a measure of success as he generally realised, could not have been accomplished under ordinary circumstances, without constant vigilance, prayerful solicitude, well-adapted efforts, and unabating zeal on his part. Mr. Brownson's ministerial career was indeed eminently successful, and productive of an incalculable amount of good to the important circuits in which he laboured, and to Nottingham District in general. It was happy that he was appointed to labour in the largest towns and most important circuits in the district, for which his superior qualifications rendered him pre-eminently adapted.

Though Mr. Brownson was not distinguished by a brilliant genius, by splendid oratory, or by profound learning, he nevertheless possessed ministerial qualifications of no mean order. He had a clear understanding, a sound judgment, and an accurate acquaintance with the important doctrines of the Gospel and practical theology in general. He had a good voice, a distinct enunciation, and a fluent utterance. His manner was animated and earnest, and his aim at usefulness always apparent. His discourses were instructive, evangelical, practical, and edifying. He did not operate so effectually on the passions of his hearers as on their understanding and conscience. His respectable gifts commanded the esteem of his hearers, and his variety kept him from growing threadbare. In strange congregations, when preaching occasional sermons, he did not always appear to advantage. He could not generally on these occasions command his usual freedom and power. His preaching at the campmeeting at Doncaster Conference was a happy exception. Though he preached the first after dinner, usually the most unfavourable time of the day, his sermon was not only clear and correct, lucid in arrangement, and rich in evangelical truth, but was also eminently animated, pointed, energetic, and unctuous, and evidently produced a deep impression on the immense concourse to whom it was delivered. But usually, Mr. Brownson preached best in his regular work, and quite as well in the second, third, or fourth year in a circuit, as in the first.

But highly acceptable and efficient as were the public ministrations of Mr. Brownson, he still more excelled, as we think, in what may be called his administrative abilities. As a superintendent, Mr. Brownson was pre-eminent. The soundness of his judgment, the wisdom of his counsels, his conciliatory spirit and demeanour, his unquestionable integrity and pure intentions, won for him more than ordinary deference and esteem, and enabled him to secure the cordial co-operation of his colleagues, the office-bearers in his various stations, and the societies generally. Thus assisted, he accomplished, under the Divine blessing, great achievements. Under his judicious and efficient management, difficulties of the most formidable character were gradually overcome, effectual relief was afforded to the most distressing cases, and important undertakings were conducted to a successful issue. However feeble a station might be on his entrance upon it, he had the gratification of leaving it in a vigorous and prosperous state; however low in public estimation he might find it, he did not fail to raise it, and win for the cause considerable respect. He did not produce in his stations a mere transient excitement, but comprehensive, solid, and abiding good—a vast increase of moral power and religious influence.

But to form a correct idea of Mr. Brownson's ministerial qualifications and efficiency, they must be regarded as a whole. We find in him no serious defect, no great drawback, but an assemblage of qualities and excellencies which merit what was generally awarded to him high admiration and esteem. He deservedly ranked high, both in his own denomination and in the various evangelical communities to whom he was known, and would have been highly esteemed in any age of the Church, or in any section of Evangelized Christians. His pulpit acceptability, good sense, general knowledge, efficient supervision, pastoral diligence, and manly piety constituted him more than an ordinary minister of Jesus Christ.

The estimation in which he was held by his own community may be inferred, both from the important stations to which he was appointed, and the various offices he fulfilled. He was several times elected as the general committee delegate to his district meetings, was twice or more chosen the principal secretary of Conference, and at the time of his decease was the treasurer of the Itinerant Preachers' Friendly Society.

The duties of these various offices he fulfilled in a manner highly creditable to himself and to the general satisfaction of his brethren.

Mr. Bishop, who was connected with him in the business of the Preachers' Friendly Society, bears the following testimony :—

"My knowledge of Mr. Brownson commenced by correspondence, occasioned by our simultaneous appointment to the duties of treasurer and secretary of our friendly society about two years since ; and personal intercourse has only confirmed the favourable impressions which his communications had produced.

"During the last thirty years I have met with many worthy men, of excellent spirit, amongst my ministerial brethren, but one with whom I felt a more perfect sympathy, and with whom I could more cordially co-operate, I have not found.

"If I wished to describe him in a few words, I should say that he had a clear head, a calm judgment, a kind heart, a friendly hand, and a social soul. Fervent in spirit, he was deeply devoted to God ; and, diligent and energetic in duty, he was eminently useful to his fellow men.

"In all the business of the Friendly Society he was as clear as the day, and in conducting it he was at once correct and courteous, brotherly and gentlemanly ; and when we came to audit his accounts, after his death, which accounts were handed to us as he left them, we found all his books and papers bearing ample testimony to his accuracy and fidelity.

"We served the Friendly Society together for nearly two years, and during that time I often thanked God that I had been thus brought to know him, and I had been led most ardently to anticipate that his friendship would have been added to that of others previously enjoyed, as a sweetener of future years of ministerial toil. It is otherwise decided, and I bow sorrowfully, although submissively, to the will of God. Good is the will of the Lord."

"E. BISHOP."

Of Mr. Brownson's character as a husband and a father it is not needful to say much. He was twice married, and his mourning widow states that, during the twelve years of their marriage life, he never spoke unkindly to her, but ever treated her with affectionate consideration. As a father, Mr. Brownson's affection was not manifested in foolish fondness and the ruinous indulgence of his children, but in enlightened, constant, and prayerful effort to promote their welfare, both present and eternal. It was not so much marked by tenderness as by constancy and depth, winning from his children reverence as well as love. It was Mr. Brownson's happiness to witness his eldest son, Mr. W. J. Brownson, received as a ministerial probationer at the last conference which he attended, and appointed to Horncastle Circuit. May the mantle of the sainted father clothe and adorn his beloved son !

A few words on the Christian character of Mr. Brownson, and we finish our brief and imperfect sketch. His piety, which, as already intimated, was early, was not of a morbid, nor of a very excitable kind, but of a healthy, manly, and vigorous character, which grew with his growth, and expanded and matured with his improvement in knowledge and advancing years. We may not claim for it all the sublimity and grandeur, all the seraphic ardour and lofty attainments, of the piety of a Fletcher, a Walsh, a Bramwell, a Smith, a Clowes, but it was far more solid, consistent, comprehensive, and exalted than that of ordinary Christians, or of devout Christian ministers generally. A few months before his decease he read with much interest and profit the life of that devoted and pious missionary, John Hunt, and in a letter to the writer of this sketch, expressed his ardent desire to aspire after higher degrees of Christian holiness. That desire was, we trust, carried into successful practice, and his manly piety deepened and mellowed as he drew near the close of his eminent career.

We have said nothing of his failings. He doubtless sometimes erred in judgment, and might therefore occasionally treat a brother with less respect and kindness than his character merited, but it is believed that such instances were very few. Mr. Brownson may safely be regarded as one of the least faulty of Christians, and of superior piety and devotion. His loss will be deeply felt in Nottingham district, and sincerely deplored by many of his ministerial brethren, and by thousands of his Christian friends. His comparatively early removal is a solemn and admonitory event, calling upon his junior brethren to imitate his noble example, and emulate his numerous excellencies, and urging the societies to earnest prayer to the Lord of the harvest, that he may raise up and thrust out into the harvest field a succession of zealous and efficient labourers. May the solemn event be improved by all his ministerial brethren, whether senior or junior, and may we all work while it is day, as the night rapidly cometh when no man can work.

2. THOMAS STATON, the subject of this brief sketch, was born in 1818. When sixteen years of age, he heard a sermon by the late Thomas Watson, in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Masborough, Sheffield First Circuit, was convinced of sin, and being pointed to the Lamb of God, he believed with his heart unto righteousness, and with his mouth he made confession unto salvation. The change was great ; many took knowledge of him, and at the same time several of his companions obtained the blessing of justification. They joined the Wesleyans, and persuaded Thomas to unite with them. He subsequently became a local preacher and class-leader in that community ; but he, believing he should be more useful among the people whose ministry had been instrumental in his salvation, became a Primitive Methodist. We regret, however, that he subsequently fell into a snare and temptation of the devil, and for twelve months he sought pleasure in vanity, and was a miserable backslider. He felt sin to be exceedingly sinful, and repenting of his transgressions, he returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of his soul. His prayer was, "Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit, then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee;" and believing again in Christ Jesus, he said, "He restoreth my soul, and leadeth me in the paths of righteousness, for his name's sake." From that time till his death he remained "steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord," labouring as a Sabbath-school teacher, local preacher, and class-leader, and he was very useful as a visitor of the sick. He felt anxious for the salvation of his children. During his illness he exhorted the members to attend to the means of grace, and meet him in heaven. The affliction which terminated his life was consumption. He often felt exceedingly weak and depressed, but he possessed his soul in patience.

A few nights before he died, and while all were at rest except his wife, he repeated passage after passage of Scripture, and recited verses of poetry until his soul was full of glory; he evidently had a foretaste of heaven, and from the top of Pisgah he looked towards his future inheritance, and sang aloud the praises of God. It was good to be there. On recollecting, however, that he still belonged to earth, he turned towards his wife and said, "My dear, I fear I shall awake father, by thus praising the Lord;" and added, "Now be sure you live near to God, and meet me in heaven." His father coming into the room, he said, "Living or dying I am the Lord's," and soon after he fell asleep in Jesus, September 16th, 1861. C. W.

"There's a pang of keen sorrow that pierces the heart,
When a good and a righteous man dies;
For on earth with his friendship for life we must part,
Though we're joined with indelible ties.

There's a tear that will fall as we stand o'er his grave,
And the last solemn farewell is given;
Though we know that the Saviour is mighty to save,
And that death is the gateway to heaven."

3. The truth of the above lines has been felt and seen by many respecting the subject of this memoir, the late WILLIAM WALKER, of Southampton, who departed this life October 3rd, 1861, aged forty years.

Through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists in this town, he was converted to God in his fifteenth year; he then joined the infant society, and continued a respected member till his departure to the church above.

A short time after his conversion he went to sea with a gentleman for nearly two years. During that period they visited several parts of the world, and encountered some fearful storms. In one of these the vessel was wrecked, and they were cast on an island, but there our departed brother spoke to the natives about Jesus, dropping the "incorruptible seed."

In 1844 he began to warn sinners to "flee from the wrath to come;" and his name appeared on the first printed plan for Southampton when a mission, and for some time it has stood at the head of the local preachers.

As a preacher he was very laborious. First, in preparing for the pulpit he felt the importance of the work, and read and studied much, while he also prayed earnestly to be qualified for his work; and to give full proof of his ministry, he did not take the people that which had cost him nothing. Secondly, in going to the pulpit, he took the longest journeys on this station, and as many of them, if not more than any preacher on the plan. Thirdly, in the pulpit he was lively, fluent, earnest, and mighty; he was, therefore, well received by the people, honoured by the church, and owned of God in the conversion of souls.

For nearly fifteen years he honourably filled the office of class leader and was greatly beloved by his members. He was also circuit and chapel steward, and was delegate to two conferences. His attachment to the Connexion was great from the time of his conversion, and it increased as he became more conversant with its laws and institutions; especially when he saw it so successfully accomplishing the glorious work which the Lord had raised it up to perform. He contributed cheerfully towards the connexional funds, and was regular in his attendance at the means of grace.

In common with other men he had his failings. Being of a nervous temperament he was rather hasty at times, which he deeply deplored before God.

On Sunday, June 16th, 1861, he led a revival meeting in the open air, at Botany Bay, and while in the act of conducting the love-feast, in the evening, he was seized in the pulpit with paralysis, and had to be taken home in a fly. He partly recovered so as to attend the means of grace a few times, and a hope was entertained by some that he would be spared to his family, the church, and the world; but on Tuesday, September 24th, when returning home from the preaching service, he was seized with the second attack, which terminated fatally nine days after.

In all his affliction he was fully reconciled to the will of God; he felt that affliction was working out for him a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," and that, whether living or dying, he was the Lord's.

If he had any wish to live it was to promote the glory of God in the salvation of souls and the prosperity of Zion, for his love for souls and Zion's prosperity was undying ; hence, when but partly recovered from his first attack, he was seen, leaning on the arm of some friend, wending his way to the " courts of the Lord's house," his heart overflowing with gratitude to God. His conversation was in heaven, and his countenance lit up with radiancy divine.

The last seizure very much affected his head, and rendered talking very difficult, but he assured us that he felt Christ to be an all-sufficient Saviour, and that, through faith in his precious blood, he was going to heaven. He was fully conscious that the " time of his departure was at hand," hence he said to his wife, " I shall go, but the Lord will spare you." I saw him, when battling with the last enemy ; it was hard struggling, but he had the victory, and said to me, " Help me to triumph," " Bless the Lord," " Praise Him," and when reminded, that he would soon be with Jesus, and meet those who had gone before, he said, " I shall, I shall ! " and in that frame of mind he continued till the mortal strife ended, and his sanctified soul returned to be for ever with the Lord.

A large number of friends attended his funeral. He has left a wife and five children. May they and all his friends meet him in heaven,—
Amen. J. HERRIDGE.

4. FRANCIS STARK was born at Beasley, Lincolnshire, February 11th, 1801, and died at Tetney, Grimsby Circuit, November 5th, 1861. His parents were poor but honest, and they having a large family to provide for, his education was very limited. Francis had early in life to labour for the bread which perisheth, and being thrown among wicked associates, he was led into evil practices ; yet in the midst of his pot companions when religion was made the subject of ridicule, he always defended it. He remained in an unregenerate state for many years. He was much addicted to the very wicked practice of cock fighting, and would stake large sums of money on the issue.

He remained a slave to sin and Satan until 1829 or 1830. At that time his conscience was fully awakened ; he pondered on the life he had led, and the consequences which must follow. At that period a camp-meeting was held at Welbeck, in this circuit ; and he, with many others, left home to go to it. On their way they forgot the sanctity of the Sabbath, and conversed about the grass and the corn, &c. Brother James Cook was one of the preachers, and when engaged in preaching, he pointed toward Brother Stark, and said, " Sabbath breaker, how wilt thou stand in the day of judgment ? " This appeal was directed like an arrow to his conscience. He speedily left the camp-ground, and went home, but his misery increased until he went to a prayer-meeting, and there he found peace to his troubled soul. He rejoiced much in the Lord, and became as valiant in God's service as he had previously been in Satan's slavery.

He was a man of much prayer, engaging in this delightful duty sometimes for hours together in a granary, or stable, or other convenient place, and he has been known to be thus employed at three or four o'clock in the morning. He felt for the welfare of souls, and was soon placed on the circuit's plan; but feeling the work to be very important, and conscious of his own want of ability, he relinquished this office. He was subsequently appointed to the office of class-leader, which office he sustained to the time of his death. He was an able leader, administering words in season to the little flock committed to his care. He and his members were strongly attached to each other. He travelled two miles to meet his class, but was always there at the appointed time. The state of the weather never hindered him. He also opened his house for the Gospel to be preached therein, and also for prayer-meetings. The ministers, both local and itinerant, found shelter and hospitality under his roof.

In addition to leading a class at Irby, he also led another in his own house. But God moves in a mysterious way. On the 5th of July last, he was seized with a disease of the heart. Medical aid was sought, and he appeared to improve a little; but soon afterward he had a stroke, which almost deprived him of his speech. I often visited him, and found him resting fully on Christ. Many others visited him, and while engaged in prayer he often rejoiced much in God. He was fully resigned to the Lord's will.

When his family gathered around his bed, he urged them to give God their hearts, and to meet him in heaven. His sufferings were great, but he was very patient. When unable to speak, he waved his hand in token of victory; and while his friends stood weeping around, he fell asleep in Jesus.

Our departed brother was not altogether perfect. He was a little subject to instability of mind, but always true to his God, and his whole aim was to do the will of God, and he evidently finished this life well. On Saturday, November 9th, his body was borne to its long home, where it is likely to rest until the voice of the archangel shall summon the whole human family to the tribunal of God.

5. JOSEPH STINCHCOMB was born at Hawkesbury Upton, January, 1779. Not having had the advantage of religious training, he lived without the fear of God before his eyes for some years, and was addicted to almost every kind of vice. Onward he rushed in his wicked career, and sunk deeper and deeper in sin. He was very fond of card-playing and dancing, which led him to associate with the volatile and the wicked. Thus he lived until he was about forty-three years of age, when the Primitive Methodists, from the Brinkworth Circuit, visited Upton, and began to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ in the open-air. Joseph went to hear them, and the Gospel fastened on his heart. He was convinced of sin, and saw his danger, but was some time before he found the Lord. His convictions were of such a description, that whilst labouring under them, he was often tempted to commit self-destruction, and his wife was afraid he would destroy himself.

After he had been in that state some time, he attended a camp-meeting, and also a lovefeast in the evening, and whilst there he felt his sins were pardoned, and he could rejoice in the Lord. He joined our society, and was one of the first members at Upton, and continued until his death.

After he had been in society some time, his name appeared on the circuit's plan as a local preacher, which office he sustained until his death. Owing to his situation in life, he did not take a great number of appointments. He was the superintendent of the Sunday-school for many years, and manifested a great interest in the welfare of the scholars. For a long time he was a class-leader, and was always ready to lend a helping hand in whatever needed to be done in connection with the cause of Christ.

After he was converted, he made a home for the preachers, both travelling and local, and was very much pleased to have them at his house. He had his failings; hastiness of temper often brought him into condemnation, and many times he had to mourn on this account. He sometimes spoke rather harshly, and through his hasty temper he feared that he grieved God. But for the last six months he was enabled to conquer through the grace given unto him, and was quite a different man. He appeared to be living nearer to God, and ripening for heaven. He was never ashamed to own his Master: let him be where he would he tried to let his light shine.

During three weeks we held special services at Hawkesbury Upton. We had meetings every day at one o'clock P.M., and in the evening at seven o'clock. Our departed brother was a regular attendant, and took an active part in all the services. He was very fervent in his prayers, and he rejoiced when sinners were converted and members added to the Church.

He was at the mid-day meeting on the Friday before his death, and I said to him, "I suppose you will be with us in the evening?" He smiled and answered, "I have been to every meeting yet, and I think I shall not break off now." He appeared very well then, but towards night he began to feel poorly; yet he thought he could go to the meeting. He put on his coat to do so, but said to his wife that he felt so poorly he must stay at home. He was rather better on the Sunday, and in the morning went to the chapel; but that was the last time he was at the house of prayer. On the Monday morning he attended to some little matters, but he was much indisposed and went to bed. His complaint was of such a nature, inflammation of the lungs, that it prevented him from conversing much; but to the inquiries of his friends respecting future prospects, he gave satisfactory answers, that the Saviour who had been with him during his life, had not left him.

His affliction was short, and at the commencement severe; but he never murmured. On the Thursday morning he awoke about one o'clock, and took some medicine; and about four o'clock he passed from this world without a groan or struggle, leaving behind him a widow and four children to bemoan their loss.

Thus died this servant of the Lord on Thursday, November 28th, 1861, aged eighty-two years. He was interred at Hawkesbury on Sunday, December 1st, and was followed to his last resting-place by nearly all the male members belonging to our society.

NATHANIEL WATTS.

6. MR. JOHN ROBINSON, late of South Shields Circuit, was born at Richmond, Yorkshire, December 1st, 1790. He was the son of poor but honest parents. Before he arrived at the age of ten years his mother died, but he remained with his father until he attained the age of twelve years and three months, when he was apprenticed to a joiner and cabinet maker until he should have attained the age of twenty-one. As stated in writing by himself, up to that time he never received any spiritual instructions, and seldom ever went to any place of worship. He removed to South Shields in 1811. About that time, his father, then fifty years of age, was converted to God under the Wesleyan Ministry, and he united with that Connexion. Soon after his conversion the Primitive Methodist preachers visited the place, and the old man went to hear them. His leader hearing of it reproved him for so doing. This was not done in the spirit of kindness, and the old man became very unhappy, and never settled until he joined the Primitive Methodist Society, (and then he became a happy man), in which he, after being a member for many years, died in the faith of Christ. In 1823 he came to South Shields on a visit to his son, and invited him to go to the Primitive Methodist chapel in the glebe. He agreed to do so and accompanied his father to the above-named chapel, where he heard Brother John Nelson preach, and the word was applied by the Divine Spirit to his heart. Being brought under the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, he discovered his lost state, became an anxious enquirer after salvation, and returned from the service a miserable man, but he resolved to seek mercy till he found it. He was a true penitent before God, and obtained pardon through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. He joined the society and became a useful member, and for several years was a class-leader. There were some traits in the character of our departed brother worthy of remark.

1. His Humility. He was humble and unassuming, not minding who might be raised to office and power in the church, if only sinners were converted, and the work of the Lord prospered. Had he thirsted for place and power he would have got them. He walked humbly with his God. Nothing was more hateful to him than pride, especially when he saw it manifested in professing Christians.

2. His Sincerity, Sobriety, Industry, and Punctuality. He did not waste his time in trifling and vain conversation, but employed it in practical industry, in sober thought and reflection, watchfulness, and prayer. He highly esteemed the Bible, especially the New Testament, which he read through several times. To Brother George Maddison, with whom he met in class for twenty-eight years, he said, "How precious is the Bible! I read it; I pray and weep over it, until my heart is so full of joy that I kiss it, and place it in my bosom, and believe it to be one of the greatest blessings to universal man." Any one who knew him could depend on his word. He was a man of integrity and truth.

3. His love was great to the Church of Christ, especially to that branch of it with which he was united. About the time he joined the society, the chapel in which he worshipped, had a large debt on it. A gentleman in the country had lent on mortgage £600. Brother James Hairs, a class leader at that time, lent a considerable sum, and many small sums were borrowed on promissory notes, the total cost of the chapel being £1,600. We were several hundreds short of meeting our demands. What must be done? was the question. Some Primitive Methodists had a great deal of faith in those days, which was coupled with fasting and prayer to God for help. In our extremity our departed brother came cheerfully forward, and met all demands, paying Brother Hairs his money also, which occasioned great joy in the church; and on many occasions, too numerous to mention, when money was wanted for chapels in the circuit, or for circuit purposes, he was ready to help. When Brother M. Lupton was superintendent of this circuit, the gentleman who had the £600 on the chapel died, and the money became the property of a clergyman, who thought it best to give notice for the £600 to be paid in. He came to Shields on this errand, and our departed brother, being a trustee, the clergyman waited on him, and gave notice for the payment of the money. After giving the matter a little thought Mr. Robinson said, "Go with me, sir, to my house, and I will pay you the £600." The clergyman seemed amazed to find a Primitive Methodist able to pay that amount at a moment's notice, but our brother's love to the house of God was such that he would and did pay the total debt on the chapel, which at that time was £1163 10s.

Some time after this, Brother Wake, the circuit steward, moved at a trustee meeting, "That we adopt the golden system, and endeavour to raise £300, if Brother Robinson would give us the odd £63 10s." This motion was agreed on, and Brother Wake was appointed to wait on him, and state to him our intention; he did so, and, as usual, Mr. Wake received the pleasing answer, "Well, I will give you the £63 10s." Being thus encouraged, we set to work, and this great undertaking was brought to a successful issue, which reduced the debt on the chapel to £800. Brother Robinson made it a duty to be punctual in attending the means of grace, and his class in particular, from the time of his conversion until prevented by affliction. For some time previous to his death he suffered much from asthma. He at length became so ill that his doctor advised that he should go into the country, supposing his native air would have a beneficial effect on his health. While in the country, he seemed, for the first few days, to rally, and there was some hope of his recovery, but a change took place, his glass was nearly run. Finding himself much worse, he returned to the house of his son, Mr. John Robinson, junior, in a very feeble state, and indications of speedy dissolution were manifest; but as the outward man decayed, the inner man was vigorous and unmoved by the approach of death. Our superintendent, Brother Clark, and other friends visited him, and always found him happy in the Lord, and waiting patiently until his change should come. The writer who has been well acquainted with him for about forty years, visited him several times in his last affliction, and found him firm on "the Rock of Ages." When asked how he felt, he said, "All is well, Christ is precious." When he drew near the gates of death, water accumulated in the region of his heart, and continued to increase in quantity until his death. He calmly fell asleep in Jesus, November 3rd, 1861, aged seventy-one years, after being a member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion about thirty-eight years. In the death of our friend the church has lost a sincere member, true friend and supporter, his wife a kind and affectionate husband, and his children a tender and loving father; that his family and the writer may meet him in heaven is the earnest prayer of

RICHARD BULMER.

THE POSSESSIONS OF CHRIST, AND THE MANIFESTATIONS THEREOF.

A SERMON, By J. A., PAISLEY.

"All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you."—John xvi. 15.

BUT what is all this glory, and power, and splendour, when compared with the infinite stores of the Redeemer? We are amazed at the trust which is put into the hands of some men, conferring on them almost unlimited power to transact affairs which involve the interests of millions. We are astonished at the resources of some, both natural or acquired, which make them appear able to communicate to all, and yet reserve a mine for themselves: but what are the resources of the greatest, the richest, and the most powerful; or what the trust which a mortal can confer, compared with the exhaustless resources of Christ, and the trust committed into His hands by His Father? Surely on such a Saviour the believer may well depend; surely to Him we may unhesitatingly apply in every time of need, assured that as all things are His, He must be able to supply our wants. Surely, penitent sinners, you may confidently trust in Him for your soul's salvation. O how precious to know Him and His power to save, and to save to the uttermost. The gold of the Indies, the wealth of a Croesus could not compensate for its loss. But need you fear to trust your all in the hands of Jesus? Is He unworthy of the trust? The Father hath committed all things into His hand. Are your souls of more value than the Father's dominions, and all contained therein? But all these Christ has been thought worthy to hold. The Father fears not to commit them to Him. Why, then, do you fear to commit your souls to Him? It is but one soul you each offer, after all. It is but one of the many which Christ has been thought worthy to receive. Why fear then? Are you wiser than God? Can you find a safer guardian for your interests than God has found for His? Why then hesitate? Christ can say, All things that the Father hath are Mine. Can you commit your all to Him, and answer, Yea, Lord, and all that I have, my heart, my soul, my life, are Thine also? By this you will imitate God. By this you will fulfil His purpose, which is to give all things to Christ. By this you will be saved, and display the spirit of the hosts of heaven, who, so far from rebelling against this investment of Christ, with all honour, and power, and dominion, exclaim from their lofty thrones, ten thousand tongues in one harmonious song, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing." Yea, yours, I trust, will be one of the many voices of all creatures in heaven and earth, and under the earth, and in the sea, who exclaim, night and day, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever."

II. The Holy Spirit's office to communicate of that universal possession to man.

We have said that the Redeemer has, as the representative of men, received all things from His Father. In speaking of his work we remark that he voluntarily undertook to repair, on man's behalf, the injury which Adam had done. Adam, by his fall, not only lost to us, in a sense, the favour of God, and made us liable to death, but also deprived his posterity of all those blessings which they were designed to enjoy, and that power they were destined to wield, entailing on them ignorance and weakness, error and misery. Christ raises them to honour and glory. He having repaired the error of Adam, and atoned for his sin to infinite justice, we have been raised to power and glory, just as the first man fell into poverty and shame. But as Adam fell not alone, but involved in his fall all his posterity, it is not to be expected that Christ will rise alone without also raising those whom he is not ashamed to call His brethren. Accordingly, we find, that as our Saviour, He is entrusted with all power, in order that He may bestow it on us, and raise those who believe in Him from their fallen position to one of honour and glory.

He is our Daysman, our Mediator, our Brother, who is exalted, and who has had all things put into His hands. All things were originally His. For His own sake, therefore, He needed not that any grant should be made to Him of the possessions of the universe. That grant, however, He has received for what He has done on our behalf, and as our kinsman. Now, we feel interested in the exaltation of a kinsman; we feel that it is an exaltation of ourselves. But more, if that kinsman be exalted for any service done on our account. Now, if the work be done on our behalf, the reward must be looked upon as received by Him for us. He has no need of it Himself. When, therefore, Christ says all things are given to Him of the Father, as our mediator, He undoubtedly signifies to us that, as He obeyed the law and fulfilled it, and as He died in our stead, He has received also, in our stead, all things from the Father. He has received from the Father all truth, that He might communicate it to us. He has received all right to forgive, that He might pardon us. He has received all authority, that He might exercise it on our account, and all power and honour, that He might deliver us from all shame, and make us partakers of His glory.

This comports with the whole scheme of Redemption, for Jesus died that He might save us from death, and now lives that He might work out our full deliverance from ignorance, poverty, sin, and shame, and raise us to knowledge, riches, purity, and glory.

The universal possession which he holds, then, as Mediator is held on our account, held for us, to be communicated as we stand in need. Christ fills the place of an elder brother, unto whom the father hath committed the whole management of the family, to feed, to educate them to clothe them, and to place them in such situations as he believes them able to fill. This charge He executes now. But how? He is far distant from us. We cannot walk with Him as did His disciples, and receive instruction from His lips. We cannot apply to Him personally as they did, when the storm overtook them on the Lake of Galilee. We cannot receive His personal commands as they were accustomed to do, or have our wants supplied by the interposition of His hand. How then can He supply us with the stores of that universal possession which He has received? He, the Comforter, the Holy Ghost, shall glorify me, for He shall take of the things that are mine, and He shall shew them unto you." "All things that the Father hath are mine; therefore, said I, he shall take of the things that are mine, and shall shew them unto you."

A new agent is thus introduced as the medium of communication between the Redeemer and those whose cause he pleads before God. The Holy Spirit, the Third Person in the glorious Trinity; the Spirit of Truth, which proceedeth from the Father and the Son; the Comforter, the Spirit by which God operates on all things to perform His purposes. He it is, who, given by the Father at the instance of Christ, performs the important office of taking of the vast possessions of Christ, and bestowing them on His people. He it is who is appointed to open the sacred repositories of truth, and give to each man his portion in due season, to unlock the treasures of heaven and of earth, and bestow on all according to the purpose of God; to unfold the counsels of the Eternal, and through them discover to men their state and condition, and the rich provision which has been made for them; to bring to bear on them all the threatenings of wrath and all the promises of bliss, all the riches of grace, and all the excellencies of Christ, all the terrors of hell, and all the glories of heaven; so that He may accomplish the great design of redemption, working repentance in men, by enlightening their minds, by producing in them faith, purifying their natures, and by conducting them to heaven.

The qualifications of the Spirit for this great work are easily seen. Being God, He is intimately acquainted with all the treasures of Divinity. He knows what no created being can know, the vastness of infinite wealth. He is well acquainted with the whole truth, which none but the Infinite can conceive. He knows all that is, and what it is for. In short, being God, He knows all things. Comprehended in this knowledge is an acquaintance with the Divine purposes regarding man, not only what affects the race, but what concerns each individual; what God would give and what He would withhold, what He would unfold and what He would conceal. Likewise comprehended in this knowledge is an intimate acquaintance with the character, the wants, and condition of every individual; not a trait of character is unknown to him; not the movement of a passion, nor the aspiration of a good desire, nor the breathing of a sigh, nor the uttering of an imprecation. Before the Eternal Spirit, our spirits are, as it were, laid bare, so that all their motives, desires, and aspirations are known to Him, the word before it is spoken, the action while it is yet being planned in the mind. This Divine knowledge being united to a universal presence, renders it impossible for a want to be felt of which he is unacquainted, and which He is not able to supply. The moment the want is expressed it can be supplied by the Spirit, for while He is present with the suppliant, He is also in heaven to unlock the treasury and grant the request. While He is present in one spot, perhaps in the lonely cottage, comforting the humble worshipper, He is also present in the crowded assembly, listening to the devotions of the pious, and giving to every one a supply of his wants. How admirably, then, is the Spirit fitted for His work. Having entrusted to Him all that is Christ's, and knowing how to dispose of it, and when it is needed, He can give comfort to the mourning, strength to the weak, He can bind up the broken-hearted, animate and cheer the feeble-minded, He can teach the ignorant, subdue the wayward, and purify the man who aspires after holiness.

Of the manner in which the Divine Spirit performs this work, many illustrations drawn from Scripture and experience might be given. To confine ourselves to the spiritual aspect of the question, the communicating of spiritual riches to the children of men, we may mention that He employs many instruments whereby to fulfil His office. We know how He first of all gives the word wherein is contained as much of the truth as is necessary to our salvation. This word He diffuses here and there, and, by various agents, presses it on the attention of those to whom it is sent. The ministry of the Gospel, as well as the gifts of all who believe, are enlisted into His service. By these He brings it again and again before the minds of mankind, opening up its sacred treasures to those who believe, that, in all aspects, they may present it to the needy.

Often He constrains into His service the elements of nature, and the ills which flesh is heir to, in order that by them He may bring men to consider. Sometimes He operates in a wonderful manner on men, bringing to their recollections some long forgotten text of truth, or long past incident, from which they cannot get any relief till they come through Him to the Saviour. In short, His operations on souls are so various that it would be almost an endless task to describe how He at first arouses men to come and seek from Him a display of the great truths of the gospel. By the awakening of conscience through the denunciations of the law, by the melting of the heart through the invitations of mercy, by the terrors of wrath and by the promises of bliss, He convinces, re-proves, and allures the sons of men to become willing subjects to the rule of the Redeemer, and inheritors of his glory. Likewise in regard to supplying the wants of the Christian out of the treasury of Christ, his methods are various. Sometimes He permits them to wait long, and sometimes the answer is immediate. Sometimes the portion seems to the asker but scanty, and sometimes overflowing. Sometimes it comes through the still small voice within, at others by the medium of the word written or preached, and often through the channel of Christian intercourse. Sometimes afflictions are sent and doubts are permitted to arise, and joys are as it were withdrawn, in order that the soul may be prepared for the burst of glory and the profusion of riches which are just about to be communicated. Many other ways might be mentioned, and many examples might be adduced of how the Spirit communicates and prepares the soul to receive the riches of Christ. Much might be said of the enlightened mind in the knowledge of all truth; and the boons conferred on men by their advancement in such knowledge. Volumes might be written of transcendent displays, which at times the Spirit gives to the soul, of the love, the grace, and the glory of the Saviour; of the vastness of His kingdom, the depth of His mercy, and the riches of His grace. But we forbear; suffice it to say that, since the days of the Spirit's outpouring until now, the whole history of the Church, and the experience of every Christian on the way to heaven, and the remembrance of every Christian now in glory, will prove the truth of our Lord's statement in the context, "He shall glorify me, for he shall receive of the things that are mine, and shall show them unto you."

And now, in conclusion, what a Saviour have we, and what a blessed position is that of the Christian! All things are Christ's, and ye are Christ's, and the Holy Spirit is appointed to communicate all that is Christ's unto you. What need do you suffer, for which Christ has not a supply? All things are His! What do you need, that the Spirit cannot take of Christ, and supply you withal? He is appointed, and has received power over all that is Christ's, to give unto you. Be cheered then. All things are yours, for ye are Christ's, and the Spirit is appointed to be the bearer of what is Christ's to you. Why then want any good thing? "All things are mine," saith your Lord, and "He shall take of mine, and show them to you."

Open therefore your hearts, and receive out of the fulness of Christ grace for grace. There is enough for all, and the Spirit waits to give unto all. Come then to this exhaustless store; come listen to the Spirit, and He will give you both grace and glory.

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

HINTS TO OUR RISING MINISTRY.

DEAR BRETHREN,—Permit me to offer a few thoughts on the subject of your ministry. The share which you will probably take in sustaining and improving the character of our beloved Connexion, calls you to use all diligence to piously prepare for the duties which you may be called to perform. The thoughts which you entertain of the Christian ministry will affect your usefulness. To some persons the ministry may appear little more than an instrument of refinement and morality, but you must consider it as the instrument of salvation to every one that believeth; for if souls be not brought to Christ, the chief object of the ministry will be lost. The cause of failure cannot lie in the Gospel, but in the manner in which it is preached. If sinners be faithfully warned, and Christ duly honoured; if the babes in Christ be fed with the sincere milk of the word, and those advanced in the divine life have their meat in due season; if the devices of Satan be properly pointed out, and right means be used to build up the Church—and if your own souls be filled with the Holy Spirit—your preaching will prove to be the power of God unto salvation. But to be extensively useful, you must be eminently devoted to your work. “Be filled with the Spirit;” then will your arguments convince the mind, your narratives will thrill the heart, and your exhibition of the Saviour will win the soul. Walk with God, and the light of His countenance will fall full upon you.

The following suggestions on the preparation for your work, and on the proper discharge of your ministerial duties, are respectfully submitted to your consideration.

I. ON THE PREPARATION FOR YOUR WORK.—To maintain a respectable position in the ministry, you must give attention to reading. The general intelligence of society is advancing, and you must endeavour to secure and maintain your proper position. Many books may lie in your way which are not worth the time they cost to read them, and others contain such a mixture of evil and good that they should remain untouched; but you will meet with some full of thought, unfolding truths of the highest importance. Such being read with care will improve your minds, and add daily to your stock of knowledge.

The Bible should be your chief book of study. Read it devotionally, to quicken your affections; and critically, to enable you to declare the whole counsel of God. Study the sacred text with the greatest care, without note or comment, except the marginal readings and references. A judicious use of commentaries will illustrate obscure passages, and explain historical and other references; and such books as Horne's “Introduction to the Study of the Sacred Scriptures,” and good Biblical dictionaries, &c., will throw floods of light on the circumstances of the sacred writers, the situation of the people to whom their books were respectively addressed, the customs of society, the dangers which surrounded them, and the objects sought to be accomplished by the inspired writers.

To be an acceptable preacher to those who may attend your ministry, a good knowledge of your own language is necessary. It would be a disgrace to a preacher to end his probation without being able to express his thoughts with propriety. Nor should you be content with a common knowledge of grammar; but determine to excel in your acquaintance with the language in which your work must be done. This will save you from using improper and unmeaning words, and will secure for your use a course of expressions which will be understood by the most unlettered, and which will be acceptable to educated persons. Many eminent ministers owe much of their influence to their superior knowledge of the English language, a want of which has considerably lessened the influence of many others.

Try to acquire a distinct, but earnest, easy, and impressive style of address, for it will tend to preserve your health, and will be more acceptable to your hearers. A careful study of the style of some standard works will greatly assist you. With this object in view, you should write daily on any proper subject which may occupy your thoughts; but write slowly, and as correctly as possible. After some weeks carefully review what you have written; try to detect any unsound argument, correct any improper illustration, prune off mere verbiage, and try your figures of speech by their proper rules.

Do not desire to be burdened with the cares of superintendency for some years; the more free you are from these duties in the early years of your ministry, the better opportunity you will have to prepare for your future work. Many promising young men have been injured by being placed in stations of trust and influence, for which they were not prepared.

Maintain a proper position towards other churches. While right means should be used to lessen the differences between the churches of Christ, we are not to ignore our particular place and calling. Raised up by God's own hand, we have a special work to do. Honourable as has been our past Connexional career, a wider field of usefulness is opening before us, and nobler triumphs yet await us if we be faithful.

You cannot become able ministers of the Gospel without much LABOUR. Not a moment should be lost, not an opportunity wasted, if you would rise. The mariner tries to manage every change of the wind, so as to pursue his voyage. The successful merchant gathers up the fragments of his store, and watches every movement of the market. Pearls lie at the bottom of the sea; only divers can procure them. Aim at being thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Events which illustrate some great truth are daily occurring. Suggestions are met with in your reading, and trains of thought occur to your mind, which should be noted down for use. Avoid the evil, into which some young preachers have fallen, of supposing that a ready utterance on a few subjects may exempt you from a careful preparation for the pulpit. Such men rarely penetrate below the surface of their subject.

Pray that the Holy Spirit may lead you to select appropriate truths in the preparation of your sermons; for the Gospel would probably be much more effective if our preachings were more discriminating. Let the mind and heart of man be your constant study, and watch the effect which the word of God produces. In the Gospel there is a balm for every wound. Guard against preaching too much on general subjects; for they will probably make but little impression. The congregations which you are to address demand the truth best adapted to meet their cases; their minds must be enlightened, their salvation must be sought, their spiritual advancement should be your aim. To win souls you must be wise. The great theme of your preaching must be Christ crucified, raised from the dead, and exalted a Prince and a Saviour. Let a full salvation, to be obtained instantly through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ by every soul of man, have a prominent place in every sermon. Without this your preaching will lack much that it ought to possess. Properly prepare your subjects; let them sink deep into your own hearts, and seek the help of the Holy Spirit; then you will not spend your strength for nought.

II. THE PROPER DISCHARGE OF YOUR MINISTERIAL DUTIES IS INEXPRESSIBLY IMPORTANT.—Each service which you conduct will be the savour of life unto life, or of death unto death. Some of your congregation may have arrived at such a state of mind that the hymn you select, the chapter you read, or the sermon which you preach, may decide their eternal destiny. This may be the case in the smallest cottage assembly; there a brand may be plucked out of the fire, a mourner may be comforted, and vigour may be given to one that is ready to halt.

Much attention should be given to the public reading of the Scriptures. But few persons, even among ministers, read well before a congregation. In this exercise nature should be seen and heard; any deviation from it, though on the plea of greater solemnity, will injure the effect. Whether the portion which you select be a narrative or a prophecy, the devotional disburdening of the heart, or a closely conducted argument, it will strike the attention with much greater force if it be well read. There is a hidden life in the word of God, which you must search for with much prayer. This will enable you to read the Scriptures so as to contribute towards making your hearers wise unto salvation.

Your public devotional exercises demand the greatest care. Any apparent irreverence or heartlessness must be displeasing to the great God whom you are addressing, and injurious to the people whose devotions you are conducting. The manner in which you pray in public, is often considered as an index to the state of your own soul. By keeping your heart alive to God, you will be enabled to pray without ceasing. Yet much may be done to increase your usefulness in this respect. A selection of scriptural expressions of penitence, confession, supplication, and praise, should be committed to memory; that the wants of your own soul, and those of your hearers, may be presented in the language which the Holy Spirit has prepared for your use. The particular wants of your congregation, the events which are stirring around you, the general state of the church and of the world, and the necessity for an out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, are among the topics which will insure variety in public prayer.

Read your text distinctly. Let the introduction to your discourse be short, and announce the plan of your sermon in a few plain words. Do not depend on the preparation which you have made, but in drawing the arrows from your quiver, seek special direction from above. Some of the thoughts which you had prepared will probably be forgotten, but others more valuable and new-born, may supply their place. Speak faithfully, using sound speech which cannot be condemned. "Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate."

"Say to them that are of a fearful heart, be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence, he will come and save you."

Summon your whole soul to your work, pour all the light you can upon your subject, and preach with eternity in view. But let there be no useless repetition, no looseness, no boisterousness; but with a steady exercise of faith, and deep fervent feeling, and holy earnestness, lead your hearers to the cross of Christ. Do not let your sermons be long, they should seldom exceed half an hour in delivery. A proper preparation would do much to prevent long and unprofitable preaching. Never forget that you stand in Christ's stead, to beseech sinners to be reconciled to God.

Much zeal and wisdom are needed to gather in those whom the sword of the Spirit has wounded. How many have been cut to the heart by the preaching of the word, who might at once have been led into the liberty of the children of God, had judicious means been promptly used, but whose convictions subsequently left them never more to return, while they might exclaim, no man cared for their souls. Properly conducted prayer meetings at the close of the Sabbath, and week-night services when convenient, are of immense importance; and special meetings with those who desire to flee at once from the wrath to come, would be the means of saving many souls from death.

Pastoral visitation should occupy much of your time; if properly exercised it will considerably increase your usefulness; but its value will be lost if your conversation degenerate into common talk, although it may be ended with prayer. Perhaps no part of your work requires more wisdom than this, therefore seek an opportunity for private prayer before commencing your visit, and take the Holy Spirit into every house which you enter. Though you go forth weeping, bearing precious seed, you may return rejoicing bringing your sheaves with you.

Do not hastily conclude that these suggestions are inapplicable. I know your disadvantages, your frequent absence from home, the impossibility sometimes of securing a suitable place for private prayer, and the abundance of your labours. By early rising, a methodical arrangement of your work, and the improvement of spare moments, the course recommended may be followed. The Connexion calls you to make full proof of your ministry. Let me say to each of you, "Meditate upon these things, give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee."

ROBERT WARD.

PROVIDENCE DEPARTMENT.

A RETRIBUTIVE PROVIDENCE.

THE following article has been copied from the Life of Mr. Wesley, and forwarded to us, by Mr. J.

Nunn, and which we insert nearly verbatim.

Mr. Wesley received a letter from a friend in Lincolnshire, entreating him to serve the church of a Mr. Hume, some time before deceased, during its vacancy. The occasion of this letter, with all the circumstances connected with it is so very extraordinary, that we doubt not but we shall be pardoned if we relate the whole case.

When Mr. Samuel Wesley's parsonage house at Epworth was burned, the neighbouring gentry, who held Mr. Wesley in very high esteem, opened their houses to him and his family. One gentleman received Mr. and Mrs. Wesley, another took one of the children, and thus the whole family was disposed of. Mr. John Wesley, who was then only six years old, was received into the house of Mr. Hume, a neighbouring clergyman; there he continued for a year, till his father's house was rebuilt; and he confessed that he loved that family, while he resided among them, as well as ever he did his own. Mr. Hume had four sons and one daughter; three of the sons were educated at Oxford and entered into holy orders, the other went into the Guinea trade and settled on the coast of Africa. Mr. Wesley, reading the letter above mentioned, enquired of one of his Lincolnshire friends whether Mr. Hume was dead. "Have you not been informed of the calamities of that family?" replied his friend. "I have not," said Mr. Wesley; "I will, then," said he "relate them to you.

"About nine months ago, Mr. Hume was riding out, and watering his horse at a large pond, the unruly beast plunged out of his depth, by which Mr. Hume got so wet that he caught a violent cold, which was followed by a fever that caused his death. Lord —, the patron of Mr. Hume's living, was determined it should remain in the family as long as possible, and therefore gave the eldest son a presentation to it. Mr. Hume, the father, had just rebuilt the parsonage house before he died; the son took possession before it was dry, and the dampness of it occasioned his speedy death. The second son was then presented to the living, and died also a few weeks after his induction. The third son (his brother dying suddenly) set off from Oxford to receive the presentation; in his way, he slept at the house of an old acquaintance of his father; the gentleman of the house had a beautiful daughter, with whom young Mr. Hume immediately fell in love; he therefore, before he departed, begged permission to return and make proposals, to which the father consented. Mr. Hume, after his induction to his living, returned, according to his engagement, and in a few days the marriage was consummated, but in six weeks after the nuptials, the lady became a mother, and Mr. Hume afterwards died of grief. Now, sir," said the Lincolnshire gentleman, "you may have a living and a wife, for Lord — has declared, that if Miss Hume marry a clergyman, within six months from the death of her brother, the living shall be part of her fortune, and Miss Hume has consented with much apparent satisfaction, that you should be invited to supply the Church;" but Mr. Wesley was too much impressed with the thoughts of eternity to pay attention to this proposal. The conclusion of this mournful episode should not be omitted. Mrs. Hume, soon after the death of her third son, received a letter from her only remaining one, informing her he was just going to sail from Africa to England, with a fortune sufficient to make the whole family comfortable; and in a few days after she received a letter from the captain of a swift sailing vessel, who had been hailed by the ship in which her son had sailed, by which she was informed that her son died on his passage of a disorder which then raged in the ship. Mrs. Hume, sinking under the weight of such a complication of misfortunes, soon died of a broken heart. Miss Hume, about a month after the death of her mother, was in company with a physician who, looking steadfastly at her, observed, "Madam, you take opium. I know it by your eyes, and I am afraid you have put it out of my power to recover you." She confessed that the misfortunes of the family had so entirely deprived her of rest, that she had taken laudanum to obtain a little rest. The physician prescribed; in a fortnight she recovered her appetite, her colour, and in a good measure her health. The physician then advised her to take a table-spoonful of a julep he had prescribed for her, whenever she found herself inclined to be sick. A few days after this, she desired the servant to bring her a spoonful of the julep, the servant mistaking the bottle of laudanum for the julep, brought her a spoonful of the laudanum, which she drank, and soon afterwards fell asleep, and awoke no more. When Mr. Wesley received information of the death of the last of the family, he recollected a conversation which took place between himself and his mother, some years before. He had been commending to her, in very strong terms, Mr. Hume and his amiable family. "John," replied Mrs. Wesley, "depend upon it that family will come to an untimely end." Mrs. Wesley was a woman so far from being given to censure, that Mr. Wesley asked with some surprise, "Why do you speak so severely of so lovely a family?" "John," said she, "I will tell you why. I have observed in various instances in the course of my life, that where persons have grossly violated the Fifth Commandment, and have afterwards been brought to the fear of God, the Lord has reversed the promise, and punished them, for their transgressions, with temporal death. Mr. Hume and his family lie under this censure. I remember the time when his mother lived under his roof; he used her cruelly, he grudged every bit of meat she put into her mouth, and the whole family partook of his spirit, and depend upon it, God will remember them for this."

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

1. A MOTHER'S EXAMPLE.

DEAR EDITOR,—Thinking that the following narrative may produce some good effect upon the minds of your readers, I submit to you the following article:—

Some years since, the narrator of this incident had the pleasure of witnessing and enquiring into a very interesting circumstance, the details of which are as follows:—

An affectionate son was engaged in earnest prayer while tears bathed his cheeks. This little boy was the son of a holy, dutiful, and affectionate mother, whose prayers for her child were "without ceasing," and who firmly believed in the importance of training up children in the fear of the Lord. This little boy, favoured with the example furnished by his holy, prayerful, and affectionate mother at a very early age, found, through believing, pardon of sin, and entered on the path of the just, manifesting strong and tender affection towards his fellow-creatures, especially towards the fatherless and the widow. Should a case of a fatherless child present itself, on whom depended the support of the widowed mother, it caused him to sympathize deeply with such case. It was under these circumstances that I saw him when the following enquiry (to which I beg the attention of mothers especially) was made.

A youth, with whom he associated, was bereft of his father, consequently he was expected to be the support of his widowed mother in her declining years.

The subject of this narrative being acquainted with the trying circumstances into which the bereaved mother and her son were plunged, and knowing the youth was trying to obtain a situation, the dear boy brought the case before the Lord in prayer, entreating the Lord with tears to undertake the cause of the youth his companion, and open his way. After he had poured out his soul on behalf of the distressed individuals referred to, the following enquiry was made:—

"What have you been weeping and praying for?"

"That —, who has lost his father, and is trying to get a situation as a —, may obtain it."

"And do you think the Lord will hear and answer your prayer?"

"Yes."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because my mother prays, and she receives answers to her prayers, and I believe the Lord is no respecter of persons."

A short time after, according to this boy's faith and expectation, his prayer was answered, which caused him greatly to rejoice.

"Prayer is the simplest form of speech
That infant lips can try;
Prayer, the sublimest strains that reach
The Majesty on high."

Mothers! listen to the words of that boy! What taught him to pray in faith, expecting the Father of spirits to answer his prayer? Not the mere precepts of a mother whose religion was only form, but the example of a mother whose heart was love, whose faith worked by love. "Example speaks louder than words." Your precepts, with your life, may pass away and be forgotten. But if your teaching has been, and is, sustained by a holy example, it will live on, and on, and on. The effects of a mother's example who can describe? We may see some of its effects; but eternity alone can fully describe the power of a mother's holy example. Oceans may separate sons from mothers, but not from their examples. Continents may stand between a son and his parent, who, as an angel, guarded him in his infancy, and taught him first to pray. Yea, death itself may hide her from him in this world for ever, but memory lives, and ever will, and with it a mother's example will survive. The example furnished by mothers is stamped on the infant mind, clings to the youthful spirit, and exists with its subject through life. This "world, with all the works that are therein," may be burnt up, may pass away forgotten, but no waters can drown a holy mother's example, no fires burn up, no finite power destroy that which the pious mother, by the help of the Eternal, seals on the infant spirit. Mothers, ask yourselves respectively, What example am I setting before those who are lent to me to train for eternity? Am I preparing them by my thoughtless actions, evil tempers, unholy words, for regions of woe, to become the eternal associates of lost spirits, to suffer eternal death? Or am I setting before my children a holy example that will produce, by the blessing of God, eternally glorious effects in their everlasting welfare? If the latter, happy mother; but if the former be the course of conduct pursued by you, how wretched your condition, how deplorable the parent whose ungodly character is confirming children in sin against God, and aiding man's great enemy in the work of misery here, and contributing to the eternal perdition of those placed under her care. God be merciful to such mothers, and convert their souls and hallow their lives, not for their own sake alone, but for the sake of their families also.

P. DINNICK.

2. WHAT IS THE FAMILY?

It is a little EMPIRE. The father is the sovereign. It is an absolute sovereignty, constituted in wisdom and restrained by affection. It is derived from the fountain of all power. With this authority is connected immense responsibility. To the government thus constituted, unreserved obedience is required, that its ends may be fully answered. It is a type of that ultimate submission which will be paid to the Father of all by his redeemed family in heaven. "Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father."

The family is a NURSERY. The idea is derived from a material process in nature to which animals and plants are subjected. God speaks of planting a "noble vine." Such is the family. It requires nourishing, protecting, maturing, as much as the literal vine. "Christian families are the nurseries of the Church on earth, as the Church is the nursery for heaven." The nursery is a retired place, but pregnant with preparations for eternity. Its germinations are immortal. It is the birth-place of both the body and mind. Happy, when some auspicious star of hope hovers over it. A train of associations is there commenced, which is imperishable; habitudes into which the very soul is moulded; impressions are engraven, which no lapse of time shall ever obliterate, which eternity itself will but confirm and perpetuate. Like seed, like harvest: "He that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." A mental philosopher has said, that the character is formed before the expiration of the sixth year of our existence.* And these years are in the hands of the mother! The mother of Byron would become frantic with passion, and throw the tongs at him, in early childhood. Hence he became more and more ungovernable; in fact, he never knew what self-government was, for he was never taught it. He had no home. Not so with Cowper, who embalms, in fascinating poetry, his recollections of the sanctity of home. The reminiscences of his mother were so delightful, he could apostrophize in tender numbers even her portrait when brought to view.

* We think to this rule there are many exceptions, nevertheless early religious training is of vast importance.—Ed.

MISCELLANIES.

1. GRASPING THE PROMISES: OR, THE TWO PRAYING WILLYS.

On entering one of our Indian hospitals, on a September morning in 1857, I saw a young boy of about fourteen years of age, lying on one of the charpoys, evidently in much suffering. His countenance was intelligent and pleasing; and his extreme youth and wasted appearance naturally drew my attention to him. On going up to him, I asked him about his illness; on which he replied that he belonged to the artillery, and on the march up from Calcutta had, as usual, been sent one day to water a horse. The animal had become restive, and had thrown him. In consequence the poor child had his leg broken, and received some internal injuries.

"What is your name?" I asked. — "Willy."

"Do you know anything of the Lord Jesus?"

"Of whom?" — "Of Jesus, the Son of God."

"I never had my schooling much cared for; so I don't know anything about him."

"Can you read?" — "Oh, yes, ma'am."

"Have you ever been in England?" — "Yes, for a little while, but we have been mostly abroad. My father is lying here, on this bed next me. Mother died when I was a baby; so I've always been a boy of the regiment."

"Turning to the father, (after ascertaining his name to be Reynolds) I said, "And do you, my friend, know the Lord Jesus?" — "Well, ma'am, as far as that goes, I have been taught all about him. My parents as brought me up made me learn the Bible; but as soon as I got my own master I left all that soft stuff off, and took to drinking and swearing."

"Indeed?" I said; "but you are willing now to take to your Bible again?" — "No, ma'am; I never found any fun in psalm singing and church-going; and I've no mind ever to try my hand at it again."

"Oh but, Reynolds, you must die one day; would you not be different before then?" — "No, I'm quite content; I dare say I shall die as easy as any of you."

"But what of the life beyond? Do you remember it is written, 'Drunkards shall not inherit the kingdom of God?'" — "Of course not; I know I must take the consequences on my shoulders."

"But, Reynolds, you cannot have thought on what it will be not to go to heaven; it will be to go to hell." — "I can't help it, ma'am; and on this I've made up my mind," (striking with his hand on the bed with great energy) "no power on earth shall induce me to leave off my own ways. I never found the Methodist ways happy or good; so there's no good you're tiring your breath in speaking to me. I tell you," (again vehemently striking with his hand) "no power on earth shall induce me to be a Bible man."

"Yes, Reynolds, no power on earth has power to change the heart; but there is One above, who made you, who has all power." — "But I don't want to be different. Didnt I tell you as how the old ways always suited me? No, no: I love my bottle too well ever to part company with it. It's unbearable lying here, without a drop of anything. But I don't want any more of this here talking, please, ma'am; I won't change my mind for any talking. I just hate all cant together."

"Well then, Reynolds, I will speak to your little boy." So turning to him, I asked if I should sit down on his charpoy, and tell him about Jesus. "If you please, ma'am. But it must be very easy, for I'm a poor ignorant boy; so you will please begin from the beginning."

"How do you mean, Willy?"—"Why, speak hard and plain; tell me how I may be saved. Speak as if I were to die in an hour."

"I will try; but first let us pray that Jesus may be with us, and teach me how to speak, and teach your heart to come to him."

When I had prayed, I told him as simply as I could the story of the creation, and of man's fall; and of the birth, life, and death of the Son of God "to save our ruined race." He listened with great interest, and then asked me to tell him just how he could be made one of the "little flock," who should be saved.

"I'll tell you a Bible story, Willy, to explain it," and I opened my Bible at Mark x. 46.

"Oh ma'am, please, it's easier to understand you tell it; the book words are so much harder."—"I do not think, Willy, you will find this word hard. God has written it so simply, that little children may learn and love it. Many children have been led to Jesus." I then read to him the story of Bartimæus.

"Now, ma'am, will you please tell me what that blind man has to do with me; for I can't get my leg made well all of a sudden now."

"Willy, do you know you are just like that blind man?"—"I don't see how that can be. I've got two eyes, and can see as plain as possible."

"Yes; God has been so kind as to give you and me our bodily sight; but your poor heart is blind; every day is bringing you nearer to the world of spirits, and yet you have been living in sin—going on straight the road to hell."

"Yes, ma'am, but then I don't see as how I'm so much to blame. I've scarcely ever heard a word of these things; and father and the men are mostly drunk and cursing."

"Well, now at least you have been told of Jesus. Will you come to Him?"—"I don't see as how I can; He's not in the world now."

"Yet, Willy, He is near us, in this very room. Just as you cannot see your soul, so you cannot see God, because He is a Spirit."

"Then how can I go to Him like the blind man?" "Why lift your heart to Him, think of Him, believe His word, believe He is present listening to you, and pray to Him, tell Him all your thoughts and wants; tell Him how you have forgotten Him up to this time."

"I don't know how to pray; I don't know what I want, except not to go to the place of torment."—"Well, begin with the blind man's prayer: 'Jesus have mercy on me.'"

"Yes ma'am, but I don't see now how I'll know he hears me. He won't answer me aloud."—"No, Willy, but He has had this story, and all His Bible written for us. They are God's own message to us; and you must simply believe the message, and, like Bartimæus, rise, and come to Him, and expect He will change your heart."

"I should think, ma'am, if it's true He died for us, He must want to save us."—"Yes, He has sent me here this morning to tell you of Him; and you must take the message I bring you from Him, just as if you heard Him speak aloud. Here is a little Bible for you; and when I am gone, look into it carefully, and see if I have not been telling you the truth. Now,

Willy, before I tell you about the rest of the story, we will pray again, because, as you see here in Matt. vii. 7, Jesus, who cannot speak a lie, promises, "Ask, and it shall be given you;" and again in 1 John v. 14, "This is the confidence that we have in Him, that if we ask anything according to His will, He heareth us."

After earnest prayer that Jesus Himself would be present, and guide this poor child to give up his heart, I said, "Willy, when Bartimeus cried out, Jesus stood still to listen; and I am sure Jesus is beside us now looking into your heart, and listening to know your wants. He is saying to you, 'What wilt thou that I should do unto thee?' All in this hospital are sinners; we all need pardon and new hearts. But, besides, we have each our own particular wants. Our ages, characters, needs, pains, are all different. Jesus wants*us each to tell Him our own longings of heart, our own especial wants, our every thought. He is able to supply all your need, and He wants you to speak to Him freely as to a friend. You may tell Him all your thoughts and wishes without fear."

"But, please, ma'am, what does 'He calleth thee' mean?"—"It means that Jesus has written us this Bible to tell us His will, to tell us how we can be saved; and He wants every one who reads it to come to Him. He wants you to come to-day, Willy."

"I don't see," roughly exclaimed the father, whom I had thought asleep, "what casting away His garment has to do with us."

"Can you, Willy?" I said. The boy thought a moment. With his Bible open, he seemed to be drinking in every word. Presently he joyously clapped his hands and said, "I have it, I have it. Was not the Bible written in this country?"—"No, not in India."

"But was it not written in a hot country like this, not in a land like England?"—"Yes, it was written in a warmer land than England."

"I know then why the man cast aside his garment. I have seen the black men, when they wanted to go fast, take off their sheet; and I can guess what it means for us," said he in a more solemn tone; "it means, does it not, that, if I want to be made one of Jesus's flock, I must put away my bad words and my crossness; and father, if he comes, must put away his cursing and drunkenness. It means, we can't come to Jesus, and keep our own ways too, both at once."

"Yes, Willy; and now when Bartimeus had come what did Jesus say to him?"—"Thy faith hath made thee whole."

"Yes, he had prayed for an earthly blessing, and it was granted him; and so you and I may take each little want to God. You may tell Him about your pain, and ask Him to make it less. If good for us, everything we ask for shall be given. But sometimes God, who sees all from the beginning to the end of time, sees that granting our prayers would bring a curse rather than a blessing; and so in love He refuses. But if we seek blessings for our souls, He will certainly grant them."

"Thank you, ma'am; now I see how pretty the story is both ways."

"But Willy, I do not want you only to think it pretty; I want you to come, as the blind man, to the Lord Jesus"—"Well, ma'am, there's no saying, but I may."

"But now, Willy, at once; I want to have you ask for mercy before I leave you."—"I can't yet; I'll try to by and by."

"But if you should die first?"—"Oh, I don't think I shall die; the fever's gone down pretty considerably, the doctor says."

"But, Willy, I'm afraid to leave you until you have come to Jesus. I should be so miserable if you died without hope. And if you live, why it's not likely you will think more of death and eternity as you get well, unless you come now straight to Him."

"But I can't now; I can't pray to nothing: If I had a little image I could pray to it. But it seems like speaking to the air as you do it: only you seem to see some one as you pray."

"Yes, Willy, by faith I see Jesus. I know he is listening to us, and willing to receive us as His own for ever. May I pray with you, believing the promise, 'Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out?'—" "Yes, please."

"And, Willy pray with me;" and so we pleaded together that light might shine into his heart, and that he might receive his sight.

"Do you think you have really come to Jesus, Willy?"—"I've tried to wish what you prayed; but I still seem to think it strange to pray into the air. I don't feel as if God were near. But your praying does me more good than talking; it seems, as you pray, that I can feel something is moving my feelings."

"Well, Willy, I must go now; God willing, I will come again tomorrow." "Oh stay, please, a little while longer. I don't think there's one good man in the room; and directly you go they'll begin to curse and swear. The only chance of my getting to see Jesus is by your praying and reading his words to me."

"Oh no, Willy, the Lord is always near you; and if you will but try to look up to Him, and believe that He died for sinners, He will give you to know the joy and peace of His love."

"Please pray just once more, and I will wish very hard to find Him." His voice joined mine in once more pleading the promises.

When I came up to his bed next morning, he clapped his hands, and gladly exclaimed, "I've found Him! I've found Him!"

"Found whom, dear boy?"—"Found Jesus; I know what you meant about my heart being blind. I couldn't sleep all night, my poor leg ached so dreadfully; but as I was crying—for I hardly could bear the pain—it came to my mind, all the story of the cross on the hill; and I thought how bad it must be to be hung up by nails—it would drive me mad, I think. And I thought, if Jesus bore it all gladly to save us, I ought to be glad of my pain, as it makes me care for nothing but religion. And then it seemed as if I understood how my sins had helped to nail Him there: and I did ask so hard to be made sorry for my cruel wicked doings, that I got in a burning fever. But it has done me good. I feel quite happy like now. I've had a dream that Jesus put His bleeding hands on my head, and whispered that thing you told me yesterday, 'My blood has availed for thee.'"

THE CONTINENT CROSSED.

DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—In the March number of our Constitutional magazine for 1861, will be found an account of the starting of the VICTORIAN EXPLORING EX-PEDITION, under the most auspicious circumstances. Since then I have communicated what authentic information I could obtain respecting the progress of the Expedition, in which I have taken a great interest; and now, after many months of wearying uncertainty and painful suspense, authentic intelligence has reached us, that the gallant Burke and his brave companions had fulfilled their mission, that they had crossed and re-crossed the continent; and then, exhausted under sufferings, within the very lines of safety, they sank down and died, leaving only one of their number to tell the tale of the hardships they had endured. When the fate of the explorers became known, the most intense excitement was manifested, and feelings excited in many breasts too deep for tears.

We remember the account of the imposing cavalcade starting from Melbourne, amidst the cheers and farewells of thousands. How they journeyed with ease and safety to Menindie, and leaving a reserve party there under Mr. Wright, pushed on their course towards Cooper's Creek. How a second party commanded by Mr. Brahe, was left at Cooper's Creek, with instructions to stay three or four months, and then, the leader having completed all his arrangements in a business like way, started with three trusty fellow explorers into the untracked desert. Boldly and confidently they pursued their way across the continent, until they reached the Gulf of Carpentaria, where the waves of the Indian Ocean break upon the shores, and having encamped a short time vainly looking out for help, they retraced their steps, leaving one of their brave companions a victim to famine and disease.

At length they reached the depot at Cooper's Creek a few hours after Brahe's party had departed. A scanty stock of provisions had been left, which was soon consumed, and for a time they were assisted and sustained by the kindly services of the Aborigines; and, after an ineffectual attempt to reach the nearest settled districts in South Australia by way of "Mount Hopeless," the self-denying Wills perceiving the shadows of death around him, gave his two brave companions his watch and a letter for his father and then desired them to leave him in solitude to perish, while a chance remained for them to escape the death he felt coming on himself. And may we not indulge the hope that though unsoothed by mortal care, he was not alone in that dread hour?

Soon after the leader Burke himself rendered up his life, giving instructions to the only survivor to leave his body unburied, with a pistol in his right hand, that when he was sought he might be recognised as Burke, the explorer. King alone remained alive, who was found by Mr. Howitt's contingent party. The track has been laid; now the path is open, and soon may we expect to see commerce sending forth her messengers to the Gulf of Carpentaria, and Christian missionaries planting the standard of the cross on the great continent.

We honour the exploring heroes who have died in the victory. Their conquests are celebrated in tears, and their mortal remains, now bleaching on the sandy desert just beneath the surface, have to be removed and buried in pomp, and monuments of their greatness have to be built over their graves; but we would not be unmindful of the extreme suffering endured by many of God's servants in exploring the dark moral wastes of this world, and pray that there may be more enterprise displayed in the missionary cause, and more explorers sent out to bless and save mankind.

In order that you may have the whole account I herewith send you the dispatches, notes, narratives, and journals of the explorers, hoping you will find room for them in the magazine.

GEORGE TUDOR HALL.

P.S. The printed dispatches, &c., are extracted from the Bendigo

Advertiser, and are quite authentic. I have sent them by the book post. [From the dispatches we shall probably make some brief extracts in future issues.—Ed.]

3. WHERE DID HE GET THAT LAW?

Is a city in one of the northern states of America lived a lawyer of eminence and talents. He was notoriously profane. He had a negro boy, at whom his neighbours used to hear him swear with awful violence. One day this gentleman met an elder of the Presbyterian church, who was also a lawyer, and said to him, "I wish, sir, to examine into the truth of the Christian religion. What books would you advise me to read on the evidences of Christianity?"

The elder, surprised at the enquiry, replied, "That is a question, sir, which you ought to have settled long ago. You ought not to have put off a subject so important to this late period of life."

"Is it too late?" said the enquirer; "I never knew much about it, but I always supposed Christianity was rejected by the great majority of learned men. I intend, however, now to examine the subject thoroughly myself. I have upon me, as my physician says, a mortal disease, under which I may live a year and a half or two years, but not probably longer. What books, sir, would you advise me to read?"

"The Bible," said the elder.

"I believe you don't understand me," resumed the unbeliever, surprised in his turn, "I wish to investigate THE TRUTH of the Bible."

"I would advise you, sir," repeated the elder, "to read the Bible. And," he continued, "I will give you my reasons. Most infidels are very ignorant of the Scriptures. Now to reason on any subject with correctness, we must understand what it is about which we reason. In the next place I consider the internal evidence of the truth of the Scriptures stronger than the external."

"And where shall I begin," enquired the unbeliever; "at the New Testament?"

"No," replied the elder, "at the beginning—at Genesis."

The infidel bought a commentary, went home, and sat down to the serious study of the Scriptures. He applied all his strong and well-disciplined powers of mind to the Bible, to try rigidly but impartially its truth.

As he went on in his perusal, he received occasional calls from the elder. The infidel freely remarked on what he had read. He liked this passage—he thought that touching and beautiful—but he could not credit a third.

One evening the elder called, and found the unbeliever at his house, or office, walking the room with a dejected look, his mind apparently absorbed in thought. He continued, not noticing that any one had come in, busily to trace and retrace his steps. The elder at length spoke:

"You seem, sir," said he, "to be in a brown study. Of what are you thinking?"

"I have been reading," replied the infidel, "the moral law."

"Well, what do you think of it?" asked the elder.

"I will tell you what I used to think," answered the infidel. "I supposed that Moses was the leader of a horde of banditti; that, having a strong mind, he acquired great influence over a superstitious people; and that on Mount Sinai, he played off some sort of fireworks, to the amazement of his ignorant followers, who imagined, in their mingled fear and superstition, that the exhibition was supernatural."

"But what do you think now?" interposed the elder.

"I have been looking," said the infidel, "into the NATURE of that law. I have been trying to see whether I can add anything to it, or take anything from it, so as to make it better. Sir, I cannot; it is PERFECT."

"I have been thinking," he proceeded, "where did Moses get that law? I have read history:

the Egyptians and adjacent nations were idolaters; so were the Greeks and Romans; and the wisest and best Greeks or Romans never gave a code of morals like this. Where did Moses get this law, which surpasses the wisdom and philosophy of the most enlightened ages? He lived at a period comparatively barbarous, but he has given a law in which the learning and sagacity of all subsequent time can detect no flaw. Where did he get it? He could not have soared so far above his age as to have devised it himself. I am satisfied where he obtained it. It came down from heaven. I am convinced of the truth of the religion of the Bible."

The infidel—infidel no longer—remained to his death a firm and consistent believer in the truth of Christianity.

4. A SWEARER REPROVED.

AN officer much addicted to profane swearing visited one of the deep mines in Cornwall. He was attended by a pious workman who was employed in the works. During his visit to the pit, the officer uttered many profane and abominable expressions, and, as he ascended, in company with the pious miner, finding it a long way, he said to him, "If it be so far down to your work, how far is it to hell?" The miner promptly replied, "I do not know how far it is to hell, sir, but I believe, that if the rope by which we are drawn up should break, you would be there in a minute."

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. Meet for Heaven. A State of Grace upon Earth the only Preparation for a State of Glory in Heaven. By the Author of "Heaven our Home." Edinburgh: William P. Nimmo, 2, St. David Street. London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co.; and Houlston and Wright. 1862.

WHILE the numerous works on science and art are teeming from the press, and are diffusing useful knowledge among all classes of society, we rejoice that in despite of Neology and Puseyism, &c., the religious world calls for and obtains, for its spiritual cravings, works that would have honoured any age and any name.

"Meet for Heaven." How sweet the associations connected with this simple sentence. We are sorry that our limited opportunity will not allow us to peruse the entire work, but from what we have read, we trust to return to the perusal. The Author has our warmest sympathies in the following sentiment given in his preface. "I have in the following chapters viewed Christ's life upon earth as the example of what our life here ought to be; and Christ now in a state of glory in heaven as the pattern of what we are yet to be. Thus I have attempted to exhibit the Lord Jesus as all and in all, both in a state of grace and in a state of glory." Such sentiments are not only in perfect accordance with our views, but more, they are illustrative of doctrines which are destined to triumph to the ends of the world. The work has our cordial commendation.

2. The Mother's Picture Alphabet. Dedicated, by the Special Permission of Her Majesty the Queen, to H. R. H. the Princess Beatrice. London: Published by S. W. Partridge, at the office of "The Children's Friend," 3, Paternoster Row.

This is a real gem, excelling everything of the kind that has come under our notice. The ingenuity displayed in the character and execution of the beautiful designs with which the work is profusely illustrated, the pleasing manner in which useful instruction is furnished, and the religious sentiments whose rich golden tints beautifies the work, will secure for it an enthusiastic reception in the homes of thousands of families who are properly solicitous for improvement in the minds and lives of their children. We wish it the circulation which its merits so richly deserve.

3. The Cloud of Witnesses; or Infidelity Weighed in the Scales and Found Wanting. An Essay for the Million. London: J. B. Sumner, 101, Edgware-road, and all booksellers. Price 9d.

In this work the choice of the witnesses speaks well for the intelligence and prudence of the author. The parties subjoined on behalf of Christianity are such as have done her honour, while those selected from infidel ranks are such as sceptics themselves must generally approve. The impartiality manifested, the shrewdness evinced, the candour and ability displayed, are such as will secure for the work a superior position in its class, while impartial judges will agree that infidelity, when weighed in the balances, is found wanting. And we trust this man-degrading, soul-ruining, God-dishonouring plague, will, in not a few instances, receive a check from the very reasonable, masterly, and cheap pamphlet now before us. It has our cordial recommendation, and best wishes for its success in the mission on which it is sent.

4. The Temperance Dictionary. By the Rev. DAWSON BURNS. Designed to present a condensed record of facts and arguments, in alphabetical order, on topics relevant to the temperance movement; and embracing references, historical, biblical, biographical, scientific, philological, statistical, &c. With a supplement. London: Job Caudwell, 335, Strand, W.C.

THE Author of this work is rendering valuable service to the temperance cause by the publication of the Dictionary, Part I. of which is before us. Prior to our entering on the perusal of this book, we could scarcely conceive that a dictionary on temperance was needed, but when we had carefully scanned the title-page, and then examined the work itself, we not only discovered that what the author proposes in his title-page, is not only carried out, but carried out with an ability and to an extent which surprised, pleased, and profited us.

Parties who wish to be instructed on the temperance question, will find ample information on many subjects, and must be constrained to admit the truthfulness of the author's remark relative to its being a condensed record of facts and arguments, &c., relevant to the temperance movement.

5. The House of Mourning. A Sermon occasioned by the Death of His late Royal Highness the Prince Consort, preached in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Beverley. By the Rev. WILLIAM WHITBY. London: R. DAVIES, Sutton-Street, Commercial-Road, East; and may be obtained of any of the Primitive Methodist ministers. 1862. Price 3d.

This is a good sermon and very appropriate. The arrangement, the style, the doctrines enunciated, and its thoroughly practical character, render it well calculated for usefulness. We can scarcely, however, endorse all that is said, and think the author should have qualified such sentences as the following (p. 11): "For every event, however startling or painful, depend upon it, there was a needs-be, or it would not have been done." The Royal Family worship at Whippingham, near Osborne, and not at Ryde. (See page 17.) With very slight exceptions, we can give the sermon our cordial recommendation.

6. Tweedie's Temperance Almanack for 1862. London: William Tweedie, 337, Strand. Price 3d.

This almanack contains, besides what is common to books of its class, some important statistics which cannot be seriously read without being convinced that after all the efforts made for the promotion of true temperance, our country is still afflictively suffering from the use of intoxicating drinks. These and many other things, the interest of which will remain after the present year, occupies its pages. It is a cheap publication.

7. First Words on Temperance. A Lecture delivered in Exeter-Hall, Dec. 5, 1861, at the request of the Committee of the National Temperance League. By the Rev. ROBERT MAGUIRE, M.A., incumbent of Clerkenwell. London: William Tweedie, 337, Strand.

THIS is a good lecture on a good subject. The rev. lecturer has manifested a prudence and consistency in advocating the cause of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks which do him great credit. We hope the lecture will have a wide circulation.

8. Leaflets for Sunday Scholars. London: Knight and Son, Clerkenwell-close.

FEW things connected with the extensive efforts which are being put forth afford us better ground for hope in reference to the future state of society, than the pious, prudent, scriptural training of children in Sunday-schools. In aiding this blessed work, Knight and Son merit our best thanks for the many excellent works they have published for the benefit of children, and the "Leaflets" before us are certainly a beautiful addition to their former publications. The Scriptures are wisely selected, the poetry simple and suitable, and the illustrations of texts of Scripture are selected from "Daily Bible Teachings," by T. S. Henderson, which is a sufficient recommendation to the "Leaflets." We hope they will be widely diffused in the Sunday-schools through the length and breadth of the land.

9. Young England, a new monthly, comprises many things in common with the newspaper and the magazine. The numbers 1 and 2, January and February, 1862, are before us, and from the superior articles in science and art, with the quality of the paper and the manner in which the work is generally got up, we presume it will be an extensive favourite.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

1. HOCKERING, DEREHAM CIRCUIT.—The village of Hockering is pleasantly situated about five miles eastward of the town of Dereham, and was missioned by the Rev. R. Key, when a society was formed; subsequently, however, it declined, and the labours of our people were withdrawn from the parish.

Three years ago, the place was re-missioned, a society formed, and a large room opened, in which they conducted religious worship under the fostering care of brother and sister Lane. The cause prospered, and the society increased. Shortly after we had commenced operations, a peculiar and interesting circumstance occurred. Mr. Richard Coker, a gentleman residing in the next parish, possessing property in Hockering, of his own accord commenced building a chapel, and many were the conjectures as to who it was for. Before the shell was completed, I waited on him, and succeeded in obtaining a lease thereof for our society for twenty-one years, with covenants for renewal of the same at the expiration of the term. Subsequently, the chapel was opened by us, and the work of God has steadily advanced. At present we number about forty members in society. Having raised a Sabbath-school, we felt the need of a school-room. I waited on Mr. Coker, and told him what we wanted, when he at once offered to give the land for the purpose. A short time since, I was appointed to hold a protracted meeting at Hockering, when Mr. C. kindly invited me to spend a night at his house. While conversing on the subject of building a school-room, I took an opportunity to point out the peculiarity of having a freehold school-room and a leasehold chapel, and suggested the propriety of his making the property over to the Connexion, subject to an annuity of £4 per annum for his own life and that of Mrs. Coker, to which he generously consented, saying, "Ah, well, just as you please; there is nothing like doing good in one's lifetime."

The property, consisting of a neat chapel, 30 feet by 20 feet, and 14 feet high in the walls, built of red bricks with a gallery across one end, and 20 feet of land adjoining, for school-room, is conveyed to trustees by a connexional deed. I may further add, that Mr. and Mrs. Coker are now members of our society, and are warmly attached to Primitive Methodism. May God bless and support them in their declining years; make the chapel the birth-place of many precious souls; stimulate others to follow their example, and grant us a happy meeting in heaven. Amen.

JONATHAN SCOTT.

2. ASHEATH, BRIDGEWATER MISSION.—Dear Editor,—For some time things of a spiritual nature bore a gloomy aspect at Asheath; but, through mercy, of late a joyous change for the better has made its appearance. Members have been led to a consideration of their individual responsibility before God, as "the lights of the world," and they have given themselves to prayer. Souls who were getting weary and cold have been revived; seats which were vacant have been filled; some whose voices were seldom heard in praises, have been enabled to rejoice in the Lord by the power of the Most High. Sinners have been directed to the demands of a suffering Saviour, a slighted Spirit, and an insulted Creator, and have renounced sin, fleeing from the wrath to come. This year has been marked with signs of Divine favour. In closing the last year, at the watch-night service, souls were resolving to live to God, and imploring the assistance of the Spirit. A sinner, who had long slighted Divine grace, was heard crying loudly for pardoning love, which was realized. On the first Sunday of this year, I had the pleasure of speaking to a crowded audience. At the close of the service, a prayer meeting was held, and about three-fourths of the assembly remained, some weeping and others rejoicing, which, we trust, are only the droppings of a shower, the foretaste of a mighty baptism, and the prelude of a glorious revival. God speed the blessed day of universal triumph over sin and Satan is the prayer of yours,

W. DINNICK.

3. PILLAWELL CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—You will feel glad to hear that the good work of God is prospering in Pillawell station. Although trade has been, and is still, in a stagnant state in these parts, yet the converting work is going on steadily in many of our congregations. We have built two chapels and opened them; viz., at Ruardean Hill and Lane End. In the former, fourteen souls have been converted since it was opened; the latter was opened September the 1st and 8th, 1861, when Mr. John Charles, the Revs. W. Best, Baptist minister, and J. Broadhurst officiated. There was a good attendance both days, and a very gracious influence rested on the assemblies. On Monday, September 9th, a tea-meeting was held in a field near the chapel in a marquee, when about 600 persons took tea. A lively religious service followed, addressed by the Rev. G. Stephens, Independent minister, J. Hibbs, and J. Broadhurst. The proceeds of the opening and tea was upwards of £20. The whole cost of this chapel, including purchase of land, deeds, &c., will be somewhat under £150, £50 of which have been raised by collections, &c. The chapel stands in a good locality, is well filled with hearers, and it has been the birth-place of souls. A promising Sabbath-school is also held in it. May the Almighty turn His glory on our beloved Connexion, and on the world. Amen. JOSEPH HIBBS.

4. LANGTHORNE.—Dear Brother Harland,—Referring to the article I sent you touching the revival at Langthorne, Thirsk Circuit, it gives me pleasure to add, the work of the Lord continues to revive. We have concluded another week's protracted meetings. Brother and sister Cawthorne, from Pontefract Circuit, have been labouring with us. They began Tuesday, Jan. 7th, and, with the exception of Saturday, preached every night, including Monday the 13th. At each service the congregations increased, and on Sunday the chapel was filled, and their labours have redounded to the glory of God and the good of souls. God's people have been united; the Spirit has been poured out, and many a poor sinner has been blessed. Twelve persons have professed to be converted. Praise the Lord! May they all be His in that day when He shall make up His jewels! I must not omit to mention a scene which was witnessed on Sunday night. While a poor woman was pleading for mercy, her husband came into the chapel and fetched her out. This was regarded as the signal for united prayer by "the Church unto God for him," and I am happy to add, he, too, has obtained salvation.

5. BROMYARD MISSION.—Dear Editor,—I have been requested to forward to you a few facts of our state and prosperity in this station.

Bringstey is a scattered hamlet about three miles from Bromyard, and contains a population of, perhaps, 300 souls. It was missioned by our people about thirty years ago; but, for want of a suitable place in which to worship, they were compelled to hold their services in the open air, and about five years since, it was erased from the plan; but, in the spring of 1859, a young man, who had obtained salvation while living in Birmingham, returned home to reside with his parents, who, seeing the change Divine grace had effected in him, opened their house for the preaching of the Gospel. The place was again put on the plan, and in a short time, a society was formed. At length an eligible site of land was given by Mr. James Soley. On the 6th of August, 1861, the foundation-stone of the new chapel was laid by Mr. H. Clewer, Birmingham, when addresses were delivered by Mr. Clewer, the Rev. J. P. Jones, Independent, and the writer.

The chapel is built of stone. It is 24 feet by 18 feet outside; 12 feet high from the floor to the wall plate. It has four beautiful cast-iron circular-headed windows. It is fitted up with good back-railed seats, and a rostrum, 5 feet by 3 feet. The chapel will seat about 100 persons. It was opened for Divine worship on the 22nd of December, 1861, when three sermons were preached; those in the morning and evening by the Rev. F. R. Andrews, Ludlow Circuit, and in the afternoon by the writer. The collections amounted to £8 7s. 6d.; total cost, including boundary wall, gate, and palisading, £107; towards which, we have raised from tea-meetings, collections, and donations £37 0s. 2d. Since the opening, our congregations have been excellent, and we have commenced a Sabbath-school, which is well attended, and, we believe, it will be a great blessing to the locality, as there is no other school or place of worship in the immediate neighbourhood. We thank all the kind friends who have assisted us in this undertaking.

High Lane.—Primitive Method-

ism has taken root in this neighbourhood, Mr. John Moore has given land on which we intend to erect a commodious chapel next spring. The deed is made. On Christmas-day a tea meeting was held in a large room. About 170 people partook of the social repast. After which addresses were delivered by Messrs. H. Hall, T. Madders, W. Cane, J. Hall. The chair was taken by Mr. H. Wiggan, Snail-Beech Mines, Salop. The meeting was mighty, three souls professed to find pardon through faith in the Redeemer's blood. The profits are about £5.

Collington.—Our friends at this place have held a tea-meeting, the profits arising therefrom were £3 7s., which they have given towards the erection of the new chapel at High-lane.

Bromyard.—The chapel at this place having at present a debt of £230 upon it, we are thankful to say we intend to reduce the debt £10 in a short time. We have peace within all our borders. May heaven continue to smile on our movements and prosper the work of our hands. Amen.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

1. PREES GREEN CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—We have recently concluded the last of our annual missionary meetings, most of which were of an interesting and blessed character. The money collected amounts to nearly £60; the whole of which has been duly sent to the general treasurer.

This sum is not so great as the amount realized last year, owing to the omission of meetings at important places, in consequence of the re-building and enlargement of their chapels. With these considerations, the sum is more than equal to the last. The Revds. J. Hall and G. Middleton, deputation; with T. Rogers, T. Hall, W. Powell, B. Deakin, A. Adams, J. Hamer, J. Buttery, and other local brethren, rendered efficient service.

It is evident, sir, that the friends here endorse the language of the Psalmist: "To Him shall be given of the gold of Sheba," &c. "His name shall endure for ever, &c., and men shall be blessed in Him; all nations shall call Him blessed." May the great Head of the Church approve and accept of these endeavours to "hasten his kingdom." Amen.

J. GUEST.

This circuit has done very well, but we suggest that no place of importance should be omitted from the mission list. If chapel building, or re-building, interfere with holding the services at the usual time, prudent arrangements should be made to hold them at some other time within the year. Souls are perishing!—Ed.

2. WHITCHURCH CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—Missionary services were held in this station at the following places, on the dates mentioned:—Tattenhall, Brown, Knowl, Hampton Heath, and Marley Green, October 13th, 1861, and four following days. Similar services were held at Whitchurch, Lower Wych, Malpas, Crewe, and Willimoor, November 10th, and four following days. The writer and his colleague, assisted by the Circuit steward, Mr. Broom, and other local brethren, held a meeting at Egerton Green, Dec. 1st. On the 8th, services were held at Tattenhall Lanes, and Burwardsley. At Hetherstone Green, on the 9th; Silston, 8th and 10th; Bradley

Green, 11th; Wrenbury Frith, 12th; and Higher Wych, 15th. The Revds. H. Leech, of Wrockwardine Wood, H. Newman, of Crewe, J. Pickwell, of Wem, and W. E. Saunders, of Newcastle-under-Lyne, served us efficiently as deputations. The Rev. J. Eastwood, of Chester, rendered valuable aid at the Tattenhall meeting, and Messrs. Bickerton, Bateman, and S. Wood, at some others.

Our friends have responded liberally to the calls made upon them. The collectors generally have exhibited increased zeal; and a deeper interest than ever has been manifested in the cause of Christian missions. Hence the sum of £58 Os. 0½d. was collected in this small circuit during 1861, all of which, save local expenses, has been remitted to the general treasurer. The anxiety for the spread of Gospel truth, and the conversion of the world, becomes more intense in this station; and we pray that it may deepen and widen in this circuit, throughout the Connexion, and the universal Church, until men everywhere are blessed in Christ, and all nations call him blessed.

MATTHEW BENNETT.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. HEPHZIBAH CHAPEL, BROMSGROVE.—After the struggles of thirty-eight years, our society at Bromsgrove has succeeded in erecting a chapel, school, and Minister's house, which the Bromsgrove Gleaner says, are “a credit to the architect, and to the body of Christians for whom they have been built.” Our friends endeavour to express their gratitude to God, to rejoice themselves, and to invite others to participate in their new and greatly extended privileges.

Sermons were preached in connection with the opening services by Revds. G. Whitehead, and R. Taylor, on September 1st, 1861. Rev. S. Morris, of Bilston, and Mr. W. Yornold (who was convinced under the first Primitive Methodist sermon, which was preached in Bromsgrove), preached on the 8th; Mr. J. Belcher, of Darlaston; and the Rev. J. Ewence, Baptist, Bromsgrove, on the 15th; and Mr. G. Hancock, of the Reformatory, Itake Prior, and the Rev. J. Bate, Wesleyan, Bromsgrove, on December 1st, 1861.

The collections at all the services were £19 5s. There were two tea and public meetings held in the course of the opening, one on Sept. 2nd, presided over by the Rev. Mr. Owen, of Birmingham; and addressed by Rev. G. Whitehead, and Mr. W. Yornold, and R. Taylor. The other tea meeting was held December 2nd, 1861, presided over by J. W. Round, Esq., of Colmore; and addressed by Messrs. G. Hancock, H. Clewer, J. H. Scruton, Revds. J. Ewence, G. Hinds, Independent, Rubury, and R. Taylor.

Our accounts are not yet closed, but the following are the receipts:—Balance, July the 18th, 1859, £5 2s. 2½d.; dons., £273 18s. 3d.; weekly offerings and penny collections, £1 4s. 11d.; collections, £34 8s. 8d.; tea profits, £32 11s.; a box, cards, and childrens' pence, £2 Os. 9d.; total, £349 5s. 9½d. More is promised, and the cards and books have a balance in favour of the treasurer, yet to come in, besides an open field for donations.

Our disbursements, for ground, enrolment of deed, mortgage, room hire, printing, and other incidental expenses, will be about £100. For building the chapel and schoolroom, with the house, offices, &c., £508 10s; total, £708 10s.

Among our friends who have helped us, we must not forget Mrs. Cultrass, of Belbroughton (now Mrs. John Morton, West Bromwich), who gave us £193 10s.; Mr. Yates gave us £10; Captain Emmott, R. H. G., £8; the late J. H. H. Foley, Esq., M.P., £5; Joseph Wood, Esq., Mayor of Worcester, £5; G. W. Reynolds, Esq., of Birmingham, £5; Mr. W. Walker, £5; a Friend, £5; Mr. J. Witheford, £3; the Hon. F. H. W. G. Calthorpe, M.P., £2; and many others who have given smaller sums. Thanks to all our friends. May the Lord abundantly bless them, and may our lives ever testify that "the Lord of Hosts is with us, and the God of Jacob is our refuge.

R. TAYLOR.

2. SAWSTON, CAMBRIDGE CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—I have great pleasure in forwarding to you an account of the services connected with the opening of a new chapel at Sawston. Our people entered this place about six years ago, and found many of the inhabitants in a state of moral darkness; but they readily received the Word; hence our friends have laboured here with general success, and many souls have been converted to God. But a great difficulty has attended us from the want of a suitable place in which to worship, being confined in a low place, temporarily fitted up for the purpose. At length, our friends purchased a piece of land, in an eligible situation, for £60; and on the 15th of October, the foundation stone of the new chapel was laid. A public meeting was held in the evening, and the proceeds of the day amounted to about £26. A neat, commodious chapel has been erected at a cost of £245. It is 35ft. by 26ft. inside, and 13ft. from the floor to the ceiling, with three windows in each side, and two in front. It is built of white brick, and slated.

The opening services were held on Sunday, Dec. 1st; on Tuesday, Dec. 3rd, a public meeting was held, G. Livett, Esq., in the chair; and on Sunday, Dec. 8th. The officiating ministers were the Revds. J. Keed, J. Wisbey, R. Davies, J. Perkins, C. Player, W. H. Meadows, T. Swindill, J. T. Harrison, and Messrs. Brazier and Henderson. The proceeds of the services amounted to about £38. The total amount of money raised is about £109. So that we hope shortly to have this house of prayer in easy circumstances. We cannot conclude this account without expressing our thanks to all who have helped us. That this house of prayer may be the birthplace of many souls is the prayer of the writer,

J. T. HARRISON.

3. CAWSTON, EAST DEREHAM CIRCUIT.—Cawston, a small market town about eleven miles north by west of Norwich, containing about 1100 inhabitants, was first missioned by the Primitive Methodists nearly thirty years ago. A society was then formed, which has existed until the present. Some years ago, a wooden building was raised, in which the Church worshipped until the structure became so dilapidated, and the society so feeble, as to necessitate the latter to conduct Divine service in a house, free of charge. A short time ago the idea was mooted of building a chapel. But the society was poor. Where must the means come from? Just then a violent and disgraceful onslaught on Primitive Methodism was made through the press, which was answered by the Rev. J. Scott. The result was an illustration of the text, "Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee: the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." The calumniator was discomfited, Primitive Methodism was vindicated, and the people excited to defend the right. It was decided that a chapel should be built, collecting cards were issued appealing to the public for help, which appeal met with a liberal response. A neat chapel is now erected capable of seating about 130 persons. May it be a source of much good. Opening sermons were preached on Sabbaths, November 10th and 17th, 1861, by the Revs. H. Turroll and J. Jackson. And on the following Tuesday afternoon a sermon was preached by the Rev. R. Key, which was followed in the evening by a tea, and a meeting presided over by the Rev. J. Scott, and addressed by Messrs. Key, Jackson, Dalgliah, and Turroll. The services were well attended and liberally supported. The entire cost of the building is £116, towards which we have raised £64 0s. 4½d. To God be all the praise.

JONATHAN DALGLISH.

4. WARDEN, SHEERNESS MISSION.—Dear Editor,—Warden is a small village in the Isle of Sheppey, about eight miles from Sheerness. It is pleasantly situated on the coast of the south channel, and is surrounded by charming scenery. Its little antique church, standing only about five rods from the edge of the cliff—its large land slips—the many and curiously constructed fossils washed out of the earth, and left bare by the tide—and the beautiful sea prospect, with vessels steaming and sailing to and from the mouth of the Thames, render it truly picturesque.

About twenty-two years ago the Primitive Methodist missionaries first preached the gospel at Warden. The inhabitants listened to the truth spoken, some of them received it into their hearts. A small society was formed, and from that time until recently, religious services have been conducted in various cottages. Considerable inconvenience has, however, at times been felt for want of a permanent place of worship.

When the writer came to this station in July, 1860, he found the society anxious about a chapel, and £3 10s. had been collected for that purpose. At the December Quarterly Meeting of the same year, it was resolved that efforts be made to secure a plot of land on which to erect a chapel. After much difficulty we succeeded in obtaining an eligible site, 20 feet frontage by 40 feet in depth, on a lease for fifty years, at £1 per annum groundrent. About the same time a weather board building in Sheerness was offered for sale, which the trustees believed might be conveyed to Warden, and converted into a neat little chapel.

Accordingly application was made to the building committee, and sanction obtained to purchase the building in question. It was purchased for the sum of £20, taken to Warden, and placed on a foundation of brick work 2 feet 6 inches. An entirely new roof was put upon it, covered with the best duchess slates, with a cement ridge and iron spouting. The sanctuary is 27 feet 6 inches long by 14 feet wide, and 10 feet 6 inches from the floor to the wall plate.

The chapel was opened for Divine worship on Sunday, December 8th, 1861, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. W. H. Smith, Independent minister of Sheerness.

On Monday, December 9th, a tea-meeting was held, when about 90 persons partook thereof. After tea a public meeting was held. Mr. T. Brightman (Wesleyan), of Queenborough, took the chair, and addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. Samson (Congregationalist), Messrs. R. Barron, J. Studds, and G. Beardsall.

On Sunday, December 15th, the Rev. J. Bolam (Wesleyan), preached twice. The collections and profits of tea amounted to £5 18s. The total cost of the building, including deeds is about £78, towards which sum we have realised £34, and intend making it up to about £40 by Midsummer.

REUBEN BARRON.

5. FROSTERLEY, WESTGATE CIRCUIT.—A chapel was built at this place in 1829, which was too small to contain all who wished to attend it. The society therefore resolved to erect a larger sanctuary and two cottages. The foundation stone was laid by Mr. George Race, sen. The new chapel was opened on Saturday, December 7th, 1861, by a public meeting. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Jackson, J. Matfin, and H. Phillips, after 220 persons had partaken of tea, which was presented by a few friends, and held in the old chapel. On Sunday, the 8th, two sermons were preached by Mr. Jackson and one by Mr. Phillips, and on Sunday, the 22nd, two sermons were delivered by the Rev. W. Sanderson, and one by Mr. Race. The services were well attended, were very effective, and produced £23 5s. The chapel contains 190 sittings, with sloping backs, and a platform sufficiently large to accommodate five persons. It is a neat building, in the Gothic style, with a considerable plot of ground in front, fenced in by neat walls and iron railings. It is conveniently situated. The cost, including land, deed, plans, and specifications, amounts to £445 13s. 5d. £225 13s. 5d., including £54 from the sale of the old chapel, and £25 generously given by the London Lead Company, have been received, which will leave £220 debt on the premises. The money is borrowed on notes, and the rents of the cottages will pay the interest. The sittings are all let, which will enable the trustees to speedily reduce the debt, and with good management and the blessing of God, they will be able to pay it all off in a few years.

The Lord has given us favour in the eyes of the people who have freely come to our help. And it is very gratifying to add that sixty souls are believed to have been converted to God in the new sanctuary since the day it was opened for Divine service. The glory of the latter house promises to be greater than that of the former.

6. KIRBYMOORSIDE.—Dear Editor,—Your numerous readers (and not less yourself) will be gratified to learn that a "new era" has dawned upon Primitive Methodism in Kirbymoorside, Pickering Circuit. It may be necessary to state, that from 1824, our people worshipped in a very lowly sanctuary. The situation of the chapel was a serious impediment to the cause. When we determined to erect a new chapel, some thought the difficulty of disposing of the old one would never be overcome; for, although we paid rent for it, everybody considered that we had a real interest in it, as we had spent part in fittings, &c., for it. The difficulty consisted in neither us nor the parties to whom we paid rent being able to shew a proper title to the chapel. However, we concluded a purchase of the property in the first instance for £60, and agreed to perfect the title of the vendors (whose joint claim was £185). This being done, we re-sold the whole to Lord Feversham (to be used as a national school) for the sum of £120, and £5 gas fittings.

Our new edifice was commenced on May 3rd, 1861, under very auspicious circumstances; and it was opened for Divine worship, with similar indications of good, October 13th, 20th, and 25th, 1861. Sermons were preached on the first of these dates by Henry J. M'Culloch, Esq., of York, and T. Dearlove; by the Rev. W. Lister, of Stockton-upon-Tees, on the second; and on the last, the Rev. C. Smith, of York, preached in the afternoon. After which a tea-meeting was held, and addresses were delivered by Mr. M'Culloch, chairman, and Messrs. C. Smith, W. Bennett, W. Coulson, T. Dearlove, G. N. Hutchinson, J. Milner, and W. T. Lumley.

We held our final tea-meeting for the building fund on Christmas-day last, it being exactly twelve months since we inaugurated the project. We had a very nice social gathering, and the meeting was addressed by Messrs. T. Stephenson, chairman, W. T. Lumley; and the Revs. J. Abbs (Independent), G. N. Hutchinson, J. Milner, and the writer.

The site of the chapel, comprising in one purchase three tenements and a large garden, is all that can be desired for locality. £260 is the sum we gave for it. Our outlay in the erection will increase this sum to about £1,000. We have a large school-room, and two small rooms for select classes, with coal-cellar and boiler-house, all on the ground floor, with easy access to each. Above these we have a chapel, 13 yards by 12, very light and lofty, without the least probability of obstruction to lights in either chapel or school. The internal arrangements are good. The gallery stands on cast-iron pillars, and is circular. There are five windows in front, and a large one in the back wall, all circular-headed. The three front ones in the gallery, and the one behind, have top squares of stained, and bottom ones of fluted glass; the light is softened and subdued. The other windows in the chapel and school have fluted glass in the low sashes. We have a neat rostrum, 12 by 4 feet. The centre and under the side galleries partially pewed. The chapel is ventilated under the ceiling cornice with four of "Sherringham's patent;" besides which, there is a perforated centre flower. The property has been effectively drained. The external appearance of the chapel is neat. The basement story is of stone, and the front wall of the story above is of red stock bricks, with white brick pilasters (pointed with black mortar), having caps and bases of rubbed freestone neatly hewn. There are two principal entrances into the chapel, with segment heads, which, as well as the window heads, string course, and plinth, are of scoured freestone. The "frieze," bearing the inscription, "Primitive Methodist Chapel, A.D. 1861," runs right across the front wall, and is crowned with a pediment which has a deep cornice, giving an exquisite finish to the superstructure. The entrances in front are reached by two flights of steps, and the whole is enclosed by wrought-iron palisades. There is a spacious yard behind, walled round, and asphalted.

It is impossible for me to say too much for the zeal, energy, and liberality of our friends here, since the chapel scheme was launched; nor yet is your space available for special mention of all who have "brought their silver and their gold with them unto the name of the Lord their God," to "beautify the place of his sanctuary." Still, in the hope of exciting similar efforts, and of inspiring hope in other parts of the Connexion, perhaps you will allow me another line or two for our Report. Mr. and Mrs. Lumley have given £30; Mrs. Pool, £20; Mr. and Mrs. Nassau, £10; Mr. Garbutt and family, £10; Sunday-school scholars, £10 3s. 6d.; the Right Hon. Lord Feversham, the Right Hon. W. E. Duncombe, M.P.; Rev. D. W. Carter (vicar of Kirby); J. Hartas, Esq.; G. T. Leeman, Esq.; and Messrs. J. Dobson, J. Sturdy, and T. Stephenson, £5 each; Mr. R. and Mrs. Richardson, £5; Mr. T. H. and Mrs. Charter, £5; Mr. R. and Mrs. Sawdon, £5; Mr. R. and Mrs. Sample, £3 10s; Mr. W. Sonley, £3; W. Brand, Esq., and Mrs., £3; Mr. W. Hunter and family, £3; Mrs. and Miss Clarke, £3; Messrs. J. Parker, G. Hornsey, and Miss R. Sturdy, £2 10s. each; A. Wood, Esq., and a "Friend" (by Mrs. H.), £2 each, and many more donations, declining from the last-mentioned sum to even the "widow's mite."

We have realized by donations £230 4s. 5d; public collections and tea-meetings, £102 9s. 3d.; sale of old chapel, £55; gift from Sunday school fund, £15; Christmas singing, £15 0s. 0½d.; total, £426 14s. 6½d. Besides the above, we have had a very great deal of leading and labour given, which has been a great saving to us, at least £50. Sittings have already been let, amounting to about £26 per annum. We hope by school rent, anniversary, Christmas tea, and rent of house and garden, to meet incidental expences, and reduce the debt yearly. Our best thanks are gratefully tendered to our esteemed friend Mr. McCulloch, for his efficient services, and for the handsome gift of twenty guineas, and to all who have helped us. "To God, even the Father, and his Son, Jesus Christ," be everlasting praises given, and let all the people say Amen.

THOMAS DEARLOVE.

7. KNIGHTON.—This is an ancient town of considerable note in South Wales, and connected with its history and that of the neighbourhood, are many interesting associations. It is the greatest market town in the county, also the largest of the Radnor contributory boroughs, and returns Sir G. C. Lewis, who has filled many distinguished offices in the Cabinet, and at the present time is the minister at war. The Government of Knighton is vested in a bailiff, who is elected annually by the freeholders of the borough, and that honour is now conferred upon Mr. J. D. Rutter, our branch steward, long a true friend to the Connexion, and one of its generous supporters. The celebrated "Offa's Dyke," which was made by that Saxon king to keep the Welsh in the interior of their own country, runs through a portion of the town.

Professor Earl, who passed through this district some three or four years ago, recommended the landed proprietors to preserve this wonderful monument of olden times by planting trees upon its brow; and in his diary says of Knighton that "It is beautifully situated, and strung like a bead upon the necklace of time." While generations of humanity have departed, and the temples of human glory passed away with the ages, "Offa's Dyke," in many parts, remains in a state of good preservation.

About two miles from this town, are to be seen on the summit of a hill, the ruins of a British encampment, said by some to be the scene where the great Caractacus fought his last battle. Besides these, and other circumstances, which render the history of this neighbourhood very interesting; nature has done much to enrich the scenery. The district is indeed picturesque, and in some parts truly sublime.

The town itself is built near to the River Teme, and overlooks a finely cultivated and beautiful valley, sheltered on one side by richly wooded hills, and on the other by a range of healthy mountains, all of aqueous formation, and belonging to that class of rocks which geologists term the Silurian system.

The Central Wales Railway passes all up the valley, the first section of which reaches to this town, and unfortunately it has occasioned the loss of our old chapel. We succeeded, however, in making a purchase of land in a very excellent situation, indeed one of the best in the town, and it was deemed a favour to have it at a cost of £200. The chapel is built; its dimensions were given in our report of the foundation-stone laying, hence we need not repeat it, but would give a limited description of the character and form of the building, which displays considerable architectural skill and taste, and is really an ornament to the neighbourhood. It is well built of Kinsley stone, with Bath-stone facings. There is a turret in the front which is intended for a clock, which would be a public benefit, as the chapel has a very central and prominent position. The windows are of the decorated style, and now they are glazed have a very beautiful appearance; two are entirely of ornamental glass, and the others have ornamental borders with plain coloured glass in the traceries. It has an open roof, painted blue between the rafters, and the rest stained and varnished, which has a pretty effect. Over the rostrum is a fine arch, underneath a small vestry, and in front a semi-circular communion rail of chaste design. The pews are on a modern plan without doors, and of a gradual incline from the entrance lobby to the chancel. The gas fittings are also really elegant—they rise in four brass pillars from the floor, each having several branches with sixteen jets, and when lighted they have a beautiful appearance—suggesting to the mind of the observer the idea of so many trees of light. There is a small gallery over the lobby, intended principally for the accommodation of the children. Beneath the chapel is a spacious school-room, designed for week-day and Sabbath-schools.

The opening services were held on Sunday, January 5th, 1862, when the Rev. W. Jones and T. Bateman officiated to the pleasure and profit of their hearers. Mr. W. Blackmore, bandmaster of Presteign, who has been engaged to play the harmonium, was in attendance on the occasion, and rendered very efficient service. The collections for the day amounted to the sum of £40.

On Christmas-day we held a tea-meeting preparatory to the opening, which was attended by upwards of 700 people. The public meeting was held in the Assembly Room, James Nott, Esq., took the chair, and in the course of the service addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Huff, G. Middleton, T. Brothwood (Wesleyan), and Messrs. E. Cowdall, T. Chapman (Baptist), J. Brown, and J. Udell. The profits were a little over £20. Our whole outlay, including the purchase of land, expenses of excavations, extras, &c., will be about £1200. Towards this sum we shall raise from the sale of the old chapel, tea-meetings, collections, donations, &c., from £700 to £750. As yet we cannot give the exact items, but we purpose not having a debt of more than £450. We cannot give the names of all who have rendered assistance, as it would take up too much space; but we should like to make honourable mention of a few. Mr. John Wilson, one of our members and a liberal supporter, has given £30, besides a promise of £10 annually to lower the debt. Mr. J. D. Rutler, our branch steward, has given about £20, besides allowing us to occupy his warehouse for our religious services, at a great inconvenience to himself. We would also gratefully acknowledge the kindness of R. Green Price, Esq., who drew up our conveyances free of expense. Mr. John Edwards has given us £6. Mr. J. Nott, £10; Mr. Jones, £10; We are grateful to all who have favoured us with their sympathy and support. Above all we glorify

God for His goodness toward us in our enterprise; and we enter our newsanctuary with renewed energy, praying for the baptism of olden times, and we are resolved to seek the salvation of sinners. Our most ardent wish is, that this house may be filled with the Divine Presence, and that in it many souls may be born for the skies.

G. MIDDLETON.

TEA MEETINGS.

1. SPENNY-MOOR, DURHAM CIRCUIT.—Mr. Harland,—I am glad to have some good thing to tell you and your readers. We have been enlarging our chapel at Spenny-Moor, in this circuit, at a cost of a little more than £100, all of which will be paid in a short time, and the chapel free from debt. On December 25th, 1861, we held a tea meeting. Supplies were given by our members and friends, of the congregation, the proceeds of which gave to the chapel funds £21 3s. 8d. An interesting public meeting was held after tea, which was addressed by Messrs. Body, Thoburn, Shields, Bennett, (Wesleyan,) Richardson, and Spoor. Mr. R. Jackson, of Durham, was in the chair; and on January 1st, 1862, the choir of the chapel gave a concert, which brought to the funds of the chapel £6 4s. We have a very interesting society at Spenny-Moor, and much good has been done from time to time. At present we are increasing in numbers, and the chapel is still crowded on the Sabbath-day. In some other parts of our circuit the Lord has been passing by and giving us a blessing, and we are looking for the great salvation.

At one of our places on New Year's-day, an old man, seventy-six years of age, was brought to God; and a week since last night, an old woman, eighty-one, stepped into liberty, and went home happy in Jesus.

"He is bringing to his fold, Rich and poor, young and old."

O for more of God in our own hearts, then we shall rush to rescue souls from hell. J. SPOOR.

2. NEWLYN, PENZANCE CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We held our Newlyn Chapel anniversary tea meeting on Wednesday, January 22nd, 1862; the provision was given by the ladies, and the tables very ably presided over by them. The profits amounted to the sum of £22 2s. 10d., which was placed to the chapel fund. At the public meeting Brother B. G. Battern was called to the chair; and after a few introductory remarks, the following brethren addressed the congregation: J. Tornan, W. A. Rouffignack, T. Pascoe, and J. Hawkins. We thank all the friends who have helped us. We gratefully add that a few souls have recently been converted in the circuit.

C. T. HARRIS.

SPECIAL EFFORTS.

1. WALLINGFORD CIRCUIT.—This circuit has been in an embarrassed state for some years past, but brighter days are dawning. Most of its chapels were in difficult circumstances, owing principally, to the one-third of the cost not having been raised at the time of the erection.

Wallingford chapel was in a sad state; a debt of £440 was upon it, besides £30 arrears of interest. It was thought by some that the chapel must be sold, but a few noble spirits, who have borne the burden and heat of the day for many years, felt that an effort ought to be made to save the chapel to the society. The case was laid before the General Chapel Fund Committee, and £30 were kindly promised on the condition that £70 were raised by the united efforts of our friends, so that we might reduce the debt £100. The matter was taken up heartily by the circuit, our own people coming forward nobly. The various circuits in the district were appealed to, and several of them rendered help. Many friends in various parts of the country assisted. Mr. J. Eustace gave £10. Our Church of England and Dissenting friends at Wallingford greatly aided us. On Christmas-day, 1861, a special service was held to assist in winding up the matter. Mr. H. Coles, of Ewelme, preached in the morning; in the afternoon 130 persons sat down to tea; a meeting was held in the evening, Mr. H. Eggleton in the chair; a cheering report was read relative to the effort, that had been made, and £7 were realized from the day's services. The result of this special effort has enabled us to reduce the debt £100. We have also paid the interest for the year, £22, and have £14 promised toward the arrears of interest. With thanks to our kind friends and with gratitude to God, we raise our Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us."

DANIEL HARDING.

Since the above was written C. Morrell, Esq., sent for the writer, and gave him £10 toward the chapel fund, which will enable us to reduce the debt £110.—D. H.

2. GREETLAND, HALIFAX CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor, — Yourself and many others, who read your interesting magazine, will be happy to learn that the members of our society at Greetland, as well as others, have been making various efforts for the benefit of their chapel, which they wish to be recorded in your interesting periodical. The chapel was built in 1837, and cost £450. The debt, when the chapel was finished, was £370. Since then the sanctuary has been enlarged, and a new school-room has been built, which cost £288; this sum has been paid off. During the last winter, as gas-light was being admitted into various houses and public places in the village, it was deemed necessary to introduce it into our chapel. The cost was £17 11s. 4d., which sum has been raised by special efforts, except 19s. 9½d., and this we expect will soon be forthcoming. Again, during the last summer, being wishful to have an organ in the chapel, and thinking it would be an inducement to some to attend, the friends commenced efforts to purchase a small one. They succeeded, and got a good one nicely fixed in the chapel; and its beneficial effects in the congregational singing, is apparent to all who attend divine service in this place. The total cost is £39 17s. 10d., towards which the sum of £30 1s. 2½d. has been raised by subscriptions, £4 9s. 11d. by collections, and £2 18s. 8½d. by tea profits on January 1, 1862. Besides these efforts we have great pleasure in stating that during the last two years the ordinary income of the chapel has so much improved, that, from this source we have been enabled to reduce the debt on the trust property £20, leaving £340 on the premises. In this place we have occasionally witnessed the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the conversion of sinners, but we want to see more of these instances.

O that God may grant us a general revival of pure religion.

A. WORSNOP.

JUBILEE SERVICE.

BELPER CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—We have lately held some interesting Jubilee meetings in this circuit, at Cross-of-Hands, Mercaston, Fritchley, Milford, and Turnditch. The Rev. S. Antliff, of Derby, assisted us at the services. At Cross-of-Hands a few friends have abandoned smoking, and have procured a box in which to harvest the smoking money for fifteen months, towards the Jubilee

Fund. One of the same friends speaks of giving a pig, if the other members will feed it. And another speaks of animals of a different kind as offerings to God in aid of the Jubilee movement. The Magazine cover will apprise the reader of what is already given and promised in this circuit; we shall, however, do more than our promises, God helping us.

JOHN BARFOOT.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARIES.

1. CAMBRIDGE.—Dear Mr. Editor.—Being requested to send a line to the Magazine respecting our FITZROY STREET Chapel Anniversary, I beg to forward you the following particulars. Our superintendent, the Rev. T. Swindill, preached twice on the 15th December, 1861. After the evening sermon several penitents found peace, and three have united with us in church fellowship. The afternoon service was very impressive. A number of the brethren gave addresses full of pith and point; others prayed: the Spirit worked mightily. Altogether it was a day to be remembered. Glory be to God. Though great efforts were made by Mr. Swindill to get a stranger, the trustees wished him not to do so, after he had failed in the first instance, knowing that the Cambridge friends are not fond of new faces, but urged him to take the services himself. The results have fully justified our expectations, we having cleared about £6 for the trust funds.

We held a tea-meeting on the 16th, and a public-meeting after. Mr. Swindill was called to the chair. Brothers J. Read, Fawcett, of Sunderland, Barns, and Rev. E. Howchin, of St. Ives, and the chairman addressed the meeting. In the whole of the circuit and branch we have peace and growing prosperity. To God be all the glory.

JOHN BARTON.

2. BRADLEY GREEN, TUNSTALL CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—Anniversary services in connection with this place were celebrated on Sunday and Monday, January 12th and 13th, 1862.

On Sunday, soul-stirring sermons were preached in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. W. Sanderson, of Kirton Lindsey, to attentive congregations.

On Monday, a lecture was given by Mr. Sanderson; subject, "The Contented Christian." The sum realised was upwards of £11, which is less than the amount obtained last year; the probable cause is owing to the general depression of trade in this part.

That the smile of our God may be upon us, and his salvation be felt in all our places of worship, is the humble prayer of

FOREIGN RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

1. SANDHURST CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY, BENDIGO CIRCUIT, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA. — On Sunday, November 3rd, 1861, two sermons were preached by the writer. The congregations were good, especially in the evening, when the chapel was well filled; the presence of the Lord was manifested among his people, and, we hope, much good was done. On the following day, a tea and public meeting were held, which quite exceeded our expectations. Addresses of a profitable character were delivered at the public meeting by Messrs. Morton, chairman, Warne, and Hall (Primitives), Hooper and Simson (Wesleyans), Robinson (Baptist, late of Hackney, London). O, that in the great decisive day, it may be seen that this meeting was productive of great spiritual good to many precious souls. The sum of £19 12s. 1d. was raised in cash, and £2 1s. 6d. in promises, out of which £6 12s. 6d. have to be deducted for expenses of tea and printing, leaving a balance with the promises of £15 1s. 1d. All praise and glory to our God.

GEORGE TUDOR HALL.

2. HOBART TOWN, TASMANIA. — Dear Brother Harland, — I am sure you and the thousands of readers of your magazines will be pleased to hear a little about the prosperity of Zion in this part of the world. Through the mercy of God, we have been permitted to hold our third quarterly meeting on this mission. The last quarter has been the best, in every respect. Praise the Lord. During the quarter, upwards of forty souls have been converted to God. After filling up vacancies occasioned by removals, we report a net increase for the quarter of twenty-four members.

Some of the services during the past quarter have been so much like some of our best meetings on the Isle of Wight and Plymouth missions, that, at times, I can scarcely believe that I am sixteen thousand miles from England. Five weeks ago, I commenced a course of lectures on the "Prodigal Son," delivered on Sabbath evenings. After the first lecture, I desired all who had a desire to "flee from the wrath to come;" to come forward, and we would pray for them, and point them to Jesus. Twelve immediately responded to the invitation from the pulpit. After a protracted and severe conflict with the "powers of darkness," ten found peace with God through faith in Jesus. One of the ten had been a Primitive Methodist in England; but had, for some years past, been a miserable backslider. The next Sabbath evening, eight were converted; after the fourth lecture nine. Last Sabbath evening in the prayer meeting, five more returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls. Besides these, we have had several converted at our week evening services.

Dear Editor, I believe I am where God would have me to be. These meetings, considering the good realized, are remarkably quiet, but very powerful. Just fancy yourself standing by me in the reading-desk, as I invite penitents to the "penitent's pew." Last Sabbath evening, the wife of a coasting captain found peace; this evening, her husband was with her at chapel. Prayer was answered; the Word found a way to his heart, and when the invitation was given to penitents to come forward, she, with a heart filled with gratitude and love to God, took the right arm of her broken-hearted husband; a friend took the left arm, and they helped him to the penitent's pew. Perhaps you say, "And who was that stout old lady?" A heavenly smile was on her countenance—tears of joy were streaming down her face—her heart was dancing for joy! Do you say this must be the rejoicing of a mother, occasioned by the return of a "Prodigal Son?" Yes; that is his mother! Following was a mother with her babe in her arms, weeping on account of her own sins, coming to give herself and her infant to Jesus.

On the other side of the chapel, there was coming an old man, smiting his breast, crying in the greatest mental agony, "Oh, this load! oh, this load!" When I told him Jesus could remove it, he said, "Oh, sir, it is too good news to be true." Again I assured him it was true; when he exclaimed, "Oh, sir, I have been a desperate character!" Jesus, however, delivered him, and sent him home rejoicing. Closely following this old man, were three of the Sabbath school boys, crying aloud for mercy. Oh! Mr. Editor, a description worthy of the scene, demands an angel's pen. Parents and children, old and young, all weeping together at the feet of Jesus.

Now let me invite you to one of our class-meetings, Monday evening, in our house. There are seventeen in the class, fifteen present, one of the two absent, has recently been prostrated and almost robbed of his speech by a paralytic stroke; but is peacefully waiting his "change." The other absent one has lost a child by death. All present seem happy. A husband who had long been praying for his wife, on going home from class last Monday evening, found her on her knees crying for mercy! This evening he has brought her with him, happy in the love of Jesus. This now happy pair have seated between them their eldest son, a boy of some fourteen summers, who, last evening, sought and obtained the pardon of his sins.

Another happy couple have with them a son of fifteen years, who also obtained salvation last evening. Every heart is big with joy, and every tongue pours forth the praises of God.

The class over, the prayer-meeting commences—every one anxious to make known by "prayer and supplication his desires unto God—three commence praying at once. One young man of piety and considerable promise of usefulness, with a full heart, and a soul big with desire, owning the poverty of the language of mortals to express the desires, and describe the feelings of a Christian heart, exclaims, "O God! give us language to express ourselves;" everyone responding "Amen." One of the boys in the fulness of his heart, love, and boyish simplicity, prayed to God to bless his parents, brothers, and sisters, his minister, the Sunday school, and "everybody;" and he felt he was "especially" indebted to Jesus. I can assure you, Mr. Editor, these are "times of refreshing" from the presence of God. I often think if I could spend an hour or two in conversation with some of our young men, I could persuade them to come and try to save some of the deathless souls on this island.

I trust the work of the Lord is prospering in England, and I pray that this year may be one of great prosperity.

EDWARD COOK PRITCHARD.

O B I T U A R Y.

1. ELIZA MARFLEET, of Wainfleet, was born in 1833, and departed this life on the 30th of May, 1861. Before her conversion her life was strictly moral; almost from the dawn of reason she thought religion to be the pearl of great price, and she often felt the convincing power of the Holy Spirit on her mind. Nevertheless like thousands more she delayed giving her heart to the Lord for some years, but in December, 1857, while hearing a sermon, preached by the writer, she felt her awful condition as a sinner; in the prayer-meeting she knelt at the mercy seat and pleaded with strong cries and tears for pardon, and after a struggle she obtained the blessing, and went home happy in the love of Jesus. The next morning she felt herself assailed concerning her acceptance with God, fears rushed into her mind, but she struggled in silent agony, and soon became victorious. She united with our people at Wainfleet, and continued a consistent member unto death. Her piety was deep, her end was peace, her death was victory; her sufferings were intense at times, but through grace she bore them with resignation. She was found at the last rooted and grounded in the Lord Jesus Christ, therefore she smiled at the monster, and a faintly uttered shout echoed "Glory," as she was entering the valley, and when speech was gone her lips moved, but no sound was heard. At last she raised her hand as a token of victory, and waved adieu to all below, and launched away to glory.

THOMAS NICKELS.

2. DIED June 17th, 1861, JOHN HOLMES, of Crich, Ripley Circuit, in the thirty-ninth year of his age. He was converted to God and united with the Primitive Methodist church when he was about thirty years of age. He had attended the Established Church and assisted in their Sunday-school, and had been moral in his conduct for some time, but knew nothing of a change of heart until he heard our ministers preach that word that is the power of God unto salvation.

"He heard the glad sound,

He soon became useful in our Sabbath-school, first as a teacher, and then as superintendent. In 1853 a new chapel was erected, he willingly became trustee, and was useful in that capacity. He was a thorough Primitive Methodist, he loved the Connexion, and rejoiced in its success. He oft inquired after the work of God in the circuit, he read our Magazines that he might know what was going on in the Connexion at home and abroad. During the latter part of his life he was the chief support of his widowed mother, which he rendered cheerfully as unto the Lord. He loved God and all mankind, he was much respected by those who knew him, especially by those who knew him best. His religion was of the right sort, his life was consistent, he loved his Bible and read it much, and practised what he read. About two or three years ago, he was seized with consumption. During that time he has suffered much, but never murmured, "nor wished his sufferings less." Patience had its perfect work. He was confined to his bed during the greater part of the last year of his life. I and my colleague frequently visited him, and we always found him fixed on the "Rock of Ages," enjoying a good hope through grace. While he was in health, he was regular in his attendance on the means of grace, especially his class. His leader and the friends generally speak highly of him, and all acknowledge him to have been a good man. His end was peace.

J. STEPHENSON.

3. RHODA, the wife of James BURROWS, was born at Worlingham, Suffolk, in 1798, and died at Chediston, Wangford Circuit, June 24th, 1861. She spent the first thirty years of her life without a saving knowledge of the truth. But she was strictly moral in her conduct, and prided herself in that. Under the ministry of the late Mr. W. Braithwaite, a little more than thirty years ago, our departed sister was led to see her lost condition as a sinner before God, and being directed to Jesus by the preacher and the praying host, she realized an interest in Christ's blood, through faith, and amid the shoutings of believers, and the rejoicings of angels, she sang—

"My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear;
He owns me for His child,
I can no longer fear.
With confidence I now draw nigh,
And Father! Abba, Father! cry!"

She immediately entered into fellowship with the society at Chediston, of which she remained a member until her removal to the church triumphant. The ministers were hospitably entertained at her house, and the cause of Christ had in her a friend and liberal supporter. For the last seven years of her life she was a great sufferer from paralysis, but endured patiently, being fully assured "that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed." From the nature of her disease, but little can be said of her state of mind; we have, however, no doubt as to her safety, and believe she is now before the throne of God, where her bereaved and sorrowing husband and friends hope shortly to join her for ever. Let scepticism mock at the hope of immortality which the Christian entertains, and which sustains him in the hour of dissolution; let it exult in the vain and delusive hope of annihilation, let it boast of fancied security, let it give for a resting place amid the pangs of dissolving nature; the shifting shaking foundations of which it boasts, but rather, yea, a thousand times rather, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his;" peaceful, or triumphant—but safe.

WILLIAM CHAPMAN.

4. MARGARET, the wife of William HOLMAY, died at Colliery Dykes, Shotleybridge Circuit, June 23rd, 1861. She was born in 1793, and was the subject of early religious impression, but not having pious parents to take her by the hand and lead her to the house of God, neither any one to direct her to the Saviour of sinners, she remained in sin till she arrived at the age of twenty-one. In 1814 she gave her heart to God, and received her first ticket at Shield-row, among the Wesleyan Methodists, and continued with them until the Primitive Methodists visited that place. Their lively, earnest, energetic mode of serving God attracted her and her husband, they became attached to the preachers and people, and cast in their lot among them, and continued up to the day of her death. During her pilgrimage, she was called to pass through a great deal of affliction, which often detained her from the house of God, but she did not forget the hour of prayer and spiritual improvement. While others hastened to the sanctuary to hear the word, and converse with God in his own house, she had communion with him at home. The Bible, "Baxter's Saint's Rest," and other good books were carefully and prayerfully read. Thus her mind was enriched with stores of Gospel truth, and precious promises. She was not ashamed of her master, but took him with her into whatever company she entered, and honoured him by her exemplary conduct and pious conversation. She often expressed a desire to see her family converted to God, and she had the satisfaction of seeing them all converted but one (her youngest son), and she died believing that he will be converted, when her body is in the grave. May God grant that it may be so. What encouragement for parents who long for the salvation of their family. She had an afflicted and very frail body to contend with, and was deprived of privileges which others enjoyed, and was subject to all the common trials of life, yet she and her pious husband, who is a local preacher, had the pleasure of seeing one daughter die happy in the Lord; two sons become local preachers among us, and the rest were converted, with the exception referred to. During her last illness she enjoyed great peace of mind. She often repeated what she called her favourite hymn.

"Thou Shepherd of Israel and mine,
The joy and desire of my heart,
For closer communion I pine,
I long to reside where Thou art."

On the morning of the last day of her life, she said, with firm assurance, "I shall be happy to day." Often during the day, with uplifted eyes, she said, "I am coming. I am coming." And at her last moments she beckoned to her daughter Alice, and said, "I see Mary, bless the Lord, I see Mary:" that was her daughter who died in the Lord six years before. And she passed away in the sixty-eighth year of her age. Thus lived and died a faithful wife, affectionate mother, and a true Christian.

MARK HOLLIDAY.

5. WILLIAM OWEN was born at Haslington, April 19th, 1787. Methodism in those parts was then unknown, and he lived many years a stranger to a change of heart. His parents moved from Haslington to Oakanger Moss, in which locality our brother died. About 1830 or 1831, when Brothers Petty and Hallam travelled in Tunstall Circuit, preaching services were regularly established at the place where he resided, and many sinners were converted, a flourishing society was formed, and among the number our brother was converted, united with the society, and continued to the day of his death. About thirty years ago Mr. Hugh Bourne came over to the Moss, which now belongs to the Sandbach Circuit, and commenced a Sunday-school, our Brother Owen took an active part in its commencement, and became the superintendent; which office he held to the end of his life. He lived to see the school prosper, many of the scholars have become useful members of our church, and others have died happy in the Lord, while others have become preachers of the Gospel. This was always a matter of rejoicing to him. The school was taught for many years in part of an out-building of his, which was fitted up for that purpose, and never can we forget the times and seasons we have had together there. Our brother has long been a friend and helper of the cause. In 1853, when our new chapel was built, he became one of the trustees. In the latter end of 1860 his health began to decline, and in the spring of 1861 the doctor who attended him told him that there was no hope of his recovery. At the first he was much tried and tempted, but he obtained a happy deliverance and the day before he died, I asked him how his hope was, he said, "It is blooming." The next day, June 28th, 1861, he died in peace, aged seventy-four years. The scholars and teachers walked before the corpse to Barthomby, the place of his interment. May his widow and children meet him in heaven, is the prayer of

THOMAS SKERRATT.

6. ROBERT ROBINSON, the subject of this brief sketch, was the son of William and Ann Robinson. He was born at Craikhall, in 1840, and died at Langthorne, in the Thirsk Circuit, June 21st, 1861, in the twenty-first year of his age. In his boyhood he attended the Bedale Wesleyan Sunday-school, and for regularity of attendance and good behaviour, he was presented with a Bible, and by parental restraint was prevented from following the bent of his natural inclinations. In 1853 his parents removed to Langthorn, but nothing particular occurred in his history, save that he entered our Sabbath-school, and was regular in his attendance on the means of grace. He was naturally kind and good-natured, but continued a stranger to saving godliness until 1858, when he attended a lovefeast at Leeming, where he was convinced of his sinful condition, sought mercy, and found pardon and peace through the blood of the Lamb, and continued a consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Society to the time of his death. To say he was faultless would be to exalt him above his fellows; but truly of him it might be said, "He loved the habitation of the Lord's house, and the place where his honour dwelleth." He delighted in communion with saints. His business often prevented his attendance on week night services, but the services of the sabbath were to him seasons of refreshing. He loved his class-meetings, and always related his experience pointedly and clearly. For seven years he perused with pleasure the Primitive Methodist small magazine. He was an efficient Sabbath-school teacher, a tract distributor, a member of the Temperance Society, and sought to spread its principles, and being a promising youth the circuit authorities put his initials upon the plan. He was punctual in taking his appointments, and in his pulpit ministrations was plain, pointed, clear, and generally accepted. Had he lived, he would doubtless have excelled in this department of Christian labour. The disease which hastened his death was consumption. Its first symptoms appeared in the spring of 1859, and though sometimes he hoped he should ultimately recover, he nevertheless grew worse until death put an end to his sufferings. I often saw him in his affliction, as well as the ministers and other friends, and always found him reposing in God. He was patient and resigned, and loved to be visited by his fellow Christians. His death was triumphant. He said to his mother, "Glory! glory! Another struggle, and all glory." Having thus ended the mortal strife, he entered the promised rest. May his parents, brother, sister, and friends meet him there.

THOMAS WILKINSON.

7. MARGARET, better known as Peggy ASHTON, of Bradwell, Derbyshire, was born in or about 1786. At a very early period of life she was the subject of good impressions, and cast in her lot with the Wesleyan Methodists, subsequently she became the wife of one of our first local preachers in this circuit, and she united with our society more than thirty years since, and her attachment to Primitive Methodism was strong till death. I have made enquiry of such as knew her from her early youth, and their testimony is, that she was a real Christian. I have known her about two years, during which time I have had no reason to suspect her piety. When stating her religious experience, whether in public or private, she was generally short and decisive. I have often heard her say, "You see we have little bits of trials, but the Lord brings us through." Having begun to serve the Lord in her youth, she prized her privileges to the end. The last Sabbath she spent on earth found her at her class-meeting, preaching services, and the sacrament. When the next Sabbath came she had gone to join the blood-washed throng.

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbath has no end."

Her last affliction was severe and short. Two days before her death, I asked her if she was afraid to die. "Afraid! no; she replied, intimating that while Christ was her portion she had nought to fear. On the day before her death her leader asked her what were her prospects, when she said, "The Lord has been with me many years, and He will never leave me." What more was said, proved that this aged pilgrim was nearing her heavenly home, and as a few of us stood by her she heaved her last sigh on July 6th, 1861.

T. DOODY.

8. WILLIAM MORRISS was born at Methley, Leeds Second Circuit, and died at the same place on the 2nd of July, 1861, in the twenty-seventh year of his age. During his childhood he was a scholar in the Wesleyan Sabbath-school, where religious impressions were often made upon his mind, so much so, that he afterward frequently remarked, that had any one spoken to him about personal religion, he should have given himself to the Saviour. When he left the Sabbath-school he lost the advantage of direct religious influence, and gave himself up to the follies of the world. When he was entering on manhood he was led by Providence to fix his residence at the house of Mr. Carr, one of our leaders at Methley, by whom Brother Morriss was induced to attend our chapel, where the word of God reached his heart, and where, after some delay, he was made a new creature in Christ. As soon as he became a partaker of the blessed life, he joined our society, and entered the Sunday-school as a teacher, in which capacity he was very diligent, labouring with much zeal to advance the general interests of the school and the personal good of the children; indeed, he gave unmistakable proof that the Sunday-school was his delight. At the last election of officers his fellow-teachers chose him for the superintendent of the school. He entered upon the duties of that office on the following Sabbath, but to our great sorrow it proved to be his last Sabbath in the place he loved so well.

It is supposed that he took a cold in the coal mine in which he worked, which resulted in typhus fever. During three weeks he hovered between life and death; we hoped that he would recover, but our hope was cut off, for after much patient suffering, in which he was triumphantly happy, he passed away to bliss.

Our departed friend was a good young man. I have, in common with many others, much admired the gentleness of his manners, the steadiness with which he adhered to duty, and the stability of his Christian life. That he was a man worth having in a Church, may be gathered from remarks which were dropped at his funeral, among which were, "He will be much missed at Methley." He has left a widow and three children, besides a number of admiring friends to mourn his departure; but we have much hope in our sorrow, we feel certain that he is with the Lord; and we have a good hope of seeing him, with all the beloved departed, where the Redeemer dwells.

9. WILLIAM MAYER was born July 18th, 1775, died July 11th, 1861, and was interred at Alsagar, Tunstall Circuit. This aged pilgrim bowed his head so calmly, met the last enemy so triumphantly, and entered the grave so peacefully, that to be present with him was to be "quite on the verge of heaven."

When William was under conviction for sin, he attended the Established Church, believing it was the only right way to heaven; but not finding the soul-saving balm within the pale of that hoary structure, he directed his steps to a knot of houses called Butt Lane, where that great pioneer of Primitive Methodism, William Clowes, was urging the Gospel invitation to perishing sinners. Mr. Clowes formed a class, and our departed brother united therewith. He had not received the pardon of his sins, but he was earnestly seeking the blessing. On his return home from his class, one night, he knelt on the sward by an old pit, and the Deliverer came. Yes, by that old pit, alone on that night, his agitated bosom was hushed into a calm. It is now fifty-five years ago, and the blessing he then received he never lost throughout his eventful life.

He was a long time in the furnace of affliction, but he mellowed by the process. His friends looked forward to the time of his death with confidence, that as he had lived in the Lord so he would die. "The memory of the just is blessed." On this occasion Methodism, in her various sections, converged with moral and religious men to do honour to the dead, and pay a tribute of respect to the memory of departed worth.

Brother Mayer's was a religion of principle and feeling, which went through his moral nature, exhibiting that sweetness which maketh the face to shine. Under the word he was like the hart slaking his thirst at the waters. In the singing part of our worship, especially when that old, long-tried, yet beautiful hymn was sung—he sometimes leaped, and praised God.

He attended our chapel at Talk-o'-th-Hill as long as he was able. This place being old battle-ground, he loved the sanctuary, and took delight in its stones. Recollections of past service evolved around the hill of Zion, and he could speak of this and that having taken place here, the victories of grace, the triumphant deaths of comrades long since fallen asleep in Jesus. Then he longed to go, for he was fully assured that his career for some time past was a sort of coasting voyage—a looking for the haven; and so near was he to port, that when he had to enter all he could say was, "Come, Jesus." He entered in and is now with his Lord.

GEORGE SHENTON.

10. ELIZABETH WEATHERBY, of Strotton, Durham Circuit, departed this life in the enjoyment of the peace and hope of the Gospel, June 23rd, 1861, aged twenty-four years.

By early care and attention on the part of her parents, the evil of her heart was restrained. It was not, however, before her twenty-second year that she fully devoted herself to the service of God; but since then her constant aim seemed to be to live to God alone.

Her relish for the means of grace was very strong, and it is stated that she was absent only twice from her class during the two years she met.

A constitutional delicacy marked the whole of her earthly existence, and excited apprehensions in the minds of her friends. To herself this was no cause for alarm. She embodied in her daily conversation the following lines—

"Nor love thy life, nor hate, but what thou liv'st Live well; how long or short, permit to Heaven."

A few weeks' illness sufficed to conclude her sojourn on earth. She expressed herself in language which told that she had nothing to do, but—

"Gather up her feet,
And die, her father's God to meet."

THOMAS C. SCOTT.

11. JAMES SHEPPARD was born at Mere, Wiltshire, Motcombe Circuit, in 1808, and died at the same place July 17th, 1861.

He remained in an unconverted state till 1840, at which time he was severely afflicted. He had been satisfied with his religious experience up to the above date, and, as he was expecting to die, he was confidently expecting to meet two of his children in heaven, whom the Lord had taken to Himself in infancy. Through the instrumentality of a Christian friend, who visited him repeatedly, he was enlightened, the Holy Spirit shone into his mind, and astonished him by making manifest that he had been building on a sandy foundation. At first he was very much alarmed, but eventually he cast himself on the Atonement, and being justified by faith, he had peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

He attended the Congregational ministry for some time, but soon after the Primitive Methodists visited the town of Mere, he united himself with them, and afterwards became a trustee of our chapel at this place.

Through some unpleasantness that arose among the members of the society, a few years after his conversion, he relinquished his membership for a time, but subsequently united again with the Society, and continued a member thereof until his death.

For the last twelve months he suffered much bodily affliction, and had severe conflicts with the enemy of souls; sometimes his state of mind bordered on despair, yet ever and anon he was cheered by the smiles of Jesus. It was my privilege to visit him many times before his death, and on some of those visits his answers to questions respecting his sense of the divine presence and his safety were very satisfactory. On one occasion I asked him if he was certain that he had an interest in the merits of Christ. He answered quietly, yet firmly, "I have." He lived only a few days after this, but they were spent in prayer and praise.

His was not a brilliant course, but those who knew him best believed him to be a sincere Christian.

That his widow and fatherless children may meet him in heaven, is the prayer of
GEORGE FOWLER.

12. At Edgmond, in the Wrockwardine Wood Circuit, MARY VIGERS died in the Lord, on Friday, August 16th, 1861, aged sixty-two years.

Some time in the year 1834, she was converted to God through the ministry of the Primitive Methodists. At that time our people had to endure much persecution at Edgmond, and Mary had to bear her share. As a dressmaker she worked for the clergyman's lady, and others, but when converted she must make no more dresses for them. She prayed for the conversion of others, and especially for her husband, and the Lord soon answered her prayers on his behalf.

In 1835 a neat little chapel was built at the village, and her husband became a trustee, the class-leader, and a local preacher, and Mary was appointed his assistant leader. She also became a teacher in the Sunday-school, and made herself useful in various ways.

When the little cause was disappointed of a preacher, she would commence the service, read the Holy Scriptures, and encourage the few members to pray. When business called her husband from home she attended to family prayer, and reading the Holy Scriptures. In short, she was a good wife, an affectionate mother, and a consistent member of the Church of Christ.

Her last illness, bilious fever, was endured with patience and resignation.

On August 21st, 1861, the day of her interment, the members and friends met to testify their Christian respect for her. She has left a husband and a daughter to mourn their loss, but their loss is her eternal gain.

HENRY LEECH.

13. JOHN FISHEL, of Durham, died July 30th, 1861. About seven years ago, he was brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. The effects produced in his after life attested that he had passed from death unto life, though he sometimes said he could never do as many professors were able to do, that is, point to the time when, and place where, the gracious change took place.

But while it may be difficult sometimes to distinguish the gracious operations of the Holy Spirit from those of our own minds, the effects of the Spirit's work are clear enough. So they were in the deceased. His faith worked by love, and purified the heart.

During the progress of our Jubilee chapel our late brother took a lively interest in it. He gave £1, and collected other £1, and had it not been that his health failed, it is likely he would have increased his exertions in its favour. For two years or more a gradual breaking-up of his constitution was visible, but he bore up bravely, and expired in peace.

W. SAUL.

14. JOHN BURNHAM BLOW was born at Hull, May 13th, 1823. At the age of twenty he removed to South Cave, where he spent the remainder of his life.

I became acquainted with him in 1843. We met in a public-house, and spent the night in gambling and drinking, as we offend afterword. In 1855 I gave my heart to God, and in the year following the subject of this obituary was converted. In consequence of a severe attack of rheumatic fever, he was taken to an hospital, where a man was brought in, who had met with a severe accident, and who shortly died.

Our departed brother saw him die, and was so aroused to a concern for his soul, that he never rested till he obtained peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Punctuality was a marked characteristic of his every-day life, especially in reference to attending the means of grace. He loved his class, always attended when health and circumstances would permit.

In relating his experience he generally was brief, and to the point. He also delighted in Sunday-school teaching, and was useful therein.

For many years he endured much bodily affliction, and often extreme poverty; but he was an honest man. He had a strong desire to be spared till he could say he owed no man anything. I believe his desire was granted.

During several of the last weeks of his life he was confined to his bed. His sufferings were very severe, but he never complained; the doctor who attended him said he was the most cheerful patient he ever visited. His discourse was about Jesus, whom he felt to be precious to his soul, and often as he drew near to eternity, have I heard him say—

"My Jesus to know, and feel His blood flow,
'Tis life everlasting, 'tis heaven below."

The enemy was permitted to try his faith one day or two most severely, when he desired us to pray that he might be able to hold out to the end. The tempter was overcome; his hope was good, his peace abounding; and in triumph he passed away to the skies, on the 4th of August, at South Cave, leaving a wife and two children to mourn their loss. May they follow him as he followed Christ.

WILLIAM SMITH.

15. ELIZABETH MADDERS, of Bromyard, died February 14th, 1861, aged sixty-five years.

In early life she was the subject of serious impressions, consequently her conduct was always moral. But about thirty years ago, God's Holy Spirit worked more powerfully on her mind, giving her to see herself—

"By nature and by practice too,
A wretched slave to sin."

This was a season of acute and protracted sorrow; her tears were her meat day and night. A dreadful sense of God's just displeasure overwhelmed her spirit. The Church of England, with other places of worship were attended by her that she might hear words by which she might be saved.

About that time the Primitive Methodist ministers from Cwm Circuit missioned the town, causing much excitement, and receiving much opposition, but the word preached was mighty through God, sinners were saved, a Church was planted, which has, through much tribulation, continued to this day. She hearing some true and some false reports of this people, and willing to do anything that might bring comfort to her mind, she resolved to hear them herself, and while listening to their ministrations, she was enabled to believe in Him who justifies the ungodly, and the true light shone into her soul.

Having received good through Primitive Methodist instrumentality, she at once joined their little society. A subsequent life of obedience to the laws of God and the Connexion was the result. The means of grace for many years were invariably attended; the financial demands of the cause, as far as circumstances would allow, were always cheerfully met. Family devotions were by herself systematically and regularly performed.

Having a decided dislike to Sabbath desecration, she endeavoured to make due preparation for the performance of its duties.

When setting out for the better country, and when pursuing her way, fierce opposition was often her lot.

About three months previous to her death, she was deprived through affliction from attending the means of grace, but when asked by friends the state of her mind, she replied, "When he has tried me I shall come forth as gold." And as she approached the end of her pilgrimage, I considered it my duty and privilege to see her as often as possible, and I always found her relying on Christ alone for salvation. In a peaceful state of mind she quietly passed away, to be for ever with the Lord.

As a wife and parent she was kind and tender; may her surviving and sorrowing friends imitate her example. As a neighbour she was beloved. As a Christian she was steady and consistent.

T. MADDERS.

16. MARY HARGREAVES died at Ashton-under-Lyne, Staleybridge Circuit. Her father and mother being Wesleyans, she was taught, when very young, to love the Saviour. She resided at Hayfield, where she was born, until she was married to John Hargreaves. She joined the Wesleyans until the formation of the Wesleyan association, when she became connected with that body. But in 1846, her family being necessitated to come to Ashton, she became a member with us at this place. She was constant in her attendance at class, and other means of grace. Her experience was sound and clear. She seemed to enjoy much of God in her last affliction. She was visited by her leader, the travelling preachers, and other friends. She was at times much depressed in spirits, thinking she had not loved the Lord as much as she ought to have done. She was, however, very desirous to be gone, and said she did not wish to get better. Her affliction was a chronic inflammation on the liver, and was very severe; but she said all her trust was in Jesus. She died on the 25th of June, 1861, in the sixty-eighth year of her age.

HENRY GREGORY.

17. WILLIAM BRAUMONT was born at Flockton, Wakefield Circuit, August 3rd, 1775, and died at the same place, June 2nd, 1861. As far as we can ascertain, his early life appears to have been moral, and previous to his conversion, he was a singer at the Established Church in the village. When about thirty-eight years of age, on the death of one of his infant children, his mind was seriously impressed, he gave his heart to God, and united with the Wesleyans. For some years, he appears to have been very diffident, and did not engage in the exercise of public prayer. But about Midsummer, 1820, the Primitive Methodists of Barnsley Circuit reached Flockton, and their warm-hearted labours attracted our late brother, and probably conceiving he would be more useful with them, he attended the first class meeting that was held, and (along with the late Rev. J. Day, and others who remain with us still) he joined the society, and from that time to his death, more than forty years, he maintained a godly conversation, and never forsook his Christian profession or membership. Brother Beaumont was for some time a class-leader, and was at all times a willing labourer in the cause of God. He enjoyed much pleasure in attending camp meetings, and was a diligent labourer in prayer-meetings. Brother B. was of a meek and quiet spirit. He abstained from worldly company. He meddled not with other men's matters. In his own family, and at the means of grace, he spent his leisure hours. He lived peacefully with his neighbours, and at his native village, where he lived and professed Christ so long, his character is unimpeachable. As age advanced upon him, it became evident that numerous years had broken down his energies. His mental faculties failed, so that on indifferent subjects he did not always discourse intelligently; but it was remarked with wonder and gratitude by all who visited him, that whenever Christ was mentioned, he was intelligent at once. In the class-meetings (which had been held at his home more than thirty years), he could speak and pray as correctly as ever. When "the house of clay" began to totter, he still made Christ his theme. Though poor in this world, religion made him both thankful and cheerful.

On Friday, the 31st of May, 1861, he fell into a deep sleep, and scarcely awoke any more; but in the short intervals of his waking moments, his conversation was on Divine things, and the last subject he mentioned was the crucifixion of his Lord. As he had lived, so he died—peacefully.

About six o'clock, on Sunday evening, June 2nd, 1861, he "fell on sleep," without a groan, and his spirit was gathered unto the God of his fathers.

J. AYRTON.

18. ANN SUMMILL was born in 1798, at Grouwen, near Oswestry; and she died at Tunstall, on Saturday, June 20th, 1861.

In her youth, she attended the ministry of the Independents, and although not strictly religious at that time, she was immensely moral in her deportment.

In May, 1830, she was united in matrimony to a very worthy man, William Summill, who died in the faith a few years ago. As a wife, she was affectionate, dutiful, kind, and economical, and she was particularly clean and neat in her household affairs.

In 1833, she, with her husband and infant son, came to reside at Tunstall, and soon afterwards began to attend the religious services of our people; and on Sunday, July 23rd, 1839, in a lovefeast held in Tunstall Chapel, she obtained the pardon of her sins, and immediately joined the society.

Her membership was distinguished by a punctual attendance at her class; and whenever her duties required her to go from home for a short time, she invariably made her leader acquainted with the fact, with a view to keep his mind at rest about her absence.

In June last, her health broke down; and it became painfully evident to her friends that she was near the end of her journey; but her step faltered not. To a female attendant, a few days before her death, she said, "When you are singing and drinking at the lovefeast, I shall be drinking at the fountain above." On another occasion, she seemed to be in sweet converse with some dear departed ones, and looking steadfastly to one corner of the room, she beckoned and whispered, "Come, poor master"—referring to her husband—"come, Joseph Unwin"—her old leader, who departed to heaven fourteen years ago—"come, John Marple,"—a particular friend who died in the faith in 1859—"lift, lift over Jordan."

About eight o'clock, p.m., on the last day she spent on earth, unmistakable symptoms of immediate dissolution began to appear, when a kind sister in the Lord, who had attended her much in her last illness, said—

"If this be death, I soon shall be
From every sin and sorrow free;
I shall the King of Glory see;
All is well, all is well."

Our dying friend moved her hand in approval; and passed away in triumph to her old companions in the land of rest.

P. PUGH.

19. Died, at Lockton, Pickering Circuit, July 4th, 1861, MARY SPENCE, in the fifty-second year of her age. Twenty-three years ago, she yielded herself to God a living sacrifice, and from that period she continued to give evidence of her salvation by devoting herself to the interests of her Redeemer's kingdom. Her attention to the sick and the dying was praiseworthy. Her fervent and effectual prayers, simple and earnest manners of leading sinners to the cross for pardon, peace, and purity, have cheered many drooping spirits in their conflict with "the last enemy." While passing the swellings of Jordan, she was strong in faith, giving glory to God, singing, "All is well. Allelujah to Jesus who died on the tree!" &c. She died as she lived, in the possession of a conscious enjoyment of the Divine favour, which elevated her mind above the perishing things of time, and reconciled her soul to the will of God. J. M.

20. Died, in the full triumph of faith, at Seaham Harbour, Sunderland Circuit, Mr. THOMAS NOBLE, in the thirty-seventh year of his age, leaving behind him a widow and four children.

He was born at Eandon, and apprenticed to Mr. Stephenson, of Soughill, both places being in North Shields Circuit. As his master was a member of our Connexion, and entertained our preachers at his home, our brother was brought under their ministry, and was converted to God by their agency about 1843, and remained a steady member, and bore an unexceptionable character. A few years ago, he removed from Northumberland to Murton Colliery, in this circuit, where he married, and identified himself with our society, established himself in business as a boot and shoemaker, and his house became a centre of attraction to both ministers and members. Ten years ago, he removed to the place where he died, and where he was much beloved; although, for some time, he was separated from us and joined the Independents, in consequence of a dispute among the singers, yet, finding himself not at home, he returned to us again. Our brother was a man of sterling integrity and liberal sentiments. He loved our ministers, and devised liberal things respecting them. Had he lived, he would have been an efficient aid to our cause, as he had been at Seaham Harbour. But God determined otherwise. About twelve months ago, his health began visibly to decline. Still, under much weakness, he attended to his business till two months before his death. He was then confined to his chamber, where, under acute suffering, life ebbed out.

Several of our members visited him. Brother R. Stamp says, he always was enabled unequivocally to declare that he was fixed on the Rock, that he knew his Redeemer lived, and that up to the last all was well. Mr. Storey was his last visitor within an hour of his death, under whose visit he seems to have enjoyed some vivid glimpses of the glory that awaited him. His last words were, "I shall soon be at home." He has gone to be with Jesus. JOHN LIGHTFOOT.

"So fades a summer cloud away;
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er;
So gently shuts the eye of day;
So dies a wave along the shore."

21. MRS. ELIZABETH NEALE departed this life at Jordan Green, Whitwell, in the Derham Circuit, June 8th, 1861, in the sixty-fifth year of her age.

It was her privilege to be blest with a pious mother, who endeavoured to train her up in the fear of God. Although that mother's hopes were not fully realized in seeing her daughter saved, yet her labour was not in vain; the good seed was sown in the heart; the influences of truth and grace restrained her from evil, and her affectionate maternal counsel moulded the character that was afterwards developed in the life of our departed sister. Years rolled on, but no saving change was effected till 1842. Under a sermon preached by brother W. Crown, she was brought to enjoy the pardon of sin through faith in Jesus Christ, and joined our society at Bondswell. At that time, she had entered the marriage state, and her husband, being opposed to our people, strictly forbade her going to chapel. This was a great trial; but, by patient endurance, she overcame his prejudices, and had the happiness of seeing him penitently imploring forgiveness, and our friends pointing him to the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." From that time (now thirteen years), our sister has had the cares of a large family, with which she was left, added to a weak state of health, which lapsed into consumption. Nevertheless, twice and thrice on the Sabbath, in all weathers, has she walked a distance of two miles to the house of God, and was constant in her attendance till prevented by affliction.

Her house was a home for the preachers; it was a happiness, indeed, to her to have them beneath her roof. During her long affliction, these periodic visits were mutually appreciated; it did one's heart good to spend an hour with such a friend. While in health, she exhibited an anxious desire "to serve the present age," and the church felt her pious influence. She was an active missionary collector. When a chapel was offered to the society, and some hesitated to become responsible for the rent, she came forward and undertook to bear her part.

In affliction, she was resigned to the Divine will, never murmuring or wishing her sufferings less; but usually said, "The Lord's will be done." I shall not soon forget my visits, especially the last three. On the first of these, she was extremely weak, and Satan tried her sorely. We prayed, and the cloud was removed; we sang several hymns, and peace was restored to her troubled mind, and she rejoiced in God her Saviour, clapping her hands, and with all the strength she had, sang,—

"I do believe, I will believe,
That Jesus died for me," &c.

She had the victory through "faith in the blood of the Lamb." Death brought no terror, a heavenly smile lighted up her attenuated face, and her last words were, "All is well. God will never leave me." She passed the Jordan of death in a calm, and has gone to be with Christ.

JONATHAN SCOTT.

22. Died at Wilsden, Keighley Circuit, on Monday, July 8th, 1861, MARY LAMBERT, of Mill Hey. Sister Lambert was born at Two Laws, in the parish of Keighley, September 8th, 1816. In early life, she was the subject of Divine impressions. Her pious mother endeavoured to train her up in the fear of the Lord. She took her to the means of grace to hear the Gospel preached by the early Primitive Methodist preachers at Oldfield, under which her young mind was frequently impressed; but, like many other young people, as she grew up, she stifled conviction, and followed the course of this world until 1842, when she was converted to God in a great revival among the Wesleyans at Marsh. She joined their society, and continued a member among them until she removed from that place in 1847. She then attended the means of grace among the Primitives at Mill Hey, joined our society in 1848, and continued among us till her death. She was much afflicted during the latter part of her life, and was often detained from the public means of grace, which caused her to weep. But as affliction increased, she tried to worship God at home, and became more reconciled to the will of God. She resolved to lay the world aside, and live nearer to God than ever she had done; and from that time she began to be more reconciled, and she endured her afflictions with Christian patience. It was a great trial to give up her affectionate husband; but grace triumphed over nature. After that she enjoyed uninterrupted peace, and as her end approached, her prospect of heaven became brighter and brighter. Her hope was full of eternal life. She knew when the earthly house of her tabernacle was dissolving, she had a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. A few days previous to her death, she sang the following verse,—

"How short is life, how sure is death," &c.

Her dear father said, "Mary, I am afraid you will hurt yourself." She replied, "Father, it is the Lord that gives me strength to sing. I feel no worse for it."

A friend and brother in Christ, who had often visited her during her affliction, was called in about half an hour before she died. She was scarcely able to speak, yet she motioned that he was to pray with her. After that she lifted her dying hand, and they took their last farewell of each other, and raising the other hand towards heaven, she indicated that she was just going to take her flight thither. She was quite sensible in her latest moments. Her last words were, "Come, Jesus, and come quickly," and with a smile on her countenance, she passed into the eternal world in the forty-fifth year of her age.

WILLIAM PROCTER.

23. Died, in the summer of 1861, MARY VERITY, of Silsden, Yorkshire. About eight years ago, she was brought to Jesus, and as a Christian she conducted herself; 1st, by her union with a Christian Church; 2nd, by the continuance of her membership till death; 3rd, by the meekness of her disposition. She studied to be quiet, minding her own business, working with her own hands, abstaining from tale-bearing. She was no flatterer; but was sober and faithful in all things. 4th, by her genuine zeal, and a steady adherence to principle and duty—to principle as the theory of truth; to duty as its practice. False zeal is like the torrent which a thunder storm produces: true zeal is like the river which waters the valley, constant, if not equal, in its flow. Such was the zeal of MARY VERITY. Her affliction was the common scourge of the young—consumption. It rapidly drained her strength and life. Not many sunbeams played around her sick bed. But her heart was fixed; she was calm; she had no fear. I never sat by her but I felt certain, from her experience, she was an heir of glory; and when I heard of her death, I knew she had gained her purchased inheritance. She died in the twenty-fifth year of her age. J. SIMPSON.

24. Died, at White Hall, North Shields Circuit, July 28th, 1861, CATHERINE RIDDEL, aged twenty-four. She was born near Morpeth, in 1837. Her parents are worthy members of a Presbyterian church, who took Catherine in early life to the house of God, and set before her a consistent example. The family removed into this circuit in 1845, when she became a scholar in the Sunday school at Allotment, where she received deep religious impressions, expressing her belief that the teachers were good people. A while after, she entered the school at Earsdon, and at the early age of eleven years, she joined the society, receiving her first ticket from Mr. Smith, when formerly travelling in this circuit. At that very tender age, she gave satisfactory evidence that she had received the grace of God. When fourteen years of age, she was severely afflicted, and being asked by her mother where she rested her hope, she meekly replied, "All on Jesus—all on Jesus."

On removing from Earsdon to the White Hall farm, she immediately joined the society at Cramlington, and as she grew in years, she evidently grew in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Her dwelling-place was above a mile from the chapel, and the roads very bad and inconvenient; nevertheless, she was a good attender of the means of grace.

As a missionary collector, she excelled. Her love to the cause smoothed toil, and nerved her for difficulties. A little before her death, she said to her sister Mary, her dear companion in her missionary excursions, "Mary, we must try fresh places this year to get more money for the glorious cause." She had a generous heart, and gave liberally to the cause. She possessed the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit in a high degree, and well understood that scripture,—“In patience possess ye your souls.” Her sister and she talking together a little before her last illness on the troubles of life, she replied, "Well, I can say,—

"Yonder's my house and portion fair," &c.

Her illness was short but very severe. To one of the society who had seen her a few days before in bloom and beauty she said, "How sudden is this affliction, but all is well." She frequently repeated the lines,—

"Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly," &c.

Falling into a sleep, she awoke shortly with a sweet smile, saying, "Dear friends, let me go; I have seen the King in His beauty, and the land that is afar off." She frequently said, "Dear friends, let me go." Her illness lasted only about a week, but in that time she suffered much. Divine grace supported her. She departed in peace, soothed to the last by the presence of God, and went to see that Saviour whom she had loved from her early childhood. THOMAS SMITH.

"THE CARPENTER'S SON."

"Is not this the carpenter's son?"

AND whence is this man, and who, who is His sire?
And whence cometh He in such modest attire?
And why after Him should we hasten to run,
Is not this innovator the carpenter's son?

At Bethlehem born and at Nazareth bred,
How came to His knowledge such things as He said?
Then away let us haste and further pass on,
Nor longer give heed to the carpenter's son.

Stay, stay, let us listen, and hang on each word,
And catch ev'ry sentence, for have you not heard
The blind, and the deaf, and the maimed have come
And all been restored by the carpenter's son?

And not long ago, as He pass'd on His way,
A mother shed tears for the death of her stay;
He spake but a word, and the soul that had flown,
Came back at the call of the carpenter's son!

When mothers to Him their little ones brought,
It was not in vain that His blessing they sought;
His blessing they gained and His favour they won—
Their babes were caress'd by the carpenter's son.

Then to Him I will go and through the throng press,
Content if I touch but the hem of His dress:
One touch of His skirt will proclaim virtue gone,
And I shall be saved by the carpenter's son.

And if in His footsteps my footsteps I place,
And through this waste wilderness follow His trace,
My warfare accomplished, and all my work done,
In bliss I shall reign with the carpenter's son.

And there through all ages His praise I will sing,
Through heaven's vast concave the echo shall ring,
That hell I've escaped, and that glory I've won,
By Him who was called the "Carpenter's Son."

A PRAYER.

WHEN I'm sad and lonely,
Jesus comfort me;
Help me, for Thou only
Canst my helper be;
In affliction cheer me,
And when danger's near me,
Oh my Saviour hear me,
When I cry to Thee.

Keep me in temptation—
Jesus succour me;
Let Thy great salvation
Set my spirit free.

Worldly pleasures bind me,
Vanity doth blind me,
But let mercy find me:
Draw me, Lord, to Thee.

When earth's bonds are breaking,
Look on me in love;
When my soul is waking,
To the life above;
Tho' I oft have griev'd Thee,
Lord, do Thou not leave me,
But with joy receive me,
To my home above.

REV. WILLIAM CARTHY.

"Where are the prophets, do they live for aye?
The holy fathers, do they ever stay
To teach us? No! as time fast-footed runs,
They pass and leave their labour to their sons;
And they, retiring too, at God's behest,

WILLIAM CARTHY, Primitive Methodist minister, was born at Staffordshire, in 1805. His paternal ancestors were natives of Ireland. His great grandfather, Rev. Charles Carthy, was a clergyman of the Established Church in that country. He was a man of considerable and varied learning; and on this account, and also "in consideration of his industry, probity, integrity, and other laudable deserts," he was appointed head-master of the Royal School in the city of Armagh. This office he sustained with great ability for a number of years. He died suddenly of apoplexy, leaving three sons; the eldest a minister; the second a surgeon; and the youngest, who was only thirteen years of age at his father's death, became a cabinet maker. Being dissatisfied with his position, he entered the army. After several years service he obtained his discharge, married, and settled in the neighbourhood of Derby, where Charles, the father of our departed friend, was born.

We have but little information respecting the parents of William. They appear to have been strangers to true religion. In worldly circumstances they were by no means affluent; indeed, they occupied but a humble position, and the family being large, the children had very early in life to contribute by their labour to their own maintenance. William was apprenticed to a cordwainer, and continued to work at his business until he was nearly twenty years of age. In 1820, it pleased providence to direct the steps of the Rev. Sampson Turner to the neighbourhood of Alrewas; through his labours many souls were saved, among whom was cottage. When he was only fifteen years of age, he felt that he was a sinner, and with a broken heart he sought the favour of God ; nor did he seek in vain, but believing in Christ he was enabled to say, " O Lord, I will praise Thee, for though Thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and now Thou comfortest me." Having obtained the grace of God, he soon began to publish it. In 1822, he was made a local preacher, and two years later he was called to fill a wider sphere as a travelling preacher. He was sent to mission some places in Yorkshire, in the neighbourhood of what is now the Otley Circuit. In 1826, he was stationed in Newcastle-on-Tyne Circuit. His appointment to that station he regarded as very important, for there he formed friendships that endured for life. The Rev. S. Tillotson was his superintendent, and Rev. W. Garner his colleague. The young preachers boarded with their superintendent, and studied with him in the same room. Their libraries, probably not over large, became a kind of common stock whence they derived their supply of mental aliment ; and, with unwearied industry, they prepared themselves for the discharge of their momentous duties. Mr. Carthy ever after cherished a profound regard for his superintendent, and their friendship was never broken. He also regarded Mr. Garner as one of his most intimate friends and a judicious counsellor. In Newcastle Circuit, Mr. Carthy was acceptable and useful as a preacher, and he began to shew much aptitude for chapel business. He laboured successfully on Darlington, Glasgow, and Hexham stations. While on the former he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Brown, of Bolton, in October, 1828. During that year he appears to have had some remarkable manifestations of the power and goodness of God. Some records that he made in his diary, give evidence of a high state of piety, and of close communion with God. He also drew up a number of rules by which he resolved to regulate his conduct, which discover a strong desire to be eminent in holiness and usefulness. In Hexham Circuit, he travelled again with Mr. Tillotson, who says that they " did well in this station, the circuit improved much, and a new chapel was built at Hexham."

The Conference of 1831 appointed him to superintend Silsden Circuit. The state of things in his new station was sufficiently discouraging. There were eight places on the circuit's plan ; 109 members in society ; and the income was only about £7 per quarter. Less courageous spirits would have feared to face the difficulties that were in the way ; but he, full of love and strong in faith, commenced his work. Difficulties were overcome. Success crowned his efforts, and many souls were converted. The Circuit became prosperous, and the influence of our friend's labours is felt to this day. The Rev. John Simpson, the present superintendent of that station has kindly furnished the following account :—

" Mr. Carthy remained three years in this Circuit, during which time the circuit had increased to sixteen places, and when, in June 1834 he made up the quarter's accounts, I find the number of members to have been 312, a clear increase of 203. The income of the quarter £38 9s., being more than five times the amount obtained the quarter previous to the commencement of his labours. A second preacher, brother J. Judson, appears to have been called out, and a female preacher hired. All demands seem to have been met, and a balance of £5 3s. 8d. left in the circuit-steward's hands, after having paid off a circuit debt of £20. He also opened Skipton, and what is now Grassington mission. During his stay, the circuit was brought into a prosperous condition, and gained an influence it has never lost. Few preachers who have laboured here are spoken of with more reverence and affection than he, and when the other Sabbath, the news of his departure reached us, a gloom was cast over the entire village, and many felt that a great and good man had fallen in our Israel."

His next station was Sheffield, and in that populous town he accomplished a work of great importance, which, without question, opened the way for such an extension of the cause there as had hardly been thought of before. He next travelled in Nottingham Circuit, and then in Belper. In these stations he had considerable trouble. He found disloyal spirits; he grappled with them; the struggle was severe, but success was on the side of rule and order. Honour to the men, and W. Carthy was one of them, who have nobly, and in the fear of God upheld Connexional rule and discipline. In each of these circuits, notwithstanding the difficulties he had to contend with, a considerable amount of good was effected. Leicester was his next station. In that circuit he built several chapels. He did not labour in vain. From Leicester he removed to Melton Mowbray, and there he had trouble of another kind: his wife, who had been for some years in an extremely delicate state of health, became the prey of pulmonary consumption. She died Dec. 21st, 1844. He was partly prepared for the stroke, as she had scarcely had a day's health for five years; nevertheless, when "lover and friend" was removed, he deeply felt the separation. Being left with two children, both young, he deemed it prudent when a suitable time had elapsed, to re-enter the marriage state; he was consequently united, June 25th, 1846, to Miss Martha Kirkland, of Nottingham, a person of suitable age, who proved a help-meet to him, and who now mourns his departure: He travelled successively, after his second marriage, in Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Ilkeston, Donington, Lincoln, and Bottesford Circuits. He travelled five years in Ilkeston Circuit, and during that time built Ilkeston, Cotmanhay, Langley, Kimberley, Cinderhill, Taghill, and Old Basford Chapels. He was stationed a second time in this Circuit, and was in the third year of his station at the time of his death.

His labours were very severe, and his anxiety at times very great. Often, his most intimate friends entreated him to spare himself, lest by his excessive toil he should bring himself to a premature grave. He was reminded that he was no longer a young man, and could not safely perform such an extent of labour as he had accomplished in the vigour of youth. But instead of slackening his efforts he seemed to work harder. He appeared to have a presentiment that his work was nearly done ; and, like one determined to accomplish a given amount of labour in a day works harder towards nightfall, lest anything should be left undone—so our dear friend seemed to impose heavier burdens on himself as his strength declined.

Previous to his last illness, indeed, for twelve months before, he had frequently complained of being unusually weary after labour. Sometimes he would say, "I am so vexed with myself for wanting so much rest." Mrs. Carthy reminded him that his constitution was giving way, and that he ought not to tax himself so severely. To this he replied, "Well, let me get this chapel built, and that piece of land properly conveyed to the Connexion, &c., and then I will take more rest ; but it will be better to wear out than to rust out."

For some months before he was laid aside, he would occasionally make mention of his increasing indisposition, and would sometimes tell his congregation that he thought his work was nearly done. On 14th Sept., 1861, he returned home from a journey exceedingly unwell. Before he retired to rest, he went to see his colleague, who at that time was recovering from an attack of fever. He was worse when he returned home. Next day was the Sabbath. From three to five o'clock in the morning he lay repeating passages of Scripture. He did not rise to breakfast, but desired Mrs. Carthy to fetch the Bible, and read the 33rd chapter of Ezekiel. She did so, and when she had read the seventh verse, he stopped her, and said, "That is it ; I must warn the people from that verse ; now read on to aid me in my meditations." She endeavoured to dissuade him from attempting to preach, he was so ill. He listened to all she had to say, and then replied, "I'll try ; I do like that little word, 'try.'" Near service time he arose, and with considerable difficulty he walked to the house of God, and preached with great energy. It was his last time. "Father," said his daughter, when they returned home, "you have laboured hard this morning," meaning that he had laboured much too hard for his strength. To this he replied, "It is no matter, Sarah, I must warn the people." He was too ill to conduct the evening service, and Mr. T. Shaw kindly preached for him. He could not, however, be prevailed upon to stay at home ; he went, and sat in the pulpit during service, and when it was concluded he was assisted home. The following day he attended the quarterly meeting, but was obliged to remain at home during the evening service. On Tuesday, 16th, notwithstanding his utter unfitness, he went to have an interview with Mr. Fox, Lady Palmerston's steward. We will digress for a moment to relate the circumstances that led to this visit. At Portland Row, a place in Ripley Circuit, we have an excellent society, but for years have been greatly inconvenienced for want of a suitable place of worship. Service is conducted in a room, which is in such a dilapidated state, as to render it dangerous to the people who crowd it. Several attempts had been made to obtain a piece of land of Lady Palmerston, as a building site. Her ladyship had promised favourably to consider the application, and had received very kindly a deputation from the society; but the hopes that were cherished of success were blighted by the opposition of F. W., Esq., who succeeded in persuading her ladyship that there was no need for an additional place of worship; and he sent a scripture reader into the neighbourhood, and commenced holding services. The society knew not what to do. In their extremity, Mr. Carthy took the matter in hand, and in company with Mr. J. Bailey, went to Broadlands, to Lord Palmerston's seat, arrived early, and had the honour of breakfasting with the Premier. After breakfast her ladyship gave them an audience. Our departed friend had fortified himself with some documents that he obtained some time ago from Lord Melbourne, her ladyship's brother, the Strutt's firm, &c., in which the labours of the Primitive Methodists were highly spoken of. When Mr. Carthy had talked the matter over for some time with her ladyship, he asked her to read these letters. She did so, and was very favourably impressed, and again promised to consider the matter, and she would send her decision. Hearing nothing for several weeks, and fearing that another effort had been made to prevent his success, he went again, and had another interview with her ladyship, and obtained a promise of land.

This was but a short time before he was taken ill. No wonder that he was anxious to get the matter settled. For this purpose he was going to see the steward, as we have stated. He saw the gentleman, but could not get the business settled. An appointment was made to meet at Portland Row the next day, and he returned home, arriving at half-past eleven o'clock at night. On the following morning, as might be expected, he was considerably worse. It was evident that fever had begun. He had engaged, however, to meet Mr. Fox, and hence, though Mrs. Carthy entreated him not to make the attempt, lest he should die on the road, he would keep his engagement. "I must go," said he, and he staggered out of the house as if he had been intoxicated. He reached Portland Row, met the steward, measured the land, then retired to Mr. L. Eggleshaw's house, and went to bed. By the kindly attentions of Mrs. Eggleshaw, and a little rest, he so far rallied as to be able to reach home, though not without great difficulty. When he had been at home a while, the doctor was sent for. He pronounced him seriously ill. In a few days the fever reached his brain, and he became quite delirious. His friends were alarmed. A physician from Nottingham was called in to see him, but gave very faint hopes of a favourable issue. He said his brain had been over taxed, and he had laboured beyond his strength ; if he recovered it would be a miracle. At twelve o'clock on Friday, 27th September, it was thought he was dying. He had become sensible, and evidently thought that his end was near. His mind was in perfect peace. His language was that of a conqueror. Two or three friends who were present prayed ; he responded fervently, then prayed himself, and pronounced the benediction. One of the friends observed, " Mr. Carthy, the consolations of religion are great." " Yes," he replied emphatically, "very great!" The friends then said, " Christ is precious to you, Mr. Carthy." " Yes," he replied again, " very precious." He then bid his partner farewell, and told her to meet him in glory. His daughter now drew near to him, and he blessed her, and prayed for the Divine benediction to rest upon her, and then he committed them into the hands of the Lord. It was a deeply affecting scene. All around him were bathed in tears, but he was triumphing. Death had no terrors. He was completely delivered from fear, and had a " desire to depart and be with Christ." He felt he was ready, but the end though near, was not yet. He passed the crisis, and gradually improved, so much so, that for a week great hopes were entertained of his recovery.

On the 7th October I visited him, and conversed with him as long as seemed prudent, and at his request read to him some portions of the Word of God. We then prayed together. Soon after he had a relapse, and again became delirious. While utterly unconscious, however, he was appointing Jubilee-meetings, holding prayer-meetings, and entreating the Lord to save sinners.

On Friday, October 11th, he observed that he " found religion good." " The Lord was a satisfying portion." In the afternoon he was much worse ; the surgeon was with him at a late hour. He had a fit of ague which shook his frame violently ; he was evidently dying. The doctor told Mrs. Carthy that he was sensible, and if she had anything to say to him she had better take the opportunity. " Do you know me ?" she asked. " O yes," he replied. " Is all right now ?" " All is right," he replied, " I am only sorry that I have not done more for the Lord ; I am going to heaven." It now became difficult for him to breathe, and very difficult to speak, but he was heard to say, " My Father, my Father, into Thy hands I commit my spirit,—I believe, I believe." His countenance now became remarkably serene ; he turned his eyes occasionally towards one part of the room, and kept waving his hand, as if in intercourse with the invisible world, until about half-past one o'clock, October 12th, when a smile lighted up his features, and without a groan or struggle he yielded up his spirit.

On the following Tuesday his remains were committed to their last resting-place. The Ilkeston Leader thus refers to his death and funeral:—

“It is our painful duty this week to record the death of the Rev. W. Carthy, Primitive Methodist Minister, and superintendent of Ilkeston Circuit, who, after a short but severe attack of fever, died on the morning of Saturday last, at his residence in Ilkeston. Mr. Carthy's loss will be evidently felt, not only amongst his connexional friends, but by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. His urbanity and kindly disposition endeared him to all, whilst his determined perseverance and masculine mind ensured success in everything he undertook, and many a once poor and needy friend has to thank him for a respectable position both in their temporal and spiritual relations, his sympathies being always with the oppressed.

“On Tuesday morning a gloom pervaded the town of Ilkeston and its inhabitants, and most of the shops in the line of procession were closed; Bailey and Sons closed their factory during the day. At a quarter past nine o'clock the mournful procession started for Bath Street Chapel, where a most pathetic and feeling address was delivered to the sorrowing family and friends by Rev. T. Baron, of Derby, after which the remains were conveyed to the railway station, between long lines of our town folks, who filled every available space from the chapel to the station, the deepest emotion being evinced by all; in fact it is many years since such universal sympathy has been shewn in Ilkeston. On arriving at Nottingham station they were met by a large number of ministers and local preachers, and several hundred friends from the surrounding circuits. A funeral procession was formed, and the remains were conveyed to Canaan Street Chapel, where a suitable service was held, after which the procession re-formed, and moved to the general cemetery. The Rev. Thomas King read the funeral service with much feeling, and at the conclusion of the service the hymn, was sung amid the tears and sobs of a great multitude. The sight was most affecting, and the deep and feeling token of respect paid to their late head must have been soothing to his family, and will long be remembered by his friends.”

Yes, and William Carthy was “an honest man!” He was upright in his dealings, sincere in his professions, and faithful in his engagements. There was about him no meanness. He was as free from selfishness as we could well conceive a man to be. There was a disinterestedness in his proceedings, an openness in his manner, and a fearlessness in his acts that commended him to all the true hearted. He abhorred oppression. His soul loathed paltry actions. His sympathies were always with the wronged and suffering. No labour was too great, no expense that he could bear was considered, if he could help the oppressed, or obtain redress for the injured. It was of no moment to him, who or what the wrong-doer was. He might be clothed in official garb, or his social position might be such as to make men of less daring afraid to assail him; but William Carthy never cowered before worldly greatness or influence if they were associated with wrong, but manfully he would face the wrong-doer, and charge his delinquencies upon him. Unfortunately, he has left no record of his doings. He generally made people know that there was a man living among them who understood what the "rights of men" were, and would not suffer those rights to be infringed, while he had a voice to lift up against it. Some men can sail over the sea of life without causing a ripple on the waters. William Carthy was not a man of that stamp; occasionally he was in a storm, but it was when he was grappling with the foes of truth and righteousness, and he generally came off uninjured by the tempest.

It is thought by some an excellent trait in a person's character, that he is quite free from denominationalism. There are men who appear as if it really was a matter of no moment to them what community they belong to, and in their great liberality they say, "It does not much matter what religious communion we are in fellowship with, so that we be with one." With such liberalism, our departed friend had little sympathy. He believed it did matter. He approved of Primitive Methodism in its constitution, in its doctrines, and in its discipline. There was no connexion so dear to him as the one in which he had received spiritual life, and with whose members he determined to live and die. He did not look abroad, as some have done, to see if he could improve his temporal position by meanly abandoning the community that had made him a minister. No; he devoted his time, his powers, his all, to promote its welfare. No man rejoiced more than he when God gave success, none felt more keenly any reverse. The day of days will declare how much he laboured to extend the work of God by Primitive Methodism. In the erection of chapels he had few equals, perhaps no superior in the Connexion. His practical knowledge of building was of great service to the Nottingham Building Committee, nor was that knowledge available only for the building committee, any brother, in any station, could command his counsel and aid in the erection of chapels and schools. His desire to do good was not bounded by the limits of his own Circuit. He built Bethel Chapel, Sheffield, at a time when the cause was feeble. It was a daring act to spend nearly £3,000 in the erection of a chapel at that time, with such an interest; few men besides William Carthy durst have done it; and, though, for a time it was difficult to sustain it, yet few will deny the importance of the erection of that chapel, or its connection with the subsequent prosperity of the cause in that town. At Ilkeston, the chapel in which the society worshipped, when he went to the station, was a poor place, but there stands now, belonging to the Connexion, as the result of his labour, a noble pile of buildings, in the principal street. The chapel would do credit to any community. Few men in any connexion have done more to provide chapel accommodation than he. In these transactions he was by no means a financial gainer. It has been said by a few that he was injudicious in some of his chapel affairs, and that he failed in some of his efforts. Success, however, in any thing our friend took in hand, was the rule, failure the exception.

But we advance a step higher;—William Carthy was a sincere Christian,—"a Christian is the highest style of man." He was strict and conscientious in the performance of his religious duties. There was about him no ostentation, no pretensions to superior sanctity, no religious display, but he was not less a Christian. He prayed frequently and fervently in secret and with his family, and with the families of others with whom he came in contact. He loved God, and God's cause, and God's people. He strove to conform his life to the requirements of the Divine law. He believed in Christ as his Saviour, and, as we have seen, his faith was not inoperative, but was productive of good works. Hence, when he was about to die, he was calm, resigned, confident, and happy. He knew in whom he had believed, and whom he had loved and served. His only regret was that he had "not done more for his Master."

He was successful, too, as a minister. God honoured him by making him an instrument in the conversion of souls. Some fragments of his journals that have come into my hands contain evidence of this, and there are many living witnesses who mourn the departure of their spiritual father. He was not an eloquent preacher, but he was plain, pointed, earnest, and practical.

It must not be concluded that we think he had no failings. He doubtless had failings, for he was a man. Mr. W. Garner, one of his earliest, most intimate, and, we may add, most constant friends, in the communication with which he has kindly favoured us, points out some traits in his character, touching also on what some deemed his failings.

1. "Debate," says he, "was an element in which he seemed to take delight. Some men rarely enter the arena of strife without losing self-control, and becoming angry; but William Carthy, while he contended warmly for what he believed to be the truth, was usually good humoured, which was indicated by a cheerful and smiling countenance. Perhaps his readiness for controversy sometimes hurried him on to the point of contention, when there was but little to contend for, and under the influence of an excitement which was perfectly congenial to his own mental constitution, he probably sometimes fretted those who disputed with him, when there was no necessity to inflict that kind of punishment on them.

2. "He was very sensitive. With stoical insensibility he had no sympathy. If he received from any one an expression of kindness, it was immediately repaid by gratitude. A fraternal act was duly appreciated, and suitably acknowledged; on the other hand, an unkind act was instantly perceived and keenly felt.

3. "He had a strong sense of personal rights and privileges, and if any man, no matter who or what he was, invaded what he considered his equitable claims, he had nerve enough to repel the aggressor, and to fearlessly vindicate his own rights. No man could silence him with sophistry, or terrify him with threats. Had he been a Reformer, in the dark days of Papal ascendancy, he would probably have expired, not peaceably in his own bed, but in the flames of martyrdom. I believe he would rather have suffered death than surrendered his rights as a Christian. In this respect he was an effectual breakwater against the ebullitions of oppression which ever and anon arise and rush forward to overwhelm the diffident and the feeble.

4. "He tenderly sympathised with the oppressed; he had considerable confidence in his own mental strength and moral influence, and often gratuitously offered his services to suffering innocence. But it is not improbable that his sympathetic emotions were occasionally exercised towards objects whose claims to them were questionable. The best dispositions are liable to abuse, but it is infinitely better to err on the side of charity than on the side of censoriousness.

5. "As a friend, he was affectionate and steadfast. During my long acquaintance with him, I never experienced any difficulty in securing his esteem and confidence. By his removal from us, I feel I have lost one of my most valued and faithful friends.

6. "His sterling piety I never questioned. If he were neither perfect nor infallible, he was a truly good man. From the character of his private correspondence with me, in connection with his general deportment, I was perfectly satisfied that he was what he professed to be, a true disciple of the Lord Jesus Christ, and a devoted servant of the Primitive Methodist Connexion."

Such was William Carthy; he was a good, earnest, God-fearing, hard-working Christian minister. Primitive Methodism has had in its ranks men of greater learning and more brilliant talents; men who, in the pulpit and on the platform, could excel him; men who have been more popular, who have been more eulogised; but it never had, and I question if it ever will have, a more zealous, devoted, and faithful servant, a more liberal, self-denying, and constant friend. Had he loved Primitive Methodism less and self more, had he preferred ease to the welfare of the Connexion, nay, had he but taken that rest which he might, and perhaps we may say which he ought to have taken, had he contented himself with simply performing his own duties in his own circuit, had he cared more for his own interest and less for the interest of others, he might, perhaps have been alive now, and, indeed, might have lived several years. But why do we thus speculate upon what might have been under other circumstances ? This is useless ; our friend Carthy sleeps. For thirty-seven years he laboured, now he rests from his labours, and his works follow him. Most sincerely do we mourn his departure ; fondly do we cherish the remembrance of his generous acts ; earnestly do we resolve to emulate his example ; fervently do we pray that we may meet the last enemy with the same calmness and holy trust in Christ ; then we shall meet our friend in the saints' eternal home !

JOHN DICKENSON

2. Mr. T. POTTS, of Bradwell Circuit, was born at Chapel-en-le-Frith, Derbyshire, December 8th, 1814. Early in life he manifested a strong tendency to worldly pleasures, and but for the example and influence of a pious mother, he might have gone to great lengths in sin. She exercised much influence over him, which she took care to employ for his present and eternal good. About his eighteenth year he was deeply convinced of sin under the preaching of the late Mr. J. Verity. He said " I carried my burden for some time, and at last found salvation by faith, while praying when alone in my bed-room." He cast in his lot with the Wesleyan Methodists, with whom his parents were previously connected, but believing he should be more at home with the Primitives, he soon joined our people, a step which cost him some opposition, and which at times ran high, but his purpose was fixed, and, much as he loved peace, on this point he was unbending. He afterwards became a local preacher, and his punctuality and faithfulness were such as to win the confidence of our people and congregations ; he also became a class-leader and a trustee for five Connexional chapels in this circuit, and was always glad of proofs that God was prospering us ; for this he prayed and laboured. Whoever might be absent from the Quarterly Meetings he was not ; but much as he loved the circuit, and sought to help at its business meetings, his forte was not in carrying out discipline. No ; a lover and ardent admirer of our Connexional polity he certainly was, but having the purest motives, free from all selfishness, he could be readily made to believe that it was so with others, and hence if plausible arguments were employed he was soon won over. His house has long been a welcome home for our preachers and people, for whom he cherished a warm affection, and some of his last efforts were spent in trying to induce others to join our ranks ; because Zion was low, was to him no satisfactory reason why he should desert her. He knew how to weep when she languished, and rejoice when she flourished. His constancy in this respect reminds one of an old nursery rhyme :—

"Tell me ye knowing and discerning few,
Where I may find a friend both firm and true,
Who dares stand by me when in deep distress,
And then his love and friendship most express."

Our Connexion found in Thomas Potts (so far as his own town was concerned) just such a constant, sympathizing friend. I have been much in his company day and night, and can testify to the happy, intelligent, devotional state of mind which he generally enjoyed; nor shall I soon forget his frequent questions on Christian experience and the rich blessings of the Gospel. While I never saw anything like gloomy austerity in him, there was an entire absence of levity; against this he sometimes spoke strongly, and expressed his fears when he saw a tendency to it in professors of religion. His general manner seemed to say,

"Oft as I lay me down to rest,
O may the reconciling word,
Sweetly compose my weary breast,
While on the bosom of my Lord," &c.

As a preacher he might have many superiors, but none were more wishful to honour God; the useful rather than the ornamental was his study here as elsewhere, and his estimate of preaching was in proportion to the number of souls won to Christ and built up in Him; hence his manner was very simple without any approach to vulgarity, never forgetting the juvenile part of his audience, for whose benefit he took care to have some useful and interesting figure or anecdote. Our Sunday-schools will feel the absence of his familiar, friendly countenance. His last sermon was founded on these words, "And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." As a leader he had a tender regard for his flock, rejoiced at its welfare, but was quite as willing to be led at any time as to take the lead. As a family or sick visitor he will be much missed; poverty, wretchedness, and contagious disease were no obstacles to him at any hour. He being also a man of established character, his visits were always welcome, for rich and poor knew him as "a son of consolation," and we presume his memory will draw forth many tears of affectionate remembrance. As a tradesman he put religion first. Many people absent themselves from all, or most of, the public week night services of religion, and their answer when asked the reason is, they say, "business must be attended to." Not so our brother, his presence might always be reckoned on, or a good reason would be given for his absence. Many men, in a position much inferior in life to him, might, with a superior degree of physical and mental energy, have soon realized a large capital; but laying up treasures on earth, was not the Alpha and Omega with him; his motto was,—

"Man wants but little here below, Nor wants that little long."

His health had long been declining, and yet he was slow to perceive it, and would frequently plan for the distant future; even when his last illness had set in, and his friends and medical advisers had given him up, he clung tenaciously to life, not that he feared death, no, far from that, he could say,—“O grave, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting? Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." His hope was full—

"A blooming hope of immortality."

If the graces of a Christian are conspicuous in active life, it often happens that the consolations of Divine grace abound towards him in affliction and in prospect of death; the graces of our brother were severely tried in the furnace of affliction, but while the man felt acutely, the Christian triumphed gloriously. What a privilege it was to hear him exclaim again and again, "The Lord is good! He is good! thank Him! bless Him!" Many spiritual blessings were realized by those of us who visited him in his last affliction. When pressed with extreme pain he cried, "Lord, help me;" and when a friend said, "He does help thee," he quickly answered, "Yes, bless Him, He does, He does! He is with me! He does help me! He will never leave me! hallelujah! glory to God! Then, "O Lord, save sinners, save sinners for Christ's sake, save sinners for Christ's sake, amen! Save sinners, save sinners! This was—

"His watchword at the gates of death,
He entered heaven with prayer."

Thus triumphed Brother Potts on November 22nd, 1861, after an humble and unblemished walk with God for about twenty-six years. He had faults without doubt, yet we believe saints and sinners will allow that for unflinching integrity and love to God and man, he had few to equal him. We are glad to say that the visits of the parish clergyman and clerk (both men of God) were made a blessing to our friend in his last illness.

3. MR. W. BENNETT, of Bradwell Circuit, was born at Tideswell, Derbyshire, June 4th, 1784. His parents were members of the Established Church until the Wesleyan Methodists visited Tideswell. His father heard them, was led to Christ, and united with them. The subject of our sketch was a great lover of singing, and having a powerful voice he united with the choir at the Established Church. His father not liking the companions of his son, and fearing for his spiritual welfare, sent him to Manchester, where, through Wesleyan Methodist agency, he was brought to Christ when he was about twenty-two years of age, and he was united with that community for fifteen or sixteen years.

It is now about forty years since our first preachers began to preach Jesus in his native town; William must hear the new sect, and he became so taken up with them, that like Lydia, he said, "If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there." His next resolution was, "This people shall be my people, and their God my God." Nor did he ever regret this step. Being for the most part of his life strong and healthy, he frequently went to distant camp-meetings and other special services, and showed great willingness to help forward the work of the Lord in any way. He was made a class-leader, which office he punctually fulfilled till his departure from our midst, neither distance nor weather were any obstacles to him. He was a trustee for two of our Connexional chapels in this circuit. When some years ago it was found difficult to supply all the places in this extensive circuit with preachers, his name was put on the circuit's plan, but he used to say he never could study, hence speaking in public was soon declined by him. His house was ever open to such as loved God, regardless of sect or party, and for many years our preachers lodged with him. His sudden exit from this life hardly looked like death. During a fortnight's special public services, he might have been seen wending his way each night to the sanctuary, now leading a prayer-meeting, and then helping in a street singing procession or open-air service with his accustomed zeal. On the night of November 9th, 1861, he led a band-meeting, during which he commenced singing, and other lively chants, no one thinking the old pilgrim was so near his journey's end. He called at several places afterwards, and retired to rest about midnight, to all appearance in good health. Not rising on the Sabbath morning as usual, his daughter gave him a call, but supposing him to be in a sound sleep, she concluded not to disturb him. After a time she went into his room, and suspected from his appearance that something was wrong. She called her husband up stairs, but all was over, and their medical adviser on viewing the body supposed him to have been dead for several hours; no symptoms of suffering were traced, no struggles or groans were heard; he had fallen asleep in Jesus.

In stature he was short and inclining to corpulence, of ruddy complexion and happy expression of countenance; in temperament warm, in morals strictly upright and conscientious, in religion a lover of God and all good men, delighting to speak of the great and good with whom he had been acquainted or whom he had seen. We doubt not he has gone to join in his favourite exercise of praise to "Him that loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood." May his numerous descendants (of three generations) meet him in heaven, and may each reader strive to be "also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

4. HENRY HAWKESWORTH, of the London First Circuit, departed from this scene of toil to his rest in heaven, on Sunday, October 13th, 1861, aged seventy-six years. He was born at Hemingburgh, in Yorkshire, in 1785; his parents were neglecters of salvation, hence his youthful days were spent in vain and worldly amusements; his favourite amusement was, as he oft said, "singing the devil's songs." When in his twentieth year, he removed to Newbald, and there obtained employment with a godly young man, who frequently conversed with him on the necessity of a change of heart, and he pointed Henry to Christ, as the only Saviour of fallen man. He also took him to a Wesleyan prayer meeting, and induced him to destroy his ballads and lead a better life ; but resting short of a change of heart, and not being united with the Church of Christ, he soon fell into his old vain and worldly amusements, in which he continued for more than ten years. About forty-five years since, "Praying Johnny" and others entered Newbald, and, to use the words of our deceased brother, "They set the village on fire, and I was caught in the flame." Henry was now a new creature in Christ Jesus, he united with the first class which was formed at Newbald, and manifested his attachment to the cause of Christ by a consistent walk and regular attendance on the means of grace, and was a liberal supporter of the cause of God.

A ten mile journey to attend a love-feast was not too much for him, he being ever anxious to tell to others what great things God had done for his soul. When on his way to see his aged mother, to talk with her on eternal things, he saw in the distance a friend coming towards him, and, being full of love to God, shouted, "The Lord has pardoned all my sins,—glory, glory!" &c. About forty-one years ago, he removed with his wife and family to London, and, a considerable time after, he found his way to a Bible Christian chapel, in which one of our first missionaries was preaching, and they became acquainted with each other. He then found they had a poor little Primitive Methodist preaching room at Cooper's Gardens, in what was then a neighbourhood of costermongers and Sabbath-breakers of the lowest order. Mr. Hawkesworth united with that society, making the seventh member, and at once he began, with all his heart, in connection with other friends, to procession the lowest localities, and bravely endured opposition from the baser sort, who twirled their mops in the faces of these pious people, set dogs at them, and otherwise grossly insulted them, but, as a band of men whose hearts God had touched, they ceased not to teach and preach that Jesus was the Christ, and that with success, for Brother Hawkesworth, to the joy of his heart, lived to see the Cooper's Gardens Society rise to more than 300 members, and the school to more than 300 scholars.

As a local preacher he served the station well, willingly taking some of the longest journeys, ever exhibiting an unfeigned sympathy for perishing sinners, and oft, with tearful eyes, he urged believers to press into the enjoyment of entire holiness of heart and life. As a leader, he was sound in doctrine, clear in his experience, punctual in his attendance, and constant in his visits to the absentees, inciting them to Christian duties, and pressing them to avoid the obnoxious flippant foppery of the London dandies. He was a pattern of cleanliness and neatness. For the last several years of his life, it was observed by his best friends that he was sinking, and on Sunday, April 20th, 1860, he was seized with a paralytic fit and softening of the brain. For several weeks before the attack, he told his wife, children, grand-children, and others, that his end was near at hand, and urged them all to live to God, and meet him in heaven. His affliction was borne with resignation, and when visited by our office-bearers and others, his countenance always brightened up, and when they spoke to him of the Lord Jesus, the tear of gratitude and smile of joy at once sat on his cheeks. To the last he was fond of singing, and was much cheered while I sang by his bedside a few of his favourite ditties, such as, "The voice of free grace cries escape to the mountain," &c., "In the Christian's home in glory," &c.

A short time before his death he wished to see all his children and grand-children, and though unable to speak, his tearful eye, his moving lip, and waving hand all said, "This is my last long farewell, meet me in heaven," and soon he ceased to breathe. "Mortals said, a man is dead, but angels sang, a child is born."

The happy death of our departed friend was improved in Cooper's Gardens Chapel on Lord's-day, November 17th, 1861, in the presence of a crowded audience, among whom there were seated, in several pews, his weeping widow and thirty of his children and grand-children; it was, indeed, a melting time. In the prayer-meeting after, two persons gave themselves to God, and rejoiced in sins forgiven. G. AUSTIN.

5. MRS. LEAH EVANS, was born at Cookham Dean, Maidenhead Circuit, in 1819, of honest and industrious parents, who endeavoured to train her up in the fear of God, according to the light they possessed. But she went astray from the Lord. The state of the neighbourhood at that time was one of darkness, ignorance, and vice. After one or two unsuccessful attempts by the Primitive Methodist missionaries to establish a cause at the place in 1838, Brother Grigg and his colleagues succeeded. The excitement produced by their labours was immense, and was associated with a considerable degree of persecution. One night when brother Grigg went thither, the rough band played, headed by a publican's daughter; but he preached, and not in vain, for God was with him, and made the word a blessing. As he retired from the hamlet, a few whose hearts God had touched, followed him, and he led them into a gravel pit, and there formed a class of thirteen members. The subject of this sketch was the last who joined that night; but she maintained her membership till the day of her death. Shortly after she had joined the society, she went to Great Marlow to a fellowship meeting, held on the day of the races, and while singing about living, fighting, and dying on the field of battle, she obtained a free and full pardon by faith in the atonement of Christ; and, returned home rejoicing. She went upstairs, and fell on her knees, and poured out her soul in joyful accents to God for His love towards her. But her father, fearing she had been to Marlow races, began to scold her, and, hearing her voice, he concluded she was impertinent, and proceeded to her room to chastise her, but finding her on her knees he retired greatly delighted. Soon she became a preacher of that Gospel which had made her free, and God owned her labours in the salvation of several souls.

Her life was one of great bodily suffering, for when she was only twelve or thirteen years of age, a disease appeared in one of her arms, and, although she tried every available means, she gradually became worse, and, after twenty-seven years of suffering, she went into Reading hospital, where the limb was amputated. After a few months she returned to her family. Her arm, however, never properly healed, and soon the disease appeared in different parts of her body. In this state of suffering she gave birth to a child, which had a tendency to shake her frail system. After this she would take charge of a class; however, her strength declined, and she soon became a prisoner at home. Owing to her complaint, and the thought of leaving her husband and two children, her mind was much harassed and depressed. On the Sabbath before her death, she was severely harassed, fearing lest after having preached the Gospel to others she should become a castaway. But on the Monday morning at five o'clock, the cloud was dispersed, the tempter fled, and she was filled with "joy unspeakable and full of glory." She awoke her husband and son to sing and praise God. And when a few friends gathered around her bed, she requested them to sing the 50th hymn in the old small book:—

"I'm glad I ever saw the day," &c.

Satan made one more attack on her, but she cried out, "The blood! the blood! the precious blood of Jesus cleanseth me from all sin;" and her soul was in an ecstasy. She took an affectionate farewell of her friends husband, son, and baby fourteen months old, giving suitable advice, commending them to God, and exhorting them to meet her in heaven, exclaiming. "I have had many happy seasons, but none like this,—

'If all the world my Saviour knew,
Then all the world would love him too.'

O friends, dry your tears, and praise God because I am so happy. I love, you all, but I love Jesus better. If this is dying it is glorious; I should not mind dying three or four times if I had as many lives."

Thus she triumphantly entered into rest, November 19th, 1861, aged forty-two years. Her husband has lost a good wife; the children an affectionate mother; the church, a pious Christian leader, adviser, and supporter; and the preachers, a sincere friend, under whose roof for many years they were always welcome. May my last end be like her's.

FACTS AND TEACHINGS OF THE HARTLEY COLLIERY ACCIDENT.

A SERMON, BY WILLIAM SACL.

DELIVERED ON BEHALF OF THE "RELIEF FUND," IN DURHAM CIRCUIT.

"No man is sure of life."—JOB xxiv. 22.

WHAT a striking and melancholy illustration of this text has been conveyed to us in the mysteriously sudden death of the 204 men and boys, through the falling of the beam and the consequent blocking up of the shaft of the Hartley Colliery! We had scarcely recovered from the shock produced by the unexpected death of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, than occasion has been given to a similar burst of tender and hearty grief over the withered hopes, perished joys, and overwhelming sorrows of 103 women made widows, 250 children left fatherless, 27 sisters supported by brothers, 16 parents supported by sons, 2 orphans supported by relatives, 1 grandmother supported by a grandson, and 1 aunt supported by a nephew. Truly is it said, "As the birds are caught in a snare, so are the sons of men—snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them."

We do not need a voice from heaven to warn us of the dangerous and uncertain condition of human existence. It is rendered familiar to us every day. Wherever we turn we see it. No man can be sure of his life for a single day or hour. The instruments of human destruction are as numerous as terrible. Life is a vapour, a feverish dream, acting by fits and starts, and then we awake, weeping and rejoicing, and—it is gone, as a dream when one awaketh out of sleep. Than such a fact, what can be more calculated to excite our watchfulness, and keep alive Christian diligence? In some cases, "mortality's fine threads give way" to evils insidiously, as in ambush, in the peculiar organisation of the human frame, subject as it is to the wearing effects of mental excitement and physical toil. In others the subtle invader approaches through the medium of inherited diseases, infectious air, and the maladies generated by intemperance, sensuality, and the vices of the carnal mind. But if some are more exposed than others, no rank, age, or condition form any security against the uncertainties attendant on our mortal tenure. Twenty is as mortal as forty. It is not long since we read of a young lady walking into a garden to pluck a flower, and while in the act a common fly alighted on her exposed arm, punctured the skin, and then flew off. Immediately the arm began to swell, and gradually the swelling extended over the entire body, mortification ensued, and next day that lady was lifeless. It was supposed the fly had been feeding upon a putrid carcase discovered in the neighbourhood, and thus communicated the taint to the blood which it defiled.

Those who by their wealth and social position are supposed to be the most secure, are as liable to life's uncertainty as their poor brethren. Remedies intended to promote health, sometimes impair it; as means designed to lengthen life often shorten it. Neither the skill of physicians, care of nurses, change of air, nor vigour of body can arrest the unrelenting hand of the "King of terrors."

The great and gloomy event with which we have just been rendered familiar, shows us how life hangs before us as a thing for which two are contending, no man being able to determine who shall be master of it. Indeed it hangs in such daily doubt, that when we leave home in the morning we possess no assurance of returning in the evening; and all this, apart from the common frailty of our nature, and the special purpose and appointment of God. We may count on many years, on new enterprises, on uninterrupted success. But what is the lesson taught us by the outward dangers to limb and life confronted by thousands in their daily toil? The Hartley event tells us that however buoyant may be our hopes and expectations; however sanguine we may be in our schemes and projects, the falling of a beam may not only dash them to pieces, but abruptly terminate the lives which formed their basis.

The morning of January 16th, 1862, dawned upon the miners and their families at Hartley, like its predecessors. The sun shone with the same brightness, and diffused its usual warmth. Everything was unaltered—nature, earth, and elements. At their accustomed hour, more than 200 of them, sustaining the endearing relations of husbands, sons, brothers, and companions, flesh and blood, like ourselves, with all our sensibilities, hopes, affections, noble aspirings, and noble capabilities, leave their humble homes to return alive no more. From our personal knowledge of pious miners, many a Christian family would part in that blessed harmony which is made up of the gravity of age, and the gleesomeness of youth, amid the looks and smiles of loving parents, and the mirth and sport of happy children. And away beyond those "charmed thresholds," across which they walked with cheerful step, as "Good morning, Mary," passed from the husband to his wife, there was nothing to alarm the fears or excite the trembling apprehensions of any one. Lot, forewarned by the angels of the destruction coming upon guilty Sodom, and anxious to bring his family out of that devoted place, rose up in the night, went and spoke to his sons-in-law who had married his daughters, and said, "Up, get you out of this place, for the Lord will destroy this city." But in this case, neither preacher nor Providence seemed to speak. No warning angels were sent to hurry the unsuspecting men to a safer place of abode. Neither this token nor that other were previously exhibited. There was nothing to indicate the approach of unusual danger. The men breathed the usual atmosphere, and manifested their wonted energy of arm and limb. The machinery of the pit revolved in its usual course—horses alike performing their allotted work. If anything was wanting to confirm them in the belief that “all was right,” it was supplied in the arrival of the “back shift men,” to whom the “fore shift men” were just giving up their places. But in this moment of supposed peace, sudden destruction was coming—coming upon those who had only been in the pit eight minutes, as well as those who had been eight hours. Stimulated by awakened apprehensions and consciousness of peril, they doubtless hasten to the mouth of the single shaft. Imagine, if you can, their immediate agitation and wild confusion on finding it completely blocked up. The only possible means of communication between the surface above and the abyss below, consisted of what is termed “jowling.” As, however, the difficulties and dangers of clearing the shaft were great, consuming days and nights, this dumb language ceased; for by the following Saturday the men had succumbed to the fatal “carbonic oxide” and “choke-damp.” After seven days of heroic and weary labours the dead bodies were reached. The cry heard through the land of Egypt when the first-born in every house lay dead, might furnish some of the cries which were heard through the families of Hartley Colliery. In the latter case the coffins numbered in one family were seven. In many three, four, and five, respectively, were counted.

One poor woman who had lost her husband and four sons, all she had, is reported to have said in reply to some words of condolence from the Bishop of Durham, “I wouldn’t have cared if only one of them had been left, but they’re all gone, sir.” That was a touching utterance of the resident viewer, Mr. Joseph Humble, who, after recovering from a visit to the dead in the poisonous mine, exclaimed, “O my canny men! O my canny men! I hope they are all happy. They would have done aught for me.” Was it not also enough to touch the tenderest cord of the heart, to be told of sons clinging with fond embraces to the necks of their fathers; and how the Scotch and Irish respectively linked to each other by the only ties and sympathies of nationality, were found in groups by themselves. And though not one of that human congregation survived to tell us of the visitations of conscience, relentings of heart, of the tears, and prayers, and pleadings which marked their last moments, as the balances of the sanctuary were trembling with their immortal destinies; it is fraught with relieving comfort to us that they had meetings for prayer, and we may reasonably hope that many of them were strengthened by the consolations and hopes of the “unsuffering kingdom” in the near view of eternity.

Let me now refer to the teachings of this sad event. Before, however, I do so, I beg to remind you of one relieving circumstance it has called forth. I refer to that large amount of welcome and benevolent sympathy which has been manifested, ranging from our beloved widowed Sovereign down to the humblest sons of toil. By this time, we believe, that nearly £30,000 have been subscribed for the bereaved. Sincerely do we trust that such exertions will not stop short of the establishment of a similar fund for all those families left to suffer bereavement and poverty by the smaller accidents constantly occurring. In the Northern coal field alone, the inspectors' reports show more than 1,000 deaths for the last seven years exclusive of such accidents as Burradon, Hetton, and Hartley.

One of the thoughts suggested by the accident finds expression in the language of the psalmist, "Thy judgments, O God, are a great deep." The extreme limitation of our understandings on the one hand, and the depth of God's designs on the other, indicate the difficulty of getting possession of all the circumstances, relations, and influences of an event, and in the absence of such a full understanding, we are likely to think improperly and judge inaccurately of it. Only part of God's ways are known to us, many of which are unfathomable. They give us matter for serious thought and reflection. We are often sorely put to it in interpretations and readings of events. And no wonder. We are of yesterday, and know nothing (comparatively). By wisdom we cannot find out God to perfection. It is one of the revealed characteristics of Jehovah that "He is fearful in praises, doing wonders." David describes him "terrible out of His holy place." In creation, providence, and grace, alike He sometimes envelopes Himself in dark clouds and mighty waters. Moses was puzzled, and did not know how to reconcile the divine conduct with the divine purpose. Hear his hasty expostulations with God on one of those painful occasions. "Wherefore," says he "hast thou so evil entreated this people? Why is it that thou hast sent me to them? For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither hast thou delivered thy people at all." Moses needed more faith in the wisdom and goodness of his covenant-keeping God. Herein, too, must we seek for comfort and repose, and not from the discovering of the designs of each event. "Such knowledge is too wonderful for us; it is high, we cannot attain unto it." It was said if the brattice, which blocked up the shaft of the pit, had fallen three fathoms lower the men would have been safe. It did not do so; but, where it fell, excluded the possibility of rescuing them alive. We may draw this, that, and the other conclusion in our reasoning on the matter; but evidently the web is too complicated for us to unravel. The reconciling thought is "The Judge of all the earth will do right. And "what we know not now we shall know hereafter," and exclaim with the illuminated multitude above, "Just and true are all thy ways, O thou King of saints."

We may, however, remark that there is much in our lot quite beyond our reach of comprehension, and requiring obedient faith, we are not to infer that man has not the power of preserving or throwing away life, because, like other gifts of God, it is exposed to man's abuse. As many, by their wickedness, live not half their days, so others, by carelessness and selfishness, subject it to unnecessary and unrighteous risks. Indeed, no one can read the sickening details of accidents and deaths without feeling that some men, who have the lives of their fellows committed to them, are destitute of the very essentials of human nature, and impregnable as rocks of adamant to the sacred obligations of justice and humanity. Is it not a dreadful thing that nothing short of such a tragedy as we have witnessed is sufficient to suggest the adoption of precautions so essential to the life of man? Are we to be careful of the health and lives of brutes, and leave those with the same origin and destination as ourselves to chance or the charities of selfishness? The verdict of the jury goes to say that not only must there be double shafts in all working collieries, but that if Hartley had been walled instead of "bratticed," the men would have been reached sooner.

It is no small comfort to the Christian, that God is at the helm of the universe, regulating and controlling its events for His own glory and the happiness of all who love him, so that, whatever be their cast, they can have nothing in them destructive either to his principles or his happiness. Hence, he sees order where others only see confusion and general good springing out of partial evil. In his view, second causes and natural agencies are presided over by the Deity,—the first great Cause. In the abiding confidence that his "righteousness stands out like the great mountains," he bears up bravely under the perplexities of life, committing himself absolutely to the Divine guidance, as the God of his salvation, and the sure anchor of his soul.

As Christians are not warranted to apply to themselves the temporal promises of the Old Testament, where the favour of God towards individuals was expressed in their freedom from great calamities, so we are forbidden to infer that men are great sinners, because they are great sufferers.

But if instructed to be moderate in our censures, candid in our judgments, and careful in our interpretation of events, we are to remember, "when God's judgments are abroad, the people will learn righteousness." Sometimes God warns one man by striking down another. His punishment is our example. "If the cedar falls, let the fig-tree tremble." If Nero sings while Rome burns, what is that to us? Let the calamities of others admonish, instruct, and save us. When the cisterns of others are dashed to pieces, and their comfort poured upon the ground, it is that we may be driven to the fountain. How often have these words been personally applicable,—"In the way of Thy judgments, O God, have we waited for thee. In trouble have we visited thee. We poured out a prayer when Thy chastening rod was upon us?"

In conclusion, let the event be regarded by none of us with carelessness. We have all an interest in it, and a close connection with it. We shall not only all die, but may die under circumstances as totally unexpected as the men at Hartley. Any one may see the world is not the place in which to lead a life at random. Are, then, the good feelings produced by this striking event to come to nought? Shall we not know the time of our visitation? Shall we refuse to be saved, unless by force or violence? Let the mercy which spares you when others are taken lead you to repentance, and do not harden your hearts in sin. "To day," says the scripture, "if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." "Turn you at my reproof, behold I will pour out my Spirit upon you. I will make known my words unto you. If ye will not hear, in the latter day ye shall consider."

Suppose the summons were to come to night! It is not impossible. It has happened in many cases, and will happen in many more. Among those we may be included. Are you willing? are you waiting? are you ready? Have you repented of sin, and believed unto justification of life? Watch and pray.

I cannot conclude with a more appropriate precept than the Saviour's. "Watch ye, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh, and what I say unto you, I say unto all,—Watch."

PROVIDENCE DEPARTMENT.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE ILLUSTRATED.

THE following extracts from the "Sunday at Home," on Divine Providence, are so thoroughly in accordance with our views, that we cheerfully transfer them to our pages, praying that they may be made a great blessing to our numerous readers:—

A party of friends assembled together on a Sabbath evening, entered into conversation on the use of such words as "chance" and "accident." Mr. Hutton being appealed to, said that there was no objection to the use of these and similar expressions, provided they were only understood as signifying our ignorance of the immediate causes of events. "The word chance may be found in a dictionary, but does not belong to the affairs of life. To me it appears only another word for man's ignorance: those events which come to pass men know not how—men are prone to ascribe to chance. I like to ascribe them to God's overruling providence. There is true philosophy in the lines of the poet—

"All Nature is but art unknown to thee,
All Chance direction which thou canst not see."

"Would you, sir," I asked, "ascribe matters small as well as great directly to Providence? Some things seem too trivial."

"Yet trivial events often lead to wonderful consequences, and therefore I attribute all events to Providence, for with God nothing can be small, and nothing can be great. With Him it is easy to fill half the world with light as it is to fill this little chamber. With Him it is as easy to create the sun as it is to create the insect that dances in the sun's beam; the insect and the sun alike require Almighty power. I start with this belief, 'The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof;' and men, while eagerly following their own ways, and seeking their own interest, are only carrying out some part of God's providence. You hear men sometimes say in defence of a wrong action, 'Oh! it was only a trifle.' I maintain that nothing is trifling. Some years ago, tens of thousands and scores of thousands of pounds were spent in works of charity: and what was the cause? a youth had a corkscrew in his pocket. Let me show you how it occurred.

"An old gentleman of very large property, but of penurious habits, was accustomed, when friends called upon him and expected some hospitality, to apologize and express regret that he could not offer his guests a glass of wine, for unfortunately the butler had mislaid the corkscrew. On one occasion, this youth called to see his uncle, and appearing fatigued, the butler produced a bottle of wine, with the usual apology for its not being drawn. But the youth, turning to the butler, said, 'O, I have a corkscrew,' and produced one from his pocket, and of course the wine was given; but the youth had no sooner left his uncle's presence, than the old gentleman was heard walking to and fro, and saying, murmuring and offended, 'Corkscrew! corkscrew! indeed; what business has he with a corkscrew? He shall not screw me out of my money, I know, for I'll alter my will directly.' He sent for his solicitor, and revoked his former will, which was in favour of this youth, and left his property to a gentleman whom he had only known a few months. A short time after this, finding himself ill, he sent for this stranger, and said to him, 'I wish to speak to you about my property. God has given me a talent, but I have never had grace to use it. I have left all my property to you, and I entreat you to employ it for pious and benevolent purposes. I charge you to attend to this request—that you may use the money better than I have done.' A few days later, this wealthy, but penurious old man died, having left to his new acquaintance considerably above the third of a million of money. The young man who thus offended his uncle, will never regard the possession of a corkscrew as a trifling matter to him.

"Some of the most important events in the world have arisen from the most insignificant causes. A jest led to a war between two great nations. The presence of a comma in a deed, lost to the owner of an estate one thousand pounds a month for eight months. The battle of Corunna, in 1809, is said to have been fought, and the life of that noble officer, Sir John Moore, sacrificed, through a dragoon stopping to drink while bearing despatches. A man lighting a fire on the sea shore led to the Rev. John Newton's honoured labours and life of usefulness. If I select my proofs from the Bible, I find that a sleepless night passed by an Eastern monarch, elevated a poor, despised, and persecuted man to the highest honours in the kingdom, and saved the Jewish nation from destruction.

"I quote these instances to show the wonderful events that arise out of small beginnings. A stone placed at the mouth of a spring will change the course of a mighty river; and the stream that rolls thousands of miles, and casts its flood of mighty waters into the ocean—at the outset is only a small brook, over which a little child may pass. One word hastily spoken has embittered life; one falsehood has led to ruin. A servant closing too quickly the steps of a carriage, caused a young lady to become an invalid, reclining on a couch, for nearly sixty years. Therefore, we must be able to follow a word or an action through all its results, before we are competent to speak of it as a matter of no importance. The instances at which I have briefly glanced are taken from books; but I will narrate, at greater length, some illustrations from my own experience.

"I formerly," continued Mr. Hutton, "resided in a distant part of the country, and some family affairs brought me to town. I was obliged to hasten on my business, as I was pressed for time. When preparing to return home, I met an old acquaintance, who asked me if I had, during my stay in town, visited a lady well known to my family in former years, but who had recently experienced a sad reverse of fortune, and was also suffering severely from ill health. I expressed my regret to hear this, and informed him that I had not seen the lady, and did not even know where she resided. He instantly wrote down the address, and urged me, as an act of Christian kindness, to visit this sufferer. His earnestness made me regard the request as a call of duty. I therefore changed my plans, and postponed my return; and although to pay this visit of mercy involved a very long walk, I started the moment my friend left me. The lady was residing in the outskirts of London, in clean, but humble apartments, indicative of poverty. I found her reclining on a sofa, in a feeble condition, though able to converse. She welcomed me with much earnestness. I, therefore, availing myself of the privilege of a former acquaintance, and her pleasure in seeing me, spoke to her without reserve, and soon discovered that her views on religious subjects were not only defective, but they were erroneous. Her opinions on the great doctrines of Scripture were not such as the sacred writings inculcate. Her views were unsound respecting her own condition as a sinner in the sight of God; also in reference to the plan of redemption, and the Divine nature of our blessed Lord. I had, therefore, to contend against these false opinions before I could hope to be useful. After a long and most animated conversation, I appeared to succeed, and then spoke to this effect: "My dear lady, God works by means, and one person is often, by God's goodness, made a blessing to another. I met a friend who urged me to visit you—may not this be Divine providence, as it were, saying to me, 'I have comforted thee in days past: go thou and comfort others. I have blessed thee: go and tell to another wherein blessedness consists. Go to yonder house; there dwells one who does not honour me; but I have not forsaken her; for I have taken away her wealth, I have withdrawn her strength, and I have withheld from her many of her long-enjoyed comforts. Go, speak to her faithfully; I send thee, and I will be with thee; thou shalt deliver my message, and I will bless it. Go, send her to her knees in prayer, and in penitence, and tell her I will meet her there; and that I am ready to forgive her, and to say unto her, Thou art mine, from henceforth I will bless thee.' Believing that God thus works by His providence, I offer you this day, in the name of Jesus Christ, God over all, every needful blessing for both worlds, if you will accept it as a sinner renouncing all idea of your own goodness, and relying upon the atonement of Christ, and looking for the sacred influence of the Holy Spirit. Upon this view of Divine truth I found all my hope for time and for eternity. I have often tried its consoling power in the days of affliction, and bear my humble testimony to its sustaining influence.'

"God enabled me to speak with great tenderness, and yet with great fervour, and this afflicted lady perceived by my tone and earnestness how deeply I felt for her situation, the more so as I was led to hope that my message of life and peace would not be in vain. On taking my leave, the thought darted into my mind, now that I have finished speaking, the devil will begin, he will suggest to her that this gentleman was very earnest, he urged upon you many things, but you know it is his profession; therefore, I thought to myself, to defeat the adversary's designs, I will do what I can for her temporal wants. I therefore folded up a sum of money, and as I was leaving the room, I deposited it on the mantle piece; my poor friend conjectured the nature of my friendly act, and burst into tears, but not a word was spoken. As I hurried down the stairs, these were my reflections. I have given what I cannot afford, but I have done it to do honour to my Master's message. I lend the money to God, and if I have sought from right motives to serve His cause, He will repay me. With a heart full of gratitude to God for the peace of mind I experienced, I left the house, feeling also thankful that I had yielded to the entreaty of my friend.

"The time occupied by the visit, and the distance, compelled me to defer my return until the next day. Having a few hours to spare the next morning, I took a walk, and accidentally, as it appeared to me, a city merchant met me, whom I had not seen for a considerable time. After some friendly expressions, he added, 'I am glad to meet you, for I am in your debt.'

"'How so?' I exclaimed.

"'Do you not remember,' he replied, 'that I gave you a commission long ago, which you were kind enough to attend to, and you paid something on my account?'

"'Yes, I do; but pray say nothing about so small a matter.'

"'No, no,' he cried out; 'what is right ought to be done—little or not little—and I thank you.'

"'Well, friend, I must say you are grateful for slight services.'

"'Do me the favour,' said the merchant, 'to walk with me to my counting-house.'

"I complied; he left me for a few moments, and returned with a paper in his hand, saying:

"'I have no doubt, my friend, your charity purse is often heavily taxed, and perhaps far more than it can bear. Do me, therefore, the favour, to accept of this as a mark of my regard;' and so saying, he placed in my hands a cheque upon his banker for just five times the amount I had lent to God, and given to the poor lady.

"Whilst this generous man was performing this act of benevolence, he knew not that at that moment I regarded him as a messenger from God, to confirm the faith of his servant, and to send that servant on his way rejoicing. Nor did he know that by an act which he possibly the next hour would forget, he was producing a feeling so powerful, that while life continues, it can never, never be effaced. While gratifying his own kind heart, he was carrying out the mysterious plans of God's providence, and giving an answer to prayer. Must I not feel that nothing is lost which is spent in God's service?

"Can I, my friends, call this chance? No. And the good effects end not here.

"Some years after my journey to London, my wife came to town, and during her stay, paid a visit to her old friend. The conversation of the lady was remarkably devout, scriptural, and edifying; so much so, as to lead to the remark, 'I am delighted to hear your opinions, and to listen also to your Christian experience; but it was not always so. What has produced this happy change in your sentiments?"

"The reply was: 'I attribute it under Providence to a visit paid me, some years ago, by your husband.'

"When I recal this circumstance to mind, I spurn the idea of 'chance,' and adore God for His providence."

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

PLAIN PREACHING.

It is astonishing how "touchy" many people are about plain practical preaching. It is well enough, so long as you preach the doctrines of the Bible, but when you come to preach its duties, many are offended. They have a very plausible way of speaking—they say they want to hear the Gospel preached. They don't want a man to be harping to them about personal, and especially, family duties. These things, with them, are no part of the Gospel. Ezekiel strikingly describes such hearers: "Also, thou son of man, the children of thy people," often a man's own congregation, "still are talking against thee, by the walls, and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord." Very good; such people generally are! "And they come unto thee as the people cometh, and they sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness." How graphically this describes many of the hearers of the Gospel in our day; they hear God's words, but they will not do them. "And, lo, thou art unto them as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument, for they hear thy words, but they do them not." They are often greater admirers of "the pleasant voice" of the preacher, than of the pungent truths he may utter.

Isaiah also well describes them: "This people drew me near with their mouths, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of me." This sentiment is quoted approvingly by the Saviour Matthew xv. 7—9: "Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me,—teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

They are also admirably described by the Psalmist: "Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues—For their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his commandments.”

Let us look a little now at the warrant the minister of the Gospel has for this “plain preaching.”—Ezekiel is also very pointed on this—hear him: “Son of man, go, get thee unto the house of Israel, and speak my words unto them. For thou art not sent to a people of a strange speech, and of a hard language, whose words thou canst not understand; surely, had I sent thee to them, they would have hearkened.” It would appear from this that the heathen are more likely to receive the Gospel, than many sinners in Christian lands, nay, than nominal professors. “But the house of Israel will not hearken unto thee, for they will not hearken unto me; for all the house of Israel are impudent and hard-hearted.” This is a grave charge. “Behold I have made thy face strong against their foreheads. As an adamant, harder than flint, have I made thy forehead; fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house. All my words that I shall speak unto thee receive into thine heart, and hear with thine ears. And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of my people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.” “Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me.” The business of the minister is to deliver the message which God has given him as a watchman. This is strikingly brought forward in Jonah. And the word of the Lord came to Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.”—No choice in the matter. “And thou son of man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briers and thorns be with thee, and thou dost dwell among scorpions; be not afraid of their words, nor be dismayed at their looks, though they be a rebellious house.” We have much of the same in Isaiah. “Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins.” The special business of the minister is with the Church.—“Begin at my sanctuary.” “I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day or night: ye that make mention of the Lord keep not silence.” This is a description of the faithful watchman; in another place in these prophecies we have a description of the “hireling.” “His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, which can never have enough; and they are shepherds that cannot understand; they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.” How beautifully this describes many of the “watchmen and shepherds” of the present day. See Ezekiel iii, 18—21. and xxxiii. 1—20.

Jeremiah also speaks distinctly on this point. But the Lord said unto me, Say, not, I am a child; for thou shalt go to all that I send thee, and whatsoever I command thee, thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces, for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord. Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth, thou, therefore, gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them.”

In conclusion hear Paul's charge to Timothy.—“Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine," (this "time" has come already in some places,) "but shall heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things,—endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist,—make full proof of thy ministry." Also to Titus: "Wherefore, rebuke them sharply, that they may be sound in the faith. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

THE RAGGED BOY—THE RICH MERCHANT.

"Let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

WHILE preparing for the ministry, it was the custom of a student to seek out poor children for the Sabbath-school. In one of his rambles, he found a little boy in the street, poorly clad, with his little bare feet in the cold snow, no hat, and in the most wretched condition. He called him, and proposed the following questions:—

"What is your name, my little fellow?"

"My name is George S——."

"Where do you live?"

"In the woods, by the old mill?"

"What is your father's name?"

"I have no father," he said, and burst into tears; "my father was brought home dead about a year ago. He was found frozen to death on the road to our house."

"And your mother—is she living?"

"Yes; but she is poor, and goes out to work."

"Have you any brothers and sisters?"

"Yes; one brother and one sister."

"Are they at home?"

"Yes, sir; they are little ones and cannot go out now."

"Well, my little fellow, you want a pair of shoes, and some clothes."

"Yes, sir, I do; but I want to get something for mother to eat first."

This told the story. He asked no more questions; but at once set about the work to be done. George was soon seated in a waggon, with food enough for his mother's present necessities. On reaching their cottage, the student found a lonely woman with her two little ones, and nothing to eat. George jumped out of the waggon, and ran into the house, saying, "O, mother, mother! you will not cry any more;—the gentleman has got us enough to eat for a whole month." The student found, on inquiry, that the father had been a drunkard, and died in a drunken fit, and left the poor widow to struggle on alone. George was then about ten years of age, and a good boy he was to his poor mother. Next day, the student sent a good woman to clothe them, and get George to attend school the next Sabbath. For one year, George was a scholar in that student's class, when his kind friend and teacher had to leave the neighbourhood. Fourteen long years rolled away. The student became an eminent minister of the Gospel; and, one day, while sitting at dinner in a friend's house in the city of New York, a servant handed him a note, that moment left at the door by some unknown person, which was as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—Having seen your name announced as one of the speakers at the Sunday-school meeting, it would give me great pleasure to see you at No. —, Pearl-street, this afternoon at three o'clock. Do not disappoint me. Your friend, GEORGE S——."

At the appointed time, the minister found himself at the number mentioned in the note. He inquired of the clerk for the name, and, to his surprise, was introduced to the proprietor of a large wholesale dry goods store, one of the first establishments in the city.

"Sir," said the merchant, "I believe I am not mistaken, this is Mr. M——, the poor student of Mr. W——, once my teacher in the Sabbath-school at W——."

"I was a poor student and teacher in the school you mention, about fourteen years ago; but this cannot be little George S——, the white-haired boy I owned as my scholar?"

"The same," answered the merchant, grasping the minister's hand with the greatest joy, while a tear trickled down his cheek. "The same, only grown to manhood. You will pardon my hasty note and this abrupt meeting; but, Sir, I thought that we should never, never meet again, and learning that you were in the city, I was anxious to offer you the hospitalities of my home during your stay. Please order your luggage to be taken to my house. My house is yours while you remain. I cannot be denied."

With joy the minister complied with his generous offer, and while staying at his house, learnt the following:—

Soon after he left the place, little George was fortunate enough to meet a man from New York, who loved Sabbath-schools, and being pleased with the boy, the mother consented, and George left home with many tears for a place in the gentleman's store. By good conduct, he gained the affections of all who knew him. At the age of eighteen, he was advanced to the station of clerk, and from a clerk to a partner with his employer. When he was twenty-one years of age, his partner died, and, having no children or relations, he gave to poor George all the interest in the concern, and at once made him the owner of some thousands of pounds. And there the minister found himself seated with his old scholar in a fine house and a happy family.

George himself was then the superintendent of a large school of poor boys, picked up from the streets of the city, and taught in a room hired by himself for that purpose. He was a member of a Christian Church, a friend to the poor and afflicted, and greatly beloved.

"And where is your dear mother, George?" said the minister, as he sat there so happy, rejoicing in the goodness of God.

"Oh, sir, she went home to heaven from my arms in this very room a few months since; and, just before she died, she gave me strict charge to find you out, and to tell you that her dying breath went up to God for a blessing on your head.

"Your sister, what has become of her; and baby brother?"

"Oh, sir, my brother has grown up to be a young man, and is now first book-keeper in my store, and he, too, has a large class in the Sabbath-school. My dear sister is far away, the companion of a devoted missionary in the west."

Here we must leave the history of this devoted family. Now for the lesson it teaches:—

1. See how God confers his blessings on those dear children who love their parents. Little George was the humble instrument in the conversion of his mother and sister. The mother, in the glorious prospect of heaven, breathes out her last in the arms of her noble boy. The sister becomes a missionary's wife, and the brother a zealous Christian.

2. What encouragement for ministers and Sabbath-school teachers to labour for the conversion of the young, even the poorest we can pick up in the streets.

3. The benefits of Sabbath-school instruction are not confined to time only ; they reach into eternity, and roll a wave of glory up to the very throne of God. Teachers,—“ Be not weary in well-doing, for in due season you shall reap if you faint not.”

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

THE PIOUS SON, A BLESSING TO HIS UNGODLY FAMILY.

“I ONCE knew,” writes Pastor Harena, “a man who was a perfect specimen of a good, upright man of honour ; but he did not know the Lord Jesus. Among his fellow-men, he stood in universal, well-merited esteem, for he was friendly and amiable in social intercourse, and had something naturally noble in his whole manner. Prayer was never heard in his house, neither grace before meals, nor morning and evening family worship. But parents and children, master and servants, lived in love and peace ; and any dishonourable conduct was never endured. In other respects, all went on in that household according to the ways of this world : cards were played ; there was dancing occasionally : if passion was excited, swearing (though rarely) might be heard ; but that worldly merriment should be carried beyond moderation the man would not allow. The Bible was never read, yet that man had a Bible which he had inherited from his pious mother : high in honour, it had the best place in his book-case, but it was never used, only taken down now and then to be dusted.

“The man had a great many children, and a wife, bound to him by the most devoted love. His circumstances were tolerably good ; he worked diligently, and got on by degrees. Church and communion were not regularly attended, but still not scorned.

“This man had a peculiar hatred against the pious, of whom he had known a few in his life. These so-called pious people of his acquaintance could not have been of the right sort, for by them he had arrived at the conviction that all pious persons, without any exception, were hypocrites. He often related that he had known a pious man who read much in the Bible and religious books, and held prayer-meetings in his house, but was, at the same time, a niggardly miser and usurer. Another he knew who outwardly was equally pious, but was so often possessed by such violent anger, and by such an ungovernable temper, that several times he had nearly committed murder. So he considered all pious persons hypocrites.

“This man was a lawyer, and was already advanced in years, when one of his sons, whom, on account of his superior talents, he particularly loved, and who was then studying the law, learned at the university to know and trust in the Saviour, and turned to Him with his whole heart. A faithful preacher, whose services he constantly attended, and with whom he afterwards became very intimate, was the instrument of his conversion. And now when the heart of this son was filled with such fervent love to his Saviour, nothing was more natural than that he should ardently desire that his tenderly-loved parents, brothers and sisters might also learn to know his Lord; and he poured out his whole heart to them in his letters, and told them, without reserve, what had taken place in himself, and how happy he now was in the assurance of the forgiveness of his sins, and in the certain hope of everlasting life. 'Oh that all men were as happy as I.' said he in one of his letters.

"For a long time he remained without any answer to his letters. At last there came one from his father, which ran thus:—'My son,—Formerly, your letters were a comfort and a joy to me. Your present letters, on the contrary, are an affliction and bitter sorrow to me. I perceive that you are on the high road to become like one of those hypocrites of whom I have so often told you. I must request you either to write as you did before, or to give up writing altogether.'

"The son replied:—'Father,—You have always admonished me to tell the truth; you have impressed upon me that there are no more despicable and cowardly beings than liars, for they have not even the courage to speak the truth: and now will you oblige me to tell a lie? I must either write to you what is in my heart—for I cannot, and will not lie, neither will I be a hypocrite—or indeed I must do as you say, and write no more.'

"This greatly amazed his father, for he had often told his friends, 'That boy will never tell a lie: he would rather have his head cut off:' so he was honest enough to write in answer to his son:—'Well, write as you like: you are no hypocrite, you are an enthusiast; but you shall not tell a lie. You were right, and I was wrong.'

"Soon after came the vacation, and the son journeyed home to spend it with his parents. When he entered the house, his mother received him with tears, and looked at him very thoughtfully, as if she feared he was not quite right in his head; but he fell upon her neck, kissed her, and pressed her tenderly to him, whispering, 'Mother, do not make such a serious face; I still have all my five senses.' Next he went to his father in his study, and was going to embrace him too, but he refused. Then the good son asked him, 'You are still my dear kind father, and will always remain so; am I no longer your son? Why not? What have I done wrong? Is there anything wicked in praying and reading the Bible?'

"Then his father kissed him, and said, 'I must always honour the truth: you have done nothing wicked, my son.' Then they talked for a little while about the professors at the university, and about the lectures which the youth had heard there.

"In the meantime, the mother had got supper ready, and they sat down to table. The son stood up, clasped his hands, and prayed. The father suddenly thrust back his chair with violence, and he ran out of the room, and the mother after him, full of grief. But the young man did not move, and after he had fervently prayed for his father and mother, sat down and ate his supper with tears. As his parents did not return, he sought his chamber, and poured out his heart to his faithful God and Saviour, and then slept quietly till the morning.

"When he arose next day, he prayed faithfully and fervently; and after he had read a chapter in his beloved Bible, he went down as usual to the sitting-room. The father sat in his arm-chair, and looked first pale, then red. The son shook him warmly by the hand, wishing him and his mother, 'Good morning.'

"My son," demanded the father, 'are you the master of this house, or am I?'

"Who else but you can be, father?" replied the son.

"Why, then, will you introduce prayer before meals, when you know that it has never been the custom here?"

"Father, have I ever said that you and my mother were to pray? I prayed purposely, 'Come, Lord Jesus, be my guest;'" for generally we pray be our guest. I know very well that you do not pray, so that it would have been a falsehood had I prayed our guest."

"But why do you not leave off praying altogether? You know very well that it is not the rule here."

"Not for you, father, but for me it is the rule; and if I should eat without praying, I should be a liar to God; and I am sure you do not wish that I should be a liar to God, for you abhor lying to men."

"No," said his father, 'you shall not tell a lie; and for my part, you may pray, but only when we are alone, not when strangers are here, or we shall appear ridiculous.'

"Father, I could not, even for the sake of you, my own dear father, be a liar to God. How could I turn for the sake of strangers? I am not ashamed of my God and my Saviour before any man, neither before strangers, nor before kings; and I will remain true and faithful to my God. If you will not allow it when strangers are here, then do not call me to table."

"Boy, from whence have you such courage?" exclaimed his father.

"I love the Lord," replied his son. 'He who has redeemed me—for Him I would die a thousand times.'

"Boy," said his father, 'you are no hypocrite; so for my part you may be as pious you like, if you are only not a hypocrite.'

"From that time the ice was broken, and I have seen with my own eyes how father and mother and son read the Bible, prayed and sang together, and how the brothers and sisters, one after another, were converted to the Lord. Seldom have I known a dwelling in which the Lord Jesus Christ was so fearlessly confessed as in that house."

MISCELLANIES.

1. GRASPING THE PROMISES: OR, THE TWO PRAYING WILLYS.

For about a week I was privileged to visit Willy daily, and we had much happy conversation together about the Saviour. He enjoyed committing to memory passages of Scripture and hymns which I selected for him. His strength gradually declined, as his father's recovered. Reynolds seemed increasingly hardened against the truth, and most unwillingly listened to his child's pleadings that he would come to Jesus. Yet his heart was softened at the near prospect of parting with the boy, as he said, "for ever" and he tended his child with affectionate solicitude. Still he positively refused to accede to the earnest request that he would read to him, even although Willy's hands had grown too feeble to hold the book.

On a Saturday forenoon, Willy said to me, "I've been praying hard for something: you'll think it such a strange prayer."

"Shall I? What was it?"—

"That God would make my father very ill again; for you see, ma'am he's almost well. The doctor has just been round, and told him he may leave on Monday. And you know his heart is desperately hard, and if he goes up to the front, there's little chance of his ever coming back; and it's not likely he'll get any one there to tell him of Jesus."

"O Willy, you must not feel so. All means of working are in God's hands. When your father was a child, his heart was no harder than yours and mine; and the same Holy Spirit that converted us, is able to do all things for him.

"Please, ma'am, will you give me your hand? Now I want you to promise me one thing; will you?"—"I must hear what you want first."

"You remember, ma'am, the day I came in here, how you kept on telling me about the promise to those that pray?"—"Yes, Willy; and God did answer my longing prayer, and gave you your sight."

"Yes, and ever since I felt you had got what you wanted, I've thought I'd do the same; and I've been praying night and day for my father. I feel God will hear the prayers of those who love him; and now that I'm going where there's no prayer, I want you to promise you'll never pass a night or morning without asking God to convert my father; and I'm sure I'll meet him some day in heaven.

He'll soon have no one but you to pray for him. Will you promise me you'll pray hard as you did for me?"

"Yes, Willy, I will; but I feel God is more willing to save than we to pray."—"Never mind, ma'am, he says we are to pray; and you must just lay hold of the promises. Now, remember you've promised to a dying boy."

The next morning, Willy said, "Do you know I'm dying?"—"Yes, I knew you must die, when I first saw you; but you are much worse than when I saw you yesterday."

"Yes, the doctor says I can't live out the day. Will you put your ear close down to me? I want to whisper something to you. Do you know, my father bribed one of the men last night to get him some drink; and he was so bad and wild all night. The doctor has found it out and is very angry. Oh, you don't know how it pains me to see my father go on so the last night his child is spending on earth;" and the poor boy wept passionately. I soothed him with some of the precious promises of God's word, and cheered him by uniting with him in prayer for his father.

"Do you know what I've been thinking of all the morning?"

"Of how soon you will see Jesus?"—"Yes, I've been thinking that I began this Sunday a poor sick boy in the hospital, surrounded by wicked men and sinful talk; and I think I shall be at home before night. I think I've begun a Sunday that will never end. I don't think I shall ever have another week day."

At his request I read him Ephesians ii. and iii., 2 Cor. v., and the story of Bartimeus, and then proposed prayer.

"You will come again to see me?"—"I do not think, Willy, I should find you here if I came."

"But I want you to hold my hand as I pass through the dark valley."—"O Willy, it will not be dark, I think; for Jesus will hold your hand, and pass with you right over to the other side."

"Oh but I want to hear your voice telling me his words; it would be so dreadful only to hear bad language as I pass through."

"But Willy, there is a dying man in another room who wants a friend."

"Please don't say, no; I do so want you to come and see me again."—"But I cannot come till just before evening church; and before then I think you will have left earth."

"Well, if you don't find my poor body here, you will be very happy."—"I shall think of you as one dear child of God safe at home, Willy; but I shall miss you."

"Will you cry?"—"I don't know, dear boy; I dare say I shall, but it will be sweet to look forward to meeting again."

"If you cry for me, you will be the only one to do so. It's nice to think one will miss me. Father won't care; his feelings are all hardened. I've no pain now; my leg seems quite asleep. I told the doctor so, and said how glad I was to have it better; but he shook his head, and said it was a bad sign for life. But you know," he added, with flushed cheek and beaming eye, "he was wrong; it is a good sign, for I shall soon be away, really living in Jesus. Here I've only been wanting to be like Jesus, there I shall be like him." Before I went, he made me promise that I would come again in the evening.

In the evening I found him lying with his eyes closed, sinking rapidly, but calmly. Stooping over him, I whispered, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." "Dear Willy, is Jesus with you?"—"Oh yes."

"Have you any fear?"—"No, none; I have been wondering why they call it a dark valley. I have found the light growing brighter every day since I first believed; and now it's so bright I must shut my eyes." I repeated Isaiah lx. and 2 Corinthians v. to him.

"Now please say my favourite hymn which you taught me last Sunday." I repeated to him some beautiful lines on Psalm cvii. 30. beginning—

"Yes, billow after billow—see they come
Faster and rougher as yon little boat
Nears evermore the haven."

The dying boy continued the lines in broken accents, yet with a depth of feeling that showed he realized their meaning.

"I felt so weary last night with the pain," he said; "but I thought He would not let the waves be too rough, and you see they seem to have brought me on all the faster for being rough."

"Shall I pray with you oncemore Willy?"—"Oh yes, please. I have been beseeching the Lord a great deal to change my poor father's heart; and I know I shall see him some day in heaven. I don't now so much mind leaving him unconverted, for I know I have been heard." After praying, he said, "That is my last prayer; now it shall be only praise for ever and ever." His breath began to fail him, and we had to prop him up with pillows. As I repeated passages of Scripture he occasionally joined. Presently he turned round, and calling me by name, most touchingly assured me of his gratitude for my having told him of the Saviour, and having striven to lead him to His feet.

"There's a sweet text I'll give you to think of sometimes, ma'am. Jesus says, (and he repeated the substance of John xvi. 33) 'In this world ye shall have sorrow; but be of good cheer, in me ye have peace.' I've found it all peace since I believed, for he just wiped out all my sin. Now please tell me about——"

"About what, Willy?"—"About—— I forget—my memory seems strayed, like—about many ——"

"About our Father's house with many mansions?"—"Oh yes." After repeating part of John xiv. he said, "You don't know how I love that word, 'And yet there is room.' I'm sure Jesus has prepared a seat in heaven for my father, and I don't believe it will be left empty." I then repeated with him 1 John iii. 1, 2. "Oh, it's such a dear word, that, and quite, quite true. I see him now. He's calling me; I must go. Just think how soon I'll be 'like Him.' I am so glad to go. Just hold—my—hand. I can't—catch—my—breath."

"Are you alone, Willy?"—"No, no; thou art with me, Jesus, our Immanuel; it's all washed—clean."

"What is washed?"—"My soul. Oh, won't it be glorious—to—join the multitude who are safe?"

"Yes, dear boy; thus heaven is gathering, one by one, all the members of its family."

"Yes, yes—soon I'll be with—those—in glory—and you left here. But we'll still be of one heart, and

"Oh! who can tell the rapture when the circle is complete,

And all the children, sundered now, around our Father meet;

One fold, one Shepherd, one employ, one everlasting home:

Lo! I come quickly—even so—Amen! Lord Jesus, come!"

— The poor boy commenced these lines; but, his breath failing, I finished them, he joining me as he was able. Then for some minutes spasms came on; the death-rattle told his hour was come; and solemn indeed it was to feel the tightening grasp of the hand already cold and heavy, and breathe into his ear the last sounds of earth he would ever hear. Suddenly he opened his eyes, and fixing them on me, said, "Good-by—remem—ber—your—pro—mise. We shall—be—for—ever—with—Jesus; safe—in our happy home. O; it's all great joy." Then he seemed exhausted: the coolie and I, for the last time, tried to put the spoonful of wine between the teeth, but he could no longer take it. I breathed a word of earnest entreaty that the way might all be smooth. The church bells began to chime for evening service. "Yes, yes," he said, "I'm all ready; as they stop—I'll be—mounting—up to glory." I rose to go. "Good-by, dear Willy; we'll meet to part no more soon." With still closed eyes, the lips seemed to move. I stooped to catch the words—"like Him." He never spoke again.

I saw, on coming into the ward next morning, that a stranger lay on the boy's charpoy. Reynolds was just ready to start.

"I was just a waiting to see you, ma'am; for I didn't see as how I could go till I had thanked you for cheering up my child."

"Ah, Reynolds, where is the boy?"—"Indeed, no one could mistake where he is; if ever any one went to heaven he did. He died about a quarter of an hour after you left. He never moved again."

"Well, Reynolds, and will you join him where he is?"—"No, ma'am, no, I'm no hypocrite; I love my own ways too well yet. Won't I have a swing of them when I get away?" Yet with unwonted patience he allowed me to tell him once more of that redeeming love, which waits to be gracious. "Please, ma'am," said he, "may I have the Bible as you gave Willy?" — "Surely, Reynolds; and you will read it?"

"Nay then, I didn't say that, for

I won't. But I'll tell you what, I won't let it be ill treated; it shan't be torn up for lighting the pipes; I'll keep it for Willy's sake."

"Do, my friend, and may your Willy's Saviour be soon all in all to you."

DESPATCHES were received in Melbourne late on Saturday, 2nd Nov., 1861, from Mr. Howitt, the leader of the Victorian Contingent Exploration Party, containing the disastrous intelligence that after successfully crossing the Australian continent, Messrs. Burke and Wills had died of starvation in the neighbourhood of Cooper's Creek, and Gray a short time before Cooper's Creek was reached, King being the only member of the party who survived, and who was rescued by the contingent party.

MR. HOWITT'S DISPATCH.

Poria Creek, Oct. 10, 1861.

SIR,—I have the honour to report my arrival here with the Contingent Exploring Party, on my return journey, having on September 15, in lat. 27 deg 44 min., and long. 140 deg. 40 min., found John King, the only survivor of Mr. Burke's party, living with the Cooper's Creek natives. Mr. Burke and Mr. Wills had died some time previous to my arrival, from hunger and exhaustion, and Gray died before reaching Cooper's Creek, on their return journey from the Gulf. King was in a very weak, exhausted state when found, but I am happy to say, has recovered wonderfully since, and Mr. Wheeler has just reported him to me as being out of his hands. The full particulars will be found in my diary, which, with King's narrative, is enclosed. I may state regarding my diary, that I have only transcribed that portion subsequent to our reaching this place on our outward journey, as up to that time we had followed the Expedition track, and nothing of interest had occurred. It may suffice for me to state, that from leaving Menindie, we had travelled without meeting with any particular hindrances, finding splendid feed almost the whole way, and sufficient water for our use, with the exception of three nights, when our horses were without. The rain had been very partial, and in places we only found sufficient for our immediate use. Torowoto and Carriapundy swamps and the mud plains were perfectly dry, and no water that could long be relied on, without subsequent rain, from Nuntherunga back to this place, a distance of about 180 miles. I had intended leaving the Expedition track at Carriapundy, but was deterred from doing so by the very dry appearance of the country: and, therefore, followed the track to this creek, which is permanent. I am happy to be able to state, that the party are and have been in perfect health, and that the horses are in excellent working order. The camels are, on the whole, in as good condition as when they left Menindie, and may be pronounced cured of the scab, which I cannot help attributing in a great measure to the bad management of the sepoys. So far I have met with no loss or accident of any kind, and the natives, wherever I have seen them have been friendly. I expect to be down at Menindie in three weeks, and may probably spend two or three days at Torowoto to endeavour to find permanent water, as I know of none there that can be relied on. I forward these despatches by Mr. Brahe and Weston Phillips, with four of our best horses. I consider that they will have no particular difficulties in going down, excepting as regards water, which would not be lessened by a larger party, and I cannot well spare more men, from the number of camels and pack-horses to look after. Should there be horses at Menindie fit for the journey down, I have instructed Mr. Brahe to proceed at once to town, taking with him the documents and field books belonging to Mr. Burke and Mr. Wills, and relating to the journey to and from the Gulf. King I shall send down on my arrival at the Darling.

I beg to urge on the committee the necessity of sending me immediate instructions to Menindie respecting the further disposal of the party and equipment. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, A. W. HOWITT,

Leader of the Contingent Exploring Party.

To the Hon. John Macadam, M.D.,
Hon. Secretary the Exploration
Committee, Melbourne.

JOHN KING'S NARRATIVE.

Mr. Burke, Mr. Wills, and I reached the depot at Cooper's Creek on April 21st, about half-past seven in the evening, with two camels—all that remained of the six Mr. Burke took with him. All the provisions we then had consisted of a pound and a half of dried meat. We found the party had gone the same day, and looking about for any mark they might have left, found the tree with DIG, April 21.

Mr. Wills said the party had left for the Darling. We dug, and found the plant of stores. Mr. Burke took the papers out of the bottle, and then asked each of us whether we were able to proceed up the creek in pursuit of the party? We said not, and he then said that he thought it his duty to ask us, but that he himself was unable to do so, but that he had decided upon trying to make Mount Hopeless, as he had been assured by the committee in Melbourne, that there was a cattle station within 150 miles of Cooper's Creek. Mr. Wills was not inclined to follow this plan, but wished to go down our old track, but at last gave in to Mr. Burke's wishes; I, also, wished to go down by our old track. We remained four or five days to recruit, and make preparations to go down the creek by stages of four to five miles a day, and Mr. Burke placed a paper in the plant, stating what were our plans. Travelling down the creek, we got some fish from the natives, and, some distance down, one of the camels (Landa) got bogged, and although we remained there that day and part of the next trying to dig him out, we found our strength insufficient to do so. The evening of the second day we shot him as he lay, and having cut off as much meat as we could, we lived on it while we stayed to dry the remainder. Throwing all the least necessary things away, we made one load for the remaining camel (Rajah), and each of us carried a swag of about 25lb. We were then tracing down the branches of the creek running S., but found that they ran out into earthy plains. We had understood that the creek along Gregory's track was continuous; and finding that all these creeks ran out into plains, Mr. Burke returned, our camel being completely knocked up. We then intended to give the camel a spell for a few days, and to make a new attempt to push on forty or fifty miles to the south, in the hope of striking the creek. During the time that the camel was being rested, Mr. Burke and Mr. Wills went in search of the natives, to endeavour to find out how the nardoo grew. Having found their camp, they obtained as much nardoo cake and fish as they could eat, but could not explain that they wished to be shown how to find the seed themselves. They returned on the third day, bringing some fish and nardoo cake with them. On the following day, the camel Rajah seemed very ill, and I told Mr. Burke I thought he could not linger out more than four days; and as on the same evening the poor brute was on the point of dying, Mr. Burke ordered him to be shot. I did so, and we cut him up with two broken knives and a lancet. We cured the meat and planted it; and Mr. Burke then made another attempt to find the nardoo, taking me with him. We went down the creek, expecting to find the natives at the camp where they had been last seen, but found that they had left; and not knowing whether they had gone up or down the creek, we slept in their gunyahs that night, and on the following morning returned to Mr. Wills. The next day Mr. Burke and I started up the creek, but could see nothing of them, and were three days away when we returned, and remained three days in our camp with Mr. Wills. We then made a plant of all the articles we could not carry with us, leaving 5 lb. of rice and a quantity of meat, and then followed up the creek, where there were some good native huts. We remained at that place a few days, and finding our provisions were beginning to run short, Mr. Burke said that we ought to do something, and that if we did not find the nardoo we should starve, and that he intended to save a little dried meat and rice to carry us to Mount Hopeless. The three of us then came to the conclusion that it would be better to make a second attempt to reach Mount Hopeless, as we were then as strong as we were likely to be, our daily allowance being then reduced. Mr. Burke asked each of us whether we were willing to make another attempt to reach the South Australian settlements, and we decided on going. We took with us what remained of the provisions we had planted—two-and-a-half pounds of oatmeal, a small quantity of flour, and the dried meat—this, with powder and shot, and other small articles, made up our swags to 30 lb. each, and Mr. Burke carried one billy of water, and I another. We had not gone far before we came on a flat, where I saw a plant growing which I took to be clover, and, on looking closer, saw the seed, and called out that I had found the nardoo. They were very glad when I had found it. We travelled three days, and struck a water course coming south from Cooper's Creek. We traced this as it branched out and re-formed on the plains until we at last lost it in flat country. Sandhills were in front of us, for which we made, and travelled all day, but found no water. We were all greatly fatigued, as our rations now consisted of only one small johnny cake and three sticks of dried meat daily. We camped that evening about four o'clock, intending to push next day until two o'clock, P.M., and then should we not find water, to return. We travelled, and found no water, and the three of us sat down and rested for an hour, and then turned back. We all felt satisfied that, had there been a few days' rain, we could have got through. We were then, according to Mr. Wills's calculation, forty-five miles from the creek. We travelled on the day we turned back very late, and the following evening reached the nearest water at the creek. We gathered some nardoo, and boiled the seeds, as we were unable to pound them. The following day we reached the main creek; and knowing where there was a fine water-hole and native gunyahs, we went there, intending to save what remained of our flour and dried meat, for the purpose of making another attempt to reach Mount Hopeless. On the following day, Mr. Wills and I went out to gather nardoo, of which we obtained a supply sufficient for three days; and finding a pounding-stone at the gunyahs, Mr. Wills and I pounded the seed, which was such slow work, that we were compelled to use half flour and half nardoo. Mr. Burke and Mr. Wills then went down the creek for the remainder of the dried meat which we had planted, and we had now all our things with us, gathering nardoo, and living the best way we could. Mr. Burke requested Mr. Wills to go up the creek as far as the depot, and to place a note in the plant there, stating that we were then living on the creek, the former note having stated that we were on our road to South Australia. He was also to bury there the field-books of the journey to the Gulf. Before starting, he got 3 lb. of flour and 3 lb. of pounded nardoo, and about a pound of meat, as he expected to be absent about eight days. During his absence, I gathered nardoo and pounded it, as Mr. Burke wished to lay in a supply in case of rain.

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. The Works of Thos. Goodwin, D.D., sometime President of Magdalen College, Oxford; with General Preface. By JOHN C. MILLER, D.D., Lincoln College, Honorary Canon of Worcester; Rector of St. Martin's Birmingham; and Memoir by Robert Halley, D.D., Principal of the Independent New College, London. Vol. 1, containing an Exposition of the first chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians. Edinburgh: James Nichol. London: James Nisbet and Co. Dublin: W. Robertson.

WE glorify the Great Author of our Being for the manifold favours with which he crowns his Church and the world. At a time when the wildest notions, the most subversive doctrines are being promulgated from the pulpit and the press, how delightful to find men of enterprize, and of position in life, exerting themselves, and risking their capital by being at immenso expense in publishing, for popular use, at a small cost, works which from their original magnitude and high prices, have been limited in their circulation, but which by the present reduced prices, are placed within the reach of people of limited means, and the effect of which must, by the blessing of God, be the promotion and extension of the best interests of mankind. Dr. Thomas Goodwin has long been esteemed as a tower of strength in the Church of Christ; and we rejoice that Mr. Nichols, the spirited publisher of Edinburgh, is now bringing before the world the works of this celebrated divine.

Of course our readers who know the theological sentiments held by the author of the "Exposition," will be prepared to admit, and their candour will allow of diversity of creed on the doctrines of election and predestination. However close and cogent the Doctor's reasonings on these doctrines, he and ourselves are at issue; but apart from these and other little matters, we know of no exposition of this part of God's word so copious, more sound and healthy in its general theology than the work before us, which is indeed, an "exposition of the first chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians," to which the "General Preface" by Dr. Miller is a valuable addition. With Dr. M. we concur to a large extent, who closes his preface in the following words:—"While it is never to be forgotten that neither Father, nor Reformer, nor Puritan, is to share, much less to usurp, that homage which is due to the Scriptures of truth alone, we believe that when the student and the preacher descend to the study of those uninspired but gifted men, who, in successive ages, have been raised up as exponents of those Scriptures, and witnesses of that truth, none (few) are more calculated, under the Divine blessing, to elevate and to deepen the tone of our theology, to preserve us from the deadly perils of old errors now revived, and to give distinctness, substance, unction, and experimental richness to our preaching, than the Puritan divines." We add such preaching is much needed, and we fervently pray that the Church and the world may be more abundantly favoured therewith, and that the universal reign of the Redemer may speedily bless, and gloriously elevate the whole human race.

2. The Battle of Armageddon, and its Results.

An Exposition of the Sixth and Seventh Vials of the Apocalypse; and also an Enquiry regarding the Commencement and Termination of the 1260 Symbolical Days. By JAMES MEIKLE, D.D., Beith, author of "The Edenic Dispensation," "The Nature and Administration of the Mediatorial Dispensation," &c. London: Ward and Co., Paternoster Row. Edinburgh: William Oliphant and Co., Andrew Elliot, Glasgow: David Robertson. 1862.

"To students of the Apocalypse, this volume is respectfully inscribed by the author," who deserves their candour and their thanks for the labour he has put forth, for the research which he has evinced, and for the exegetical clearness with which he has executed his work.

The author of this volume says in his preface, "These two vials, as I understand them, contain predictions which have been either recently fulfilled, or are being fulfilled in the present day." Hence, with the above sentiments, as centres in his mind, the author commences the solution of difficulties, the illustration of sentiments warmly cherished, and, in many instances, well sustained, by striking historic facts. We tremble, not unfrequently for the truth, when some men presume to philologize on Divine prophecy; but from this painful sensation we have been greatly relieved while perusing Dr. Meikle on this critical subject; and, although we cannot subscribe to everything that is assumed, we can recommend the work, as a whole, to those who are, or wish to become students of the Apocalypse.

3. Pentecost, and the Founding of the Church. By Frederick W. Briggs. London: Published by JOHN MASON, City Road. Sold at 66, Paternoster Row, 1861.

AMID much that is absurd in sentiment and heterodoxical in doctrine, it is pleasing to contemplate the very large number of works on theology, now teeming from the press; works which are not only of a superior class generally, but which, philologically and exegetically furnish especial aid to pious students of the sacred scriptures, whether profoundly classic in their educational attainments, or much more limited in scholastic acquisitions, who if they be diligent students of God's word, may not only attain to respectable biblical knowledge, but may, by the Divine blessing, if they possess that aptness to teach which is so important in the preaching of God's word, become able ministers of the New Testament, scribes well instructed in things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

The work before us is among the recent valuable acquisitions to the large supply of excellent works with which the Church has been recently favoured. The author of Pentecost divides his book into ten chapters on the following subjects:—1. The Evangelical Revelation perfected through the descent of the Holy Ghost. 2. The Holy Spirit's Mission. 3. Impressions without. 4. The Sermon. 5. The Awakening. 6. Counsel and Encouragement. 7. Incorporation of the Three Thousand Converts. 8. The Disciples in Religious Association. 9. The Disciples in Social Life. 10. The Daily Growth of the Body. These chapters are followed by valuable supplementary notes, and many foot notes, some of which are deeply interesting. The research which is manifested, the modesty and prudence which are evinced, the candour which is conspicuous, together with the purity of the style, and the soundness of the doctrines which pervade the work, are highly commendable, as a whole, while, the 4th chapter especially, with several other portions of the volume, are really valuable. If we can find space, we hope to give a few extracts in a future issue.

4. The Philosophy of the Divine Operation in the Redemption of Man. Being volume Second of the "Philosophy of the Plan of salvation, by an American Citizen." By James B. Walker, lecturer on the Harmony between Science and Revealed Religion, &c., with notes philosophical and explanatory. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row, 1862.

We rejoice in the extension of scientific research, and in the development of facts, especially when sound philosophy is applied to the search after, and the elucidation of those imperishable truths that so profusely enrich the pages of the Holy Scriptures. While we as thoroughly deprecate that presumptuousness of the philosophaster whose paltry dabbings in the sciences have heightened his self-confidence, and on subjects not a few, even on those of the most importance, have led him to assume that Divine revelation must be subject to his dictum, and that the inspired writers must be believed, or discredited, according to the conclusion, to which he and men of his class have arrived, but we have not so learned Christ. The work before us is the very opposite in every respect to the productions arrogantly put forth by the authors of the "oppositions of science, falsely so called." With a profound reverence for revealed truths, with a mind thoroughly disciplined to close thinking, and with a peculiar aptness to reduce metaphysical difficulties to subjects of easy comprehension, and so to simplify matters of deep philosophical research, as to make them plain to ordinary minds, uniting withal the soundest philology, the work is one of no ordinary character; which to pious biblical scholars, will prove a valuable auxiliary in their study of holy writ. We have much pleasure in very highly recommending this excellent work.

5. The Light of Life; or Assured Salvation for Doubting Christians, and How to Attain it. By Thomas Mills. London: Sold for the Author, at 21, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row; R. Davies, Sutton Street.

WE are glad to meet Mr. Mills in the fields of literature, and having previously profited by the productions of his pen, we anticipated real pleasure in the perusal of the work before us, and in this, our anticipations have been fully realised. "The Light of Life" is especially designed for a class of Christians for whom we feel a profound sympathy. In many instances, persons constitutionally timid are subjected to uncharitable reflections, and very unwarrantable reprovings and censures from parties of robust health, vulgar habits, and coarse sensibilities, who would be much more in their place if they were humbly learning the rudiments of the religion of Christ, than in assuming the office of censors of persons, who in many respects, are much superior to themselves. Mr. Mills, however, is blest with a large measure of religious sympathy; and had he been in the region of doubt, nurtured and educated under the supervision of nervous affection, and had he, in his ministerial life and pursuits, been making the duty of weeping with the sorrowful, and rejoicing with those on whom the unclouded smile of an approving God constantly rested, he could scarcely have painted with greater accuracy the features of "Doubting Christians," or more clearly and forcibly have guided their anxious minds to the source of deliverance from their manifold perplexities and fears. The work has our best wishes for its success in carrying out the designs of its pious author.

6. Ralph Saunders, or the School-boy Friends. London: Published by KNIGHT and SON, Clerkenwell Close.

THIS is one of a class of books that when once the reading of them has been begun, it can scarcely be relinquished. The effects of drunkenness are graphically portrayed at the commencement of the work, and the benefits of virtue and religion are very pleasingly delineated. The narrative form, adopted instead of the didactic, may in the estimation of some people, be deemed a satisfactory reason for the course pursued in writing tales of a religious cast, but we retain our views on this subject, that in the training of youth, as well as in promoting the best interests of other people, truth is, for many reasons, to be preferred to fiction. With the exception of the volume being too much of a novel in its character, we think very well of it, and feel assured it will be a great favourite with many readers.

7. The Mouth of the Pit; or the Hartley Colliery Calamity. A Sermon and a Narrative, by Rev. B. S. Hollis, of Islington, London. London: KNIGHT and SON, Clerkenwell Close. Price Sixpence. Also a cheaper edition at Threepence.

THIS is a plain, practical, useful sermon, calculated to illustrate several passages of the sacred scriptures, and promote intelligent piety. The narrative is of a thrilling character, which can scarcely be read without profit even by the volatile and the gay, while it will deepen the impression made on many hearts. "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting."

8. The Liberator: A monthly Journal of the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and control.

WHILE we aspire to no niche in the temple dedicated to what some call "Political Dissenters," we nevertheless are happy to be found among those who religiously dissent from "State Religion."

To bring about the liberation of religion from state patronage and control, is the great design pursued by this humble, but very effective journal, and while its conductors "walk by the same rule," we wish it success.

In this Essay, we find some things to commend; but it also contains some grave errors in theology and logic: for these we were prepared, when we found that the author esteemed Deity "the comprehensible Being."

WORK OF GOD.

1. MANGOTSFIELD, BRISTOL CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—On Monday, Jan. 20th, 1862, we commenced protracted meetings. The services were conducted by Rev. A. Bound, who began by a course of visiting in the afternoon, and he preached in the evening, after which a prayer-meeting was held. In this manner the services went on for a fortnight, we had good congregations every night, and a blessed influence; some who were growing cold got quickened; and between fifty and sixty persons professed to find pardon. Praise the Lord. It was most gratifying to behold husband and wife kneeling together, and together crying for mercy. Many acknowledged that they had been the worst of characters in the village. On the Sabbath, the chapel was crowded. At the lovefeast, fifty-eight persons spoke their experience in an hour and a half, many of them being young converts. The local brethren laboured well from the beginning to the end. We are thankful that the good work is still going on, souls are being converted, and God's name glorified. May the power of the most High ever rest on us. Amen.

WILLIAM NEWMAN.
A. BOUND.

2. ULVERSTONE AND AMBLESIDE MISSION.—Dear Brother Harland,

—Many of your readers, it may be presumed, are collectors for the mission fund, and most of them, no doubt, are subscribers thereto. To all these, accounts of the extension of our Zion will be interesting, while to others, they are calculated to be profitable and stimulating. I seldom read your pages without feeling better, and I determine to be more zealous in the cause of the Saviour. May all your readers, we young preachers especially, be more extensively baptized with the Holy Spirit, that we may neither be afraid nor ashamed to lift up our voices in the streets, and say to the people of England, and the world, "Behold your God."

I was sent by the General Missionary Committee in July, 1861, to open a mission at Ambleside, and in the neighbourhood. In September I was instructed to extend my labours to Ulverstone, and the villages around. I left Kendal on the morning of Sunday, July 21, and arrived at Ambleside in the afternoon. At five o'clock, I took a position at the cross, and began to sing,

"Weary souls that wander wide," &c.

While I was singing, a number of people came to within a short distance of me, to whom I preached of Christ dying for our sins according to the Scriptures. Soon after eight, I took my stand in a different part of the little town, and again set forth Jesus, to a greater number of people. Before I ceased speaking, the lightnings began to play around me most vividly, and there was every appearance of a coming storm. In a short time, the whole heavens were covered with thick darkness. Six or eight weeks of almost uninterrupted rain and wind followed, so that preaching in the open air could seldom be attempted. I was permitted, however, to hold several open-air services at the head of Windermere Lake, and I frequently preached in a room rented by a few Independents, who could not supply it with preaching.

After a few weeks' labour, a class was formed, the members of which continue to trust in God.

Hartsop.—I went to this place during the first week of my sojourn at Ambleside. It is a small hamlet in the midst of some of the large mountains of Westmoreland. From Ambleside, the way is up to a house, which is said by some to be at an elevation which exceeds that of any other house in England, and down through the Kirkstone pass. The first time I went, I could walk only a few steps at a time. I was amazed at my own position. A rugged, jagged, precipitous mountain on either hand was towering far up towards the heavens. While near the summits, torrents were issuing from their sources, and as they rushed, plunged, leaped over loose stones, and firm rocks, they made the wildest music I ever heard. All around, and in the wildest profusion, were lying rocks, "black, craggy, and vast," that had in past days left their fellows, and rolled down hither with fearful velocity. Amidst all that was wild and romantic, I was very happy. I was following in my Master's steps, to seek and save that which was lost, and I sang aloud, "Grace crowns the Christian's lot," &c.

When I found Hartsop, I was told that no religious meetings were held there; but I soon got a house, called the people together, and began to preach to them Jesus. The inhabitants manifested great readiness to hear. I have never yet disappointed them. Neither drenching rains, driving winds, falling snows, have prevented my going. The mountaineers have felt the power of God, and some who never attended "sitch places" are now seldom absent. A class has been formed, which I hope will go on and prosper.

Ulverstone.—I commenced my labours here, October 7th, 1861, by preaching twice in the open air, and twice in a room. Mr. M'Vea preached in the afternoon, so we had five services the first day. I preached several times at the cross afterwards. Our congregations are moderate, and we are trying to increase them. May the Lord bless our efforts. A class has been formed at this place.

Dalton.—Mr. M'Vea and I went to this place, October 7th, 1861, and took the very position occupied by Mr. Jersey, who was cruelly persecuted* in 1823, and from which he was sent to Lancaster gaol. We began to sing, "Weary souls that wander wide," &c.

And in a short time we were surrounded by a multitude of people, including riflemen, policemen, and clergymen. All, excepting the last named, listened attentively. Mr. M'Vea preached first; I followed. We then sang,

"Just as I am without one plea," &c. till almost every person in the vast assembly had a smattering of the words and tune. That was a good service. From that night, the people were much disposed to favour us. I have often preached there since, and never wanted a congregation. The last service I held was on the 18th of November. A thick snow was on the ground, but the people stood as still almost as if it had been Midsummer. We now hold our services in a house, congregations always good. A class has been formed; may it multiply speedily.

Urswick.—At this place, Mr. M'Vea had got a house, and gathered a congregation before I arrived. We have had some very profitable services at this village. The Lord has been with us to wound and to heal. A class has been formed here also.

Barrow.—I went to this place on November 7th, and preached in the open air by candle-light to a few people, shivering with cold. I went again the following week, and preached to a large congregation, by moonlight. At the close of the service, a woman offered me her house for the holding of our services, which are held on the week days only. For want of assistance, we cannot attend on Sundays.

In addition to the above towns, &c., I have preached several times in the open air at Bowness, Hawkshead, Lindal, and once at Martin. This place seems to be left in undisputed possession of the enemy, as no religious services are held thereat.

I went on Sunday morning, after preaching at Dalton; four friends accompanied me. When we arrived, we found a number of men with bruised, bloated faces, sitting on the ground, in their red pit clothes. At the sound of "Jesus, the name high over all," &c., almost all the people in the village came from their houses. With the exception of a few, all were quiet, while I spoke of God so loving the world as to give his only begotten Son to die for it. I have much regretted not being able to visit Martin regularly.

The winter is past; spring has arrived; we shall (D.V.) lift up our voices in the streets. May the power of the Lord rest on us, that we may go forth to glorious war and certain victory. Amen.

ELI ILLINGWORTH.

3. EDINBURGH MISSION.—Dear Mr. Harland,—You and your numerous readers will be pleased to hear that we are making a little headway on this station. The writer and his wife came to this city in November last, just a week previous to the dreadful catastrophe caused by the falling of a house in High-street. The Sunday after the accident, I preached by gas-light in High-street, after which we processioned to our place of worship. This is a large hall, for the use of which we pay £20 per year. The singing attracted a considerable number of persons, so that our congregation was nearly doubled. Finding street exercises to answer well, we have (notwithstanding the cold weather) held short services in the open air several times since. But, I having taken a severe cold, and being advised by Professor Miller to desist from preaching out-doors during the cold weather, the street preaching has been abandoned for a short time. However, our services have been made well known. We are happy to say our congregations have greatly increased, and eight precious souls have been brought to a knowledge of the truth and added to the society. On Sunday, February 2nd, 1862, the writer took part in a religious service in the Free Assembly Hall. The congregation numbered nearly 3,000. The Rev. William Reid, M.A., editor of the "British Herald," and I preached twenty minutes each. At the close of the service, a prayer-meeting was held, when a woman, who had been a member of our society thirty years ago, begged me to pray for her, a poor backslider. She has since joined the society, and is still struggling for the "one thing needful." As we were leaving the hall, a young woman fell prostrate on the stone steps between the passage and the hall, and continued crying aloud for mercy. She obtained peace of mind while on her way home in company with a pious friend. While I was conducting a religious service at Portobello a short time since, an ungodly man dropped upon his knees and cried aloud for mercy. He was soon made happy, and began to pray with all his might for his poor wife and child. He may now be seen plodding his way nearly every Wednesday night from Portobello to Edinburgh, a distance of three miles, to hear the word of God. Alleluiah to the Lamb! May the Lord baptize the whole Connexion with fire from heaven, and may He send a flood of converting glory over all the land. Amen. J. VAUGHAN.

4. GRIMSBY CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor,—Good news from a distance, communicated through your monthly serial, is refreshing to many of your devout readers; hence we are happy to inform them that, through God's blessing, our circuit is prosperous. During the last few weeks, several souls have been gathered to our ranks, and we are projecting still further aggressive movements. The improvement is pretty general; but several places have been visited with showers of blessings; viz., Grimsby, especially the Bethel congregation, Humbersstone, Waltham, Brigsly, Wold-Newton, and Tetney. The last-mentioned place is celebrated for Primitive Methodism, and latterly considerable additions have been made to our church at that place. This work has been accomplished by the circuit's own ministers and office bearers, and by labourers connexionally sanctioned, except in one instance, in which a small society erred undesignedly, we believe. After a revival, there is too often reaction, which, in the absence of the utmost caution in reporting the numbers sometimes gives to stations an apparently unsteady character.

We shall, I trust, seek to prevent this. We are not without hope that the temporal pressure which many of our dear friends experience (saying nothing of the appalling calamities which have smitten others), will be overruled by Providence for good, and that this will be a marked year in our Zion's history, and in the history of God's cause generally. May the church speedily experience more largely the baptism of the Divine Spirit.

C. KENDALL.

5. TOLL END, WEST BROMWICH CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor,—I have great pleasure in being able to send you an account of the progress of the work of God at Toll End. Some twenty years ago, Primitive Methodism was in a low state at this place, our people not having a place in which to worship except a dwelling-house. But, in 1843, we were enabled to erect a chapel, which has been our home ever since. The population near our sanctuary has increased very much recently, and the chapel was too small. When Messrs. Jukes and Moss were stationed for West Bromwich, Mr. Moss came to reside at Toll End. During the station of these brethren, we were favoured with a mighty revival; souls were converted to God throughout the circuit, and at Toll End, many were added to the church. We then, in connection with friend Moss, began to talk about putting a gallery into the chapel. Plans were drawn, and estimates were brought in; but the work was subsequently abandoned, and the matter stood over again till Messrs. James Arnold and William Evans came among us. Mr. Evans succeeded Mr. Moss. He called the friends together, and laid down plans how we might accomplish our object. Having got the sanction of the proper authorities, the work was commenced, and, I am happy to say, it was completed, including an orchestra, at a cost of £150, nearly all of which is paid. Since putting in the gallery, we have had the chapel thoroughly cleaned, painted, and ventilated; we have also put a clock in the front of the gallery. The cost of the whole was £40, which sum has been fully realized and paid. May heaven bless our friends, and may we all meet in heaven. Amen.

JOSEPH DUFFELL.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

1. GRASSINGTON MISSION.—Dear Brother Harland,—We have recently held missionary meetings on this mission. Sermons were preached on the 26th of January, 1862, and public meetings were held during the week. We were assisted by the Revds. J. Jobling, of Burnley; and T. Smith, of Pateley Bridge. We had a very comfortable influence, and notwithstanding the low state of things in the neighbourhood, we are able to report an increase in the proceeds of this anniversary, when compared with the income of last year, of £1 3s. The following are the sums raised:—Grassington, £2 1s. 3½d.; Hebden, £1 6s. 7½d.; Starbottle, 7s. 2d.; Kettlewell, £1 0s. 3d.; Barden, £3 14s. 4½d.; total, £8 9s. 8½d. J. A. CARISS.

[The amount is small, but we hope more attention will be paid to the extension of the missionary work for the future. We are glad that there is an increase on the receipts of last year, and we hope every succeeding year will be better than its predecessor. Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase. So shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine. (Proverbs iii. 9, 10).—EDITOR.]

2. LOUTH CIRCUIT.—Anniversary services, in aid of our missions, were held in this Circuit in the following order, viz.:—On Sabbath, Feb. 16th, 1862, the Rev. H. Woodcock preached at Louth in the morning, and the Rev. T. Newsome, in the afternoon and evening. Sermons were also preached at Theddlethorpe, North Somercotes, and Grainthorpe. Public meetings were held at Theddlethorpe, Monday; North Somercotes, Tuesday; and Grainthorpe, Wednesday.

On Thursday, Feb. 20th, a missionary breakfast was provided in the girls' schoolroom, Louth, at nine o'clock in the morning. The gratuitous tables, furnished by our esteemed friends, Messrs. Byron, Maltby, Ellerby, North, Allison, Simpson, and Scales, showed that they had spared neither labour nor expense, and that they had entered heartily into the work. A larger number sat down to the good things provided than on any former occasion. After breakfast, a public meeting was held, presided over by the writer, which was addressed by the Revds. H. Woodcock, W. Sanderson, J. Maltby, Esq., and one minister from each Dissenting denomination in the town. The schoolroom was crowded, and the speakers had great liberty in their addresses. Mr. Sanderson preached in the afternoon, with his usual energy, to a large and respectable assemblage. The annual public meeting was held in the evening, presided over by Wm. Byron, Esq., of Stewton House. The report was read by the Rev. R. Cheeseman, and powerful appeals in support of the missionary cause were made by the above-named ministers, and Mr. Robson, of Hull. The proceeds of the anniversary amounted to £88 13s. 9d., being almost £10 in advance of last year. Our indefatigable friends, the ladies of the sewing society, presented £20 6s. Mesdames Maltby and Blanshard collected £15 4s. Wm. Byron, Esq., presented £10 as a donation. J. Maltby, Esq., £2, £3 as the produce of the missionary box, and £3 2s. 5d. from Mrs. Maltby's house box.

Much prayer had been offered to God for His blessing on these services, and He heard us, and sent us help from His holy hill. O that our Connexion may arise and shake itself, put on its strength, and more than ever go forth to seek the salvation of our perishing race.

R. CHEESEMAN.

3. BRANDON CIRCUIT. — Dear Editor,—We have recently closed two very interesting courses of missionary services in this Circuit. The first commenced January 12th, 1862, and was continued the four following evenings, at which Brother T. Lowe, of Lynn, rendered us efficient aid. At Brandon, we realized £1 6s. 9d.; Feltwell, £1 16s. 11d.; Methwold, £6 7s. 5d.; Northwold, £2 10s. 9d.; total, £12 1s. 10d.

The second course commenced on February 2nd, and it was continued during the week. We were favoured with much of the presence and blessing of the Lord, while aiming to promote His glory in the salvation of mankind at home and abroad. Visible good was the result in a spiritual sense, and financially we were ahead of any previous year in the history of this station. Brother John Winkfield was our deputation, and he was welcomed by, and made a blessing to, many. Our Saham friends brought to the missionary altar, £7 6s. 6½d.; Ashill, £2 2s. Little Cressingham (which is only a very small village, and where we are under the necessity of worshipping in a cottage, but where we have a noble band of collectors), £10 1s.; Walton, £4 10s. 11d.; Thompson, £1 15s. 5½d.; total, £25 15s. 11d.

In addition to the above, we have many signs of Divine approval in several places; such as the powerful manifestations of Jehovah's presence in answer to prayer; the unction of the Holy Spirit attending the preached word, and occasionally the salvation of enthralled souls. That this work may increase among us, through the whole of our Israel, and the entire world a thousand fold, is the prayer of

WILLIAM H. MEADOWS.

4. PENZANCE CIRCUIT. — My Dear Editor,—On Sunday, Feb. 16th, 1862, preparatory sermons were preached in this circuit by the Revs. R. Parks, of Lincoln, and J. Best, of Redruth. The deputation served the cause well, and large congregations were profited by the glorious Gospel they heard. The missionary meetings were addressed by the above-named ministers, J. Hawkins, J. Watson, T. Allen, J. Wiltshire, R. Killingrey, and the writer. These meetings were powerful, and the sum of £48 15s. 5d. was realized, being £2 16s. 8d. more than was raised at the same place last year. Thanks to all collectors and donors, and praise be for ever ascribed to the great Head of the Church for His blessings manifested to us.

C. T. HARRIS.

5. DONCASTER CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—On Sunday, Feb. 23rd, 1862, missionary sermons were preached at Doncaster, Mexbro, Bentley, and Stainforth by Messrs. J. North, W. Whitby, W. R. Monkman, and the writer. During the week, a missionary meeting was held at each place, and addresses were delivered by the above-named preachers to large and attentive congregations. The deputation did us good service, and the meetings were of an interesting character. The missionary operations, and progress of the Connexion were referred to by the speakers, and their statements were well received by the people. The four places raised £34 3s. 2d., being £6 6s. 4d. more than was realized at the same places last year. Our kind collectors have done well. For the financial improvement we are glad; but more so for the salvation of souls. The Gospel preached has been attended with power, and sinners have been brought to Christ, and made happy. That greater prosperity may attend the operations of the Connexion, is the prayer of yours in Christ,

T. KENDALL.

6. ST. IVES, CORNWALL.—On February 23rd, and four following days, we held a course of missionary services, at which we were favoured with the labours of the Rev. R. Parks, of Lincoln, the Rev. J. Shephard, of St. Austell; the Rev. B. Browne, Wesleyan, also gave us a sermon, and assisted at St. Ives public meeting; the Rev. J. Smedley occupied the chair, and brothers R. Killingrey and W. Harvey took part in the proceedings. Our congregations were large, the chapels were crowded, the Divine influence was richly vouchsafed, and the collections, &c., in the aggregate were £3 1s. 6½d., in advance of those of last year.

St. Ives missionary Steam Ship had made a prosperous voyage, in a fortnight, her friends obtained £12 0s. 2d.. This, with public collections, boxes, and donations amounted to the sum of £32 7s. 3d., being £2 10s. 3d. in advance of last year. Lelant raised £6 5s. 5d., Nancledera, £5 0s. 7d., and Trevalgan, £5 8s. 7d. Total, at the four places, £49 1s. 10d. Each place produced a little more than was raised on the previous year; and, what is more encouraging, Trevalgan society has been doubled within the last six months. At each of the other places, the "Lord has made bare His holy arm," and sinners have recently been brought to God. All praise to Jesus. WILLIAM HARVEY.

7. GRIMSBY CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor,—On the 27th of Feb., 1862, we closed an interesting course of missionary anniversaries. On Sunday, 23rd, sermons were preached at Grimsby, Thorsby, Laceby, and Keelby, and public meetings were held on the four following days. The Revs. D. Kendall, T. Greenbury, and J. Wood attended as our deputation, and rendered the cause of Christ good service. Our monetary progress, considering the times, was very encouraging. The amount raised at Grimsby was a little less, owing to the absence of the proceeds of a small tea meeting, which seemed unavoidable, from the tea meetings, we have had in connection with our new chapel, apart from the tea, the proceeds were in advance. The following sums were raised:—Grimsby, £28 15s. 10d.; Thoresby, £10 14s. 10d.; Laceby, £16 3s. 4d.; Keelby, £15 11s., being, in the aggregate, several pounds in advance of the previous year. Our missionary collectors had, with few exceptions, been truly diligent, and some additional donations were received. To all who have helped, we return sincere thanks, and we pray that they may enjoy every spiritual blessing.

C. KENDALL.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. IDLE.—The opening services of our new chapel at Idle, Shipley Branch, were commenced on New Year's-day, 1862, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. G. Lamb, of London. The services were continued on Sunday, January 5th, when the Rev. W. Jackson and Charles Rhodes, Esq., of Bradford, preached. Also, on Sunday, January 12th, sermons were delivered by the Rev. J. Maylard, Rev. S. Dyson, Independent minister, of Idle, and Mr. W. Peel, of Bradford. All the services were well attended, and gave great satisfaction. The collections amounted to £48. We have now a neat, substantial, and commodious chapel, 48 feet by 36, galleried all round, and two vestries are attached. Also, a spacious school under the chapel floor, well lighted, and two cooking rooms. The whole cost is about £800. We have received from voluntary contributions, collections, &c., about £300. But, as there was an old debt on the premises of £150, we must beg £50 more, so as to leave not more than £600 debt on the premises. The trustees and local building committee are thankful to all who have assisted them in the undertaking. May God vouchsafe his blessing, and reveal his glory in this new house of prayer. Amen.

JOHN MAYLARD.

2. EPWORTH CIRCUIT.—West-woodside is a large village in Epworth circuit, into which the devoted pioneers of our beloved Connexion entered in 1819. The word preached by them took effect. Sinners were brought to God, a society was formed, and a small chapel was erected in 1822. Subsequently a larger was needed, and a second was built in 1835. Last year, about this time, we deemed it to be our duty to make an effort for one still larger, and, by the blessing of God, we have exceeded beyond our expectations. The opening services, which were of an interesting nature, took place Jan. 5th and 12th, 1862. Mr. J. Ratcliffe and Mrs. Moody officiated; the congregations were good, and the collections satisfactory. The chapel stands about the centre of the society, and not far from the centre of the village, and where there is the advantage of a junction of four roads leading east, west, north, and south. The walls are kiln-burnt bricks, the front is tuck-jointed, the chapel is covered with the best countess slates, and blue Staffordshire ridging. It is 36 feet by 27 feet 6 inches, and is 15 feet from the floor to the ceiling, the floor being nine inches above the surface, and the site being much higher than the street, it imparts to the building a commanding appearance. The entrance is by folding doors, with circular head. Over the fan-light is placed a beautifully wrought stone, bearing the following inscription: "Primitive Methodist Chapel, 1861." On each side of the doors, and also at the west end, is placed a large circular-headed double-hung window, and one of the same dimensions, except the circular-head, on the north side. At a proper distance therefrom two plumb jamb walls, over which is turned a substantial arch, where sliding doors are to open into the school-room, which is about to be built on the east end of the chapel. We have two circular-headed windows of a smaller size, to throw additional light on the platform, the workmanship of which, with the whole of the interior, not only presents an air of neatness, but does great credit to the contractor. In front of the platform, we have a singers' pew, on each side of which are two comfortable family pews. The west end is elevated. Altogether we have twenty-two pews, which will accommodate more than one hundred persons, with about seventy free sittings. The plastering, including the cornice, and highly-wrought centre-pieces, is done in a superior style, and, we may also add, the chapel is well ventilated. Behind the chapel, we have sufficient land on which to build a school-room, &c.. The materials of the old chapel will be employed for building the school, except they be previously disposed of. The cost of the new chapel, including the land, which is freehold, the making of the deeds, which are enrolled in her Majesty's High Court of Chancery, eight paraffin lamps, carting the materials, &c., is about £196, towards which we have realised £88. On both the chapels we have borrowed £100, at four-and-a-half per cent., and £40 at five per cent., and we are thankful to say that nearly all the sittings are let. We wish to record our grateful acknowledgments to the Almighty, to the circuit quarterly meeting, for a grant of £30 from Crowle Wharfe great meeting fund, and to all who have assisted us in this undertaking.

THOMAS RATOLIFFE.

CHAPEL RE-OPENINGS.

1. BARROW—BARTON CIRCUIT. —Dear Editor,—The services in connection with the re-opening of the above chapel were commenced on Sunday, January 26th, 1862, after erecting a gallery in it, and making other alterations for our improving Sabbath school and congregation, at an outlay of £80. Two sermons were preached by the Rev. G. Stansfield, of Manchester, to crowded congregations.

On Monday afternoon, January 27th, 1862, the Rev. J. Petty, of Hull, preached an impressive sermon, and many felt it good to be there. At five o'clock, about 300 people sat down to a social tea, gratuitously provided in the Temperance Hall, which place we were allowed to occupy free of charge.

After tea, the hall was re-arranged for the public meeting, was quickly crowded, and many were not able to gain admittance. In the absence of the ex-Mayor of Hull, who was expected to preside, the chair was taken by R. Bristow, Esq. The speakers were the Revds. J. Petty, G. Stansfield, R. T. Brown (Independent), D. Ingham, and the writer. The meeting was of an interesting character. £60 have been obtained by donations, collections, and the tea, and we expect that the remaining £20 will be raised; so that, though important improvements have been made to the trust property, it is intended that there shall be nothing added to the debt. Several applications have been made already for additional sittings. That the great Head of the Church may prosper his work is the earnest prayer of

B. STANFIELD.

2. LEEK.—Dear Editor,—The year 1861 will be memorable to the friends of Primitive Methodism in this locality, as the period when our chapel underwent important alterations for the better accommodation of our increasing congregations, society, and Sabbath school. For many years the cause of God has been low at this place, and circumstances have concurred to make Zion languish. But amidst all the trials which the cause has had to pass through, some warm-hearted friends have stood by it, and sought to promote its well-being. These friends have frequently contemplated the alteration of our chapel, but they never could see their way clear to commence till about twelve months since, when a gracious revival took place.

The good work continued to progress, and our congregations increasing rapidly, every impediment to the alteration was soon removed, and proper steps were taken for the accomplishment of the object. The entire cost of the alteration, including painting, graining, and varnishing, is about £208, towards which, we have realized, in donations from the trustees, Messrs. Astles, Salt, and Vernon,

£10 each; Messrs. Joshua, Brough and J. Dakin, £5 each; Mr. H. Johnson, £2; Mr. W. Lovatt, 2 guineas; A number of kind friends have given £1 each, and others have given less sums, the whole amounting to £78.

We held our re-opening services Nov. 17th, and Dec. 1st, 1861, when sermons were preached by Messrs. Walker, G. Bullen, and J. Broad, the Rev. R. Pattinson, of Macclesfield, and the Rev. S. Hooly (Wesleyan). The services were very impressive and powerful, and the congregations large and attentive. The collections amounted to £12 17s. 5d. The total of money raised is £90 17s. 5d. We tender our thanks to the Giver of all good, and to our many friends for their aid. We have put a gallery into our chapel, and boarded the floor, which now forms a good schoolroom. Our sanctuary is 43ft by 35ft. inside, and will seat about 700 people. That it may be the birth-place of many souls is the earnest prayer of the writer.

JOSEPH SUTCLIFFE.

SPECIAL EFFORTS.

1. NORTHAMPTON CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland, — For some time our friends have been struggling with outstanding debts connected with their chapel in this town. Upwards of two years ago, a cottage connected with the chapel premises was transformed into a school-room, and other improvements made, which involved a considerable outlay. An effort was made at the time, but still unsettled bills, and interest thereon, to the amount of £39 10s. 3½d., remained up to July last, when the writer entered this station. We are happy to be able to inform you that the above amount has been paid, and that during the year we have not only settled all accounts for the interest of 1861, but other liabilities have been paid for back interest to the amount of £5 18s., and we have not only commenced this year free of debt, but we have £10 which we have received from the General Chapel Fund, towards reducing the principal. The following sums have been raised, begged by P. Coates, accompanied by different brethren: £19 6s. 4½d.; part profits of a bazaar £17 3s. 10½d.; the other was received from the proceeds of a tea-meeting and collections. In addition to this special effort we are making arrangements to reduce the chapel debt £100 during the next six years, and by united efforts, and the blessing of the Lord, we think it can be accomplished. We beg to tender our thanks to all who have helped us in this matter.

P. COATES.

[Under the circumstances Mr. Coates and the friends at Northampton have done well, but the case is highly suggestive of a lack of previous effort on behalf of the chapel, else why all these arrears? As soon as a chapel's expenses exceed its income, immediate efforts ought to be put forth to aid the cause of God by helping the sanctuary, and so far maintain the honour of the Connexion. "Owe no man anything."—St. Paul.—Ed.]

2. TOLL END, WEST BROMWICH CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor,—Three special sermons were preached on behalf of the Trust Fund in our chapel at Toll End, on Sunday, February 2nd, 1862; the Rev. S. Sanders preached in the morning and evening, and Mrs. Sanders in the afternoon. The services were well attended, and the collections amounted to £10 13s. 8½d. To God be all the praise.

3. HALIFAX CIRCUIT.—EBENEZER (PRIMITIVE METHODIST) CHAPEL.—On Monday evening, the members of the church and congregation worshipping in this chapel, took tea together in the school-room. After tea, a meeting was held in the chapel, when E. M. Wavell, Esq., was called to the chair, and explained the object of the meeting, viz., the entire removal of the heavy debt upon the chapel. After making some interesting remarks on the subject, he called upon the Rev. A. Worsnop to read the report. The report stated that Ebenezer Chapel was built in 1822, and cost £1,460, towards which £138 were raised, leaving a debt of £1,322. With this heavy debt the Society struggled hard for several years, and were afraid at one time of losing the chapel, but God raised up friends to help them. Since then various efforts had been made to reduce the debt; but, having had several alterations and improvements to make, at a considerable cost, besides meeting the interest and other expenses, the principal could only be reduced by small sums. Up to April 13th, 1860, there still remained a debt, of £800 upon the chapel, when the Rev. Mr. Worsnop named the case to Joseph Crossley, Esq. As this gentleman had, for several years, liberally supported the Primitive Methodists in this town, and as he had before named the chapel debt, it was deemed not imprudent to suggest the case to him. He proposed that if the society would raise one-third of the entire debt, he would raise two-thirds. Thus encouraged, they set to work, and obtained promises to the amount of about £100. At a second meeting, held November 26th, 1861, when John Crossley, Esq., presided, the sums promised reached to £252 17s. 2d. The case having been stated, the chairman called upon the following ministers and friends to address the meeting:—Revs. W. Sanderson, of Kirton Lindsey; H. Knowles, of Retford; W. Gledhill, late missionary in Canada; J. Jobling, of Burnley; T. Smith, of Pately Bridge; W. Birks, of Halifax; S. Laycock, of Bank Top; and Messrs. W. Smith, J. Claybrough, G. Garfit, and J. Sutcliffe. The two first ministers preached on Sunday, when collections were made in behalf of the chapel. During the past year the people have been contributing by instalments, and by such efforts the sum of £253 15s. 2½d. has been raised, which, with other sums, enables the trustees and friends virtually to state the chapel is free of debt.—Halifax Guardian, Dec. 7th, 1861.

Dear Editor,—Since the above was published, other sums have been received, which has enabled the trustees to pay £266 13s. 4d. (the one-third of the chapel debt) into the hands of the solicitor for the mortgagee. The two-thirds have been paid by Joseph Crossley, Esq., and the whole of the debt was properly discharged, February 12th, 1862. We thank God that He has raised us up friends who have enabled us to clear off the chapel debt. May the salvation of God be their inheritance for ever.

JUBILEE SERVICE.

POOLE CIRCUIT.—On Sunday, January 26th, 1862, we commenced interesting Jubilee services; Mr. Warner, preached at Poole, and in the prayer-meeting after the evening sermon, three persons obtained the salvation of their souls.

During the following week we held platform meetings at Poole, Winterbourne, Spettisbury and Durweston. Mr. Warner (the Deputation) brought the objects of the Jubilee Fund before the people in a satisfactory manner, and we obtained by collections and promises the following sums; Poole, £13, Winterbourne, £3, Spettisbury, £4, and Dunweston, £5 10s., and at other places 17s., making a total of £26 7s., which sum we hope to pay into the hands of the district treasurer in June next. The congregations were good, and the people felt much interested. We were favoured with the assistance of G. Wells Coward, Esq., and Messrs. Hodges and Mate, at Poole. Our steward, Mr. Hunt, presided over the Spettisbury meeting. We hope the confessional arrangement will be carried out by the stations throughout our beloved connexion. E. RAWLINGS.

OBITUARY.

1. MRS. JANE LUND, of Hesketh, Preston Circuit, took her flight from this world to a better, June 29th, 1861, aged eighty-five years. Her parents, James and Ann Blundell, were decent, moral people, and brought up their family to perform all the rites, ceremonies, and duties devolving on them as members of the established church. When Sister Lund got married she followed the example of her parents, bringing her family up in the same manner, till the Primitive Methodists missioned Hesketh in 1827, at which time she was laid on a bed of affliction. The travelling preacher visited her, prayed with her, and pointed her to Christ. When she recovered, she attended the ministry of our preachers, and soon became convinced of her lost condition as a sinner. She was led to seek earnestly for that salvation which was preached, as being free for all mankind. She looked to Christ, beheld his love, believed in his willingness to save, and he gave her the Holy Spirit to witness with her spirit that she was a child of God; peace and joy then filled her soul. She found that religion was indeed the one thing needful to make the soul happy, that it was a pearl of inestimable worth, and that that which brought such unspeakable joy to her soul would bring the same to every one that believeth. She therefore joined the society, and was ever regular at the means of grace. She was particularly attentive to her closet duties, she read much in her Bible and other good books. In these exercises she found the streams of comfort and consolation to flow into her soul; yea, she experienced that by meditating in the law of her God day and night, her spirit was refreshed. She prayed and laboured much for the conversion of sinners, and he who has said, "Ask and ye shall receive," gave her her request; many souls were converted to God in answer to her prayers, and she had the happiness of seeing her daughters converted to God. Others of her children and many of her grandchildren can set their seal to the truth, "That God has power on earth to forgive sins." May the Lord save them every one! Amen. Mrs. Lund was ever ready to encourage and advise those Christians with whom she met, to duty and devotedness to God. Many of us will long remember her kind and affectionate advice to us. The affliction which terminated her mortal career was rather protracted. I visited her when she was on her death-bed. I found her happy in the love of God, her confidence firmly fixed on the atoning blood of Christ. We knelt and prayed, and found we were at the gate of heaven. Glory filled the room. She often declared, "The Lord is with me;" "Bless the Lord, I shall soon be at home." In her last moments she warned sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and also urged believers to be faithful to the end. She fell asleep in the arms of him who had been the Shepherd and Bishop of her soul during the thirty-three years of her Christian pilgrimage.

MOSES JACKSON.

2. NATHAN SADLER was removed from this vale of tears to the land of everlasting rest, June 13th 1861, at Eryholme, Darlington Circuit. He was brought to God in October, 1858, at Harworth Chapel, while Brother J. Spoor was preaching, and he lived in the enjoyment of Gospel liberty to the day of his death. About half a year after his conversion, he was afflicted; he suffered much and was confined to his bed a long time, but he could say, "Good is the will of the Lord." His leader, Brother Nicholson, says, "about ten days before his death his soul was so filled with joy in Christ he could not rest till he sent for me that he might tell what Jesus was doing for him. I was with him a short time before he departed, he had lost the power of speech, but he lifted his arm and waved it in token of victory through the blood of Christ."

J. SPOOR.

3. ELIZABETH, the beloved wife of William CHAPMAN, Primitive Methodist local preacher, Grassington, was born at Hebden, Yorkshire, May, 1826. Her parents were industrious and moral people, so that she was restrained from many of the follies of youth. Nevertheless she lived without salvation until 1848, when she was converted to God under the ministry of Mr. J. Ashworth. Her course was steady, she loved the means of grace, and made the ministers of the Gospel welcome to her home: she exemplified the grace of God in her earnest desire for the salvation of sinners. She laboured without ostentatious display to serve the church until January, 1860, when she was partly laid aside through affliction. Means were tried for her restoration which seemed for a time to succeed, but the most sanguine hopes of her friends were disappointed, consumption renewed its attack, and laid her on the bed of death. The writer visited her and always found her clinging to the cross, submissive to the will of the Lord. The day before her death the children were weeping, when she was heard to say, "It's hard to bear, but the Lord is my helper;" "Thank the Lord I have not to seek religion now;" "I am safe." Gradually the bands were loosened, and in full triumph the spirit entered into rest, on the 30th day of July, 1861. The bereft husband has lost one of the most industrious and affectionate of wives, the children a tender mother, a member of the church militant has been removed to the church triumphant.

THOMAS S. CARISS.

4. Died at Hull, on Sunday evening August 25th, 1861, Mrs. JANE COOPER, aged fifty-four years. She was born in this town, and in early life became a scholar in the Methodist New Connexion Sabbath School, and never forgot the instruction she received there. She was not, however, brought to God till about eighteen years ago, when she found peace in believing while praying by her bedside during the silent hours of night. She then praised God aloud, and rejoiced in Him with exceeding joy. Her conversion excited considerable attention in the neighbourhood, as her zeal induced her to recommend the Saviour to those around her. And the flame of holy zeal then kindled within her breast, continued to burn with steady and unabating ardour during the remainder of her life.

Near sixteen years ago she became a teacher in West Street Sabbath School, and manifested a deep interest in the welfare of the institution, whose benefit she sought to promote in every practicable way. Her regular and punctual attendance were worthy of imitation. For some time she resided about two miles distant, but she nevertheless attended to her duties as a teacher; and when she found that her declining strength would no longer permit it, sooner than relinquish her beloved employment, she and her husband removed to Anlaby Road, a convenient distance from West Street, by which means she was able to attend to the school till confined to her house by affliction. She was a diligent collector for its funds whenever necessary, a kind and successful visitor of the sick and absent scholars, gave prudent counsel in teacher's meetings, and in various ways rendered very efficient service to the institution.

She was also a valuable member of the Sick Visitor's Association. She both freely contributed to its funds and diligently sought the contributions of others. She was frequently engaged in conversation and prayer with the afflicted and needy, and largely ministered to their instruction and comfort.

She was a useful and highly esteemed member of Brother Sissons' week night class, and rendered good service by visiting the sick and the absentees whenever necessary and practicable.

Mrs. Cooper was twice married, and after her second marriage she had the delicate and responsible duties of a step-mother to perform; duties which she was enabled to discharge in such a manner as to win the approval, gratitude, and esteem of all concerned. Her own children, and her husband's children rose up to call her blessed.

Mrs. Cooper. was a consistent and an active Christian, and it was hoped that many years of usefulness yet awaited her; but cancer in the breast defeated the skill of the physician and the power of medicine, and ultimately carried her to the tomb.

For seven weeks she was confined to her dwelling, and suffered considerably; but she endured her affliction with patience and resignation. It was my privilege to visit her several times, and I always found her in a very satisfactory state of mind. She finished her course in peace, with a blooming hope of immortality beyond the grave. JOHN PETTY.

5. ISABELLA DOWELL, Spenny Moor, Durham Circuit, expired in peace, August 10th, 1861, aged sixty-eight years. For the greater part of her life she had been a devoted follower of Jesus Christ and a member of the Primitive Methodist church. The attachment of our deceased sister to the social and public means of grace, the reading of the Holy Scriptures, the visiting of the sick and dying, was truly great and very commendable. She reminded me of those worthies of old "who departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day," and "who delighted in the law of the Lord, and in His law meditated continually." In foul or fair weather, cloudy or sunshiny days, ebbings or flowings, scarcity or plenty, health or sickness, things Divine constantly occupied her mind, animated her life, influenced her actions, and sustained her in the most desponding times. She saw no lion in the way of either duty or privilege, because it was her meat and drink to do the will of her heavenly Father.

Her end was brought about by repeated strokes of paralysis. Her soul, however, "was strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might." She departed, after repeating three times these sweet words, "Precious Jesus." N. BRABAN.

6. Died July 31st, 1861, at Roby Mill, Chorley Circuit, Lancashire, JOHN ASCROFT, aged twenty-three years. We regret to say that our deceased brother was not favoured with pious parents, and had not others cared for his soul, he might have continued in sin, and been finally lost. But at an early age he became a scholar in the Primitive Methodist Sabbath-school at Roby Mill, which instrumentality, through the blessing of heaven, proved effectual in turning his feet into the path of purity and peace. When he was nineteen years of age, he became deeply concerned for the salvation of his soul, this was in 1857. About that time a revival of religion took place among the Primitive Methodists at the above-named place, when about fifty persons professed to find peace through believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, of whom our departed brother was one, and he continued with us until he died, and was a consistent and useful member of society, seeking at all times the peace and prosperity of Zion. He was a man of few words, warm temperament, kind disposition, and industrious habits, and was esteemed by many in the village where he resided. His chief place of pious labour was in the Sabbath-school, and he did not labour in vain; he also took an active part in prayer-meetings. The society has lost a useful member, and the school a laborious teacher. His death, which was sudden and unexpected, was occasioned by the fall of a stone in the quarry where he worked.

"He sigh'd but a moment, and then all was o'er,
For his spirit had passed away," we believe to the regions of immortality and light. The night before his death he attended the chapel; the writer preached, and John's more than usual earnestness, on that occasion, was noticed by several of the friends, particularly in the singing. The concluding hymn was the 826th, and while singing the last verse his happy soul did in spirit and in truth offer up the prayer embodied therein.

"At death receive me, Lord, to thee,
I long to flee away,
That where thou art, I too may be,
In realms of endless day."

The next morning early his spirit passed to those bright realms to be for ever with the Lord. He has left a widow and child.

That they may meet him in the bright home of sinless spirits is the sincere prayer of the writer.

R. B. HOWCROFT.

77. Died at Sedge Fen, Brandon Circuit, August 16th, 1861, WILLIAM GATHERCOLE, in the twenty-eighth year of his age. His first religious impressions were received in our Sabbath-school. These continued so to increase, that he was induced to attend the prayer-meetings and other means of grace that were being held, and about eight years ago he gave his heart to God, and united with the society. Since then he has been a steady and consistent member. His great aim has been to glorify God, and to be a blessing to his perishing fellow-creatures. Five years ago he became the superintendent of the Sedge Fen Sabbath-school, which office he filled with credit to himself and profit to others, till within a short period of his death. His end was brought on by consumption. His sun went down while it was yet day, but it set without a cloud. The writer visited him several times during his affliction, and always found him happy in mind and fully resigned to the will of his heavenly Father. His sufferings sometimes were very intense, but patience had its perfect work. He was satisfied that all was working for his good. This confidence made him courageous and cheerful. Sometimes his cup of joy was brimful, and he adored the riches of Divine grace with a grateful heart, in joyous strains, amid flowing tears. On one occasion, I, with Brother Meadows, visited him, and while praying by his bed-side, the Lord came so near that he, with ourselves, seemed covered with the cloud of the excellent glory. Truly it was the verge of heaven, the privileged place where the good man meets his fate, when breathing out his soul to God. Shortly after, with a brightened countenance, he exclaimed, "Happy! happy!" These were his last words on earth. His widowed mother, while watching the last moments of her affectionate and only son, saw and felt so much of God, that she was constrained to praise Him aloud. Thus lived and died one of "the precious sons of Zion." That we may meet him in our Father's house above, is the prayer of

JOHN ADDISON.

8. JENIMA BALDWIN, wife of William Baldwin, of Otley, Yorkshire, was born at Leven, near Beverley, January 19th, 1819. When a girl she was circumspect in her moral character; she regularly attended the services of the Established Church; but neither saw nor felt her need of experimental godliness

When about eighteen years of age, through the ministry of the Wesleyans, she was awakened to a sense of her sinfulness; penitently she approached the Lord in the exercise of faith, and she was instantly "born of God." She exemplified the principles of the new birth in her subsequent deportment. Her disposition, conversation, and conduct were amiable.

She was deeply concerned about the impenitency of the youth around. She, in union with other pious Wesleyans, commenced a Sabbath School in her native village; she laboured assiduously to impress the minds of her youthful charge with the importance of personal religion.

In 1844, she became the wife of him who now deplores her loss; and they came to reside at Otley. A short time after her removal, she and her husband felt it to be their duty to unite themselves with our people, and from that time to her death she was an ornament to our cause. For two years prior to her decease she was afflicted with a cancer, which, during the last seven weeks of her mortal sojourn confined her to her room; the disease, in its last stage, deprived her of the use of some of her limbs, sight, and hearing, occasionally her sufferings were alarming for some of her family to witness. But in the severest paroxysms of pain, she was perfectly calm, never repining. When these dreadful attacks were abating, she would serenely say, —

"What are all my sufferings here,
If, Lord, Thou count me meet
With that enraptured host t' appear,
And worship at Thy feet?"

On the morning of July 31st, she heaved her last sigh, and died in the full assurance of hope, leaving a husband, and four little children.

HENRY CHABTREE.

9. Mrs. ANN ROBINSON, the beloved wife of Mr. W. Robinson, was a native of Etton, Beverley, Yorkshire. She began the journey of life, May 19th, 1802, and finished her course at Withernwick, August 12th, 1861, aged fifty-nine years.

My dear mother was not blessed with pious parents, still she was naturally of a serious, thoughtful disposition; but, though of a good moral character, she remained without saving grace until 1842. At that time her eldest son, John, was, under the preaching of the Rev. W. Luddington, savingly converted to God, and, though but eleven years of age, the change was strikingly evident. My mother saw it and wondered what one so young could know and say of religion, for to use her own words, "I knew nothing, nor could I say anything of it." Accordingly, with an infant in her arms, she hastened to the house (for at that time we had no chapel at Witherwick) where "they that feared the Lord" were met to relate what God had done for their souls. Fearing to enter, she stood without. But words, like arrows, reached her heart and affected her soul. O! what a moment was that! what feelings thrilled her soul and revolved in her mind! But the grand crisis was come. She entered the house, gave her name to the class-leader, her hand to the Church, and her whole to God, and thenceforward to the time of her departure she remained an honourable member of her Primitive Methodist Church. Thus commenced her ever-brightening pathway of life and godliness.

My mother's religion was seen and felt in the family. She had an ever-deepening concern for their spiritual well-being. Hence, family worship was regularly conducted, and daily did she retire to her closet, where, "with strong cryings and tears," she implored heaven on their behalf. She also frequently read good books to them, especially the Bible and our monthly magazines. For some time her efforts appeared fruitless,—her family grew up wild and reckless. But my mother had learned to "sow beside all waters," to "labour and wait." She knew the power of prayer, and continued therein. Nor was she mistaken, for she lived to see her prayers answered, and died with a good hope of meeting her husband and nine children in heaven. Praise the Lord!

But my mother's religion was not confined to the narrow circle of her own household. She looked abroad on the masses, and over their misery and wickedness she wept and prayed. Never had she greater pleasure than when she was, in any way, helping on the world's salvation.

My mother was no bigot. She loved all who loved God, and was ever ready to give them a helping hand. But she was specially attached to the people of her choice. I never knew her leave her own service for another. She looked first to home. In all the ordinances of Divine worship, she had peculiar delight. The house of God was to her a miniature heaven, the means of grace were streams of blessing, and nothing, really avoidable, kept her from them. Often have I heard her say, "I must be at my post." She was also greatly attached to all the servants of God, and until declining health and a large family rendered it inconvenient, she delighted to make them a comfortable home. Equally desirous was she to help in financial matters. Her class moneys were regularly paid, and while able, she delighted to collect for the mission funds.

In a letter to the writer, the Rev. J. Gibson says,—"I have known your dear departed mother for many years, and my confirmed opinion is that she was an exemplary Christian, diligent in her attendance at the house of God, very anxious for the prosperity of God's cause; and I always thought her a thorough Primitive Methodist."

I had hoped she would be long spared, but the great Disposer of events, who "seeth not as man seeth," thought good to blast our hopes, and take away the desire of our eyes. For many years my mother suffered from palpitation at the heart. During the last three or four years, she has gradually failed. But as her body weakened, her soul was strengthened and prepared for its approaching exit. The fires of affliction seemed to elevate and refine. Never was the writer more deeply impressed with the fact of his mother's approaching dissolution than when at home in July last; but never had he seen her so raised above the world, so familiar with eternal things, and so like Jesus in spirit and life. What she then said to him relative to his high calling, has made an ineffaceable impression. About that time she had a slight stroke, which was followed by another on August 7th. To her eldest daughter she then said, "I am going, I would like to stay, but the Lord's will be done." Her sufferings were great, but she bore them with Christ-like patience. Her speech was affected, but at times she said and sung, "Could I but climb," &c., "Grace is flowing," &c., "I love Jesus," &c. To her husband and those of her family at home she said, "Meet me in heaven, and tell William to meet me in heaven." On Monday, August 12th, life's final moment came, but all was ready. Speech had failed, but my mother had given so many testimonies in life, that none were needed in death. But there was the uplifted hand, telling of victory won, and then the ransomed spirit fled, and was "safe at home."

In my mother's death, her husband has lost a good wife, her children a tender and indulgent mother, the Church a zealous and consistent member, but heaven has gained another trophy of redeeming grace.

May the husband and children meet her in heaven,—Amen. W. ROBINSON.

10. FRANCES ELIZABETH MOORE was born in London, in 1812, her parents were members of the Church of England, and endeavoured to bring up their children in the fear of the Lord, but the deceased did not make any profession of religion till after her marriage, about which time she was awakened to a sense of her danger and joined the Primitive Methodist society, at Fornsett St. Mary, Norfolk. Her fellowship with heaven was sweet, she possessed in a high degree the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and she was a consistent member of society for upwards of twenty-one years. Her Christianity was severely tested by a long, and wasting affliction, but her foundation was the Rock of Ages, and the storms of life assailed it in vain, she was at times much harassed by temptation, but was enabled to exclaim under its pressure, "Great is my reward in heaven, I feel as if I could look up and see all those who have got safe thither," but added, "I hope I shall not have many more nights like the present, nevertheless, not my will, but the will of the Lord be done; I long to be where Jesus is."—On the 29th of June, she said "the storm is almost over,

"O glorious hope, O blest abode,
I shall be near and like my God."

On another occasion her brother, who was also her leader, remarked to her, "You will soon be there," she replied, "O my dear Saviour do come and take me." When very near Jordan's verge, she suddenly called her husband, and grasping his hand, said, "Glorious! glorious! glorious!" He replied, "The valley is lit up now," and she cheerfully responded, "Yes," and she entered into rest, on Lord's-day morning, the 14th of July, 1861, in the forty-ninth year of her age.

THOMAS KNAPTON.

11. DIED, at Downhead, Frome Circuit, August 17th, 1861, WILLIAM HUNTLY, aged forty-six. Our departed brother was brought to God many years ago, but unhappily fell from grace, and remained out of the way of peace till about ten years since, when in a revival, with which God was pleased to visit this neighbourhood, he obtained peace, and went on his way rejoicing. He adorned his profession, and "obtained a good report from without." The affliction which terminated his mortal course, was very severe, yet he bore it with Christian fortitude, and resignation. And though a beloved wife and five children surrounded him, he was enabled to give them into the care of Him who "will be a father to the fatherless, and a husband to the widow." I had the pleasure of visiting him once, after arriving in this circuit, and I found him suffering acutely, but rejoicing in hope. He could not hear the lowest whisper without suffering the most acute pain in his head, and some times his sufferings were such as to make it almost unbearable for those he loved the most to remain near him. But he rejoiced, and when a little relieved, he sang,

"With thee conversing we forget
All time, and toil, and care," &c.

His eldest daughter furnished me with the following, and when I received it, and read it aloud in the family, each of the little children said, "That is not half that father said." Just before my dear father died, he said, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." He asked mother if she could see heaven's gates open, and if she could see the golden chain hanging down from heaven. He said he could hear sweet music, but he could not play it yet. He said he could see the golden streets, and the angels walking there with bright crowns on their heads. He told us all to have faith in God, and continue to believe. He asked grandmother when she came in, if she could see heaven's gates opened for him. His last words were, "While I live and have my breath, I will praise my Lord." May his sorrowing widow and children meet him above.

E. POWELL.

12. ELIZABETH, the wife of Robert WRIGHT, of Kirkless Hall, was born at Busty Bank, near Burness Field, in the county of Durham, February 20th, 1820, and died at Kirkless Hall, Chorley Circuit, in the county of Lancaster, August 23rd, 1861, aged thirty-two years. Our departed sister from an early age, was the subject of divine impressions, but lived without the enjoyment of true religion until her twentieth year, when she and her widowed mother removed to Colliery Dykes, and she became acquainted with some of our people at that place, who, through the blessing of God, were made instrumental in her conversion. She joined the society, and remained with us until she died; she was a consistent and useful member of society, seeking at all times to promote the interests of, and rejoicing in the welfare of Zion. Her mind was above the common order. She possessed many excellent gifts, and her piety was deep and fervent; but being of retiring habits she did not say much; either in public or private, relative to her personal enjoyments. Yet she held intimate and constant intercourse with heaven, and walked worthy of her high and holy calling. As a wife she was affectionate and faithful, as a mother kind and gentle, and manifested a deep concern for the spiritual welfare of her family, being ever mindful in her lessons of instruction to give force to the same, by combining example with precept. For two years before her death she was the subject of affliction, the greater part of which time she was confined to her home, and though like David she often longed for the courts of the Lord's house, yet she did not murmur at being denied the privilege of attending the same, but patiently submitted to the will of her Heavenly Father. On the 25th of June last she took her bed, and her medical adviser was called in, who pronounced her case hopeless; every attention was paid her, but she gradually sank, yet her soul grew strong in the Lord. The writer of this sketch visited her in the chamber where she met her fate, and with many others felt it good to be there. A short time before she died, her husband asked if she felt Jesus to be precious, when with emphasis she replied, "O yes! bless Him I never saw and felt Him like this before." Soon after she called her family and sister to her bedside to take her farewell of them, and exhorted them to meet her in heaven; and on August 20th, a little before ten in the morning, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

R. B. HORSCHROFT.

13. DIED, at Tealby, Market Rasen Circuit, August 22nd, 1861, WINFRED DRAKES, aged thirty-two years. She lived a stranger to the saving grace of God, until the spring of 1857, when she was converted to God, during the services of a protracted meeting held in our chapel, at the above-named place; she at once joined our society, and continued a consistent member thereof to the time of her death. She was an ardent lover and liberal supporter of the cause of God: she was also very kind and charitable to the poor and the suffering around her, and often supplied their needs. As a wife she was affectionate and industrious, so that "the heart of her husband safely trusted in her;" she was a loving mother, and a faithful friend.

Miss Bemrose, who had formed an intimate acquaintance with our departed sister, says, "I have been at many places, but have never met with her equal." On one occasion, when writing to the above-named friend, she said:—

"Tis all my hope, and all my plea,
For me the Saviour died."

At another time she wrote, "My dear sister, it is my

"Sole concern, my single care,
To watch and tremble and prepare,
Against that fatal day."

On the 14th of August, she was delivered of two fine children, and a short time after she was taken alarmingly ill, and despite medical aid, she gradually sank. A few days before she died, she said to her niece, "I thought I should have died yesterday;" her niece said, "Would you like to die?" to which she calmly replied, "I should not mind, for I am ready." When very near her end, she was at times unconscious, but still she continued to whisper, "Jesus, Jesus," and to name the names of some of her Christian friends, until her happy spirit took its flight to the realms of endless bliss.

14. TABITHA HUDSON, of Whitehough, in the Bradwell circuit, was born Feb-1st, 1838. About four years ago she was led to Christ, and joined our people, and ever after showed a strong attachment to them. Blessed, with a pious father, and latterly a sister and brother, she was more favoured than some in her journey heavenward. For the last few months of her life she was the subject of heavy affliction, during which reason failed her much at times, then again she was quite calm and collected. When I last saw her she said, "Oh, how glad I am to see you, and how I long to get to chapel, the time seems so long since I was there, I shall be so glad to go when I get better, I so like to be among our people." Seeing but little hope of her recovery, I said, "If you don't join with God's people on earth again, you will join the general assembly, and church of the first-born." She quickly added, "Yes." On the Wednesday before her death, she said to her sister,

"Tis religion that can give,
Sweetest pleasures while we live,
Tis religion must supply,
Solid comfort when we die," &c.

"Thou must not fret, we shall meet again, if not on earth we shall meet in heaven. Don't fret, heaven is a glorious place." Three more days and the young pilgrim's journey ended, August 24th, 1861. May her husband, two little children, father, brothers, and sisters, meet her with the general assembly and church of the first-born.—Amen.

15. WILLIAM WRIGHT, of Whitehough, in the Bradwell circuit, was born at Castleton, Derbyshire, in 1785. He was enlightened by the Holy Spirit and brought to Christ in early life, joined the Wesleyan Methodists, with whom he remained for years, and married a pious member of the same community. After many changes of residence, while striving to "provide things honest in the sight of all men," they settled at Whitehough, and cast in their lot with our people about twenty years ago, she died in the Lord some years since. During the latter part of his life he had a variety of painful family trials, a long course of affliction and deep poverty, but "he endured, as seeing him who is invisible." I visited him several times in his last affliction. When severely tempted, he was sustained by his faithful Lord, whose free Spirit applied to his mind that sweet promise, "Fear not, worm Jacob, for I am with thee," then all his fears were chased away. Although a man of warm temperament which was sometimes a trouble to him, those who knew him best believed he was a sincere Christian. He left a state of extreme helplessness and suffering for the "better world," August 31st, 1861.

T. DOODY.

16. DIED, July 11th, 1861, at Hetton-le-Hole, Sunderland Circuit, MATTHEW RAJABECK, aged forty-one years. He obtained religion in his youth, and devoted his early life to God. He united with our Connexion in his fourteenth year. His life previous to his conversion was not defiled by gross sins, nor was his conversion marked as that of many; he says, "I was drawn by the cords of love, and cannot state the particular time when I received the pardoning love of God, but I did receive it." During the whole of his religious life, he was a humble, peaceable, kind, prayerful, and cheerful Christian. For a long period he was a consistent Sabbath-school teacher, he was also a diligent class-leader, and an active trustee of our chapel at Hetton-le-Hole. As an office-bearer in the church of Christ, he discharged his duties with punctuality and faithfulness.

His last affliction was protracted, but during the whole of it he was tranquil, and devout. His state of mind, as he drew near to his end, may be best learnt from a few of his own utterances. He said, "For the first five or six weeks of this affliction, I felt anxious to recover, I prayed much, as did my brethren also for this, but when I perceived the disease still made progress in spite of our prayers and the medical treatment to which I was being subjected, I concluded that it was probably not the will of God that I should be raised up again, and by grace I felt myself able to bow with resignation to the Divine will, and ever since that time I have felt great peace and happiness in the Lord, and now I feel calm and happy in the prospect of death." "I have not joy now as I had when I could labour in the good cause, and was stronger, but I have peace, love, and faith." "What a blessing that I have not religion to seek now, thank God I have laid up a capital, and I am now living on the interest." "What is there to harm my soul now? I have been kept for many years, by the grace of God, when I had much to exercise me, but now I have nothing to do but to look onward to the end," and shortly before his death, he said, "I am just coming home," and the last word that he uttered was, "Hallelujah!"

17. MRS. TAMER MOLE was born at Lanchester, Durham, in 1801, and died in peace, July 31st, 1861. Of her early life we know comparatively little; but when she had attained maturity she was convinced of sin, and sought and found the Saviour; and her subsequent conduct proved that she was a Christian of unaffected piety. The early part of her religious career was passed in connection with another denomination of people, but for certain reasons she and her husband withdrew, and joined the Primitive Methodists at Castleside, about 1843; and she continued an earnest, consistent member to the day of her death. Her kindness and hospitality to the numerous preachers and friends who visited Castleside was remarkable. She delighted to contribute to their comfort, and happiness; and amid all the changes that have taken place in the village she has remained faithful to God and His cause.

Her views of the plan of salvation were clear, and her soul expanded under the influence of the cross. I have often witnessed the pleasure it afforded her to hear of the salvation of souls in other places; but her chief delight was in the prosperity of the cause at home.

She loved the ordinances of God. Prayer meetings, class-meetings, and preaching services, were wells of salvation to her soul; hence her place in the house of God was never vacant, when health and circumstances permitted her to be there. Her last illness was brief, only continuing a few days; but her mind was tranquil, and she maintained a cheerful confidence in that Divine Saviour whom she had trusted for so many years. She died exclaiming, "Jesus is sweet."

Her removal from among us was sudden and unexpected, and by it our little society has lost a consistent and warm-hearted member, who always sought its prosperity, and the preachers have lost a friend. May her surviving relatives all meet her in glory.

RALPH SHIELDS.

18. Died, September, 1861, at East Holywell, North Shields Circuit, MARGARET, the beloved wife of Mr. John DIXON. Some years ago, she experienced a change of heart in a revival meeting, and immediately felt an earnest desire that her husband should possess like precious faith. She had the gratification of seeing this wish realized a few months after her own conversion, and her bereaved husband is now an esteemed leader in our Earsdon society. Our departed sister had a strong attachment to the society and connexion generally. She entertained the ministers with a generous hospitality and loving heart, and not long before her departure, she subscribed a sovereign to the Jubilee Fund. As a wife and mother, she was a pattern of neatness, order, and cleanliness, and showed that her heart was at once the abode of domestic virtues and Christian graces.

Her health failed for some time, and her friends saw with deep regret that she was hastening to the house appointed for all living. She bore her affliction with calm resignation, being supported by the cheering hopes of a better world. She died in great peace and strong confidence. Her last words, repeatedly expressed, were, "Come, Lord Jesus." Her spirit departed without a struggle, leaving her distressed husband and two children to mourn their loss.

THOMAS SMITH.

19. STEPHEN DAY, of Ampney, in the Cirencester Circuit, was born in 1817. In the early part of his life, he was preserved from many evils to which numbers of young men are addicted; but he knew nothing of a change of heart until a little more than twenty years ago, when the Primitive Methodists visited Ampney. Through their instrumentality, he was awakened to a consciousness of his need of salvation, and was eventually led to rejoice in his acceptance with God. The change he experienced was evidenced in his close and constant walk with God, in his rejoicing in the prosperity of Zion, and in his being always willing to assist the cause which he had espoused. About eighteen years since, he became a local preacher, the duties of which office he discharged with commendable punctuality and fidelity, and, I doubt not, with much spiritual edification and profit to those who listened to his pointed and pathetic pulpit addresses; aiming, as he invariably did, to promote the salvation of his hearers. Towards the close of his active efforts, he laboured under the influence of great physical debility; he frequently attended his appointments, when, after the conclusion of the service, he has been scarcely able to return to his home. During fifteen years he sustained the duties of a class-leader. In that capacity he was punctual, earnest, and faithful; was much beloved by the members of his charge, and will long live in their warmest affections. For a considerable time he was the circuit steward. In 1859, he was delegate for the circuit to the district meeting, and was highly delighted with its proceedings. He worked while it was day; but his toil on earth has closed. The affliction which terminated his earthly pilgrimage was a liver complaint, attended at times with the most severe pain, and accompanied with extreme bodily weakness; but he bore all his afflictions without murmuring, and he was fully resigned to the will of his heavenly Father. To inquiries made by brother Wellavine, the writer, and others, respecting his future prospects, he uniformly assured us that he was standing on the "Rock of Ages;" that his hope of heaven was well-founded, having Christ dwelling in his heart—the hope of glory. He felt a longing desire to depart and to be with Christ. On the 31st of August, 1861, that desire was realized; for he then died in the Lord. That his bereaved widow, and all to whom he ministered the word of life, may meet him in heaven, is the prayer of

J. FORD.

20. WILLIAM WORRALL, of Wrockwardine Wood, was born at Lilleshall, April 30th, 1825, and through a terrible catastrophe, ended his mortal career, September 7th, 1861. From a memorial written by himself, we find that he lived for twenty-three years in a profane and prodigal manner; but it pleased God to take from him suddenly a lovely child. This Divine visitation, for a time, alarmed him, which caused him to relinquish many of his pernicious practices, and induced him to attend more methodically the house and service of God. For the space of twelve years, he was strictly moral, but remained an entire stranger to experimental religion.

On October 17th, 1860, he was thoroughly convinced of sin, and of his need of a Saviour, from hearing a discourse delivered by the writer, and he continued to labour under the agonies of a smitten soul till December 9th, when he, for the first time, met in class, and through faith in Christ, he obtained pardon. Having tasted of the fruits of Christianity, he was anxious to diffuse those blessings among his fellow-men. Much has been done during the past summer to extend the borders of our circuit, and many miles did William travel with the ambassadors of Christ to assist them in spreading abroad the light of the Gospel. He regularly attended his class, and was solicitous for others to do the same. His Christian experience was clear and scriptural. The various means of grace were sweet to his soul. He was often in ecstasies of joy, and whilst his tears streamed, he would give vent to his joyful emotions in bursts of praise to his gracious Benefactor. In his dealings with men, no mark of dishonesty was seen; in his general deportment he was upright; in prayer he was mighty with God, and within his family circle was manifested practical religion, economy, and decorum. His employment was in an iron stone mine; and one day, not long before his death, when enjoying a few minutes' cessation in which to eat his morsel, he took his food in one hand, and his Bible in the other, and read the eleventh in the epistle to the Hebrews; and as he read of the ancient worthies who departed in the faith, the enemy suggested to his mind that such could not be his end, for he was not converted. "Not converted," he said to himself, and he immediately laid aside his Bible and food, and began to wrestle with God in prayer. This he had not done long before the power of the Holy Spirit fell upon him; he then sprang from his knees, and sung—

"My God is reconciled," &c.

The last night he spent on earth, a band-meeting was held in his house, and with unusual energy he spoke of the goodness of God, and his determination through grace to abide faithful unto the end.

The following morning, before he left home, he bowed his knees, lifted his hands, and poured forth a pathetic prayer for himself, his wife, and children, and then went forth to resume his daily avocation.

He entered the mine, toiled hard till four o'clock, and then prepared to return to his family. He was, with four others, being drawn up the shaft, which was sixty-seven yards deep; but when they arrived within about three or four yards off the top, the chain snapped asunder, and with the doubles (the contrivance in which they sat), the piece of broken chain, and a large iron ball, they dropped with an indescribable velocity, and fell with an awful crash to the bottom. A man at a neighbouring pit heard the alarm, ran to the spot, and as soon as possible descended the pit by means of a rope; the five broken, mangled, and lifeless bodies he found, but their immortal spirits had entered the eternal world. Consternation was soon spread around, and the scene which followed was truly heart-rending.

Such was the end of our beloved brother. "Be ye therefore also ready." A loving widow and seven children are left to lament their loss. May the wife meet her husband, and the children their father, where pain and sorrow shall be no more. Amen.

JOHN BUTCHER.

Circuit, September 7th, 1861, aged thirty-six years. She experienced a change of heart about sixteen years ago. It pleased the Lord to visit Yaddlethorpe with a gracious revival, and Rebecca felt its influence, yielded to the strivings of the Spirit, gave her heart to God, and her hand to his people, and her future conduct was in accordance with her profession. As a daughter she was affectionate, and as a friend she was sincere, kind in disposition, always ready to weep with those who wept, and to rejoice with those who rejoiced. She was a missionary collector for many years, and walked many a mile for the good cause.

In the summer of 1861, she began gradually to sink, suffering very much from shortness of breath, and palpitation of the heart. When she was told that she must die, she was never moved. She said the Lord had been with her in health, and he would not leave her now.

The night before she died, she said, "What is this that steals upon my frame; is it death?" Her father said, "Yes, my love, it is death." She replied,

"If this be death, I soon shall be,
From every sin and sorrow free."

And as she drew nearer eternity, she repeatedly said, "Heaven's my home."

She was fully resigned to the will of God, and died much lamented by her parents, relatives, and a large circle of friends; but our loss is her eternal gain.

GEORGE TODD.

22. Died August 23rd, 1861, at Levitt-Hagg, Doncaster Circuit, WILLIAM BRAMMER, aged fifty-three. He was a consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Society for eighteen years. Before his conversion, he was much addicted to drunkenness and Sabbath breaking. But one Sunday, while he and a younger brother were engaged in an unlawful pursuit, they saw a man approaching them, whom they took to be a preacher of the Gospel, and they were not mistaken, for it proved to be Mr. Featherstone, the superintendent of the Doncaster Circuit.

They made off as fast as possible, so that the man of God could not come at them; but he shouted after them, and what he said laid hold of them, and the result was they were brought to a saving knowledge of God.

William had a large family, but he found the grace of God to be sufficient for him. He was a constant attendant at the means of grace, and a sincere follower of the Saviour. The last Sabbath but one that he attended preaching, seeing his ungodly neighbours come in, he prayed, "Lord save them, the Lord save them all."

21. REBECCA, daughter of William and Sarah Cook, died at Yaddlethorpe, Scotter

He afterwards took to his bed, and the class was twice held in his room. He was very happy in God, and often said, "My work on earth is done."

A few days previous to his death, a brother who visited him asked him if ever the enemy assailed him. He replied, "No, except about my family." "Well," said he, "cannot you give them into God's hands? If your family will come to God, you believe he will save them, and take care of them;" and he said, "Yes, I believe it." A few days before he died, he asked his wife if she would cleave to

God, and put her trust in Him; and having received her assent, he shouted, "He will help thee, I believe he will."

The day previous to his departure, he suffered much, and he requested the friends not to speak to him, as he could not bear it.

After a severe struggle with the last enemy, his happy spirit took its flight to the paradise of God. He has left a widow and six children to lament their loss. May the Lord be their portion.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF THE REV. W. CATHY.

"ALL, all is silent, peaceful and serene;
The silver moon, retiring from the scene,
Veils her pale face, and seeks the distant west,
Recedes from sight, and calmly sinks to rest:
Fit emblem of the good man when he dies,
His end is peace, and peaceful where he lies.
'Tis solemn midnight, near the hour of one,
And vigils whisper, Carthy now is gone!
And while we hear them gently, softly tread,
They tell us weeping, yes, the man is dead.
Touch'd with the feelings which my heart control,
Which bid me hold sad converse with my soul;
Nor would I here my mournful secret keep,
Or e'er refuse to weep with them that weep,
But rather live each sympathy to blend,
And grieve to know the world hath lost a friend.
Carthy! to thee this tribute I would pay!
Thy night of death led on to light of day.
Though death's dark vale thou hast in safety trod,
The path which led thy soul from hence to God.
Christ is the way, and He the Truth and Light,
To guard and guide man's erring footsteps right.
'To err is human, to forgive Divine;'
To err is ours, forgive be yours and mine.
And if in him some minor fault we ken,
He was but man among the sons of men;
Yet was withal compassionate and kind,
And measured only by his mighty mind.
True princely greatness, neither faint nor dim,
In truth shone forth as fully formed in him.
His own big heart and quick discerning eye,
Could scan each virtue and each vice descry,
Point out the right, protest against the wrong,
In law or Gospel wisely use his tongue;
Put the true meaning in its proper light,
Arrest the wrong, and put the wrong to right.
Here each enquirer found an able friend,
Both sound advice and timely aid to lend;
His noble soul to none would aid deny,
Nor need you ask me here the reason why.
Read you the man, and understand him well,
Though he be dead his life alone shall tell.
Yes, let the man your pensive minds engage,
And here you find him one continued page;
Retrace his steps, mark well the path he trod,
'An honest man's the noblest work of God.'

BIOGRAPHY.

1. THOMAS ARMSTRONG, late class-leader at Perkin's Ville, Sunderland Circuit, was a person of high Christian character, simple and unassuming in his manners, unquestionable in his piety, unimpeachable in his morals, patient and persevering in his duties midst many discouragements, immovable in his attachment to the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and he is worthy of a record among "the excellent of the earth."

He was born April 5th, 1797, at New Lambton, a colliery village in the county of Durham, and being blessed with pious parents, who were devoted members of the Wesleyan Connexion, he was, with the whole family, trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. This mode of training led to the happiest results, and most of the family were brought to the enjoyment of saving religion, while those of them who have departed hence have experienced its preciousness in their last moments.

The Primitive Methodist missionaries, in some of their earliest labours in the north of England, were the agents employed in bringing Thomas to the Lord. He was living at that time at Kenton, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, where, attracted and affected by a singing procession, he was led to the house of God, sought and found salvation, and joined the Society. This is now nearly thirty-nine years ago, and he has been a steady member ever since. After his conversion he removed to Urpeth Colliery, near Chester-le-Street, and was appointed class-leader at the adjacent village of Ouston.

In that sphere of labour his faith and constancy were tried to the utmost, for several years. By strikes and evil influences the members at Ouston were scattered, and the colliery chapel they had occupied was lost. Still he held on his way, undismayed by repeated failures, travelling a considerable distance every Lord's-day to find a class-meeting; assisting the preachers in every possible way, when they visited the district, and frequently saying that if he could find a man like-minded with himself, they would turn the "battle to the gate." His faith and prayer at length prevailed. Perkin's Ville, a new colliery village, was built in the immediate neighbourhood, which much augmented the population. Among the strangers thus collected were two local preachers, who Brother Armstrong found were disposed to co-operate with him, and by whose united energies his prayers were answered. A glorious revival of religion transpired, and a powerful society was formed, including now some efficient local preachers. Brother A. was appointed one of the leaders of this society, and was much beloved by its members, and respected by all classes of people.

Circumstances, however, required him to sever himself from them for some time, but, alas, never to see them more. Having in charge two young children belonging to a daughter and son-in-law, the latter of whom was engaged in mining operations in Turkey, he, with his wife and these children, embarked for that country on the 4th of July last. Shortly after their arrival at their destination, their daughter died. Five children were thus left motherless in a strange land, when Brother Armstrong finding himself surrounded with the delusions of Mahommedanism, and feeling for the destitute condition of these children, he, with his wife, determined at once to return to England with them; their father, who occupies an excellent situation, engaging to supply the requisite funds, both for the education of the children and the comfort of the grandparents in their declining years. Accordingly, with high anticipations of once more enjoying the sweets of Christian fellowship with their beloved friends in England, on the 6th of October, apparently in good health, they left Turkey on their homeward route. God, however, determined that these anticipations were not to be realised. While travelling by rail towards Magdeburg, in Germany, and before they arrived at that place, he was suddenly arrested by affliction. Delirium ensued, and progress was impossible, they were obliged to stop and take refuge in an inn. Under these trying circumstances in a strange land, and surrounded by people of a strange speech, and utterly helpless, with four young children hanging by his skirts, the Lord evinced His watchful care over His honoured servant.

An English gentleman residing in Magdeburg, a Mr. Golden (whose name is eminently worthy of record here for his Christian sympathy), hearing of the distressed condition of an English family, hastened to their relief, and procured for the poor sufferer admission into the hospital, with other requisites which his condition required. But all was unavailing. His Father in heaven called him to a better home than England could provide for him, and on the 21st of October, 1861, after acquiring consciousness sufficient to pat the children on the head and tell them to be good, he instantly expired. And thus, as his son Charles touchingly writes—

“ By foreign hands his dying eyes were closed,
 By foreign hands his lifeless limbs composed,
 By foreign hands his humble grave adorned,
 By strangers honoured, and by strangers mourned.”

Let it also be recorded to the honour of the forenamed gentleman, that he procured for Brother Armstrong a respectable funeral, adorned his grave with a suitable headstone, and then provided for the melancholy journey home of the family, by giving special orders to the railway guard to look after them, and also by providing for them a friend at Hamburg, who, after kindly entertaining them, saw them embarked for England, where they safely arrived.

However valuable a death-bed testimony to the power and preciousness of religion may be, we can afford to dispense with it in the case of such a man as Thomas Armstrong ; it only need be added that he was a kind and affectionate husband and father. JOHN LIGHTFOOT.

2. JOSEPH BAXENDALE was born at Halifax, in the county of York, July 26th, 1807. In early life he attended the Sabbath-school connected with the old church at Halifax, and by his regular attendance and attainments he won the favour of the managers, who rewarded him for the same. But when he arrived at years of maturity, he chose rather to attend the Primitive Methodist Chapel where he could hear the Gospel preached in its simplicity, and which was frequently attended by the power of the Holy Ghost in the conversion of sinners to God. Under plain and piercing truths delivered by John Oxtoby, in Halifax Chapel, Brother Baxendale was awakened to a sense of his lost condition, and in the prayer-meeting held after the preaching service, he found peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. The reality of the change was evinced by a consistent life, and by the full consecration of himself to the service of God. His first employment in God's service was to give instruction to the children in the Sabbath-school. Some time after his conversion, his ability for usefulness was perceived by the officials of the church, who appointed him to preach that Gospel to others of which he had been made a happy partaker. His deep piety, original ideas, well digested matter, and pithy remarks, made him an acceptable preacher ; and as his discourses usually came from a heart warm with divine love, they reached the hearts of those who heard them. In this office I found him, a little more than twenty-nine years ago, the first time I was stationed for this circuit, and he sustained it to the end of his life. For many years he was also a class-leader, and he was deeply solicitous that his members should be diligent in their attendance at the means of grace, and that they should be filled with all the fulness of God.

During the latter part of his life he was unable to take any preaching appointments at a distance, on account of the feeble state of his health ; indeed, he was almost incapable of attending to his daily employment.

On Saturday, September 14th, 1861, he left home, after dinner, and went to the chapel to prepare a funeral tea in the school-room. While there he fell to the floor, about four o'clock. He was, however, quite sensible of his state, and gave instructions to his daughter to get all ready for the tea ; shortly after which, he breathed his last about eight o'clock on the same evening.

It was his usual practice to pray three times a day with his family, besides attending to his closet duties. His last prayer with his family, ere he left home, was distinguished by extraordinary fervency. The Rev. H. Knowles, of Retford, says of him,—“When he found peace through believing, he joined the society, and was a very consistent member. We were appointed to labour together as exhorters, and I found him a most agreeable colleague ; very punctual, and also upright in all his dealings, so far as I ever saw and knew of him.” May his surviving widow and children realise divine support and comfort in their bereavement, and hereafter enjoy, with him, eternal life.

3. Piety in a cottage is as pleasing to God as piety in a palace, and when it is exemplified in the every-day occurrences of life, it commends itself to the esteem of the right-minded portion of the community, whatever may be the temporal condition of its subjects. The character of departed saints may be studied with advantage, and to the imitation of their upright conduct, and to the attainment of the Christian graces which they exemplified, we are called, “Be ye followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises.” And, generally, we are most impressed by the piety and devotedness of those who are placed in circumstances similar to those in which ourselves are found. THOMAS DRIVER, the subject of this brief sketch, was the son of John and Sarah Driver, and was born at East Ardsley, near Wakefield, Yorkshire, in 1794. His parents moved in humble life, but were honest, industrious, and pious ; knowing the value of true religion themselves they strove both by their instructions and exemplary conduct, to place it before their children in all its loveliness. While Thomas was but a youth, the family removed from his native village to Morley, where he, along with the rest of the family, attended the Wesleyan chapel. He was frequently visited by the powerful strivings of the Holy Spirit. Nevertheless he continued to live in a state of estrangement from God until he was about twenty-seven years of age. His conversion took place after his marriage under the following circumstances. One Sunday evening he with his wife, paid a visit to his father, and when they began to prepare for returning home his father proposed family prayer, when a deep and lasting impression was made on his mind, and he obtained through the enlightening Spirit of God, clear views of his perilous condition as a sinner, fled to the all-atonement sacrifice, and found peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ. He joined the Wesleyan society, and continued a steady and consistent member thereof for twelve years. In 1834, when the Primitive Methodists visited this village, and formed a society, he threw in his lot with our people, and took a deep and lively interest in the erection of our chapel, and became one of its trustees. When health permitted, his attendance on religious ordinances was exemplary, he made the salvation of his soul his first concern, and his profiting appeared unto all. Those who met with him in class can bear testimony to his experience, which was, rich, deep, and clear. The writer has no wish to represent him as a perfect character; he had besetting sins, and temptations to forsake God, but if he at any time uttered a hasty word, which caused grief to his brethren, he could not rest until he sought their forgiveness. His displeasure was easily removed. He loved God and delighted to read the scriptures, he knew that they contained rich and golden ore, and, he therefore dug into the glorious and inexhaustible mine of truth; the word of Christ dwelt in him richly in all wisdom. Being distinguished by a remarkably sound judgment, his advice was listened to with attention, and thankfully received. He generally spoke with caution, and had a good reason for everything that he said. Among whomsoever he was found, he manifested a simplicity of character, and there proceeded from him an influence, which indicated that the righteous is more excellent than his neighbour, and although he possessed abilities of no ordinary limits he manifested no ostentation, but ever feeling his own insufficiency he invariably relied for strength on the Almighty. For many years before he commenced his labours as a local preacher, it was the opinion of his brethren in the church, that he ought to labour in that sphere, yet it was not until he had attained his fifty-third year, that he began to sustain the office of local preacher. He was encouraged by finding that in his attempts to preach, he was acceptable and useful; in the pulpit, it was his endeavour to expound and enforce the great truths of the gospel; he loved the Holy Scriptures and read them daily with great attention, and though he read other writings to a considerable extent, it was with a view to increase his acquaintance with the Bible. His discourses were sound, deep, scriptural, and full of illustrations. He had a retentive memory, and although some of his expressions were humorous and eccentric, at the same time they were pregnant with meaning, and produced a good effect on his hearers; in proof of this, the writer can give you a specimen. Once when he was preaching at a village called Farnley, he quoted the following passage, "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." He made a pause and said, "I will tell you, friends, spiritual sheaves are not like temporal ones ; they have corn at both ends, grace here and glory hereafter, the promise of this life, and in the world to come life everlasting." He attended to family prayer, and closet devotions, and lived in habitual intercourse with God. During his Christian pilgrimage he had to endure many adversities, but God was his refuge, and he remained steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. During the greater part of his life, he enjoyed good health, but for several years previous to his death, in consequence of declining health, he was rendered unable to take any preaching appointments, except one or two near home. And in the beginning of August last, he had a severe attack of affliction, which, ultimately terminated in death ; but he bore his affliction with patience and submission to the will of his heavenly Father ; he had a strong, unwavering faith in the all-sufficient grace of Christ his Saviour. He talked of death with the utmost composure of mind, and never was his soul so elated as when he was talking of the dissolution of his clay tenement, and his departure into another world, for he could stand on the brink of one world, and look into the other without amazement. Indeed, he had some very remarkable manifestations of the divine presence and love ; his soul was sometimes so filled with joy, that he would call on the raiment he wore and the materials in his dwelling, and everything surrounding him to praise the Lord. One powerful visitation of God's presence which he experienced, he related to his brother William, to whom he said he felt such an overwhelming sense of the presence of God, that it was almost too much for his frail tabernacle to sustain. It was a privilege of no common order to be allowed to visit him ; the triumph of divine grace over sin and death in him was glorious. The enemy of souls at times was permitted to annoy him, but on such occasions he usually said, "I am the Lord's servant." During his affliction, the class of which he was a member met at his house, and the members of his family who lived in the neighbourhood, shared in his devotions and witnessed the fervour of his prayers ; and so solicitous was he for their spiritual welfare, that only about a week before he died, he preached unto them a short sermon on the following scripture, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved ? and they said, believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." On Sunday, November 24th, 1861, his bodily strength was much reduced, and it became evident he was fast sinking under his affliction, but he continued calm and joyful in God. He remained sensible to the last. When asked by his wife if Christ was precious, he replied, "All's well, all's well." Having served God for a period of thirty-nine years, he sweetly fell a sleep in the arms of Jesus, November 25th, 1861, being the sixty-eighth year of his age.

"Hast thou not seen the setting sun,
How mild his beams appear ?

Just so the Christian, who has run
 His day of trial here.
 He leans upon his Saviour's breast,
 And enters his eternal rest."

JOSEPH WEBSTER.

4. WILLIAM MOON was born at Blackleach, Lancashire, in 1777, and died at Burnley, November 15th, 1861. Our departed brother was the son of a farmer who was a member of the Established Church, which he regularly attended. Brother Moon's first serious concern for the salvation of his soul seems to have been experienced by him when he was about eight years of age. His father and those with whom he associated frequently conversed on religious subjects; and, on one occasion, as he listened to them speaking about heaven and hell, his heart was so deeply affected that he began to pray, and had those first buddings of desire to live to God been encouraged, he might have been converted earlier than he was, but, being neglected, they partially died away.

Might not parents be made a greater blessing to their children than they generally are, by more frequently introducing religious subjects into their conversation?

When the subject of this sketch was about fifteen years of age, he was bereft of his father, and was apprenticed to be a shoemaker; but so cruelly did his master treat him, that he deserted him before his apprenticeship was completed, and he engaged himself to another master, with whom he remained till he had fulfilled his engagement. At that time he was greatly troubled on account of his spiritual state; he knew that he was guilty before God, and if he died in that state there would be nothing but hell for him; sometimes he was tempted to think he had committed the unpardonable sin; despair, like a dark cloud, for a time, seemed to settle down on his spirit, and, while in that state of mind he was tempted to commit suicide. Happily for him, the temptation was resisted, though it was when he was about to perform the fatal act. He had dreams of heaven, hell, the judgment day, and eternity, and he said, "I cannot tell one half of what a hell I had within myself."

In 1798, William came to Burnley, and in the following year he was married to a young woman whose name was Hannah Carter. Yet he was far from being happy, his mind was not entirely freed from the tormenting thought that he had sinned away his day of grace.

On Sunday, February 26th, 1801, he complied with an invitation to go to hear Miss Mary Barret preach in the Wesleyan chapel. She spoke from the following words,—“And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees; therefore, every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire.”—Matt. iii. 10. The word came home with power to his heart; he saw himself a poor, wretched sinner; at the same time a ray of hope beamed on his benighted soul, and dispersed the darkness of despair that for some years had brooded over his spirit. He then resolved that he would no more deliberately sin against God. He returned from the chapel in deep distress of mind, and before he lay down to rest he fell upon his knees and earnestly prayed for mercy, but he did not obtain peace with God. Such was his mental anguish, according to his own statement, that for nine days and nights he could neither eat nor sleep, and people said he was going mad. By request, he attended a class-meeting, where the leader gave him instruction suited to his case; still, the burden of his guilt remained unremoved. He vowed he would say the Lord's Prayer thrice a day, which he did, yet still he found no relief for his troubled mind. One sin he had committed against an individual, for which he had not made compensation when it was in his power to do so, and this stared him in the face: it was defrauding his master. Many plans he laid, by which to repay what, in an evil hour, he had taken away, without his master knowing, yet he was as miserable as ever. Ultimately, he resolved to adopt the right course, and abide by the consequences. So, one day, when his master came into the shop, he told him he had defrauded him, and he wanted to make restitution; for a time the master looked him in the face, with his eyes suffused in tears, and then said to him, "I will freely forgive thee;" then he immediately found relief to his soul. God also forgave him all his sins, and his spirit, which had long been fettered, was set free, his sorrow was turned into joy, and he could praise the Lord for the great things He had done for him.

Brother Moon united with the Wesleyan Methodist Society, and, soon after he obtained a change of heart, he felt an intense desire for the conversion of his friends. His mother seems to have been the first to share in his efforts for her salvation; though she lived twenty-five miles from him, yet he went to her to tell her what the Lord had done for him, and to admonish her to seek religion, and he had good reason to believe that she soon got converted, and held fast the beginning of her confidence for twelve years, and then died happy in the Lord. Soon after he had been to see his mother, he visited his brother Robert in Cheshire, who was brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Then he began to exhort sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and he had the happiness of seeing some converted. After he had been a member for some time he was appointed to lead a class. This he felt to be an important office, and before he engaged in it, he prayed much for Divine wisdom and help. He entered on his work, and soon the class showed signs of improvement. The old members were revived and new ones were added, and so abundantly did the Lord prosper it, that in a short time the class increased from nine to fifty-two members; and, subsequently, he was successful in raising a new class, so that he had two classes under his care.

By the official brethren with whom he was united, he was deemed a suitable person for public speaking, and after having been examined on doctrinal subjects, his name appeared on the circuit's plan. As a preacher, he was useful, and had the pleasure of seeing several souls brought to the Lord, which greatly encouraged him in his work.

With the Wesleyans he remained a consistent, devoted, useful member, for about twenty-eight years.

Brother Moon, in an account drawn up by himself, states, that the first Primitive Methodist missionary that visited Burnley was entertained at his house; and when our people had established a cause at the place, he united with them, and became a leader and local preacher.

It was about 1831 that Brother Moon joined our society. At that time we had no chapel in Burnley, but soon after the Lord opened the way, so that the infant society succeeded in building a chapel in which scores of sinners have been born for glory, and our departed brother lived to see the circuit increased to eight hundred members.

When William had arrived at seventy-four years of age, it pleased the allwise Disposer of events to take away his son William, which was a heavy stroke for him, for with him he had intended to spend the evening of his life; but under the bereavement he was sustained by the power of Divine grace, and comforted with a good hope that his son had died in the Lord.

On April 7th, 1853, he sustained an irreparable loss in the death of his wife, to whom he had been united fifty-three years. Shortly before she passed away, she said, "Come, Lord Jesus;" and after pausing for a few moments, she said, "He comes," and immediately expired.

William's health was declining, and he was unable to labour in the cause of God with that vigour which he had been wont to put forth, yet his heart was in the work, and it afforded him unspeakable joy when he saw sinners made happy in the love of Jesus.

In February, 1861, he spoke for a few minutes at our Jubilee Meeting at Burnley. He was glad that he was permitted to see the Jubilee of the Connexion. It was evident to those around him, that he who had gone out and in before God's people for many years would soon be called away from among us.

Though his health had for some years been declining, yet his death was sudden, and the tidings took most of his brethren by surprise. He walked out the day before he died. His removal from this world he had long anticipated, and lived prepared for it, so that when the summons came he was ready for it. Jesus Christ was his Saviour.

William Moon was human, and doubtless had his imperfections, but these were nearly eclipsed by the virtues which Divine grace implanted in his heart, and which shone in his life. During the sixty years he made a profession of Christianity, I am not aware that he ever brought any di disgrace on the cause of God, or ever departed from the path of virtue.

As a preacher, according to the testimony of those who have frequently heard him, he was remarkably clear in his expositions of Divine truth, and generally acceptable to his audience; and his labours were also attended with a moderate share of success.

While he loved and frequently read the writings of the Revs. R. Baxter, J. Benson, and Dr. A. Clarke, the Bible was the book in which he most delighted. This he perused frequently, diligently, and prayerfully. He took his Bible into his closet, and there he read and meditated on its sacred pages. He believed he had read the New Testament through twelve times, on his knees, in his closet. Need we be surprised that the man who thus read the word of God, had clear views of its truths, having his heart deeply imbued with its spirit, and deriving great consolation therefrom.

That the reader and the writer may imitate him in all that is excellent, and finally meet him in heaven, is the earnest prayer of

JOHN JOBLING.

5. On the morning of Thursday, December 12th, 1861, at Leighton Buzzard, aged forty-eight years, MARY ANN WILLIAMS, fell asleep in Jesus. In the death of sister Williams, Aylesbury Circuit has sustained a serious loss. She was a member sixteen, and a public speaker about fourteen years. Of her course of life previous to her coming to reside in this station I have no knowledge; nor am I able to state the circumstances which led to her conversion, but she must have embraced the Gospel with a strong conviction of its truth and importance. She had a firm conviction, at the commencement of her Christian course, that she enjoyed "redemption through the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of all her sins." She then saw her way plainly to the enjoyment of all the privileges of the gospel. The character of her piety was formed by the views with which she embraced the gospel of Christ—that gospel she received "not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

To a mind so thoroughly enlightened, and so richly imbued with saving grace, poverty and affliction had lost their saddening and depressing influence. When involved in the greatest perplexities; she found at such times solace and support in obeying the divine injunction, "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."

The promises, which are exceedingly great and precious, supported her mind when every outward comfort was withdrawn. In the midst of poverty and trials which would have overwhelmed some minds, her soul was kept in perfect peace. While she gave all diligence to secure her own salvation for time and eternity, she also laboured with untiring zeal to secure the salvation of all with whom she was associated. Her public services were highly acceptable to believers, and rendered beneficial to sinners.

But she was endowed with special power in prayer. Her fervent prayers often moved large congregations.

Her removal from us was sudden and unexpected. She had gone to visit a friend at Leighton, for whose salvation she had a deep interest. On the Monday previous to her death, she was not well, but her confidence in God was strong, and her future prospects were bright. On the following Thursday, she fell asleep in Jesus. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." About 200 friends followed her mortal remains to their last resting place.

SAMUEL TURNER.

6. HENRY GRIMSDALL, of Turvell, Chinnor Circuit, exchanged mortality for life, December 20th, 1861, in the sixty-eighth year of his age. He enjoyed peace with God forty-five years, for the last twenty-five of which he was a local preacher. He was the means of introducing our people to Stokenchurch, where he was then residing, and they held Divine services in his house.

At that time persecution raged, and he suffered much. He had his windows smashed at twelve o'clock one night, but he stood with rock-like firmness. "He was mighty with God in prayer, and as a prince he prevailed." He loved to worship in the open air; and the Lord made him a blessing to many; he saw many souls saved; and at Stokenchurch we have now a good society. To God be all the glory.

Our departed brother was in the house of God the Sunday before he was attacked by that affliction which terminated in his death, fourteen days after its commencement. He was visited by Brothers D. and J. Bates, local preachers, with whom he laboured in the cause of God. They found him very happy, and while they prayed and afterwards sang "We are going home to glory," he said, "The crown is just before me," and added:

"There I shall bathe my weary soul," &c.

"Glory, glory to God!" Then he shouted, "I am going home to glory. He enquired for E. Pullin, R. Bartlet, and — Jermain, local preachers, with whom he had laboured in the vineyard of the Lord. His end was triumphant. May his sorrowing widow and friends meet him in heaven.

W. WILLIAMS.

7. My late dear husband, Mr. JAMES BARKER, of Nottingham, was born at Chesterfield, May 12th, 1793, and finished his course November 18th, 1861. He was the firstborn of Thomas and Dorothy Barker. At an early age he was brought to Nottingham, and under the care of his grandfather, with whom he was a great favourite, he received a respectable education. Unhappily, he had not the inestimable advantages of religious training, and being of a lively and cheerful disposition, he sought pleasure in the delusive path of worldly gratification. The theatre, that corrupter of youth and nursery of vice, became a favourite place of resort, and dancing with him was a favourite recreation.

But in the midst of his youthful folly, and at a most important crisis of his life, he was arrested by the hand of a gracious Providence, and led to think on his ways. With two other youths, he had gone into the country on horseback, on the Sabbath, and having indulged too freely in strong drink, on his return home he came in contact with a vehicle, and was thrown from his horse over the Trent bridge, by which he broke his thigh. This laid him aside from business for a while, during which time the Holy Spirit revealed to him the error of his way. He became thoughtful and anxious, and eventually, at a meeting held in a private house, he obtained peace with God. He was "a new creature; old things had passed away, and all things had become new." To use his own mode of expression,—“When I came out of the house, everything looked new and beautiful to me; so great was the change, that it appeared like a new world.” The portion of Scripture which seemed to be the instrument in his liberation was the following,—“O Lord, I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and now thou comfortedst me.” This passage he often quoted afterwards, and with a full heart said, that he should have cause to thank God through eternity for the accident that befel him. At the time of his conversion his parents kept a public-house, and, on his arrival at home, he faithfully warned them, and the persons who were drinking in the house, at which his mother wept bitterly, and said the Methodists had driven her James mad, but with great emotion he said he had but just come to his senses. He united with the Methodist New Connexion; afterwards removing to Carlton where that community had no society, he united with the Wesleyans, but on his return to Nottingham, he cast in his lot with our people, to whom he felt an undying attachment, and in his own peculiar way used often to say, we were a fine people. His union with the Primitive Methodists took place February 3rd, 1829. A person of his abilities and disposition was not likely to be long overlooked by the Church. Work, hard work, being the order of the day at that time, Mr. Barker soon found an appropriate sphere for the exercise of the talents with which God had entrusted him. On January 15th, 1833, he was appointed to the office of class-leader. How much he loved the members of his class, how ardently he desired their happiness, how deeply he sympathised with them, and how punctually he attended to them, and how zealously he laboured for their welfare, is known to all who had the privilege of being under his care. His class mourns his departure, and feels that it has indeed lost "a father in Israel." He sustained for many years several important offices in the Connexion. He was a trustee for Canaan Street Chapel and Schools, a member of the District Committee, superintendent of the school, secretary to the Benevolent Society, Penny Bank, &c., &c. Indeed, anything that promised to be of service to the people, and for the glory of God, could readily command his pen, his purse, his time, and his influence.

The Rev. J. Woodcock, who knew him for many years, has kindly furnished the following :—

"My dear Sister,—I deeply sympathise with you in the loss you have sustained, by the unexpected removal of your dear partner to his eternal rest; but you have many grounds of consolation. No doubt can be entertained of his safety. He could say,—‘To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain.’ Mr. B. was, I believe, a good man. The most remarkable features of his character were simplicity, honesty, gentleness, fidelity, openness, benevolence, sympathy, and a readiness to every good work. His life was a life of active service. To do good was a principle by which he was actuated in all things, and he has left behind him a memory of good deeds, and an example of holy living and of devotedness to God’s cause, which will secure for him a place in the affections of God’s people, and will exercise an influence for good on the Church to which he belonged. His piety was of a cheerful, earnest, and attractive character. It was not seen only on Sabbaths and public occasions, but it was constant, vigorous, active, and gave a pleasing tinge to his character and conduct. During the three years I spent in your circuit, I never saw anything in Mr. B. to lessen my esteem for him as a man of God, or my affection for him as a friend and brother. His genuine simplicity, his peaceable disposition, his affability and habitual cheerfulness, and his kind and courteous manners, threw a charm around his character, and endeared him to all who knew him. He was a most valuable officer in the Church. He was one of the few men who could be thoroughly depended upon. Whatever he was appointed to do, he did it. Instead of meeting one with a plausible apology for neglect of some duty assigned him, he met one with a report of the work done and the results realized. He was an earnest and indefatigable worker in the Church. He was not like those who can work only on great occasions, and when they are placed in the front ranks, and occupy a very conspicuous and commanding position. No; first or last, seen or unseen, in public or in private, Mr. B. was at his post. He was never ashamed of his religion. No matter where he was, nor in what company, if he felt the power of God, he would shout in his own peculiarly rich and mellow way, "Glory, glory, glory!" and while you looked on his open, honest face, radiant with holy animation, and saw tears of joy streaming from his eyes, you could scarcely help joining him. In the Sabbath-night prayer-meetings, his services were very valuable. Often have I seen him weep and plead with God, on behalf of some poor, penitent prodigal, until all present have been bathed in tears; and, as soon as the penitent obtained liberty, Mr. B.'s shouts of "Glory, glory, glory!" changed the feelings of all present from sorrow to joy and triumph. In the school he was in his element, and both teachers and scholars felt that his tender considerateness, his ardent affection, and willing sympathy, bound their hearts to his. His name will be long held in affectionate remembrance, and, among the present teachers and scholars of Canaan Street School, will be familiar as a 'household word.' May you, my dear sister, and I, and all who knew your lamented husband, meet him again in the kingdom above,—Amen."

The affliction which terminated the earthly existence of one of the best of husbands and most indulgent of fathers, was fever, which was but of one week's duration. Sunday, November 10th he spent, as usual, in "his loved employ," at the school, and on returning home, after the evening service, he complained of indisposition, and became rapidly worse, and never rallied afterwards. A few nights previous to his death he asked me to pray, and after I had done so he said, "I am satisfied." I said to him, "God is love," and he replied:

"I know, I feel,
Jesus weeps, and loves me still."

At another time he said, "I am not afraid," and again he broke out with those beautiful lines:

"Arise, my soul, arise,
Shake off thy guilty fears,
The bleeding Sacrifice
In my behalf appears—"

When his voice failed, and I finished the verse for him. In consequence of hoarseness, he could say but little, but at times he tried to shout, "Glory, glory!" He said, "I think I shall go home," meaning his heavenly home, and then, after breathing very hard for several hours, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus. The following account of his funeral is copied from the Nottingham Daily Express:—

"The mortal remains of Mr. James Barker, Lace-dresser, Pierre-point Street, were interred, with rather more than the usual ceremony, at the General Cemetery, yesterday afternoon. The deceased was a consistent and faithful member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion in this town for more than thirty-one years, and during the whole of that time he took an active part in the business of the Connexion. He devoted his energies with praiseworthy assiduity to the educational efforts of the denomination, but not to these alone, for he was a class-leader in the society more than twenty-eight years, and, during the same period, he officiated with much ability as superintendent of the adult school. During the whole period of his connection with Canaan Street Society he was ever ready both with his advice and pecuniary assistance to forward its interest and to promote the welfare of its members. His loss to the Connexion was felt to be great, and the members resolved to pay a last tribute to his memory by following his remains to the tomb. The funeral accordingly, was a public one, and about 150 persons, including several local preachers and class-leaders, and the scholars belonging to the Canaan Street Adult School attended it. A short service was held in Canaan Street Chapel, after which the mournful procession followed the hearse and the carriages containing the relatives of the deceased to the General Cemetery, where the funeral service was read, and an appropriate and affecting address delivered by the Rev. W. Rose. Crowds of people watched the mournful cavalcade as it moved slowly through the streets, and a large assemblage was congregated in the cemetery, to witness the obsequies of a deserving man, who worthily performed his part in life, and who carries with him the respect of those who were associated with him to the grave.'

MARY ANN BARKER.

8. ALICE BEMBRIDGE, of Brailsford, Belper Circuit, died in the Lord, December 13th, 1861, in the fifty-fifth year of her age. She was converted to God early in life, while she was in service, whither the influence of her mother's piety followed her. She was a consistent member of society nearly forty years, about thirty of which she was also a local preacher.

The genuineness of her religion was evidenced, not only by regular attendance at the means of grace, punctuality in fulfilling her appointments, and carefully abstaining from all appearance of evil, but also by her dutiful and assiduous attention to her parents in sickness and old age, and by respectably bringing up to womanhood, two daughters of a departed sister. These have both risen up to call her blessed, and to requite her kindness by unceasing attention during her long affliction.

In the early part of her sickness the enemy strongly assailed her; faith in the promises of God, however, gave her the victory, and opened heaven in a remarkable manner. In death as in life she ardently loved Zion; and with dying lips, and in the most solemn and affecting manner, desired her niece, who lived with her, to turn to God, and to continue the work of collecting for the missions, entertaining the preachers, and holding family prayer. The Lord help her to do it!

The last time she attended public worship was when the late Rev. J. Brownson preached anniversary sermons at Brailsford, in the autumn of 1860. She was then very ill, walked with two sticks, and had to be assisted by friends. The word was greatly blessed to her soul: she wept all the time of the service. Mr. B. was quite well then, but died rather suddenly ten months afterwards; and now he and she, who started in the way together, and for some time met in the same class, have doubtless met together before the throne of God and the Lamb.

Her character, of course, was not complete in every point, for she was human. In youth she was troubled with irritability of temper, which sometimes manifested itself after conversion, and in mature life. On the whole, however, she was a good woman, feared and loved God, and tried to keep His commandments. She rested on the atonement made by Christ for salvation. Her life was useful, her death calm and very happy, and — but language is inadequate to tell the rest. Let us follow her to heaven, and then we shall feel and “know what it is to be there.”

THE MORAL WORLD RENOVATED.

A SERMON, BY T. S. C.

“Afterward he brought me again unto the door of the house; and, behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house, eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar. Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate, by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side. And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters; the waters were to the ancles. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters; the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins. Afterward he measured a thousand, and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over. And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me, and caused me to return to the brink of the river. Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other. Then said he unto me, These waters issue out towards the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed. And it shall come to pass, that everything that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and everything shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall come to pass, that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi, even unto En-eglain; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many. But the miry places thereof and the marishes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt. And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed; it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.”—Ezekiel, xlvi. 1-12.

ACCORDING to Bible chronology, Ezekiel lived 595 years before Christ. The name means, “Whom God will strengthen,” or, “God will prevail.” He was the son of Buzi, a priest, and probably sustained the priestly office himself previous to the captivity. His call to the prophetic office was in the fifth year from the date of his captivity (if he was carried away with Jehoiachim by Nebuchadnezzar), and he was also contemporary with Jeremiah and Daniel. Perhaps no period of Jewish history presents three such men as these; they were remarkable for the purity of their lives, true nobility of soul, and deep sympathy with their oppressed countrymen. One, by the grace of God, kept himself unspotted amid the corruptions of the Babylonish court; another wept bitterly over Zion's desolation; and Ezekiel prophesied when a captive by the river Chebar. As he sat in the alcove of a temporary peace, his eyes were opened to prophetic visions, and assisted by Divine light, he took a survey of the future revolutions of the temple, the city, and the world. Some of his visions are very mysterious; he speaks of wheels within wheels, with living creatures joined," &c.; others are very beautiful and significant, embracing both temporal blessings vouchsafed to the Jewish people, and foreshadowing the unparalleled achievements of the ever blessed Gospel. The text partakes of the character of the latter; here we have:—

I.—THE MORAL WORLD ILLUSTRATED.

In the beautiful allegory before us, the Dead Sea shadows forth the spiritual condition of the human family, and if we were to search the physical universe, we should find no other type of human depravity so striking—so significant.

Here we have barrenness and death. In the Dead Sea we have no points of contrast, no seasons of brighter aspect. Look at it! Think of it! "It lies thirteen hundred feet below the level of the sea, wrapt in its sulphureous grave, steaming up like a huge cauldron of smouldering bitumen and nauseous brimstone." Nothing but death reigns there; that is now his undisputed empire. No fishes sport in its waters, which are dark and murky. No flowers bloom on its banks. No trees spread their broad branches there, they have all withered and passed away. The once beautiful, fruitful plain now bears unmistakeable evidence of a withering curse brought on it by the sins of an impenitent people.

Fit emblem this of the ruin which has been wrought in man's inmost being—a lifelike portraiture of his spiritual desolation. The human heart is now corrupt, in this once beautiful citadel an inveterate spoiler has been at work, the wasting has been effected to the highest degree, every tower has been dismantled, and its beautiful walls razed to the ground. Where the singing of birds was heard, now the serpent hisses. Time was when every affection and faculty of man's soul beat to the tune of dutiful submission and holy reverence, but now all are bruised or broken. The curse covers every generation with its wasting hand;—like a corrupted fountain the human heart sends forth nothing but briny, poisonous streams. Sin, like the upas-tree, impregnates the very atmosphere with the principles of death; here the roots of bitterness spread wide and strike deep in the unregenerated heart, so that it is fitly termed "a sink of iniquity," "a cage of unclean birds."

All the sorrows and pains which afflict man's being are traceable to one cause, which is sin; man loves evil and hates good. The derangement of the moral system was antecedent to that of his physical, and the former is more extensive than the latter. "When man fell from a state of holiness and happiness, he lost nothing of what constituted him a man." He still walks erect as a man, and not on all-fours as a beast, he still reasons with some degree of accuracy, calculates exactly, travels swiftly in the pathway of science, and the productions of his hands shew that he is yet invested with a good degree of intelligence and nerve. But what sort of a man is he? has he suffered any great loss? Yes, the smoke and fumes of sin darken his moral skies; the crown is gone from his brow; he has lost the brightest jewel from his heart; and he is now a miserable being; a subject of the bitterest tears of mental anguish, and exposed to the pains of eternal death. He has lost the rectitude of his moral nature, the principles of righteousness have been riven from his soul by sin; and now hostility to God, and opposition to His saints rule the unregenerated heart.

The body is subjective to the soul, and as such becomes partner and partaker in its pains and pleasures, joys and sorrows. But does the body ever act independent of the soul? We have known it the most willing of servants. The soul, or spirit, may foster evil passions, and revel in immorality unobserved by mortal eye, and without any physical operation, the intents of the heart stamp the character on deeds. The heart often meditates dishonesty before the hand reaches out to steal, and even commits murder before the feet are swift to shed blood. We only recognize deeds, the All-seeing One reads the intents of the soul.

In the present state of things the man of God may see enough of sin and death to pale his cheek and awaken his slumbering sympathies for those who are yet "bruised and mangled by the fall." But what would be his feelings if the veil were uplifted and he permitted to see the engines of evil as they play in the guilty soul! It is true we have, through Divine agency, some loving souls living around us, an oasis to relieve the wilderness waste; yet, lamps of holy lives are not so common as they ought to be, nor the fruits of righteousness so luxurious as they might have been. Notwithstanding the efforts put forth to save men, thousands strive to exclude God from their thoughts, while they throng the broad way which leadeth unto death.

Further, we have implied the inefficiency of merely human systems to change the aspect of the moral world.

The water of the Dead Sea is so intolerably bitter that no common streams can dilute it. Although the "Jordan, the Arnon, and many other streams, have been pouring into it their contributions for many years, it continues as nauseous and deadly as ever." Neither the rain from the clouds, mountain torrents, nor Jordan's flood, nor all combined, can change its character, so it is in the moral world. All purely human appliances, however skilfully used, have failed to effect a change for the better. The pagan world, even in the days of its brightest glory and highest intellectual attainments, exhibits a picture the most disgusting and horrifying; there the slave is stricken most wantonly, virtue is derided, and vice gloried in with the most shameless profanity.

A sufficient time has been given for experiments, and the improvement of human inventions. Socrates and Cicero, Plato and Seneca, stretched their appliances to the utmost tension, but they came short of accomplishing the purpose. Modern inventions we have in abundance, but we presume they are incapable of producing a moral revolution. Give men picture-galleries on which to gaze, and parks to perambulate; throw open lecture-rooms and halls of philosophy; let modern Raphaels paint with the most artistic skill; let Mozarts or Handels perform with the greatest taste; and let your Sir Isaac Newtons discourse on the laws of gravitation; and the profoundest orator pour forth his fiery streams of eloquence; this will all fail to cause a ripple on the stagnant waters of moral death.

"Science and art, education and philosophy, legislation and superstition, may pour in their accumulated contributions for ever," and they will neither sweeten the bitterness nor lessen the malignity of the moral plague. Moral evil still exists a vital and active reality. This giant still presses on the worlds of matter and of mind, and from his horrid lair shakes pestilence and death. Sin is a plague-spot on the face of beauty, a canker-worm at the root of every vigorous project. Sin is a loathsome, deep sepulchre, in the midst of the garden of life, and a wasp-sting in the lip of human joy. This is the great antagonist of the good, and the untiring opponent of Jehovah. Men may theorize about a good time, and weave the web of airy speculation,—it will be split into fragments by the breeze of time; for nothing but the living streams of the Gospel can heal these waters, none but the Angel of the Lord can move them.

II.—THE TRANSFORMING AGENT.

Its source. "Behold, waters issued out from under the threshold of the house," &c. In this beautiful poetic figure we have a reference to the redemptive scheme, and the Gospel machinery is clearly exhibited. The door or the gate is the regular outlet—the fountain head is farther back. This spring has a very high source, even the heart of Infinite love itself. For the origin of the living and life-imparting streams we must come to the inner Temple—the Holy of Holies. Before mercy could flow out to man, it must first be connected with the altar. The victim must be slain, virtually or in fact, before pardon can form a part of the Divine administrations. Let Justice be satisfied by the sacrifice of the Immaculate Lamb, and then the streams of grace can flow out at the threshold to the sons of men. The atoning sacrifice does not originate the love of God to man: the vicarious sufferings and death of Christ are the product of an infinite compassion. “God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son,” &c.

Looking behind the altar, we see the wine-press trodden. There the great mystery is explained, “how God can be just, and yet the justifier of the ungodly when they come unto Him.” “Without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins.” But whose blood will be satisfactory? Man’s blood is polluted; it would be loathsome for use on that altar of unparalleled purity. Angels cannot bleed for man; they are not of the same nature. There appeared none to help; Justice begins to unsheathe his flaming sword; Mercy weeps, and cannot give the sinner up: when lo! a voice is heard from the eternal throne, saying, “Stop the execution, save man from going down to the pit, for I will be his Redeemer.” The Son of God descended from heaven, and took upon Him the nature of man, and suffered instead of sinners. And by pouring out His own blood He hath opened the channel which comes under the threshold of the temple. “He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities,” &c.

Here is love, melting, bleeding, dying love, unparalleled and immeasurable. This is sovereign grace. Its high origin is the throne of God. The streams are pure, free from creature compounds. These waters have the King’s seal—the Royal patent. “And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb.” (Rev. xxii. 1).

Further, its undiminished existence. “The waters were to the ankles; and again he measured a thousand [cubits], and brought me through the waters, and the waters were to the knees,” &c.

This was no fitful spring bubbling forth for a while, and then disappearing again. It was no artificial transient thing, to tantalize mankind; neither does its course vary. The streams burst forth, and roll on in winter and summer. The earth displays the beds of what were once mighty rivers, now dry and parched; not so with the streams of living waters—they cannot be diverted from the proper course. According to Divine purposes, the stream of mercy is ever more abundant. From Adam to Noah it was comparatively a rill; from the deluge to Moses it grew deeper; and it increased by every prophecy and promise until the Saviour came. Here we have the gradual development of the soul-saving scheme; a temporary system was formed, and it served for a while, and then it was substituted by another more spiritual. Each succeeding leaf in the history of redemption brought into view more glorious characters, until the Master folded up the typical dispensation, and unfolded the gospel plan, in all its spirituality and soul-saving power.

And now we are blessed with the Gospel light, and with its transforming energy. As ages roll on it continues the same, nothing can put out its fire, weaken its power, or dilute its sweetness. It is the power of God unto the salvation of all those who believe. This luminary shines forth in its meridian splendour; this stream rolls forth in its majesty.

“Grace is flowing like a river,
Millions there have been supplied,
Yet it flows as fresh as ever
From the Saviour’s wounded side.”

III.—THE IMPORTANT CHANGE PREDICTED.

“And it shall come to pass that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi,” &c.

This implies a successful Gospel. When the Saviour called His first ambassadors, He gave them a token of success—the miraculous take of fishes was typical of the success they should have when they became fishers of men. Peter, mighty in the Spirit, preached on the Day of Pentecost, and three thousand were pierced by the Word. Wherever the apostles went the Word of the Lord was powerful, sinners were smitten by an unseen hand, and may it not be so again? Yes, the lover of Zion may rest on the Word of the Lord; His arm is not shortened that it cannot save. The time will come when the faithful prophet shall not have to say, “Who hath believed our report?” &c., for he shall see the work of the Lord prosper in his hands. The seed which the sorrowing sower scatters shall fall into good ground; he shall lift up his head with joy, and return loaded with sheaves.

The obstacles which have retarded the universal spread of the Gospel are falling before the sword of the Spirit, and the Conqueror, girt with matchless power, has mounted His chariot, to sway the nations by His righteous sceptre. There is a heaving among the people. To check the incredulity of the Church, the Lord has recently saved thousands from the four quarters of the earth, and that by feeble instrumentalities, as a proof that when the ambassadors have run to and fro, and planted the standard of the cross, there shall be a general outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and “the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and of His Christ.” The husbandman’s toils shall be followed by the ingathering of an abundant harvest of redeemed spirits. The labourer in the vineyard may be painfully exercised when looking at the little fruit which appears. He must labour in faith, and wait patiently. The Lord ruleth in the heavens, and notwithstanding the combination of His enemies, the horrid throne on which sits the evil one shall fall, and the empire of Satan shall be abolished. The arm of Omnipotence shall shake the nations, and their countless millions shall bow to the Prince of Peace. The thick veil of ignorance shall be removed from human hearts, and idolatry, with all its numerous temples, gorgeous idols, and crafty priests, shall be abolished for ever. Saint-worship and image-worship, or whatever interferes with the reign of Christ in the heart, shall be done away, and "the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth, as the waters cover the sea."

Further, We have an intimation of the fruitfulness of the Church. The purposes of Jehovah are ripening fast, "unfolding every hour." He will uproot the curse, and save His people. Perhaps the brightest visions of the Millennium will be more than realized in the spiritual reign of the Prince of Peace. The Lord God will dwell among His people, and favour Zion. The foaming waves of persecution will be hushed, sectarian jealousies and antipathies, which afflict the Church, shall be forgotten, and a brighter day shall dawn on our world. Instructed by Jesus, and filled with His Spirit, men will learn to be brothers again, and in their attention to the service of God they will have neither time nor inclination to weigh the merit of names. Then bigotry and intolerance will fall from their icy thrones. Jew and Gentile will drink together of the waters of life. The temple will be filled daily with spiritual worshippers; the wilderness will become a fruitful field; and the sandy desert will bloom as the garden of the Lord. In those days the lamps of holy lives will blaze forth from every dwelling, and we shall not have to say to our neighbour, "Know ye the Lord," for all shall know Him. Then the Bride, the Lamb's wife, shall put on her beautiful garments, and the Bridegroom shall come to take her to His side. The marriage-feast shall be filled with guests in white robes, and blessed shall those persons be who shall have their lamps trimmed, and oil in their vessels, when the Bridegroom cometh. They shall enter, and the door will be shut."

"WORDS TO THE WINNERS OF SOULS."

CHIEFLY EXTRACTS, BY S. B.

We take for granted, that the object of the Christian ministry is to convert sinners, and to edify the church of Christ. No faithful mi-	nister can possibly rest short of this. Applause, fame, popularity, honour, and wealth, are all vain, and if souls are not won, and saints ma-

tured, our ministry is vain too. The question, therefore, which each of us has to answer to his own conscience is, "Has it been the end of my ministry, has it been the desire of my heart, to save the lost, and guide the saved? Is this my aim in every sermon I preach, in every visit I pay? Is it for this I toil, and fast, and weep? Is it for this I spend and am spent, counting it next to my own salvation, my chiefest joy, to be the instrument of saving others? Is it for this I exist, and to accomplish it, would I gladly die? Have I seen the pleasure of the Lord prospering in my hand? Have I seen souls converted under my ministry? Have God's people found refreshment from my lips, and gone on their way rejoicing? Or have I seen no fruit of my labour, and yet am I content to remain unblest? Am I satisfied to preach, and yet not know of one saving impression, one soul saved? Can I go contentedly through the routine of ministerial labour, and never think of asking how God is prospering the work of my hands, and the words of my lips?

If a deathless soul is worth anything it is worth everything; and if its salvation calls for any measure of zeal and warmth, it will justify the utmost degree of these, when used with prudence. It was said of Baxter, "when he spake of weighty soul concerns, you might find his very spirit drenched therein." No wonder that he was blessed with such amazing success. Men felt that in listening to him they were in contact with one who was dealing with realities, and these of infinite moment. How many souls have been left untouched, and remained cold, and hard hearted for want of earnestness, solemnity, and love in the preacher, even when the words were precious and true.

As nothing short of positive success can satisfy the soul-loving minister, his feeling harmonizes with that of the Apostle to the Gentiles, when he said, "My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you." And it is this feeling which makes him earnest, and which, by the blessing of God, makes him successful. The resolution that by the grace of God, he will not rest without success, will insure it. It is the man who has made up his mind to confront the difficulties, has counted the cost, and who, fixing his eye on the prize, has determined to fight his way to it. Such a man will conquer. The Spirit of God dwells in him, and from his heart and lips there goes an unction which overwhelms many, and which leads each to cry, "What must I do to be saved?"

But now comes the question—How can I become such a man? Bishop Hall said, "If my heart be early seasoned with his (God's) presence, it will savour of him all day after." Christ rose early, aye, before day, and went into a solitary place to pray, so we must keep up close communion with God. Study to be like him in all things, and keep a clear conscience through the blood of the Lamb. Let us seek communion with God, as manifested in a youth of about twenty. James Janeway thus writes of his brother John,—"I once hid myself that I might take the more exact notice of the intercourse that I judged was kept up between him and God. But O what a spectacle did I see? Surely a man walking with God, conversing freely with his Maker, and maintaining a holy familiarity with the great Jehovah. Methought I saw one talking with God. Methought I saw a spiritual merchant in a heavenly exchange, driving a rich trade for the trea-

tures of another world. O what a glorious sight it was! Methinks I see him still. O with what a lovely countenance did he walk up and down—his lips going, his body oft reaching up, as if he would have taken his flight to heaven. His looks, smiles, and every motion, spake him to be upon the very confines of glory. O had one but known what he was then feeding on! Surely he had meat to eat which the world knew not of." This is life indeed. Close and continuous communion with God will make us strong in the pulpit, and in our pastoral visits, &c. We shall prove ourselves to be men of power and unction.

Men who thus live in God take happiness with them wherever they go. They water the world's wilderness as they move along through it to their heavenly home.

Of such individuals it may be said, their lives are blessed, the examples they furnish are blessed; their ministry is blessed; their intercourse is blessed; their words are blessed; and the results are, sinners are converted, and souls, precious souls are saved from hell.

Strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, we may go forth bearing precious seed, and sow it all around, and God will assuredly give the increase. Let the love of Christ be our constant theme. Let the blessed gospel, with all its sweetness and fulness, be urged on the attention and the hearts of perishing sinners. Nothing else will meet their case. All things beside are quackery, this is a divine specific. This can soothe the feverish soul, quiet the throbbing heart, and heal the broken spirit. The Gospel reveals Christ, and it is Christ poor sinners need. Give them Christ, lead them to his peace-speaking blood. Tell of his dying love, and publish his power to save. Let us assure them that—

"Thousands His mercy have implored,
And none have been denied;
And if they venture on His blood,
They shall be justified."

Doing this we shall do good, for some will listen, believe, and be saved through the blood of the Lamb. May the Holy Spirit sanctify these remarks to the soul of every reader. Amen and amen.

[Dear Brethren,—Carefully read this article, urge again and again its interrogations on your own hearts; especially attend to the subject of personal success in soul saving. If you do not succeed in this work humble yourselves before God, implore with increased frequency, with increased anxiety and ardour urge your prayers for more powerful manifestations of the Holy Spirit. Preach the Gospel faithfully, preach it in the spirit of Him whose servants you profess to be, and look for and expect success. Some people say, "Do your duty, and leave the result with the Lord." We say, do your duty, and then plead with the Most High for his blessing on the work of your hand. If you do not succeed in leading sinners to Christ, and in administering to the edification of saints, ought you not to make a prayerful and searching inquiry into the nature and circumstances of your call to the ministry, and if any of you do not find yourselves in possession of divine credentials, would it not be better for such persons to dig for their living, rather than remain in the ministry for "a morsel of bread?"

Our fervent prayer is that you may be much more efficient ministers of the New Testament, than we, who are your seniors, have ever been.

Let your one pursuit, your constant aim be, the salvation of souls. This must be your centre idea, and whatever your abilities, natural or acquired may be, make them all subserve this great purpose, and cultivate them only as they may be sanctified to this end. If you thus live and labour in your high vocation, you will certainly witness the happy results of your efforts to bless mankind.

Having given yourselves fully to God, and his cause, we say to each of you, in the words of the Saviour, "Be thou faithful unto death," and then the Redeemer of the world himself will place on your immortal brows a diadem of life, which shall eternally testify to God's saving grace, and to your Christian fidelity.

While amidst the numberless myriads of redeemed souls, and surrounded by the shining ranks of spotless angels, you will be exalted to the right hand of Him that sitteth upon the throne, where you will be inconceivably honoured and unspeakably happy, for in Jehovah's presence is fulness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures for evermore. "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."—Ed.]

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

"IS THERE NOT A CAUSE?"

IMPETUOSITY is a striking feature in the character of some people. They rush to conclusions before they have listened to reasons; they pronounce a verdict without hearing the trial. They do not put in practice the command to "judge nothing before the time." They do not exemplify that lovely feature of the Christian character, "Charity hopeth all things." Such persons are occasionally made to blush for their own impatient judgment of others, and thus learn for the future to wait, and more meekly to enquire, "Is there not a cause?" The following true incident may serve as an illustration:—

A few years ago I was visiting in the family of a well-known clergyman, who certainly practised the apostolic injunction to "use hospitality without grudging." He had always a warm welcome for his friends, whether they came as invited or unexpected guests, and he was also "not forgetful to entertain strangers."

One fine summer's morning my friend was summoned from his study to greet an old parishioner, who, with his wife, had just arrived from a distant part of the country, to visit some relatives in the great metropolis. Their visit was a pleasant surprise. They had been for many years members of my friend's congregation in a remote town, and were warmly attached to him. They therefore lost no time, after their arrival in London, in calling on their old pastor. He pressed them to remain and spend the day with his family. They had, however, some previous engagements, which prevented their doing so, but they promised to come the following week to an early dinner, and remain all night at his house. The day and hour being fixed, they took an affectionate farewell, full of the pleasing anticipation of a more lengthened opportunity for renewing their social intercourse.

The appointed day arrived, and everything had been prepared with kind and thoughtful consideration for the comfort of these old and valued friends. The clock had struck two, the hour fixed on for dinner; everything was ready; but the expected guests did not arrive.

"Really, mamma," exclaimed a bright, lively girl of thirteen, "I wonder Mr. and Mrs. F—— do not come; papa always says that when people have made an appointment they ought to keep it."

"I'm sure it is a great shame to keep us all this time waiting for our dinner," said little James.

"Hush, hush! my dear children," said their mother, "you must learn to exercise a little more patience. Besides, it is wanting in politeness and respect to your parents' friends to make such remarks. You have only waited half an hour. I shall wait an hour longer, and then we will have dinner. You may wind these skeins of knitting-cotton for me, and that will help to make the time pass more pleasantly.

Notwithstanding this gentle reproof to her children, Mrs. R—— at length began to feel her own patience tried. She remarked to her husband that it certainly was very strange that Mr. and Mrs. F—— did not arrive. "I think," she said, "that they ought at least to have sent a note to explain the cause of their not keeping their engagement; they must know that we should wait dinner for them."

"Certainly, my dear, it does appear strange; but, no doubt, it will be satisfactorily explained. We will now take our dinner; very likely we shall receive a note by this evening's post to account for our disappointment. In the meantime, we may rest assured that it has not been occasioned through any carelessness on our friends' part, but that something very urgent and unexpected must have detained them."

"It is just like you to say so; you always try to find some good excuse for absent friends, when any one attempts to blame them. I wish I could learn to be equally generous in my judgment of others, and equally patient under little disappointments. Why is it that one is often so much more inclined to be ruffled and annoyed by little vexations and disappointments than by great ones?"

"I think it is because we attempt to bear them ourselves. Our great troubles we feel we cannot bear, and therefore we take them at once to Him who so graciously and so lovingly invites us to 'cast our burden upon the Lord;' and we can both testify how faithful He is to His promise that 'He will sustain us.' We ought, however, to bear in mind that His gentle ear is attentive to every cry of His dear children. If, indeed, 'He hears the young ravens when they cry,' how much more will the least complaint of His own people meet with His sympathy? It is His own command,—'In everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God.' We shall never find any other resting-place, either under our little or great trials."

Many other profitable remarks were made by this servant of God, which made the evening pass away most pleasantly and happily. No letter, however, arrived, and we retired to rest somewhat anxiously, wondering what the cause could be.

While seated at the breakfast-table in the morning, the servant handed a number of letters to her master. Among them was one with a deep black border, directed by a stranger's hand. This letter Mr. R—— instantly opened, with an anxious expression of countenance. Alas! it did indeed convey sad tidings of their expected guests. It was written by their youngest son, who thus briefly stated the cause of his parents' absence on the preceding day.

Mr. and Mrs. F. were staying at the house of a married daughter, whose only child, a lovely boy, of eighteen months old, was very ill. Although under the care of a nurse whom the mother regarded as worthy of confidence, yet the kind-hearted grandmother could not sleep on account of her anxiety about this dear child. At two o'clock in the morning she quietly stole out of bed, and crept upstairs to the nursery, so gently that no one in the house was awake by it. Her object was to satisfy her own mind as to the care bestowed by the nurse upon the poor little patient, and also to ascertain if there were any amendment in his symptoms.

It appears, she had quietly opened the nursery-door, and entered the room, going towards the cot, which stood close beside the nurse's bed. The nurse was fast asleep. Mrs. F——, it is supposed, had bent over the cot, to ascertain whether the infant slept. What, then, must have been the shock to her loving heart to discover that the dear babe was dead? The effect was such that she instantly fell to the floor and expired. The nurse started up, and her loud scream of terror brought others speedily to the spot.

What a scene presented itself! There stood the mistress of the house, trembling violently with agitation, though as yet unconscious of the cause. A few moments, however, sufficed to shew her that by one stroke she was left both motherless and childless. It was, indeed, a solemn, awful thing to have the stillness of her midnight slumbers disturbed in such a way as this. O death, thou art indeed the king of terrors! How relentless is thy iron grasp, how unsparing thy demand! Art thou so greedy of thy prey that thou couldst spare neither the aged mother nor the lovely babe? Yet thou hast done thy worst, and what hast thou accomplished? Thou hast but sent, we trust, that aged Christian and that little one in the same chariot of glory to their heavenly Father's mansions. Though stern in thine aspect thou wast but the messenger to call them to their everlasting home.

"They looked—she was dead!

Her spirit had fled.

The soul undrest,

From her mortal vest,

Had stepped in her car of heavenly fire,

And proved how bright

Were the realms of light,

Bursting at once upon the sight!"

When Mr. R—— had finished reading the letter, there was a long deep pause. No one seemed disposed to speak; the tears rolled down Mrs. R——'s face; she evidently felt some degree of self-reproach at the recollection of having supposed, even for one moment, that any blame attached to her friends. This melancholy occurrence had taken place the very night previous to the intended visit, so that, at the very time when they were looking out for their guests, one of those guests had bid farewell to earth, and taken up her abode in the realms of everlasting glory.

As for myself, I learned a lesson which I hope will never be forgotten. I shall certainly endeavour to imitate the example of my esteemed friend Mr. R——, and when disappointed by others, quietly wait before I condemn them, and enquire, "Is there not a cause?"

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

THE BEST MEANS OF RETAINING THE ELDER SCHOLARS IN OUR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT THE REQUEST AND BEFORE THE LIVERPOOL AND BIRKENHEAD SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

BY THE REV. R. M. WILLCOX.

THE Sunday-school institution is, as was said of a certain league, "a great fact;" and it is as good as it is great; and withal comely and useful; not a foul and hideous appendage like that so called "domestic institution" of another and transatlantic country,—slavery; which Wesley tersely and sternly described as "the execrable sum of all human villanies." Very far and honourably away from that is this institution. It is one of the fairest and finest signs of healthy progress and true development, in our ecclesiastical polity and arrangements; and a most pleasing page in the general history of the church of Christ. For no one would think of writing a continuation to Mosheim, or Milner and Haweis, without introducing some details as to the rise and spread of the Sunday-school system, as one great branch of the operations of the church.

"The immense advantage of early training is indisputable. For Character groweth day by day, and all things aid it in unfolding;
And the bent unto good or evil may be given in the hours of infancy.
Scratch the green rind of a sapling, or wantonly twist it in the soil,
The scarred and crooked oak will tell of thee for centuries to come:
Even so may'st thou guide the mind to good, or lead it to the marrings of evil.
For disposition is builded up by the fashioning of first impressions;
Wherefore, though the voice of instruction waiteth for the ear of reason.
Yet with his mother's milk the young child drinketh education."

And, further, it is now a recognised principle that Sunday-schools should be carried on in avowed connection with the church. It is a part and parcel of the efforts of godly men to spread religion. It has been well observed in a volume by the Rev. Mr. Stacey, on "the Church and the Age,"—a writer who tells us in the preface to his valuable essay, "he had the singular fortune both to succeed and to fail;" which may be explained thus: the adjudicators pronounced his essay the best, and therefore entitled to the prize; but then he had spun it out beyond the limited number of pages, and therefore, "in point of equity," it was held he could not be entitled to the sum promised. A warning this to lengthy brethren. May I be admonished lest I fail this evening, even though I succeed:—

But for the quotation proposed and promised:—"The Sabbath-school is not a sphere provided immediately by nature; nor is it an original institution of Christianity. It is, however, a very natural, as also a very beneficent, outgrowth of its spirit. It is, indeed, one of its mightiest outgrowths, whether the actual dimensions be considered, or the practical effects. No institution ever rose into such popular favour; and none, of merely human origin, ever produced so great an impression. We tread upon its roots everywhere; and like the vine brought out of Egypt, the hills are covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof are as the goodly cedars. Its influence may be imagined, or rather cannot be imagined, from the fact that no small proportion of the members of the churches of this country, and of America, have been taken from the Sabbath-school; and that an immensely larger proportion of the inhabitants of both countries have been taught therein. Its possibilities for the future may be conjectured, or rather all conjecture must fall short of the reality, from the circumstance that the Sabbath-schools of England and Wales alone contain considerably more than two millions of children; and that a large number of these, with many that precede and follow them in the same institution, will form the population of this land in the next generation, and will become the fathers and mothers of the generation succeeding. The facts are almost startling; and one hardly knows whether, in the contemplation of them, most to rejoice or to tremble. Rejoice we must, when we consider the facts alone; but tremble we ought, when we remember the kind and extent of service they devolve upon the church. Rejoice we may well, when we think of them, as marking so broadly the difference, in all that forms the crown and pride of a nation, between heathen and Christian lands; but tremble we should, when we connect with this thought the tremendous responsibility which the difference inevitably creates. But whether joy or fear predominate, the same fact must be kept vividly before the eye,—that to the churches of this kingdom the religious well-being of the next generation is, to a large degree, committed." (pp. 184—5.)

Hence it becomes a serious and large question, how can the legitimate results of Sunday-schools be secured; how are the fruits cultured to full maturity to be gathered and garnered; or how can certain things which diminish the religious effect be obviated? among the rest, the premature removal from the Sunday-school; the removal from it when its wise instructions and holy influences might be hoped to tell most powerfully and favourably. No new thing forms the subject of my theme. All thoughtful persons connected with Sunday-schools have had more or less the question pressed, sometimes by painful and mournful facts on their attention. I shall be happy if I can suggest only one idea, which may prove of practical and permanent utility, in securing so desirable a result as the retention of the elder scholars in our Sunday-schools. For it is one of the notorious and lamented facts in our Sunday-school annals, that just when it is so desirable to retain the scholars rising from juvenility into early manhood or womanhood, that at that very important period when the heart is susceptible of those formative influences which will sway disastrously or beneficially the long life-course, that then numbers are withdrawn: that when the preparatory and more secular part of the educational work is done, that they depart from the teachings and influences it is so important to prolong.

It may not be easy to account for the prevalent idea that the Sunday-school is only for children; but it is about as common a notion as that a person's education ceases when he leaves school. Whereas, if he stops short with the amount of knowledge acquired up to that time, he certainly will make no great figure in learning and literature. The mistake in both cases is somewhat similar, mistaking the means for the end. In both cases the parties are qualified for progress; not that they have reached perfection and have no more to learn. As the wide fields of knowledge are open for their free range, so they must walk forth, and pluck the ever-springing flowers and fruits, amid the glowing and rejoining sunshine; or else they will pine away, and the light that is in them will become darkness, and then how great will be that darkness!

MISCELLANIES.

1. GRASPING THE PROMISES: OR, THE TWO PRAYING WILLYS.

For some weeks I heard no more of Reynolds. At length, one afternoon, a soldier came up to me in the hospital, and, saluting me, asked if I had been there in September. "Yes."—"Then you must be the lady I want;" mentioning my name. Answering him in the affirmative, he begged pardon for his boldness, but said he had been entrusted with the last message of a man named Reynolds.

"The last message! why, is he dead?"—"Yes, ma'am."

With a faithless shudder, fearing the answer, I asked, "What kind of death did he die?"—"The most blessed I ever saw."

"Thank God! will you tell me all you know about him?" "With pleasure ma'am, if it's not taking up too much of your time." He then gave me the following particulars, which I have put together in a connected form, with a strict regard to accuracy.

After leaving here, Reynolds followed his own ways. On arriving at Cawnpore, he had immediately to join General Havelock's advancing column to Lucknow. At the end of the first day's march, just as the men were settling round their fires to cook their supper, a young soldier called out, "Come, comrades, I've got some news to read to you; will you come and sit down here?"

"What kind of news?" said Reynolds.—"Come, and you shall hear," was the reply.

"Well," said Reynolds, "we don't often get a sight of a paper; it's sure to be better than nothing." And so he and a few others sat round the little fire of Walter and Willy, two young soldiers, between whom there existed a deep and brotherly friendship.*

Taking from his breast a slip of paper, Walter read some texts from 2 Corinthians, chap. v., and the hymn beginning, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds." As he was reading Reynolds said to his next neighbour, "I say, I didn't come for a sermon: pretty old news this!"

"Hush," said the other, angrily, "hold your tongue, can't you? No more did I expect it; but it can't do us no harm."

Again Reynolds said, "Well, I don't want any more; it seems as if, wherever I go, I'm to hear of such things. I'm tired to death of such croaking. It's not the way to put one in spirits for such dying work as we've got before us."

"Well, go away, can't you? and don't stop us, who want it, from hearing." But some new, strangely powerful thoughts bound Reynolds to the spot, where he sulkily sat with folded arms, whilst the two lads simply explained the way of salvation by Jesus, and prayed. All night long Reynolds dreamed of judgment, and as he rose in the morning from a disturbed sleep, he resolved to himself, "Well, I'll go and hear that paper again to-night. I'll go after dark, else they'll say I'm growing chicken-hearted: but somehow those two boys' speaking and praying I can't forget, it reminds me of my own Willy, and his prayers for his father. But they'll never be answered. I only want to listen." That evening, as the field was covered with the sleeping forms of England's noble-hearted soldiers, Reynolds walked round to the two young comrades' resting-place. Their fire was almost out. Touching Walter on the shoulder, he said "I want you just to read me the words you read last night. But you can't see, can you?"

"O, that's no matter, comrade," said both, jumping up, "we know it off by heart. Sit down and welcome." After repeating it, "Now will you pray with us?" said they. — "No, I'll never pray."

"Then we will pray for you;" and together, by turns they besought God to turn his heart to Himself. When they rose from their knees, Willy saw a tear on Reynolds's cheek. Taking him by the hand, he tried by every argument he could think of to win him to Jesus. At last Walter said, "We must sleep now, or we shan't be fit for to-morrow's work; and it mustn't be said Christian soldiers do not fight as well as others." So they all three lay down together. But Willy could not sleep. Only a short time had elapsed since he had been first awakened from his sleep in sin, and so he could feel for one still under its power. He rose. "I can't sleep, Reynolds. What, oh what, if you should be killed to-morrow? Have you never been taught about Jesus?" Gradually he drew from the recumbent soldier the history above related. The mention of the prayers of little Willy drew tears from the eyes of this devoted young soldier.

"Reynolds, those prayers must be heard. You must come with me to Jesus. Do get up and kneel, and we'll pray you may be made disposed to love him. Why shouldn't the love of Christ constrain us all alike?"—"I don't want to be a Methodist; if I'm content, I don't see why you should worry the very life of me."

For a while they talked thus together, Willy sitting beside Reynolds. Presently Willy said, "I mustn't let your precious time go away so; I must pray. If you won't kneel with me, why I'll pray alone." And so he did. Rising, he asked Reynolds if now he wouldn't come with him.—"No, I didn't listen to my own child's words, so it isn't likely I'll heed you."

"Then I must pray alone."

"What! not again? You'll be worn out all to no purpose."—"You're wrong as to the last thing, it will be grand to see you converted."

"But that you never will."—

"Yes, but I shall."

"You speak too boldly; I tell you you'll be disappointed."

"No, but I can't be. This is the confidence I have in him, that because I ask according to his will for a poor sinner's soul, I shall be heard, and the thing I want given. Jesus said, 'Ask, and it shall be given you.' I tell you, Reynolds, I won't leave off praying to-night till your heart is turned."

"Well, then, you'll pray till morning, and find me all the same then."—"No, I'm sure I need not pray so long; but if I do, I'm sure you'll be brought round some day. You will have a soft heart soon." And again Willy knelt down, and poured out with intense longing his prayer for Reynolds.

Before morning light appeared, Willy felt the hand of the old soldier on his shoulder, who, in a choking voice said, "Stop, stop, don't pray any more for me. Tell me what words to pray. Oh, I want to pray, but I can't. You must teach me; give me words." And humbly did he repeat after the lad simple petitions for mercy.

When marching time came, he pleaded to be allowed another such night. "Yes, if we are all spared to see it."

At night, after the usual reading, Reynolds implored Willy to pray again with him. Walter said Willy was not fit for night-work, nor he either, for the journey had nearly exhausted them.

"Oh, but I am a miserable sinner; I cannot sleep; I cannot pray as I need; oh, do pray, do! if I die, what will become of me?"—"Well," said Walter, "we'll take it by turns to pray with you." And thus they spent what proved to be their last night together. At first the agony of Reynolds's mind mocked all attempts to comfort him; and Willy felt it was right to plead that this sorrow might deepen and not pass away. He feared to heal the wound too soon; and therefore strove to set vividly before Reynolds's mind all the travail of soul Jesus endured for sinners, contrasting his love with man's ungrateful unconcern for his own salvation. But as the cross was held up to his view, faith was given Reynolds to look up and believe all his sins had been nailed there.

This night of prayer was a blessed season to each of these men; and when, just before marching, they united in one last pouring forth of their souls before their Master, they felt strengthened for whatever cross the day might bring. They parted in sure hope that they should meet in glory. "Not again on earth," was Walter's impression, something whispered in his heart that he was almost home. But Willy could not believe a trial so fearful could be near, as parting with his only earthly friend.

That day, two of the three fell in the fierce conflicts in which they were engaged. Reynolds was borne to a hospital tent, where he lingered in much suffering about forty-eight hours. As he looked back on the past, he could hardly believe that he was going to his Willy's Saviour. Bitterly did he regret having left the little Bible at Cawnpore, with his other things. He was enabled patiently to bear his pain, and told those about him that it gave him real joy to suffer; for patience and thankfulness were all the proofs he could leave to his comrades that his conversion was sincere. On the second day, to his glad surprise, Willy walked in; but, oh, so unlike his former self—ghastly white, his eyes swelled and red with weeping.

"Why, Willy, what's come over you?" said Reynolds, frightened at the intensity of sorrow he beheld. "I only heard this morning you were dying," said Willy.

"Where's Walter?" Kneeling by the charpoy, Willy whispered, "Gone home to Jesus. The love of Christ has taken him safe thither." Then bursting into a violent flood of tears, he said he was heart broken, he should soon follow.

"Nay, then," said Reynolds, "it ill becomes me to speak a word to you; but yet it seems to me as if you did wrong to grieve so hard. Walter's safe home. You wouldn't choose pain rather than glory for him? You will come soon. But there are many souls to be sought out. Won't you be glad to work again? Just think how when I get to glory I'll tell Jesus all the pains you took for me, and won't it add to your joy to see me there? Now go and speak and pray the same with others.

"I'll stay beside you till you go," said Willy.

"Yes, do, and tell me the hymn again. I know the texts. And, Willy, pray for me, and thank the Lord for turning such a stony heart." Presently he said, "Willy, if you get back to — again, will you give the lady a message for me?"—"Oh, no, I can't indeed. My brother gave me one for her, and if I get back, I'll try to give it right. But my memory seems all going. Indeed, I couldn't remember any other message than his."

"I happened at the time," said the soldier who told me these particulars, "to be on guard over the wounded, and offered to bring down any message, if my life were spared. So he asked me to tell you all this about him, because he knew you would keep on praying, as you had promised his boy. And he thought it would cheer you to hear of such a change in him; and he hoped you would hold on praying hard all your life, 'because,' he said, if a heart so set up in wickedness as mine has been brought down low, she need never feel so anxious about others. None could be harder, few so hard. She need only pray, and of course, as the Lord's mind is of the same wish, she must always get her answer.' He died that night, in calm assurance that all his sins had been 'wiped out' of the book before God. And so, ma'am, I've given his message, and I hope it has not kept you too long."

The reader may believe that I earnestly assured him that I was not wearied by his tale, and gratefully thanking him for all the trouble he had taken, proposed we should read a little of God's word together. We enjoyed a few minutes' converse on those truths and that Saviour so dear to each. May we have grace to join those gone before to glory! Perhaps while I write, the pious narrator of Reynolds's conversion and death is already there.

Dear believing readers, is there not here a lesson and a precious encouragement for you? You are daily approaching a treasury of grace, whose contents are boundless, because the Lord of that treasury is Himself a God of infinite mercy. Oh, why is it that you draw so little out of its priceless stores? Why is it that the "little flock" is not more subject to the influence of the Divine Spirit, so little constrained by redeeming love? Why is it that it numbers so few among the multitudes of earth? Is it not in part that we fail to lay hold of the promises with the strong hand of faith? We ask little, and therefore get comparatively little.

Jesus, our Master, is even now pleading for us. Shall not we, then, in whose hearts He has planted His love, be workers together with Him in interceding for those still without? for even hereunto were we called to be a "royal priesthood."

Dear friends, our Redeemer, according to his promise, will come quickly. If our hearts beat high with rejoicing expectation of soon seeing His face, if the hope of His appearing is all our comfort, the chief subject of our thoughts, does not one awful remembrance damp even the joy of our prospects? Do not our thoughts sometimes rest on those to whom it will be the day of final doom? To those who realize the blessed safety of being hid in the cleft of the Rock of Ages, such doom seems too heart-rending to dwell on. And, indeed, it is vain to weep over those that are lost, who have died without hope. Yet, let them sometimes be remembered, to inflame our zeal, spur our flagging efforts, our selfish resting in our own deliverance from the bondage of Satan. There are many that should engage our thoughts and awaken our compassion; many wanderers in life's highway; many that are weak, who need a helping hand; many sorrowing, weary pilgrims to whom we might bring comfort. Shall we not follow the footsteps of our Master, and sacrifice self for these? Let us be earnest for others, making their cases as our own. Let us bind them to our hearts, and not rest till, as Willy said, they are "constrained" by the love of Christ; for he has said, "According to your faith be it unto you."

One word to those who as yet know not the Saviour. In your present state those solemn words of warning, addressed to Belshazzar, are applicable to you: "Thou art weighed in the balances and art found wanting." May the Spirit of God convince you of the sinfulness and danger of your condition; and may that conviction lead you earnestly and without delay to seek Jesus! And oh! that you may find the same tender mercy which was revealed to those whose brief and simple histories you have read! May the Saviour of the two praying Willys be your Saviour, for ever, Amen.

2. THE VICTORIAN EXPLORING EXEDITION.

A FEW days after Mr. Wills left, some natives came down to the creek to fish at some waterholes near our camp. They were civil to us at first, and offered us some fish; on the second day they came again to fish, and Mr. Burke took down two bags, which they filled for him; on the third they gave us one bag of fish, and afterwards all came to our camp. We used to keep our ammunition and other articles in one gunyah, and all three of us lived together in another. One of the natives took an oilcloth out of this gunyah, and Mr. Burke seeing him run away with it, followed him with his revolver, and fired over his head, and upon this the native dropped the oilcloth. While he was away the other blacks invited me away to a waterhole to eat fish; but I declined to do so, as Mr. Burke was away, and a number of natives were about who would have taken all our things. When I refused one took his boomerang and laid it over my shoulder, and then told me by signs that if I called out for Mr. Burke, as I was doing, that he would strike me.

Upon this I got them all in front of the gunyah and fired a revolver over their heads, but they did not seem at all afraid, until I got out the gun, when they all ran away. Mr. Burke, hearing the report, came back, and we saw no more of them until late that night, when they came with some cooked fish and called out "white fellow." Mr. Burke then went out with his revolver, and found a whole tribe coming down, all painted, and with fish in small nets carried by two men. Mr. Burke went to meet them, and they wished to surround him, but he knocked as many of the nets of fish out of their hands as he could, and shouted out to me to fire. I did so, and they ran off. We collected five small nets of cooked fish. The reason he would not accept the fish from them was, that he was afraid of being too friendly lest they should be always at our camp. We then lived on fish until Mr. Wills returned. He told us that he had met the natives soon after leaving us, and that they were very kind to him, and had given him plenty to eat both on going up and returning. He seemed to consider that he should have very little difficulty in living with them, and as our camp was close to theirs he returned to them the same day and found them very hospitable and friendly, keeping him with them two days. They then made signs to him to be off. He came to us and narrated what had happened, but went back to them the following day, when they gave him his breakfast, but made signs to him to go away. He pretended not to understand them, and would not go, upon which they made signs that they were going up the creek, and that he had better go down. They packed up and left the camp, giving Mr. Wills a little nardoo to bring to us.

In his absence, while Mr. Burke was cooking some fish, during a strong wind, the flames caught the gunyah, and burned so rapidly that we were unable, not only to put it out, but to save any of our things. excepting one revolver and a gun, Mr. Wills being returned, it was decided to go up the creek, and live with the natives, if possible, as Mr. Wills thought we should have but little difficulty in obtaining provisions from them if we camped on the opposite of the creek to them. He said he knew whither they were gone, so we packed up and started. Coming to the gunyahs, where we expected to have found them, we were disappointed, and seeing a nardoo field close by, halted, intending to make it our camp. For some time we were employed gathering nardoo, and laying up a supply. Mr. Wills and I used to collect and carry home a bag each day, and Mr. Burke generally pounded sufficient for our dinner during our absence, but Mr. Wills found himself getting very weak, and was shortly unable to go out and gather nardoo as before, nor even strong enough to pound it, so that in a few days he became almost helpless. I still continued gathering; and Mr. Burke now also began to feel very weak, and said he could be of very little use in pounding. I had now to gather and pound for all three of us. I continued to do this for a few days, but finding my strength rapidly failing, my legs being very weak and painful, I was unable to go out for several days, and we were compelled to consume six days' stock, which we had laid by. Mr. Burke now proposed that I should gather as much as possible in three days, and that with this supply we should go in search of the natives—a plan which had been urged upon us by Mr. Wills as the only chance of saving him and ourselves as well, as he clearly saw that I was no longer able to collect sufficient for our wants. Having collected the seed as proposed, and having pounded sufficient to last Mr. Wills for eight days, and two days for ourselves, we placed water and firewood within his reach, and started. Before leaving him, however, Mr. Burke asked him whether he still wished it, as under no other circumstances would he leave him; and Mr. Wills again said that he looked on it as our only chance. He then gave Mr. Burke a letter and his watch for his father, and we buried the remainder of his field books near the gunyah. Mr. Wills said that, in case of my surviving Mr. Burke, he hoped that I would carry out his last wishes in giving the watch and letter to his father.

In travelling the first day, Mr. Burke seemed very weak, and complained of great pain in his legs and back. On the second day he seemed to be better, and said that he thought he was getting stronger, but, on starting, did not go two miles before he said he could go no further. I persisted in his trying to go on, and managed to get him along several times, until I saw that he was almost knocked up, when he said he could not carry his swag, and threw all he had away. I also reduced mine, taking nothing but a gun and some powder and shot, and a small pouch and some matches. On starting again, we did not go far before Mr. Burke said he should halt for the night, but as the place was close to a large sheet of water, and exposed to the wind, I prevailed on him to go a little further, to the next reach of water, where we camped. We searched about, and found a few small patches of nardoo, which I collected and pounded, and, with a crow which I shot, made a good evening's meal. From the time we halted, Mr. Burke seemed to be getting worse, although he ate his supper. He said he felt convinced he could not last many hours, and gave me his watch, which he said belonged to the committee, and a pocket book to give to Sir William Stawell, and in which he wrote some notes. He then said to me, "I hope you will remain with me here till I am quite dead; it is a comfort to know that some one is by. But when I am dying, it is my wish that you should place the pistol in my right hand, and that you leave me unburied as I lie." That night he spoke very little, and the following morning I found him speechless, or nearly so; and about eight o'clock he expired. I remained a few hours there, but as I saw there was no use in remaining longer, I went up the creek in search of the natives. I felt very lonely, and at nights usually slept in deserted wurleys, belonging to the natives. Two days after leaving the spot where Mr. Burke died, I found some gunyahs, where the natives had deposited a bag of nardoo, sufficient to last me a fortnight, and three bundles containing various articles.

I also shot a crow that evening, but was in very great dread that the natives would come and deprive me of the nardoo.

I remained there two days to recover my strength, and then returned to Mr. Wills. I took back three crows; but found him lying dead in his gunyah, and the natives had been there, and had taken away some of his clothes. I buried the corpse with sand, and remained there some days. But finding that my stock of nardoo was running short, and being unable to gather it, I tracked the natives who had been to the camp, by their footprints in the sand; and, when some distance down the creek, shooting crows and hawks on the road, the natives, hearing the report of the gun, came to meet me, and took me with them to their camp, giving me nardoo and fish. They took the birds I had shot and cooked them for me, and afterwards showed me a gunyah, where I was to sleep with three of the single men. The following morning they commenced talking to me, and putting one finger on the ground, and covering it with sand, at the same time pointing up the creek, saying, "Whitefellow," which I understood to mean that one white man was dead. From this, I thought they were the tribe who had taken Mr. Wills' clothes. They then asked me where the third man was, and I also made the sign of putting the fingers on the ground, and covering them with sand, at the same time pointing up the creek. They appeared to feel great compassion for me when they understood that I was alone on the creek, and gave me plenty to eat. After being four days with them, I saw that they were becoming tired of me, and they made signs that they were going up the creek, and that I had better go downwards; but I pretended not to understand them.

The same day they shifted camp, and I followed them; and, on reaching their camp, I shot some crows, which pleased them so much that they made me a breakwind in the centre of their camp, and came and sat round me until such time as the crows were cooked, when they assisted me to eat them. The same day, one of the women, to whom I had given part of a crow, came and gave me a ball of nardoo, saying that she would give me more only she had such a sore arm that she was unable to pound. She showed me a sore on her arm, and the thought struck me that I would boil some water in the billy, and wash her arm with a sponge. During the operation, the whole tribe sat round, and were muttering one to another. Her husband sat down by her side, and she was crying all the time. After I had washed it, I touched it with some nitrate of silver, when she began to yell, and ran off, crying, "Mokow! mokow!" (fire! fire!) From this time she and her husband used to give me a small quantity of nardoo both night and morning, and whenever the tribe was about going on a fishing excursion, he used to give me notice to go with them. They also used to assist me in making a wurley, or breakwind, whenever they shifted camp. I generally shot a crow or a hawk, and gave it to them in return for these little services. Every four or five days the tribe would surround me and ask whether I intended going up or down the creek; at last I made them understand that if they went up, I should go up the creek, and if they went down I should also go down, and from that time they seemed to look upon me as one of themselves, and supplied me with fish and nardoo regularly. They were very anxious, however, to know where Mr. Burke lay, and one day when we were fishing in the waterholes close by I took them to the spot. On seeing his remains the whole party wept bitterly, and covered them with bushes. After this they were much kinder to me than before, and I always told them that the white men would be here before two moons, and in the evenings, when they came with nardoo and fish, they used to talk about the "white fellows" coming, and the same time pointing to the moon. I also told them they would receive many presents, and they constantly asked me for tomahawks, called by them "bomay ho." From this time to when the relief party arrived, a period of about a month, they treated me with uniform kindness, and looked upon me as one of themselves. The day on which I was released, one of the tribe who had been fishing came and told me that the white fellows were coming, and the whole of the tribe who were then in camp, sallied out in every direction to meet the party, while the man who had brought the news took me over the creek, where I shortly saw the party coming down.

3. THE HARTLEY PIT CATASTROPHE,

NORTH SHIELDS CIRCUIT.

THIS serious disaster occurred on Thursday, January 16th, 1862, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon. As it is one of the most fearful misfortunes that ever happened in this country in connection with the coal mines, it may be interesting to the readers of our magazine to have an authentic account of this singular accident.

The cause of all the loss of life was the breaking of the main beam of the pumping engine. This beam was a mass of metal thirty-three feet in length, and of corresponding depth and thickness, and in weight forty tons. While the engine was going at its ordinary speed, and, as far as any one could see, in perfect order, the beam broke in the middle, and that part overhanging the pit, sixteen and a half feet in length, and weighing twenty tons, fell in with a tremendous crash. In its fearful descent it smashed to pieces the brattice dividing the shaft, and destroyed the framework supporting the sides of the pit. At the very moment, and about half-way up the shaft, which is ninety-five fathoms deep, were ascending eight individuals in what the miners call the "cage." Three of these men were members of our society, namely, George Sharp, George Sharp, junior (about seventeen years of age), and Thomas Watson.

A noise louder than thunder first warned these men of their danger, and they had barely time to say, "Lord, have mercy on us," when the heavy timbers forming the framework of the shaft fell with crushing force on the cage, breaking two of the four chains by which it was suspended on the main rope, laying one side of the cage quite flat, and carrying away four of the men far below, among broken timbers and fallen rubbish. Four men were left in the cage, one of them was George Sharp, senior, with a broken thigh. Two of the men carried down were killed outright, the other two, young Sharp and Bewick, lived a while. After the noise had somewhat subsided, the men in the cage, who had been stunned, came to themselves. They had been struck down. One whose name was Robinson was lying entangled with Watson's legs, his head hanging down the shaft; Watson pulled him up. A light was struck, but was speedily extinguished by the falling waters. The cries of the two sufferers below were now heard. Sharp, the father, was much moved by the cries of his son, and intimated a desire to go and seek him. This, however, was impossible, for he had a broken thigh and was otherwise injured. Brother T. Watson then said, "You cannot go, but now is the time to lay down our lives for the brethren; I will go; if I never return, tell them at home I am prepared for my journey." This brave man then groped for the signal wires by the side of the shaft, there were three of them, very small, not so thick as a man's finger, yet on these frail supports he ventured his life, left the cage, and began to slide down several fathoms into the dark and horrible abyss below, in search of his dying comrades.

After severe suffering in sliding down these wires, by which the severe friction nearly cut to the bone, he contrived to get near to young Sharp; but it was dark, and he knew not on what to rest himself with anything like safety. Supporting himself by the sides of the shaft, and on some broken timbers, as well as he could, this heroic brother prayed several times with the dying youth. Sharp himself called earnestly on Jesus, and declared his confidence that his blessed Saviour would take him to heaven. And although one of his legs was broken, and he was otherwise sorely bruised and mangled, yet in this doleful condition, lying among broken timbers, and exposed to torrents of falling water, poor lad tried to sing with Watson :—

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye," &c.

Stormy, indeed, were the banks of Jordan in the sad case of this poor boy! He did not long survive, though

Watson could only guess when he died, from the fact of his ceasing to call upon God.

After nine or ten hours of hard labour, the workmen above succeeded in getting a rope down to the cage. George Sharp was first put into the loop to be drawn up. Whether benumbed by so many hours' exposure in the wet shaft on a cold winter-day, whether from exhaustion, or whether he became entangled under some broken wood, no one knows, but he, unhappily, lost his hold, and died close to Watson's feet, where he fell. Ultimately, the other three were rescued, William Sharp considerably injured, Robinson very little hurt, and T. Watson none the worse, except from complete exhaustion, for even his iron nerves gave way when fairly out of danger—nature succumbed—nor did he regain his consciousness till after a considerable rest in bed. When he opened his eyes his father was standing over him. His first words were,—“Father, this is the time to try religion; what would I have done without Jesus.”

Added to the five killed in the shaft, there were 199 men and boys below, and by this singular accident, the shaft was so completely closed that they were, in a manner, buried alive.

No one suspected, at the time, that the accident would cost the life of every man in the pit; and, consequently, no alarm was excited in the village, as to the ultimate safety of the parties below. Husbands, father, children, or brothers, were expected every minute, and the necessary things were set in order in every man's dwelling. Delusive hope! As time wore on, and no one came, alarm began to spread, and the dreadful truth began to enter many minds, that they would be seen no more alive in this world. When the workmen who nobly volunteered to save the men entered the shaft, to clear the way down to the yard seam, it was found that difficulties and dangers of the most formidable nature presented themselves. The shaft was in a shattered and dangerous condition, the “cribbing” had been torn away, and the sides had begun to fall in. The workmen immediately began to remove the debris, and repair the shaft, and everything was done that human power and skill could effect, but all was of no avail, as far as the lives of the 199 were concerned—they could not be rescued alive.

For nine or ten weary days and nights, the strongest and most experienced workmen the north of England could produce toiled incessantly. The sides of the shaft continued to fall in and grievously retard the work. It was found exceedingly difficult to bring away the broken timbers and beams that were jammed fast together in every imaginable position; but the grand difficulty resulted from the falling in of the sides of the shaft, till in some places, instead of the original twelve, the pit was actually thirty feet in diameter. This was not only the greatest difficulty, but the most serious danger to the imprisoned men, inasmuch as it hermetically sealed the pit, and destroyed all ventilation. The lives of the brave men who toiled night and day at this hazardous work were in the most imminent danger. They might, at any moment, have been buried alive; and it is wonderful that no lives were lost in this dangerous work.

When at last an entrance was effected into the long sought yard seam, all the men were there, as conjectured, but they were all sleeping the sleep of death. The poor lost men were sitting or lying in almost every position. Some were not in the least disfigured or disturbed, but looked as if lying in profound and calm repose. Others, however, were very much swollen and altered, so as to render identification exceedingly difficult. All the bereaved families eventually got their own friends, and had the melancholy satisfaction of giving to them the rights of Christian sepulture. It becomes an interesting enquiry as to the manner in which these ill-fated men spent their last few hours on earth. No one was left to tell the dismal tale of that doleful prison-house. Providence, however, has so ordered the matter, that we are not left entirely in the dark on this interesting question. There is a short memorandum left in the book of the back overman, Mr. Arnour, of which the following is an exact copy :—

“Friday afternoon, at half-past one, Edward Armstrong, Thomas Gledson, John Hardy, Thomas Bell, and others, took extremely ill. We also held a prayer-meeting at a quarter to two, when — Tibbs, Henry Sharp, J. Campbell, Henry Gibson, William Palmer. Tibbs exhorted to us again.”

It will be observed that the sentence is left incomplete. Probably the word “exhorted” ought to have been inserted. Here is evidence that the men were alive on the 17th of January, but from the fact that the record closes so abruptly, we infer that none remained alive long after the date of the entry. It appears then that these poor men spent their last moments in devotional exercises. This fact has cheered the hearts of several pious women, who were exceedingly anxious about the spiritual state and future destiny of their husbands.

William Tibbs, of whom mention is made above, was a class-leader at New Hartley. He had been in society nine years, and was an excellent man. He was very anxious for the spread of religion. He ought to have been in what is called the night-shift, and so have been out of the pit at the time of the accident; but revival meetings having been commenced on Sunday, January 11th, to be continued for a week, he desired Mr. Humble, the master, who is a member with us of thirty years' standing, to allow him to work during the day, in order that he might assist at these meetings. This change placed him among the sufferers.

Henry Sharp was chapel-steward at Old Hartley. He was converted ten years ago in Sutton Street Chapel, London. He attended that chapel in company with some pious shipmates, John Brown, Robert Wilson, and James Mallett, and received the pearl of great price. Brother Mallett is a leader at Old Hartley. He had a narrow escape from death. He had not been three minutes out of the shaft when the beam fell. Sharp was a worthy man and an exemplary Christian.

William Palmer was remarkable for steady and regular attendance on the means of grace, and for very earnest devotion.

Henry Gibson was nineteen years of age, had lately been brought to God, and was a young man of considerable promise.

J. Campbell was a Wesleyan Methodist.

John Ormston had recently been brought to God, he was converted at a prayer-meeting about a month before the misfortune, and witnessed a good confession.

George Sharp, killed in the shaft, had been in society twelve years. He had a warm and generous heart. He has left a name like ointment poured forth, and is sadly missed in the chapel at Old Hartley. His simple and earnest devotion used to warm the hearts of all the brethren.

George Sharp, son of the above, was a fine youth. He had been in society two years, and possessed steadiness and propriety beyond his years. The Church had great hopes of him. He had a younger brother lost below, and the loss of husband and two sons has fallen heavily on Mrs. Sharp, who is an esteemed member of society.

Some of the public papers have spoken of Mr. Thomas Watson as having being recently converted from scepticism. We beg to say that this is incorrect. He was a careless and ungodly man, like many others of his class, but he never denied the truth of the Scriptures, nor the obligation of New Testament Christianity.

By this accident 103 women have lost their husbands, 257 children have lost their fathers—204, in all, have lost their lives.

Dark as is this fearful cloud, has it not a silver lining in it? The great mass in the pit were ungodly men, but here was a sprinkling of the salt of the earth among them. It appears in evidence that all had an offer of mercy. Our departed brethren were faithful in the trying hour in witnessing for God.

When accidents occur in collieries that cost many lives, there is, ordinarily, no time to pray. Death from explosion is instantaneous, but in this disaster, a day or two, at least, was granted by the Judge of all the earth. May we not hope that in that dark and melancholy prison-house many would accept of the offers of salvation, and even at the eleventh hour enter into the ark of safety?

We earnestly hope that this fearful visitation of an inscrutable Providence will be blessed to the salvation of many souls. New and Old Hartley societies have suffered severely in members, teachers, and scholars, and, by the "laying in" of the colliery, which is now drowned up. But our God can restore the waste places, and build the tabernacle of David, that is fallen down.

May the God of all mercy comfort the widow and fatherless, and be their stay and support in His holy habitation.

THOMAS SMITH.

1. History of the Development of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ. By Dr. J. A. DORNER, Professor of Theology in the University of Göttingen. Division, first, First Four Centuries, Volume I., Translated by William Lindsay Alexander, D.D., Edinburgh, and (notes) D. W. Simon. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 38, George street. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co. Dublin: John Robertson. 1861.

To men of sterling piety whose minds have been, or are being disciplined to close and profound thinking, the "History" before us opens a store of treasure which can scarcely be too highly valued. The Church of Christ is laid under manifold obligations to Messrs. Clark for the very valuable works which have been and are being issued by them, few of which however excel in real and permanent interest this learned and elaborate work. What we said on "Division Second" page 680, in our November number for 1861, we now with pleasure indorse relative to this "Division First," and shall ever esteem ourselves privileged in the possession of so much information on one of the most momentous subjects that have ever been proposed to the human mind or that have ever supported and cheered the human heart.

Of Dr. Dorner as an impartial and efficient guide on the subject which he has so faithfully presented to the consideration of his readers, we think we cannot better express our own views than in the following words of Dr. Alexander, the learned translator of this Division, who after referring in his preface, to the one-sided polemic works of many celebrated authors, adds, "The work of Dr. Dörner will be found peculiarly to excel exactly where these most fail. Purely scientific in its character, and the result of long and patient study of the original sources, it supplies a comprehensive, impartial, and exhaustive survey of the whole subject of which it treats. The author preserves throughout, the tone of a judge, calmly and perspicuously weighing all the evidence that can be brought to bear on the case; patiently collecting every particle of evidence pertaining to the subject; and pronouncing his decision without regard to polemical considerations, or the interests of parties." The work is enriched by a copious analysis, and an appendix of 141 pages of very valuable notes, illustrative of what is contained in the body of the work. We trust the "History" will obtain for all who have been concerned in its production the return which their learning, labour, &c., &c., so richly merit. We hope the book will have a large circulation.

2. Theological and Homiletical Commentary on the Gospel of St. Matthew, specially designed and adapted for the use of ministers and students. From the German of J. P. LANGR, D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Bonn. By the Rev. ALFRED EDELSHEIM, Ph.D., author of "History of the Jewish Nation," editor of "Kurtz's History of the Christian Church," &c., &c. Vol. I. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 38, George Street; London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co.; Dublin: John Robinson. 1861.

THE present volume opens with a Theological and Homiletical introduction, the first and second sections of which will aid our readers in forming their estimate of the work, which most efficiently sustains what may be anticipated from the definitions given and the plan laid down in these sections.

§ 1.

"Theology, or the scientific knowledge of the Christian religion generally, may according to its historical and scientific character, be arranged under two great divisions, Historical and Theoretical or Systematic theology, taking these terms in their widest sense. Historical theology may again be ranged under the following three sections: 1. The History of Revelation, or of the kingdom of God, which forms the bases of the whole system; 2. The History of the Records of Revelation, or exegesis in the wider sense; 3. The History of Revealed Religion, or ecclesiastical history. In the same manner, Systematic Theology may be divided into three sections: 1. The System of Christian Doctrines, or dogmatics; 2. The System of Christian Morals, or ethics; 3. The System of Christian Polity, or practical theology."

§ 2.

"From this analysis, we infer that the materials from which to construct a theological and homiletical introduction to the sacred Scriptures, must be derived partly from the history of revelation, partly from that of the records of revelation, and partly from practical theology,—our selection being always made with especial reference to the practical, homiletical, and pastoral objects in view."

Our limited space forbids enlargement, further than to add that the critical notes, doctrinal reflections, and homiletical hints furnish rich mines, whence the intelligent minister and the laborious student may secure much Scriptural wealth. The spirited publishers have our best wishes for their success in their enterprise.

3. Christ, the Light of the World: Biblical Studies on the First Ten Chapters of St. John's Gospel. By RUDOLPH BESSER, D.D. Translated from the German by Mr. G. HUXTABLE. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 38, George Street. London: Hamilton, Adams & Co. Dublin: John Robertson. 1861.

To persons who are orthodox in their religious creed, and who have made themselves acquainted with German theology, the many excellent works on theology which are now issuing from the press, and which are of a character directly opposite to the semi-infidel productions to which we have referred, this and kindred works will prove, by the blessing of God, effectual antidotes. "The Light of the World" is a volume of sterling value, especially to persons who are students in theology.

It is true it lacks the smooth eloquence of Saurin, and the almost irresistible force of some of the discourses of Massillon, &c., but for Gospel truth clearly enunciated, if occasionally in rather rugged style, for point and fullness of sound religious sentiment, it very largely excels many of the homiletical works of the present time and past of ages.

Many valuable extracts on the numerous subjects on which the author treats are from Luther, Bogatzky, Augustine, Löhe, Brenz, Chemnitz, &c., &c., and very many of these sayings are like apples of gold in baskets of silver. Though it will not be expected that we agree with every sentiment that is set forth in this volume, yet as a work fraught with sound divinity, especially in reference to Christ, our adorable Redeemer, and as abounding with masculine thought on some of the most important subjects, the work has our cordial recommendation, it is a light in a dark place, and we pray that the light of the truths it contains, may shine into many hearts to the praise and glory of God.

4. Joseph Alleine: His Companions and Times, a Memorial of "Black Bartholomew," 1662. By CHARLES STANFORD. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, St. Paul's Churchyard.

This volume is an excellent and well-merited tribute to departed worth, and a seasonable memento of the gracious providence of the Lord as manifested in his watching over and taking care of His Church.

"Black Bartholomew" is a solemn monitor, the history of which is especially calculated to admonish those who oppose God's people, to instruct sincere enquirers after truth and righteousness, and to encourage all who put their trust in the Lord. To bigots, tyrants, and persecutors of the faithful, this period is powerfully eloquent in support of the following sentiments contained in the divine records. When God arises to save the meek of the earth, He maketh the wrath of man to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He restrains. We are informed that the justly celebrated John Locke said when referring to the Act of Uniformity, "Bartholomew's day was fatal to our Church and religion," &c. But in this the philosopher was mistaken, witness the state of religion now, and compare it with the state of religion two centuries ago, and who that loves the Lord, and desires the extension of His kingdom, will not rejoice, and be exceedingly glad, because "the Lord reigneth," and that non-conformity has contributed largely to the happy state of our Churches and the spiritual welfare of the world. The manner in which this volume is got up, the beautifully easy and happy style of the talented author, and the excellency of the subject, together with the time which is passing over us, this being the Bicentenary of the passing of the act before referred to, and the manly and Christian non-conformity of more than 2000 ministers, together with valuable biography and other matters of stirring interest, combine to make this a valuable work, and we have great pleasure in recommending it to our readers.

5. A Series of Sermons on Important Subjects, Doctrinal and Practical. By JOHN PETTY. Second Edition, revised. London: R. Davies, Conference Offices, Sutton Street, Commercial Road East. 1861.

We are glad to turn our attention aside for awhile from abstruse subjects, which require no small degree of mental effort to determine whether they are orthodox or heterodox, whether true or false.

The Sermons before us are verdant with perennial freshness, and while they inform the judgment on many of the most important subjects of Divine revelation, they furnish lessons for every day life, which are calculated by the blessing of God to promote the real and permanent elevation of those who read them. In a word, they furnish a large measure of sound Scriptural doctrine, calculated to benefit such as desire to consecrate themselves to God, in their personal experience, in their relative positions, in their present circumstances, and in their future existence. They are plain, practical expositions of portions of God's Word, which have been judiciously selected, and which are piously and zealously enforced. Depraved indeed must be that mind, and cold must be that heart, which in the reading of and meditating on these sermons, feel no aspirations heavenward, no longings for a glorious immortality. We cordially recommend the volume.

6. Carine Steinburgh. An Autobiography. London: William Tweedie, 337, Strand. 1862.

This work furnishes sad evidence of the unhappy effects of the improper training of youth, and adds another illustration to the ten thousand already given of the dreadful consequences of indulging in alcoholic drinks, consequences which according to the statements made in this autobiography, proved fatal to success in business, family comfort, and which involved another victim of drunkenness, in the horrors of a suicidal death. Verily, strong drink "biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder," and we are quite sure its victims are not wise. Let those who wish to escape the fate of the drunkard beware.

7. Dialogues, instructive and entertaining, for Sunday-school Anniversaries, &c. Compiled by THEOPHILUS. London: Published by Richard Davies, Sutton Street, Commercial Road, E.

While recitations are called for by the friends of, and office-bearers in, our Sunday Schools, it is desirable that everything should be avoided that would have any tendency either to offend the judgment or pollute the heart. In these matters Theophilus has apparently thought with us, and his book will supply to some extent, a lack which has long been felt.

The book is calculated to be useful, and we give it our cordial recommendation.

8. A Book for the Anniversary, composed of entirely new and original pieces in prose and poetry. Especially designed for Sunday School Recitations. By G. T. GOODRICK. London: Jarrold and Sons, 47, St. Paul's Churchyard; R. Davies, Sutton Street. Norwich: Jarrold and Sons. 1861.

THE book before us is certainly adapted for usefulness, and is well calculated to promote the intellectual and spiritual interests of that class of readers for whose especial benefit it is designed. Whether the pieces in blank verse will be as popular as they merit, is questionable: there is a difficulty in reciting this class of poetry, that, to many children will present a formidable barrier to their successful recitation. With a slight reserve, we can cordially recommend the work.

9. First Lessons in the Evidences of Christianity. By B. B. WOODWARD, B.A., F.S.A. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row.

THIS is an excellent manual, on deeply interesting subjects, and may be read with great profit, not only by children, but by many people much farther advanced in life.

10. "Church's Revised Edition." A Full Report of the Speeches at the Great Meeting held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, on Tuesday, April 30th, 1861, in support of Primitive Methodist Home and Foreign Missions, Benjamin Scott, Esq., F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London, in the chair. Fourth Thousand. London: published by Thomas Church, 11, Crescent Terrace, Millbank, S.W., and may be had of R. Davies, Conference Offices, Sutton Street, St. George's East; or of G. J. Stevenson, "Wesleyan Times" Office, Paternoster Row.

THOSE persons who wish to obtain the best information relative to the Meeting referred to in this copious report, may realize their object to a considerable extent by the purchase, for fourpence, of "Church's Revised Report," which is now before us, and which, as a whole, we deem tolerably faithful.

11. The Nation's Loss, and its Lessons. A Sermon on the Death of Prince Albert, December 14th, 1861. By the Rev. JOHN STOKES, Ashton-under-Lyne. Manchester: William Bremner and Co., 11, Market Street, and all booksellers.

THIS is an eloquent, impressive, and practical sermon. It has our hearty recommendation.

12. Help to the Reading of the Four Gospels, compiled from various sources for Schools and Families. Dublin: printed for the booksellers by Robert Marchbank, 13, Stafford Street. Price Fourpence.

THE diffusion of Scriptural truth is a subject of incalculable interest to the Church and the world, and the compiler of this little work has our best thanks for the excellent service he has rendered in a cheap form, for promoting the knowledge of Divine revelation. We hope the help afforded will be extensively secured by a large circulation and diligent perusal of the work.

13. The Coalville Discussion: a Discussion on the Mode of Baptism, between Mr. Porter and Mr. Cresswell, held in the British Schoolroom, Coalville, on Monday evening, Feb. 3rd, 1862. Loughborough: John Abbott, bookseller, &c., Market Place. London: Tallant and Co., 5, Ave Maria Lane.

THE mode of baptism has furnished many meddlers, in other people's matters, with what they have deemed a satisfactory reason for impudently and assiduously striving to impose their peculiar dogmas on people whose faith they sometimes injure, and in some instances, there is much cause to fear, they turn the feeble out of their providential path. On the subject of the discussion there is room for some diversity of opinion, but that immersion is the only scriptural mode of baptism we deny, and we are glad that our sentiments have been so well sustained by Mr. Cresswell. The tract is cheap, and we hope tens of thousands of it will be circulated in our own Connexion.

14. Cross Bearing. By NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

LIKE other works by Mr. Hall, this is a thoroughly practical, soul-stirring manual. The reasoning on self-denial, in accordance with the doctrines of the New Testament, will be found difficult to gainsay.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

1. BRIDGWATER MISSION.—God is "not willing that any should perish."—Dear Reader,—From the following incident, you may see God's willingness to save to the uttermost. At Chilton Polden, one of our country places, where the Primitive Methodists have been the means of impeding the progress of sin, saving souls from death, and preparing men for heaven, the writer had the pleasure of spending a few hours one morning (after preaching the night previous) in visiting the people. In one family, an aged parent, who had nearly completed the circle of life, entered the room, to whom I addressed the following questions:—

"Well, sister, are you making preparations for heaven?"

"I hope so," was her reply.

Fearing lest she was deceiving herself, I thought it well to come a little closer to the point, and addressed her again.

"Upon what are you building your hope? Have you the assurance that God for Christ's sake has pardoned all your sins and made you free?"

To which I received a reply that led me to the conclusion that she was "in the gall of bitterness and in the bond of iniquity." I then spoke to her on the mercy of God, the love of Christ, and the happiness she would enjoy by becoming a believer in, and a follower of, Christ our Saviour.

As soon as she was exhorted to "behold the Lamb of God," Satan raged, and she yielded to his power. She left the room, declaring within herself she would never go to hear the Primitives again. After a short time, she re-entered the room, and having thought a little more on God's mercies to her and the Saviour's love, she became more reconciled. The writer then, seeing an opportunity, prayed, when the Spirit of the Lord came upon us, and her soul was deeply impressed. I then urged her to give her soul to the Lord, who gave his blood for it, and wished her to attend our evening service in the next village. At that service, she, with several others of a similar character, was present, when our Lord, who heareth and answereth prayer, gave His Spirit with the word, and caused many hearts to tremble, and seek salvation through faith in the Saviour. The time came for closing the meeting; but I found this aged penitent still without salvation; and with an aching heart and a burdened soul she retired. The following morning, I purposed calling upon her on my way to Bridgewater, distant seven miles, believing the Lord, who had broken down, would bind up the broken heart with salvation. When I arrived at her house, I was informed she had just left for Bridgewater. I, without delay, pursued my course, and soon overtook her, and found her still unpardoned. To obtain a knowledge of Christ and salvation became the topic of our converse, and before we had travelled three miles together, she cast her soul upon the atonement of Christ, and found redemption—even the forgiveness of her sins—and she exclaimed, "I do believe the Lord has pardoned all my sins, and I feel as light as a feather. I never felt so happy in my life." She has since been living to the Lord, and is striving for a crown. To God be the glory! for such mercy to one who had arrived at threescore years and ten. Reader, are you happy in the Saviour's love? Have you received the forgiveness of all your sins?

Is the fear of death, &c., removed by perfect love? Ask, am I sowing here to reap in heaven? If not, remember God willeth not your destruction, but even on the high road, in your closet, in the presence of your friends, by your fireside, in the field, behind the counter, on the sea, He now waiteth to save.—“Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in.” Brother, this moment open; sister, now submit, and let the Saviour take possession of thy heart.

“The worst need keep Him out no more,
Nor force him to depart.”

If you are in possession of this salvation, forget not to speak of Christ to all; to the grey-headed sinner by the way-side, to your fellow-workmen, to that man or woman who is without peace, whenever an opportunity offers itself. Remember for one, for all Christ died, and God willeth that all men should be saved.

W. DINNICK.

2. DEAR EDITOR, — You have numerous subscribers for your serial, who, from month to month, read with deep interest accounts of the progress of our missionary work in the home stations and also in foreign fields. I am happy to inform you and your readers we are still making headway in Essex. Burnham is a small town, twelve miles below Maldon, near the eastern coast, and is a noted place in the oyster fishery. Three years ago, we commenced our missionary work at Ostend, two miles from Burnham, and in a short time we visited the town, and a room was subsequently hired near the sea-wall. But, for want of local preachers, we could not keep it regularly supplied. O that we had some of the local preachers who have little to do; we could employ them every Sabbath, and give them an opportunity of fully exercising their talents in winning souls, who would be stars in their crowns in the day of the Lord Jesus. However, we have pressed on, praying for labourers and toiling hard ourselves. Eighteen months ago, we left the room on the sea-wall, and, since then, have occupied Providence Chapel. But, as we must leave the above-named chapel, we have resolved on building one, and on Tuesday, February 11th, 1862, we held a bazaar and tea-meeting. The proceeds of the day, with donations, amounted to about £26. This was a favourable beginning towards our intended sanctuary. Our friends at Burnham have worked well for the past ten weeks, preparing for the bazaar, and when it was opened, we were favoured with the attendance of many of the higher classes of the town's people. Having obtained official sanction, we intend soon to commence building.

3. SILSDEN CIRCUIT. — Dear Brother Harland, — For more than three months, we have been enjoying “times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord” in this Circuit. For several months previously, we suffered numerical loss; nevertheless, the societies generally were united and energetic, the congregations good, and gradually increasing, while the public services were attended with such blessed influences, as to presage prosperity, like the “clear shining after rain.” The society, which first began to move onwards, was that at Stuton, which emerged from a state of disunion, coldness, and sterility, into one of union, zeal, and fruitfulness. For some time past, it has been good to share in its services. Silsden next “travailed in birth,” and “brought forth;” and now while I write, the members generally are “striving together for the faith of the Gospel." Skipton, which has been characterized for weakness and instability in its spiritual state, has recently put forth unusual efforts to save sinners, the result of which is nearly forty persons have been received into our societies, besides many children, who are saying, "Hosannah to the God of David." This revival is regarded by the old members as the most hopeful of any with which they have hitherto been visited; and I may add that I have seen developments of spirituality and earnestness rarely paralleled—never excelled.

While speaking of Skipton, it will not be out of place to inform you that we have just paid £140 off the chapel debt, and will be prepared, in a few weeks, to pay off nearly £40 more. In this blessed enterprise, our friends, J. Fletcher, and G. Baron, of Silsden, took a leading part by largely contributing, while the friends on the spot gave of their money, their time, and their toil with cheerful and unwearied devotion.

A Sabbath or two ago, a new harmonium was put into the chapel at an outlay of nearly £30, all of which was realized on the day of the opening. Eastburn, Carlton, and Farnhill societies have also put on "beautiful garments," and are now rejoicing over many who have recently said, "We will go with you, for we hear that the Lord is with you." And it is better with the other places on the station, because the "Lord hath made the place of his feet glorious."

This improvement has not been effected by the attractions of novelty, nor the excitement of strangers. No black man, woman, or boy, has been brought to draw the people to the services, nor has any professional "revivalist" been hired to manufacture members. Societies believed that every element of progress was within themselves; and in answer to the prayers of a few, the Lord has poured out his Spirit on the many. These have cried to the Lord, and he has heard them, and, clothing his word with power, the hearts of sinners have been changed, conversion has produced attraction, and many who came to mock have remained to pray. Thus it has been, and thus it may always be, summer and winter. May the converting work become the leading object of the churches of our land. So prays
JOHN SIMPSON.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

BARTON.—Dear Editor,—We have recently held a course of interesting missionary services at Goxhill, East Halton, Barrow, and Bonby. The speakers were Revs. T. Bennett, H. Knowles, E. Talbot, B. Stansfield, and the writer.

The chair was taken by Mr. W. Smith, at Goxhill; Mr. Bristow, at Barrow; and by Mr. G. Walker, at Bonby. The congregations were large, and the people appeared deeply interested at each of the meetings. The collections were good. The sum raised at the four places was £41, being nearly £3 in advance of last year.

It is pleasing to witness the unwearied efforts of our missionary collectors, and the continued benevolence of our friends. We hope that, in most instances, the efforts and benevolence are the fruit of heartfelt love to Christ, and deep compassion for the hundreds of millions of souls who are perishing in their sins. D. INGHAM.

RETTFORD CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor, We have had, in this circuit, what we call our "principal round" of missionary meetings, which financially and spiritually exceeded our expectations. The public collections were in advance of those of last year. Sermons, preparatory to the public meetings, were preached on Sunday, February 23rd, 1862, by the Revs. G. Watson, of Gainsborough; T. Waumsley, of Howden; Mr. J. Ratcliffe, of Doncaster; and the writer. The meeting at Retford was presided over by W. Metcalfe, also the Revs. A. Guthrie and J. G. Smith assisted us on the occasion. At Bawtry, we held our meeting in the Independent chapel, Mr. Naylor, a Wesleyan, occupied the chair, and the Rev. R. Butcher, Wesleyan, assisted us. The addresses at the public meetings were appropriate and useful.

The following sums were received—Retford, £20 16s. 4d.; Worksop, £2 0s. 3d.; Bawtry, £3 2s. 4d.; and Austerfield, £4 0s. 0d.

May the renovating and sanctifying influences of the Gospel of the ever blessed God be felt and enjoyed throughout the world.

HENRY KNOWLES.

SCOTTER CIRCUIT.—On Sunday, March 2nd, 1862, and four following days, we held a series of interesting missionary services at Scotter, Kirton, Blyton, and West Ferry. The Revs. J. Bywater, W. Sanderson, C. Kendall, G. Watson, and J. Dawson, rendered us good service. The sum of £53 6s. 2½d. was raised, being £3 12s. 7½d. in advance of the previous year.

To all our friends, we desire to tender our thanks, and to the Giver of all good we present devout gratitude and praise.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. CLAXBY, MARKET RASEN CIRCUIT. — Dear Editor, — At the above-named village, Primitive Methodism has existed for many years; but it has suffered greatly from a want of a larger and more suitable place of worship. We are happy, however, to be able to say, that a few months ago, the late lamented Earl of Yarborough, kindly granted us a suitable piece of land on which to build a chapel. We immediately commenced operations. The foundation-stone was laid by Mr. R. Surfleet, of Thoresway, November 20th, 1861, and, by the blessing of God on our efforts, we have been enabled to erect a neat little sanctuary, which will seat about ninety persons, thirty-four of the sittings are free. The pews are elevated, the door-way and front windows are circular-headed, the roof is blue slated. The opening services took place on Sunday,

January 26th, 1862, when three sermons were preached by the writer and Mr. T. Beels, of Scawby. Also, on Sunday, February 2nd, two sermons were preached by Mr. J. Barkworth, of Grasby; and on Monday, February 3rd, the services closed with a public meeting, when addresses were delivered by Messrs. T. Newsome, R. Brannan, and T. Elston. The entire cost of the undertaking will be about £74, towards which we have obtained by donations, collections, and a tea meeting, £22, exclusive of all the leadings which have been given by the farmers and friends in the neighbourhood. Our list of subscriptions is not yet completed, and we have some promised money to come in; so that we expect to realize in a short time the remainder of the one-third required by rule. We are happy to say, that when we held our last meeting in connection with the opening services, all the letable sittings in the chapel were taken, and about £1 were promised towards the anniversary to be held next Christmas. The chapel is properly settled on the Connexion; the deed is already executed and enrolled. I am happy to say, that in every part of this undertaking, my colleague, Mr. W. Andrew, has been very active. We beg to make the most respectful mention of the kindness of the late Earl of Yarborough, in granting us the lease of the land for ninety-nine years, at a nominal rent of one shilling per year. We beg hereby to tender our thanks to Messrs. Marris and Smith, solicitors, of Caistor, for making us the deeds gratis; also, to Mr. A. Towle, of Market Rasen, for his kindness in superintending the building during its erection, and for assisting us in many other ways, free of cost. Thanks to all our other kind friends, whose names we cannot mention. May God reward them; and may He glorify this house of His glory. T. NEWSOME.

2. EBBERSTON, PICKERING CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We once more avail ourselves of your monthly serial, to convey intelligence of our doings in this circuit, which has taken some rather rapid strides in chapel-building matters during the last few years. From 1850 to 1859 no less than five chapels were erected, at a cost of £872 8s., towards which £356 10s. were raised by voluntary contributions. Since the conference of 1860, we have been able to add three more to the number, at a cost of £1 24s., of which sum we have realized £550, so that now we have eleven connexional chapels in this circuit. The last of this number was recently opened at Ebberston, a village with, perhaps, 800 inhabitants. The site for this chapel (including

£1 paid for possession) cost us £16. The inside is very neat: a rostrum and communion on the north; an elevation, four pews deep, on the south; two pews on the west; and one on the east: the outside presents a very respectable appearance. The chapel is built of freestone, has a "hip" roof, and is slated. There are four windows and a door, all circular-headed, and turned with scoured keystones. The drainage, lighting, and ventilation are good. The chapel stands back from the road, and is enclosed by iron palisades. It will accommodate about 120 persons.

The opening services were effective. We had a sermon from the Rev. W. Sanderson, on Friday afternoon, January 3rd, 1862. A tea-party and public meeting followed, addressed by Messrs. T. Stephenson (chairman); W. T. Lumley, T. Smailes, and the Revs. W. Sanderson, T. Dearlove, and J. Milner. Mr. Sanderson preached twice on the following Sabbath. The Rev. T. Greenbury and Mr. E. Warters officiated on Sunday, January 19th, and Mr. Greenbury closed the opening services with a lecture the following night.

The total cost of the chapel was £160, and we have raised by donations, £51 3s. 8d.; public collections, £20 7s. 6d.; tea profits, &c., £8 8s. 10d. Total £80.

I have only to add that great praise is due to numerous friends, and to "honourable women not a few." We have let all the sittings except eight. We thank God that He has enabled us to put up this temple for His worship; and we gratefully acknowledge the services and gifts of all who have helped the undertaking.

"The temples of His grace
In beauteous numbers stand,
The honours of our native place
And bulwarks of our land."

T. DEARLOVE.

3. BISHOP'S NYMPTON, SOUTH MOLTON MISSION.—February 23rd, 1862, we opened our new room at Bishop's Nympton, Thomas Lane preached morning and evening, and the Rev. Moses Saunders, Baptist, preached in the afternoon, and one soul was saved in the evening. On the following day at three o'clock, a sermon was preached by the Rev. C. Harrison, Independent. Subsequently a tea meeting was held, when about 115 persons sat around tables gratuitously supplied by the members and friends. The money raised amounted to about £6 10s., which will be appropriated towards the seating of the room, etc. We are happy to inform you that we have more than forty members at the place. And though we meet with opposition from those who call themselves the people of God, yet God blesses our labours. T. LANE.

CHAPEL RE-OPENING.

FULBECK.—In the year 1818, the first pioneer of Primitive Methodism entered Fulbeck. He was a man from Leadenham, the adjoining village, whose heart God had touched. He took his stand, and preached the truth as it is in Jesus, but he had no sooner commenced praying and singing than a lawyer sent the servant of a constable to tell his master he was to come and take the preacher into custody. The constable was Mr. Rose, who afterwards became a consistent member with us.

For seven years our people had to worship in the open air and in cottages, where, in-doors and out, they were assailed by much opposition; but not being terrified at their adversaries, they prosecuted the work until the year 1825, when they succeeded in erecting the present chapel, wherein they could worship under their own vine and fig tree, none daring to make them afraid. From that time the society at Fulbeck became noted for zeal; but a debt of £100 was left upon the chapel; and although they had many years of prosperity the debt was left undiminished. Many of its early members have long since left the Church militant to join the Church triumphant. It is only some few years ago, we succeeded in reducing the debt to £85, from which time it has been with difficulty we have made the income meet the expenditure.

When the Rev. W. Clayton entered this station, and visited Fulbeck, he was grieved to find such a place called a Primitive Methodist chapel.

The lady of whom we had borrowed the money, £85, kindly accepted £50 as payment in full. £65 were then borrowed of a friend, and we proceeded with improvements externally and internally. Having completed the repairs, the re-opening sermons were preached by Mr. William Andiss, Little Hule, February 23rd, 1862, to crowded congregations. The collections for the day were £1 14s. 2d. On Monday, March 3rd, a tea was provided, the proceeds were 17s. 9½d., after which the Rev. W. Clayton preached; a collection was made of 16s. 9d. Messrs. R. Bugg, W. Cox, F. Titchett, George Jenkinson presented a donation of £1 each, Brother Edward Gibson, 10s. Mr. T. Watson kindly gave all the blacksmith work. A great deal of labour was done by many of our friends gratuitously, and we believe all, according to their means, have assisted us. The cost of the repairs and improvements was £25, which we are happy to say is all paid, and the debt is £20 less on the chapel than before the repairs were commenced.

May the great Head of the Church bless all who have assisted us, and crown the whole with a mighty revival of His work amongst us—Amen. GEORGE JENKINSON.

LAYING FOUNDATION STONE.

SHOREHAM, BRIGHTON MISSION.

—On Monday, March 10th, 1862, the foundation stone of a new chapel was laid by R. H. Penney, Esq., who gave an appropriate address. There were about 300 persons present, including several ministers of other denominations, who took part in the proceedings. The lessons were read by the Rev. J. Wilkins, Baptist; prayer offered by the Rev. R. Hamilton, Independent; hymn given out by the Rev. J. Starr, from Croydon; and an address was delivered by the Rev. G. Lamb, from London. The weather being beautiful, there was an excellent gathering of the friends.

After the stone was laid the company retired to the preaching-room in John Street, to the public hall, and to Mr. Tillston's room, for tea, our own room not being large enough.

At half-past six a public meeting was held in the Protestant Free Church, the Rev. J. Barfitt in the chair; addresses were delivered by Messrs. J. Starr, W. T. Nelson (Wesleyan), and G. Lamb. The proceeds of the day amounted to £12, and £120 were previously collected. There was a bottle deposited in the stone containing the names of the ministers, trustees, number of members in society, dimensions of the land, cost of the same, of whom purchased, population of Shoreham, &c., with a preachers' plan for the quarter, and an almanack containing the statistics of the Connexion.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.

SPALDING.—Mr. Harland: Dear Sir,—It will gladden your heart to hear that we have had a good anniversary at Spalding. It is well known that our interest in this place is not great. We have only ten poor members in the place, but it may be said of them, "They have done what they could." When we think of a town like Spalding, with 10,000 inhabitants, it is a great pity that we should have so small an interest connected therewith; but, sir, we believe that God, in His Divine providence, will yet help us, and that we shall see brighter and better days.

On Lord's-day, March 9th, 1862, I was appointed to preach two sermons. At each service, eight of the Sabbath-school girls from Holbeach recited select pieces, which gave great satisfaction. The chapel was crowded at each service.

On Monday, March 10th, we held a tea-meeting, at which about 100 persons were present. Four gratuitous trays were provided by the society, which raised £3 10s. 1d. collections £1 14s. 5d., donations, 7s., making a total of £5 11s. 6d.

A very interesting meeting was held in the evening, at which ten local preachers, from various parts of the circuit, with Brothers R. Ducker and B. Clayton, took a part. These services have been attended with such power from on high that we believe they will do us much good in this town. To God be all the glory.

R. DUCKER.

SCHOOL SERVICE.

PICKERING CIRCUIT. — Dear Editor,—On Sunday, March 2nd, 1862, two sermons were preached in our Chapel at Pickering, by the Rev. J. Milner, to large and attentive congregations. After each sermon the children recited several pieces of poetry and dialogues, interspersed with hymns suitable for the occasion.

On Tuesday, March 4th, the annual tea-meeting was held in the school-room, when the children were regaled with tea, etc.

The teachers and friends took tea together. After tea a public meeting was held in the chapel, which was addressed by Mr. T. Stephenson, chairman, Revs. T. Dearlove, and J. Milner, also by Messrs. G. Ward and W. T. Lumley. The children also recited several pieces of poetry and dialogues, and several anthems, etc., were sung.

The collections and proceeds of the tea amounted to £8 7s. 1½d., being an advance on the proceeds of last year. R. T. CHARTER.

OBITUARY.

1. ANN LEA, the wife of Luke Lea, was born in 1836, and departed this life on the 30th of August, 1861, at Haslington, Sandbach Circuit. Her parents being pious members of our society, she was early taken to the house of God, and was of an amiable disposition, she was a child of many prayers; the Holy Spirit often strove with her, and she wept in secret. About four years since, her father was called hence very suddenly, and she was led to see the danger of delaying salvation. Her sorrow for sin was deep; but, one night, when brother Graham had been showing the willingness of Christ to save sinners, she ventured all on the atonement, and the Divine Spirit witnessed with her spirit that she was born of God. Her journey through life was not all sunshine; but she kept the end in view. About twelve months since, her health began to fail; medical aid was called in; but it was of no avail. About May, 1861, she came to reside at Haslington, and she and her husband joined my class. For a few weeks we had some hopes that she might be spared; but her medical attendant said her case was hopeless. Her reply was, "I shall soon be at home." Many of her class-mates visited her, whom she urged to meet her in heaven. To her husband she said, "Luke, train the children for heaven, and meet me there." On the 28th of August, a change took place. She called her husband to her side between six and seven o'clock, and said, "I think this has come to take me off; what should I have done if I had not had religion now?" Her sufferings were great, and hearing that she was worse, I visited her, and while praying with her, the room was filled with the glory of God. I said, "This will, perhaps, be the last time I shall see you alive." "Meet me in heaven," was her reply. Between eleven and twelve at night, while in Mrs. Turber's arms, after a severe struggle, with a voice quite strong, she said,

"Yes, thou art precious to my soul,
My transport and my trust," &c.

"Glory! glory! glory! there is light in the valley,—yes, yes." After this she spoke but little. At four o'clock in the morning she fell asleep, and about four in the afternoon, her happy spirit took its flight to mansions of bliss.

WILLIAM WOODWORTH.

2. MARY LATEWOOD died at Honytonbank, June 9th, 1861, aged twenty-nine. She was brought to God in 1859. She forthwith joined our society, and lived the life of a Christian. In the midst of severe trials, God preserved her. I saw her last June, and I found her trusting in the Lord, and happy in the prospect of heaven. She asked me to pray for Jesus to fetch her, and she added, "Come, Lord Jesus." The day on which she died, she told a person she should be in glory before the 10th of October, and before that time she reached the better world.

HENRY WOODALL.

3. Died, August 16th, 1861, at Over Lane, Burland Circuit, ELIZA KENNERLEY, in the thirty-fifth year of her age, leaving an affectionate husband and three children to lament their loss. From a child she was of an amiable disposition, and her affectionate conduct towards those with whom she became acquainted secured for her a large circle of friends. About 1851, she began to frequent our chapel in Over Lane, and while listening to the word of Divine truth, light shone into her benighted mind, and in bitterness of soul she cried out, "Who will shew me any good?" It pleased the Lord in 1853, while brother Allman was giving out the verse of a hymn after preaching to apply it to her heart; and she felt as she never felt before. Her cousin Elizabeth, a member of our society, invited her to stay at the prayer-meeting which was held after service; and that night, while wrestling in prayer, God set her soul at liberty, and she joined in singing,—

"Soon as my all I ventured," &c.

From that time she became a member of our society, adorning the doctrine of God her Saviour in all things. She was diligent at her class, and attended the means of grace until deprived of the privilege by sickness. In 1860, it was her lot to be tried in the furnace of affliction. The best medical aid was procured; but the insidious disease (consumption) had begun its work, and baffled medical skill. As her earthly house was falling to decay, her soul was animated with the thoughts of soon entering "that house above whose builder and maker is God." About two months before her death, she gave instructions concerning her funeral, and said, "Make no stir nor boast about me, for I am a poor creature, but my Saviour is all-sufficient." Her Bible was her bedside companion, and when so weak she could not bear its weight, she would have it propped up before her. A short time before her death, she requested her cousin Margaret to read for her, and she read the 84th Psalm. She said, "Bless the Lord—bless the Lord!" A few hours before her departure, her cousin was called to her bed-side, it being her wish that she should attend her in her last conflict. Her cousin asked her if she should send for William (her husband). She said, "I shall not go yet; but you had better send, as you promised you would; but do not alarm him." With a smile on her countenance, in a few minutes, without a lingering groan, her happy spirit winged its way to the regions of eternal blessedness.

DAVID KITCHEN.

4. In honour of the Redeemer, as evidence of the triumph of faith, as a stimulus to saints, and as a check to infidels, the following fruits of the grace of God, evinced by MARY ANN COWLING, wife of Thomas Cowling, of Filey, who died 29th August 1861, in the fifty-third year of her age, are adduced.

Mrs. Cowling was born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 1808. Her father died when she was very young, and her mother removed to Yarmouth, in Norfolk. At the age of sixteen, she was put to service, and it was her happiness, through Divine providence, to live with a pious mistress who took much interest in her welfare, endeavouring to lead her mind to Jesus. She attended class as a seeker of salvation for four years and a half before she obtained a clear sense of God's pardoning mercy.

At the age of twenty-one, she heard a sermon preached by Rev. Samuel Atterby, when it pleased the Lord to reveal Himself more fully to her mind, and she found peace and joy in believing.

At the age of twenty-eight, she obtained a larger measure of Divine grace, a deeper baptism of the Holy Spirit, which she enjoyed through the remainder of her life; the evidence of which was manifested in her exemplary Christian conduct.

Mrs. Cowling was a firm believer in Divine Providence, and when her husband had put into Grimsby, after a heavy storm, in which he suffered great loss, she wrote to him a letter full of consolation, urging him to trust in the Lord. Many times since their union has she comforted her now bereaved husband, when under severe trial. Faithful in her household, she was very solicitous for the welfare of her children; knowing the excellency of true religion, she felt it indispensable to train them up in the fear of the Lord, and she had the happiness of seeing two of her daughters converted to God, and in church fellowship.

A son, sixteen years of age, has attended our class for some time. His love for the religion of his parents has led him in early life to give his heart to the Lord, while of the youngest daughter, it may be said, from a child she has known the Scripture.

The word of God was our sister's treasury, and she derived strength and consolation from its gracious invitations and precious promises, always finding some text of scripture suited to her need. The book of Psalms was marrow and fatness to her soul. She was an extensive reader, and having much time at her disposal, she assiduously employed it in gaining knowledge in Divine things.

Not less was her attention to the duties of the closet. She loved to commune with God in private, and she seldom engaged in ordinary matters without asking counsel of the Lord. Her class was a banquet. Her delight was in the company of God's people. Her confidence in the Lord was firm, her zeal unabating, in her labours of love she was untiring. She often spoke of herself in the most humiliating terms, confessing her unworthiness. Her language was "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength; He also hath become my salvation. O that He may work in me to will and to do of His good pleasure."

She had a good hope through grace, and could rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. A few Sabbaths before her dissolution, the leader opened the meeting with the hymn—

"I know that my Redeemer lives," &c.

Her soul seemed lifted from earth to heaven, and she exclaimed with much emphasis, "Bless Him, bless Him—I believe—I do believe—Hallelujah, praise thē Lamb; my Jesus is mine, and I am His."

She was constant and punctual in her attendance at all the ordinances of Divine worship. No vain excuse kept her from her seat in the house of God. Her custom was to attend the prayer-meetings after the preaching service, unless she was visited by affliction. Her prayers in public were characterised by fervour and zeal. When penitents were crying for mercy, she was an earnest pleader on their behalf; and when they obtained pardon and peace through believing on Jesus, her soul was filled with joy. Nothing so rejoiced her heart as the prosperity of Zion.

On Sunday, August 4th, 1861, she attended class in the afternoon, though seriously indisposed in body, but she remained to the close of the service. She also attended service at the Cliff top, and in the chapel that evening; and she remained at the prayer-meeting after the preaching service.

On Monday, the 5th, she was taken very ill, and she got worse till she closed her earthly career on the 29th of the same month. She suffered severely from acute pain, yet she bore it with the most dignified composure and resignation of mind; not a murmur was ever heard to pass her lips. When asked by her daughter if she wanted anything, she replied, "Nothing, dear, but supporting grace; but my God shall supply all my need."

When spoken to by her nurse relative to her suffering: "Suffering, dear," she said; "it is nothing to the suffering my Saviour endured for me. Oh the preciousness of Jesus, I feel He is precious." The wonderful scheme of redemption, the love of God in Christ Jesus, was her constant theme of contemplation and admiration. She frequently repeated the 76th hymn in our hymn book:

"Behold, what wondrous love and grace," &c. Her prospects of heaven were bright and cheering. She begged her husband would not prolong her stay, as she feared he was doing by his prayers for her life to be spared. She said, "Why don't you give me up, and let me go home?" When her children wept, she said, "Why weep? I am going to Jesus; my Jesus bids me come. Let me go to Jesus, which is far better."

Brother Austerbury visited her several times during her affliction, and always found her happy and desirous to die and go to Jesus. She gave up her husband and children into the hands of the Lord, and met her last enemy apparently without fear. The grace and love of Jesus had extracted the sting of death, and disarmed him of his power; and through faith in Christ she was more than a conqueror.

On the 1st September, 1861, her mortal remains were borne to their last resting place, followed by a large number of relatives and friends. Her husband has lost a dutiful and affectionate wife, and her children a loving and endeared mother.

JAMES DINNEWELL

5. MARTHA PUGH, the subject of this brief sketch was born at Raby, in 1815. At a very early age she was bereaved of her mother; but her father married again, and happily made choice of a godly woman, a Wesleyan, and she took those intrusted to her care with her to the house of God. But Martha did not receive any particular impression until she was about eighteen years of age. She was then taken by her parents to a Primitive Methodist camp-meeting, held at Willaston; where she was convinced of sin, and impressions were made, which though long borne resulted in her conversion to God. A revival subsequently broke out at Willaston, in which several young people got converted to God, one of the number being Brother Pugh, who now lives to mourn his loss.

A watch-night according to arrangement was held, and our departed sister found her way to it, and in the prayer-meeting after twelve o'clock, Mr. Pugh went to her and found her sorrowing on account of her sins. He spoke to her, and directed her to Jesus as her Saviour; they prayed with her, and she praying for herself yielded her heart with humble submission to God, and believed on Christ as her Saviour, and her life evinced the change. The Wesleyans having a class in her father's house, which was about a mile and a half from our society, it was thought most prudent for her to cast in her lot with them, so she did, and continued a steady and devoted member with them, until united in marriage to Brother Pugh. Then, of course, she came home again and joined our society, in which she continued until she was taken to join the society in heaven. She did not manifest any extraordinary talents to recommend her to a more public sphere of labour; but although we can say nothing relative to our departed sister which appears great, yet to say the least of her, she was a Christian, and her dignity lay in the solidity of her piety. In February, 1858, she had an attack of pleurisy, which gave her constitution a shock, the effects of which she felt through life, and which only terminated in her death.

In May, 1858, the family removed to Sangall, where she finished her earthly career. Greasby, being a small neglected village, about three-quarters of a mile from Brother Pugh's house, became the field of his spiritual labours. He commenced preaching, and very soon formed a class in which undertaking his wife rendered him all the assistance she possibly could, still manifesting the same unflinching zeal and attachment to God's cause, and as before, she delighted to receive and entertain the messenger of mercy. Her house was a happy home for the preachers at any time, and their comfort was her delight; she ever bade them welcome and sought to enhance their happiness. On my arriving in this circuit last July, I found her very ill, and calling one day about tea time she gave me a hearty welcome to take a cup of tea, "but," said she, "the only thing is I cannot get about to make you more comfortable."

Though her health was so precarious her seat was seldom vacant at chapel, her love was too warm to be frozen by a storm—yea, such was her zeal for God's house, that her husband says, he had to push her up a little hill they had to ascend. But ah, how short is life! In February, 1861, she was seized with pleurisy which confined her to the house; and it was supposed it threw her into a consumption. About May, the doctor gave up all hope of her recovery; her partner conveyed the news to her, and she calmly and peacefully gave herself into the hands of the Lord. On seeing her husband weep, she said, "Do not fret." Thinking that her husband had not fully given her up, she pressed him very much to do so; that was a struggle, but, by grace divine he conquered, and was able to give her fully up to the Lord, knowing that his loss would be her infinite gain.

On the Saturday previous to her death, she became rather unconscious, but continued to manifest her confidence in God; and though she suffered more than it is possible to describe, she had her seasons of happiness: she said to one by her side, "Heaven is worth suffering for." On the Sunday morning she was heard to say, "Jesus, my Lord, remember me, Jesus is mine." Towards night it was evident she was dying, her countenance brightened, her eyes sunk, and her frame yielded to the destroyer's power, and again she said with an tone of unusual sweetness, "Bless the Lord." And in the profound silence of the midnight hour with untold sweetness and emphasis, she said, "Lord, receive me," and in a few minutes, she crossed the Jordan without a single struggle, Sunday, September 9th, 1861. By her death we have lost a faithful member, a mother in Israel, and Brother Pugh has lost an affectionate wife. Dear reader, that you, I, and the bereaved ones, may meet her in heaven, is the prayer of

THOMAS SALMON BATEMAN.

6. ELEANOR KEENLYSIDE was born in 1808, at Ebechester, Shotley Bridge Circuit, and departed this life at Seaham, Sunderland Circuit, September 20th, 1861. Her parents were pious, and sought to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and Eleanor was restrained from those pleasures which too often gain the attention of youth. She, however, remained destitute of the power of religion till she was about forty years of age. Soon after her removal to Seaham, in 1848, she sought the Lord with her whole heart, and entered into fellowship with us. She was highly respected among the members and her friends for her consistency. She was scrupulously honest. Being of a nervous temperament, she was subject to occasional despondencies, and at those times, she was afraid she should fail to lay hold on eternal life. But when the time of her departure was at hand, she manifested greater patience and fortitude than was expected. She was strong in the Lord. Her greatest trial was to give up her husband and her only son. After a painful struggle, she said, "Not my will, but Thine be done." On the day of her death she was unusually happy. A few hours before she expired, she called together her family and friends to engage in prayer. Soon after, looking up into heaven, she shouted, "Hallelujah to—" but her speech failed. She passed away to commence the anthem with the great multitude which stand before the throne and before the Lamb. J. WAITE.

7. SARAH POWELL, late of Birmingham, died September 12th, 1861, in the seventy-eighth year of her age. During the early part of her life, she went with her parents to the established church, and continued the practice after she left her father's house; but she remained a stranger to vital godliness until 1826. Some time in that year, she went on a visit to her parents, who resided at Butler's Bank, Pres. Green Circuit. She found a new order of things in her father's house and in the neighbourhood. The Primitive Methodist ministers had visited that part, and the Lord had used them in the conversion of many souls, among whom were her father and mother, and several of her brothers and sisters. This made a very deep impression on Sarah's mind, and on her return to Birmingham, she sought and found the place in which our brethren preached—an old room in Balloon Street, where she obtained peace and joy through believing. Having given her heart to God, sister Powell united with the small society, and opened her house as a home for the servants of God. Her attendance at the means of grace was regular for thirty-five years. At home she gave proof that she possessed the Spirit of Christ. Her solicitude for the salvation of her children was ardent, and these pious efforts resulted in the conversion of her three sons, all of whom have been local preachers in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. The youngest of the three is now with us in Birmingham, a local preacher, and a class-leader of about seventy members. Sister Powell was a person of little ceremony and but of few words, which were generally pointed and full of meaning. Her experience was often told in the following laconic manner:—"I love Jesus above all things, and intend to serve Him as long as I live." This she exemplified in health and sickness, and He whom she loved and served filled her cup of joy to overflowing. I have known our departed friend for more than twenty-eight years. I visited her in her last illness, and found her rejoicing in hope of the glory of God.

The subject of the above brief lines was the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Higginson, whose house at Butler's Bank was often a home for the founders and fathers of our beloved connexion, for nearly forty years, and in which hundreds of souls have been converted to God. Persons in distress went for many miles round to be converted there. He who blessed the house of Obed-Edom for the sake of the ark, blessed Mr. and Mrs. Higginson in their own conversion, and the conversion of nearly all their sons and daughters, grand-sons and grand-daughters, besides the wives and husbands of those who have entered into matrimonial connections. Such a Primitive Methodist family as theirs it has not been my privilege to know. JAMES PRITCHARD.

8. ROBERT DALKIN, of Barnard Castle, was born February 26th, 1835, and departed this life, September 17th, 1861. As soon as his parents deemed it prudent, he was taken to the house of God, and shortly after he became a scholar in our

Sabbath-school, and when of proper age, he was raised to the office of a teacher, and the light he had received he gave forth to others. During 1853, his sister (whose obituary appeared in the Magazine for December of that year), was laid upon a bed of affliction. During the time of her affliction, she spoke to her brother Robert faithfully and affectionately about his salvation. Robert received her teachings, and accepted of Christ as his Saviour. After his conversion, he took great interest in the Sabbath-school, and was highly esteemed by teachers and scholars. He filled the office of librarian in connection with the school. He was for many years afflicted, and his affliction towards the latter part of his life was very severe; but he never murmured, nor wished his sufferings less. Since coming to Barnard Castle, I visited him frequently, and always found him calm and peaceful, resting on the sure foundation laid in Zion. The day previous to his death, I administered the ordinance of the Lord's supper to him, and we received a gracious manifestation of the Saviour's presence. The next morning he died in peace. May his death, as was his life, be a blessing to the society and the family of which he was a member. HENRY PRATT.

9. MRS. MARTHA PARRY, of Hetherstone Green, Whitchurch Circuit, exchanged mortality for life on the 7th of September, 1861, in the sixty-second year of her age. Although her family belonged to the established church, she was led by the good Spirit in early life to hear the gospel preached among the Independents, at Barton. Being of a serious turn of mind the minister prevailed upon her to become a teacher in a Sabbath-school, which office she held for several years, until her brother, Mr. Charles Shaw, was converted at a meeting held at Hob Hill, then a part of Burland Circuit; after which she became a regular worshipper among us. She did not however join the society for some time: being of a very timid, retiring disposition, she was not perhaps sought after with sufficient earnestness and perseverance, if at all. There are many instances of such inattention, through which immortal souls are left to face the common foe, and fight the battle of life for years, without the succour and support of church fellowship.

About sixteen or seventeen years ago she was united in marriage with Mr. John Parry, who at that time resided at Chorley; and had long been a local preacher in Burland Circuit. She then became a member of our society at Chorley, and a more decided Christian, growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. She manifested a deep interest in the welfare of the cause which she had espoused; shewing much care for, and kindness to, the preachers especially. In this respect she was "a succourer of many, and of myself also. She was an apt representative of "a great woman" named in the 2 Kings, iv. 8-10, only her preparations were no doubt much more modern and inviting than "a little chamber on the wall; a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick;" of those olden times.

Her health for several years was not very good; but a short time before her departure she became much worse. The best medical aid was procured, but in vain—the solemn decree had gone forth—and by a law much more sure than that of the Medes and Persians, her days were numbered. Her sufferings quickly and greatly increased—death and eternity approached with hasty strides, and seemed to hem her in on every side. Amid these scenes of languishment her mind was for some time much beclouded, which led her to deep searchings of heart. "O what should I do!" she said, "if I had religion to seek now! But I feel I am in Christ, and have been for many years." When labouring for breath, Mr. P. asked if she wanted anything. She said, "A little more breath to praise Jesus." They joined in prayer and the blessing so much desired was mercifully granted. The cloud burst, and she praised her great Deliverer, saying, "she would do as others had done, when she did not feel, she would believe." On Miss Barry asking how she was, she replied: "getting on for glory." During her affliction, she besought all who visited her to secure religion and meet her in heaven.

Her end on earth drew near; but the great work of preparation was done, death found her "with her lamp trimmed," she had looked forward to, and wisely prepared for this solemn hour, her house was in order, her hope was in heaven. Oh! how unlike the multitude, "who give to time eternity's regard: and dreaming take their passage for their port;" putting off the great work until "a more convenient season." And when overtaken by affliction and death, all is undone: earth has had in their hearts, and hopes, and efforts, the place of heaven; the shadows of time have concealed the realities of eternity, and amid blasted and forlorn hopes their changeless doom is sealed.

"Tell me some god, my guardian angel tell
What thus i. fates—what enchantment plants
The phantom of an age 'twixt us;
Death already at the door."

But she was ready, she heard the prancing of the pale horse, and saw the face of his ghastly rider without alarm. Her sun set broad and bright, without a cloud: leaving a sure testimony behind her, to console the minds and dry the tears of surviving friends, that she has gone to be for ever with the Lord. I committed her mortal remains to the dust of death in our cemetery at Brown Knowl, "In sure and certain hope of the resurrection to eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

THOMAS BATRMAN.

10. MRS. ELIZABETH HOWLETT was born at Great Witchingham, in the county of Norfolk, January 7th. 1799, and changed mortality for everlasting life, September 21st, 1861.

She was the subject of religious impressions from childhood, and gave her heart to God in "the days of her youth." The Wesleyans were instrumental in her conversion; she became a member of their society and remained in church fellowship with that body till her marriage. Her husband being a Primitive Methodist, she at once joined our people, and has adorned the doctrine of her God and Saviour throughout her life. During her early religious experience, she met with some opposition from her parents, who were living "without God and without hope in the world," but she continued "patient in well-doing," pressing on towards the mark and prize of her high calling.

For nearly thirty years their house has been a home for the preachers, and to her it was no small happiness to entertain the servants of God.

She was a diligent and frugal wife, and a most affectionate parent, making the salvation of her children the object of her heart's desire and prayer, which God has graciously granted.

Her affliction was of a very painful nature, arising from tumour and cancer formed internally; and which continued nearly four years. At times her sufferings were excruciating; yet she murmured not. During the two years that I have known her, I always found her in a peaceful state of mind, resting alone on the merits of a crucified Redeemer for salvation. Her confidence was unshaken, and death brought no terror to her mind—she felt no dread at its approach, for her it had lost its sting. The last time I saw her previous to her departure, she asked me to sing the hymn beginning with,

"Now I have found the ground wherein," &c., in which she joined as well as her failing strength would permit. And then with great fervour praised God for all his goodness to her, recalling the blessings of early life when first she knew the Lord, and after preserving her through her pilgrimage, now raising so many kind friends to comfort and support her in affliction, not the least of which was the unwearied attention of her dear husband and children.

As her bodily strength decayed, her confidence in Christ waxed stronger, and her evidence became more bright. At length "worn by slowly rolling years" of suffering she fell asleep in Jesus, in the hope of a joyful resurrection.

JOHNATHAN SCOTT.

11. MARTHA WEDLOCK, daughter of James and Rebecca Cole, Marrickville, near Sydney, New South Wales, formerly of Clavering, in the Saffron Walden Circuit, was born in 1833. Her parents were distinguished for their piety; their chief delight was to bring souls to Jesus, and to assist them to obtain a knowledge of the forgiveness of their sins through faith in Him. Martha, as well as many others, was favoured with a blessed interest in their Christian deportment, Scriptural teachings, and fervent prayers, which contributed towards her salvation, and which blessing she realized when she was ten years of age. She forthwith united with the Primitive Methodist Connection, and continued a member thereof until she was necessitated to go to service, and then, being distant from the means of grace, &c., her membership ceased. Nevertheless she retained her Christian consistency. In 1855, she with the rest of the family left her native land for New South Wales, but she did not do as many have done who have professed religion at home, but who land here without God and without hope. No, amidst all the vicissitudes, temptations, and spiritual privations of a sixteen thousand miles voyage, she still held fast the beginning of her confidence; in her native land, on the mighty deep, and in New South Wales, Martha gave ample proof that she loved the Saviour. When offers were made inviting her to change her station in life, she sought the counsel of her parents, and repeatedly said she would rather die than bring any disgrace on the cause of Christ. Ultimately she was married to him who now laments his loss. But affliction soon interrupted their joy, and this fair flower soon began to wither. For fifteen months she suffered very much, but it was with the greatest patience. She felt her own unworthiness and often testified that she had merited infinitely more than she endured, and that her Saviour had suffered much more for her than she could suffer. At times the adversary of her soul fought hard against her, dark clouds occasionally obscured her sky, but she invariably sought and obtained victory through faith in the blood of Jesus.

During her affliction she was visited by her minister, leader, class-mates, and several of the members from Newtown, and many other friends to whom she gave the most convincing evidence that she was a child of God. No one could listen to her praising her Saviour, witness her humility, patience, resignation, and reliance on the promises of Jehovah, and gaze upon her cheerful look whilst she repeatedly exclaimed, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with Thy likeness," without being convinced of the power and value of godliness. On Saturday, August 10th, 1861, Martha Wedlock exchanged a world of sorrow for a crown of endless life. Her funeral sermon was preached in Marrickville Chapel by the writer, August 18th, to a large, attentive, and deeply affected congregation, and two souls professed to find salvation.

JABEZ LANGFORD.

12. MARIA, the daughter of Mark and Grace Lucas, of Ossett Common, Wakefield Circuit, was born July 26th, 1838, and died July 19th, 1861. Thus it will be perceived that she was young, but she had attained decision of character, and more, she enjoyed religion. She was early instructed in the ways of the Lord, firstly, at home, her parents being members of our society; and secondly, in the Sabbath School at Ossett Common, which she entered at a tender age. The effects of these religious facilities more particularly appeared about five years ago, when she openly decided for Christ, gave her heart and youth to God, and joined our Society. From that time she continued steadfast in doctrine, fellowship, and prayers, evincing the genuineness of her piety by abstinence from worldly gaiety, by industry, and by a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. For about the same length of time that she was a member she was also one of our principal missionary collectors. She promised fair for future usefulness in the Church, but these works were cut short (no doubt in righteousness) by Him whose kingdom ruleth over all. Being constitutionally delicate, Maria soon fell a victim to disease. Consumption at first stealthily, and at last fiercely, bore her downward to the tomb.

The Rev. E. Illingworth, who (previous to his itinerancy) was a teacher in the same Sabbath-school, and a member of the same society as our young sister, says he often visited her during the last week of her life, and always found her trusting in Jesus. She was a stranger to fear, her heart was full of peace and love. She knew the frail tenement was decaying fast, but Christ had died for her, and through Him she knew the Father was reconciled. Hence death had no terrors for her in the future, to her eye of faith there appeared "joy behind joy in endless perspective." About two hours before her death she became very restless, she could neither sit up nor lie down. But in her last agonies she had breath to say, though in faintest whispers, "Christ is precious," and "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly," and come He did and quickly too, for in a few moments the heart and pulse were still, and the spirit hasted to be for ever with the Lord.

J. AYTON.

13. THOMAS MORGAN, of Blaenavon, in the Pontypool circuit, departed this life for a better on the 25th of August, 1861. For nineteen years he had been afflicted and bedridden. Whilst in that condition he was brought to a knowledge of his state as a sinner, and also of sins forgiven. Our people were about to hold a camp-meeting in the town, and were processioning the streets, when Brother E. Hancock gave out the hymn beginning with—

"There is a fountain filled with blood, Drawn from Immanuel's veins."

The words reached his ear, and the Holy Spirit conveyed them to his heart, and taught him his need of a Saviour. The week following Brother Hancock visited him, and whilst praying with him, both he and his wife obtained peace through believing in Jesus. He at once united with us in church fellowship, and for seventeen years he was a consistent Christian. His life from the date of his conversion was one of faith in the Son of God. Though unable to read himself, by others reading to him he acquired such a knowledge of Scripture that he was able to repeat almost any passage of the sacred volume, and to tell us where it was to be found. The promises of Jesus were his continual support throughout his affliction, and when he came to the close of his career, he called around him his family, bade them farewell, and said, "On the cross Jesus died for me, All is well, I am going home, Hallelujah." He died the following morning, which was Sunday, and passed from an earthly Sabbath to that eternal rest above, where in the temple not made with hands, he worships before the throne.

CHARLES P. MAGER.

14. Died, at Downham Market, Norfolk, September 29th, 1861, HANNAH, the beloved wife of John KEMP, in the sixty-first year of her age. She was born at Dairy Houses, near Littleport, in 1801. In early life she was led by her parents to the Wesleyan Chapel, but although she was often the subject of religious impressions, yet it was not till 1821 that she gave herself to the Lord. At once she became a member of society, and when the Primitives missioned that neighbourhood, she united with them, and remained a steady, consistent member till her death. She was married in 1832, and came to reside on the Ten-mile bank (Hilgay). To our infant cause at this place she was rendered a great blessing, in teaching the rising generation, and collecting moneys for the erection of a new chapel and other benevolent purposes. Being naturally of a cheerful disposition, and a consistent character, she gained the esteem of both old and young. Under her hospitable roof the messengers of mercy always found a hearty welcome and a happy home. She rejoiced in the prosperity of Zion, and was ever ready to assist in any way to promote its welfare. Her attendance at the means of grace was regular and punctual, never allowing her seat in the house of God to be vacant if she could be there. She loved the gates of Zion. The affliction which terminated her earthly existence was cancer in the breast; at times her sufferings were very great, yet she was very cheerful and perfectly resigned to the will of God. She often said, "I hope I shall not murmur, I wish to suffer patiently all my Heavenly Father's will." The last three months she was confined to her bed, during which time she was occasionally the subject of very powerful temptations. The enemy of her soul thrust sore at her, still she knew in whom she had believed, and though she did not experience that ecstasy which some dying Christians have realized, yet she enjoyed at times that passive, holy resignation which enabled her to exclaim, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil. Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." As she drew near her end, she exhorted all present to live to God and meet her in heaven. Some of her last words were "Salvation! Happiness! Hallelujah! Praise the Lord! I am on the brink of the river. I shall soon be on the other side, at home in my Father's house, then I shall sing more sweetly, more loudly, and Christ shall be my song." She retained her consciousness till about the last hour, and when no longer able to speak she moved her head and her lips. But the sands of life were nearly run out, death came, and was a welcome messenger; without a sigh or a struggle the weary wheels of life stood still, and her happy spirit passed away to brighter worlds above. May we all meet her again in glory. Amen.

M. HAMMOND.

15. JONAH COTTBELL, late of Tunstall circuit, the subject of the following remarks, was born at Bradley Green, near Tunstall, North Staffordshire, in 1839, and departed this life, September 30th, 1861.

He became a scholar in our Sabbath-school, at the age of about two and a half years, and continued to attend it until his health declined. From a boy he was the subject of religious impressions, was peaceable and charitable; he said before he died he did not remember having told a wilful lie but once, and that was when he was a little boy.

About 1850, while special services were being held, there was a great revival among the Sabbath scholars, and our departed friend embraced the Saviour, and soon after became a member of our society. His general conduct from that time was mild, gentle, and becoming; he did not exert himself like some in the means of grace; yet he always seemed firm and steadfast. One trait worthy of remark in his general deportment was, he never eat or drank whether at meals, or otherwise, without asking a blessing before doing so, and he was never in a public-house but twice, except when attending his club. He was very fond of music and singing, he often sang—

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow," &c. and another of his favourite hymns was, "Shall we ever all meet again?" &c.

He became a teacher in our school, and his attendance to the duties of his office was very creditable; he was a lover of the Sabbath-school. A few days before his death he said to the superintendent, "O, how I should like to do something for the Sunday-school;" and as a token of his love to it, he told his mother she must give a donation to its fund from the money he had saved out of his earnings. He read much; the writer, thinking him competent to become an exhorter on the preacher's plan, proposed him with two others at the March quarter day, 1861, and his name appeared on the plan as an exhorter; but he was not able to attend his appointments, and this seemed to cause him deep anxiety of mind, yet he did not murmur at his lot, only that he had not let his light shine more brilliantly. I visited him several times during his illness, and I found he was almost constantly on his knees engaged in prayer; and precious seasons we have seen my visits. His advice, as he was dying, was "Tell the young men of Bradley Green to stick to the Lord." We believe, had he lived, he would have been useful in persuading sinners to turn to the Lord, but God's ways are not our ways. As death approached he was very much tempted, but by prayer and faith he broke through the temptation. Just before he died he read a chapter in the New Testament, and after he had read it he commented on it to his friends, and the glory of God filled the place. The last words he was heard to say were "Victory, victory!" and after a struggle his soul fled to the mansion of light.

THOMAS PHILLIPS.

16. Died recently, in Christian triumph, at Shotley Bridge, in the County of Durham, EDWARD DAWSON, aged seventy-one.

Our departed brother was born August 6th, 1790, at Stiford Highborns, Northumberland. He lived after the course of this world till about thirty-six years ago. At that time the Primitive Methodist missionaries visited the neighbourhood in which he resided, when he was induced to hear them, and under their ministry he was soon brought to see and feel his lost condition as a sinner, and he then fled to the hope set before him in the Gospel.

Having given his heart to God, he gave his hand to the Church. He united with our society, at Shotley Bridge, and remained a consistent member till the great Master called him from the church on earth to join the church in heaven.

Brother John Brodie says, "I have met in the same class with Brother Dawson, about thirty-three years, and I always found him to be a Christian. He was naturally very diffident, and in his class he had not much to say, but in a few words he was wont to give utterance to sound, deep, Christian experience, and in his general deportment he was "a bright and shining light." He was strongly attached to the cause of God, and willingly supported it according to his ability. He loved the house of prayer, and when health permitted he was regular in his attendance at the means of grace.

I visited him in his last affliction, and found him in great bodily suffering, but patient, fully resigned to his Heavenly Father's will, and happy in the love of his Saviour. A short time before he died he had a severe conflict with the enemy of souls, but whilst a portion of the Scriptures was being read to him, he took hold of the promises by faith, and vanquished the foe. The last words he was heard to utter were "Glory! glory!"

and his happy spirit took its flight to the paradise of God, September 20th, 1861.

WILLIAM NATION.

17. ELLEN SMITH, of Hutton, Driffield Circuit, departed this life, September 30th, 1861, aged eighty-six years. She was a member of our society at Hutton above forty years. When she sought the Lord it was with strong cries and tears. Her sorrow for sin was deep and her struggle for pardon severe. She succeeded at length in obtaining peace and joy through believing. Being one of the earliest members of our society, she along with her pious husband and many others in similar circumstances had to endure much persecution. But she stood firm to the last, and she was more than conqueror. She acquired strength and joy in conflict, and she entered heaven as her Father's house. In going, she did not dread it as a strange place, but she went as though she was going home.

E. TYAS.

18. MARTHA TASKER was born in 1776, at Crew Green, in Cheshire, and finished a life of labour at Hooley-bridge, Glossop Circuit, October 7th, 1861. For fifty years she lived a life of estrangement from Christ. Some of the pioneers of Primitive Methodism preached Jesus and the resurrection in the dales of Derbyshire with amazing success. The glorious truths of our holy religion were enforced with a pathos and power which led many sinners to "turn to the Lord and seek salvation." Martha Tasker was one of the early trophies of those good old times. Through the labours of Mr. Blades our departed sister was brought to know Jesus. She never saw herself as she did while this "new comer" was holding forth the word of life. The Gospel as preached by him was a sword to wound and a balm to heal. And she found Christ "the way, the truth, and the life." She joined the infant cause, and without intermission she continued with us till the day of her death.

In dress Martha was a real "Friend." She was warmly attached to the minister of religion, and was ever ready to cheer them with her presence, and help them with her prayers. Many of my brethren in the ministry will remember "old Martha" at Waterside. Her conversation was such as becometh the Gospel. Those who were favoured with her friendship will not soon forget with what animation she was wont to relate the doings of olden times. She would talk of preachers and their early conflicts, and then finish a lengthy episode without a good shout of "Victory," or "Glory be to God."

She walked in close fellowship with the Lord, and those who knew her best bear testimony of her genuine worth. Her sickness, which was only of a few days, furnished a beautiful illustration of the power of Divine grace. Rich and poor, young and old, gathered round her bed, expecting to witness a more than ordinary triumph in so extraordinary a character. Her path brightened to the very last, and in full triumph she received the "well done" of Him whom she had served with Christian assiduity for thirty-five years. We do not know the date of her conversion, but it is in the register of heaven. I improved her death in our chapel at Waterside, and fifteen souls professed to obtain mercy. Praise the Lord.

MILES DICKENSON.

19. Died at Bilston, in the thirty-second year of her age, September 10th, 1861, the late Mrs. JANE TAYLOR, wife of Mr. John Taylor, one of our local preachers.

In early life she was religiously inclined, and took great pleasure in attending the house of God. Her disposition was amiable, but she remained a stranger to experimental religion, until under the ministry of the Rev. James Caughey, she was brought to a saving knowledge of God. From that time her path was as the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

Her leader, Mr. Thomas Wallett, says, "Her punctuality in attending her class and her Christian experience were commendable. I visited her," he adds, "several times during her affliction, and she fully satisfied me that she was ready for her change."

Dr. J. B. Melson, of Birmingham, with whose father she lived for several years, speaks of her in very high terms. He says, "Jane Hickson (her maiden name) lived for many years with my dear father, by whom as by all of us she was held in the highest estimation for her singular integrity and virtue. He had such an esteem for Jane that at his decease he expressed a wish that a hundred pounds should be given to her in token of his regard—a debt which I need not say I gladly discharged on his as well as on her own account. She was in every respect an excellent woman and a sincere Christian."

May all the friends of the deceased, with the writer of this brief account, and those who may read it, meet in heaven. Amen.

SAMUEL MORRIS.

20. Died at Hereford, October 11th, 1861, SARAH VAUGHAN, aged sixty-seven years. She was born at Bodenham, Herefordshire, in 1794. Her parents were in comfortable circumstances, and of good moral character, her father being a consistent member of the Church of England, and her mother a pious member of the Wesleyan Society. Consequently, Sarah was by the instructions, prayers, and good example of home preserved from many sins in which youth often take pleasure. She was very moral in her deportment, but remained a stranger to saving grace till 1830, when, under the ministry of Mr. W. Leaker, she became alive to her need of salvation, and was led to seek forgiveness of her sins through faith in Jesus Christ. She soon found the pearl of great price, and rejoiced in the God of her salvation.

Sarah at once identified herself with our society in Hereford, and continued a consistent member thereof, till she was removed to the heavenly world. When the society was small, and had to struggle with considerable difficulties, our departed sister was active and useful, in supporting the cause to the extent of her ability, and she was also zealous in collecting money with cards or books, to aid the various funds of the Connexion. In this last respect she was generally successful.

In 1827 she was united in marriage with Mr. Vaughan, who now, with two children, mourns her departure.

About two years ago sister Vaughan was seized with paralysis, and shortly after with a heavier stroke, which disabled her from attending the public means of grace. She often felt, however, that God reveals Himself very graciously to His afflicted ones in their own abode. On October 9th, 1861, she was taken much worse, and losing her speech and consciousness, in that state she lay, taking no notice of any one, and apparently without any suffering, till Friday, October 11th, when her blood-washed spirit took its flight to the better land.

She was a member of our society about thirty-one years. That her husband and children may meet her in heaven, is the prayer of,
JOHN BUTCHER.

21. THOMAS CARTER, of Watchfield, Farringden Circuit, closed his eyes on earth to open them in heaven, October 12th, 1861, in the seventy-second year of his age, after being a consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion twenty-three years, and a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks for twelve years.

The Spirit of God brought him under a concern about his soul, through the ministry of the Rev. Henry Heys, when Watchfield was visited by the pioneers of Primitive Methodism.

After mourning in bitterness of soul for about six months, he attended one of our meetings at Bourton-on-the-Hill, and there by believing in Jesus, he found peace to his troubled soul.

At the age of nineteen he enlisted into the army, in which service he suffered many hardships. He was in the battle of Bayonne in 1813. In that field of blood more than 4,000 lives were lost. He was wounded and taken prisoner; but God in His kind providence soon delivered him out of the hands of his enemies, and restored him to his fatherland, where he was placed in Chelsea Hospital. After remaining for two months he received his discharge from the army, and returned into Berkshire, his native county, to live with his relations, soon after which he entered the married state. But alas! he was still a slave to sin, and he continued alien from God for some time, but subsequently by Divine grace his heart was changed, and from that time to the day of his death, he remained steadfast in the faith. He was indeed "a new creature in Christ Jesus, and walked not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

As a husband and a father he was kind, gentle, and affectionate. As a neighbour, "he lived by the Christian's rule, loving his neighbour as himself," and was anxious to do good; sometimes when sin was manifested by his neighbours, he exhorted them with tears to turn from it, saying, "Oh! why don't you repent? Why do you live in sin? Why don't you fly to Christ? Oh! if you live and die in such a state there will be no heaven for you." He loved all and was respected and loved by all who knew him. As a Christian he loved God with all his heart, was much devoted to prayer, was constant at his class-meetings and other religious services. He often said, "the word of God was sweeter to him than his natural food." He rejoiced evermore, and in all things gave thanks, insomuch that the children of the village gave him the appellation of "Happy Tommy." He was a great friend to the cause of God; the Primitive Methodists preached in his house at Watchfield for nearly eighteen years, and to his home the servants of God were always welcome. For several weeks previous to his death it was his conviction that he should die suddenly. On the day of his death he had been in the fields at work during the former part of the day, and coming home to dinner he seemed as well as usual, ate a hearty dinner, and went into the garden, singing,—

"The sweat of death is on my brow, All is well:
My feet are in the river now—All is well," &c.
And going into a barn that was close by the garden, he fell in a fit, and the bright angels came and took his happy spirit home to glory. And thus,—

"Without a lingering groan,
He did his body with his charge lay down,
And ceased at once to work and live!"

He had ten children already in heaven, to welcome him on his arrival. He has left an aged widow and four children behind to mourn their loss.

JOHN TUCK.

22. Died at Castleside, Shotley Bridge Circuit, October 17th, 1861, ELIZABETH LEE, aged thirty-four years.

From her childhood she was moral in her deportment, but she lived without God till about twelve months ago, when she was awakened to feel her lost condition as a sinner, and she fled to the Saviour, in whom by faith she obtained redemption, even the forgiveness of her sins.

She united in church-membership with our society at Castleside, and remained a consistent member till she was called to join the triumphant Church in heaven.

She was the subject of a long and painful affliction, by which her faith was tried, and she was often prevented from attending the means of grace, but she bore her sufferings patiently, and possessed unwavering confidence in her heavenly Father.

Brother Mole, her leader, often visited her, and always found her happy in the love of God.

A short time before she died, she received a visit from the Rev. R. Shields, who found her very weak in body and hastening rapidly towards the grave, but she was ripe for glory, and waiting for her change.

She took her last farewell of her children, gave them her dying blessing, and committed them to the care of her heavenly Father, then turning to her husband, she said, "Matthew, prepare to meet me in heaven." Her last words were, "I am waiting for my change, I shall soon be in heaven, Jesus is sweet," and she fell asleep in the Lord.

She has left a husband and two children to mourn their loss.

23. Died at Hull, October 16th, 1861, Miss MARY JANE BROWN, daughter of Mr. H. Brown, aged twenty-one years. Her father being a teacher in West Street School, she early became a scholar therein, being admitted when she was about five years of age. She regularly attended as a scholar till she was of sufficient age to become a teacher, when she at once began to discharge the duties of the office, and continued to discharge them with acceptance as long as she lived. She early became possessed of the inestimable blessing of vital piety, and by her sobriety, modesty, and consistency adorned the doctrine of God her Saviour. Miss Brown was justly respected and beloved by those who knew her, and her loss is deeply felt by her class-mates and fellow teachers, as well as by her esteemed parents and the scholars who were under her charge. She was hurried to the grave by a fever, which in a few short weeks did its work and terminated her earthly course. But the religion of Jesus soothed her spirit while on her dying couch, and inspired her with the hope of a blissful immortality. It was my privilege to visit her several times during her illness, and I always found her in a satisfactory state of mind, trusting in Christ for salvation, and enjoying a comfortable sense of the Divine favour. She had one severe conflict with the enemy a few days before her death, but she overcame through faith in Jesus, and ultimately died in peace.

JOHN PETTY.

24. Died at Ludgoan, Penzance Circuit, October 31st, 1861, in the thirty-fifth year of his age, JOHN, the son of Henry and Mary CHALLEW. The subject of this sketch neglected the salvation of his soul till about two years since, when he ruptured a blood-vessel, and then he began to think and enquire about the future. In his past life he manifested obedience to his parents, was a lover of all good men, and cheerfully assisted to support the cause of God by his contributions. Yet he was without religion. But after the circumstance above referred to, he sought the Lord, and while his father, who is one of our leaders, and a friend were praying for his salvation, he believed to the saving of his soul. From his affliction he never fully recovered; though he had recourse to the best medical advice, all was of no avail for his body, but his mind was under the care of the good Physician. His last prayer in the chapel, about a fortnight before his death, was remarkably expressive of his confidence in the Lord. From that time he sank into the arms of death, but his joy and confidence were unshaken. and on the 31st of October, 1861, he fell asleep in Jesus.

C. T. HARRIS.

25. Died at Paul, Penzance Circuit, WILLIAM THOMAS, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. Our departed brother was one of our first members at Newlyn, and was a trustee for the chapel at that place.

He was upright in his conduct, firm in his attachment to the cause of God, and held on his Christian course to the end of his journey, with confidence in the Lord.

His sufferings were endured with Christian patience, and on the 3rd of November, 1861, he entered into rest.

1. "FADING AWAY."

Thou art fading away from earth's transient beauty,
For regions undimm'd by the shadows of night;
Thou hast toiled in the arduous pathway of duty,
And glory awaits thee in mansions of light.

Thy spirit, alas! was too pure and ethereal,
To linger with joy on this death-blighted shore;
Thou art passing away to a sphere more congenial,
Where sorrow's sad wail shall assail thee no more.

Life's morn hath not fled, yet a mission most holy,
Hath been traced and fulfilled by thy sanctified mind;
The sunlight of joy hath so seldom beamed o'er thee,
We will not lament that thy star hath declined.

Its beams were too brilliant for the world's slow perfection,
With its atmosphere chilled by the blightings of sin,
'Twas too cold and too dark to reveal the reflection,
Which shone in that form of the soul from within.

At that holiest hour when daylight at evening
Doth silently fade from the azure blue sky,
We shall miss thy low tones while shadows are deep'ning,
But oh! thy pure spirit will oft hover nigh.

Farewell, O beloved one, a diadem fadeless,
Will deck thy fair brow in the regions above;
We dare not repine that God's infinite goodness,
Hath called thee from earth to the home of His love.

2. A HYMN.

"MIGHTY God! while angels bless Thee,
May an infant lisp Thy name?
Lord of men as well as angels,
Thou art every creature's theme.
Hallelujah,
Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Amen.

"Lord of every land and nation,
Ancient of eternal days!
Sounded through the wide creation
Be thy just and lawful praise:
Hallelujah, &c.

"For the grandeur of Thy nature—
Grand beyond a seraph's thought;
For created works of power—
Works with skill and kindness wrought
Hallelujah, &c.

"For Thy providence that governs
Through Thine empire's wide domain;
Wings an angel, guides a sparrow;
Blessed be Thy gentle reign.
Hallelujah, &c.

"But Thy rich, Thy free redemption,
Dark through brightness all along;

Thought is poor, and poor expression—
Who dare sing that awful song?
Hallelujah, &c.

"Brightness of the Father's glory,
Shall Thy praise unuttered lie?
Fly, my tongue, such guilty silence!
Sing the Lord who came to die,
Hallelujah, &c.

"Did archangels sing Thy coming?
Did the shepherds learn their lays?
Shame would cover me ungrateful,
Should my tongue refuse to praise.
Hallelujah, &c.

"From the highest throne in glory,
To the cross of deepest woe;
All to ransom guilty captives:—
Flow, my praise, for ever flow.
Hallelujah, &c.

"Go, return, immortal Saviour!
Leave Thy footstool, take Thy throne;
Thence return, and reign for ever,
Be the kingdom all Thy own
Hallelujah, &c."

BIOGRAPHY.

“Live so as to be missed.”

1. THOMAS HOWARTH, son of John and Martha Howarth, was born at Stake Farm, in the township of Sowerby, parish of Halifax, June, 1799. In early life he attended the Wesleyan Sabbath-school at Luddenden, where he obtained such a measure of learning as fitted him for increased usefulness in after life. In reading the Scriptures he excelled, and was sometimes placed on a form to read as an example to others. He attended religious services at the Wesleyan Chapel, and became familiar with the teachings of Methodism, which tended to enlighten and influence his mind, and which ultimately led to the renovation of his heart and the reformation of his life. Immediately after his conversion he united himself with the people who had been the honoured instruments of his salvation, and for several years he continued to ornament his profession. But he became weary in well-doing, yielded to temptation, fell from grace, and he continued in that wretched state for four or five years.

About 1827 he began to attend Divine service at the Primitive Methodist preaching-room, Mytholmroyd, and was awakened to a sense of his danger under the ministry of the Rev. C. Procter. The text was, “Be sure your sin will find you out;” and it was like a nail fastened in a sure place. The truth accomplished its designed end, so that brother Howarth never rested till he found rest in a crucified Redeemer.

From that time he became a burning and shining light, and made himself useful in the small society of which he became a member. He lived and breathed in an element of religious influence. Communion with God was his daily and hourly enjoyment. This high-toned feeling, the abiding testimony of God’s presence, was sustained by his constant and regular attendance on the public and private means of grace. His deep piety was made a great blessing to his family, to the Church, and the world. He was a practical Christian, seeking, as he had opportunity, to do good unto all men, especially to the household of faith.

A few years after his conversion, he was appointed to the office of an exhorter. In that position I found him when I was stationed for this circuit in 1832. He was subsequently raised to be an accredited local preacher, and this office he honourably sustained, except for a short time, among the Primitive Methodists, to the end of his days. In his pulpit labours he was generally acceptable, for his profound piety gave such a mellowing influence to his preaching, that many who heard him were often very much affected. His direct and well-aimed appeals to the conscience seldom failed to produce the desired effect. He is dead, but the result of his ministrations yet lives in the hearts and lives of many people in this station.

In June, 1850, he and his family removed from Mytholmroyd to Shelf, at which place they were employed by M. Bottomley, Esq. This was a providential change in reference to temporal things, enabling them more liberally to contribute to the support of God's cause, and to entertain the ministers of Christ. With this hospitable family many ministers have found a welcome reception.

To class-leading he was disinclined, and he frequently refused to accept that office till about six years ago, when a concurrence of circumstances induced him to accept a small class that was without a leader. God blessed his efforts, and such have been added to it as, we trust, will be eternally saved. Over the members of his class he watched with fatherly affection. As he was generally beloved for his work's sake, he was frequently called to the bedside of the sick and the dying. For this he was especially adapted; his affectionate manner, his description of God's willingness and ability to save to the uttermost, secured the attention of penitent sinners who were led to the foot of the cross, and there found virtue in the blood of the Lamb. Many such instances have gladdened his heart, and given joy to his relatives. His name is as ointment poured forth; hence, he lived so as to be missed.

A short time before his death he was appointed to preach and hold a lovefeast at Mytholmroyd. On that day he laboured excessively in visiting, praying, and preaching. He returned home, and complained of a pain in his side. Death gradually took down the earthly house of his tabernacle, but he had a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. He was often visited by his Christian friends, to whom he always expressed an unwavering confidence in Jesus. In full reliance he uttered the following lines,

"But Jesus will not let me sink, While on His mercy I depend."

Such strong faith and a pleasing prospect of the better land, enabled him to say on another occasion,

"With a scrip on my back and a staff in my hand."

He manifested the same unshaken confidence and calmness throughout his affliction. To a friend who sat by his bedside he exclaimed, "The sky is clear." While on the verge of the eternal world, he not only rejoiced in the prospect of future glory, but, with grateful feelings, he reviewed the providential dealings of God towards him, and he was glad that he had been counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake. Ere he left the world, he gave his dying charge to his three children. They had been favoured with his example and prayers, but now he must bid them adieu. He knew part of his family were landed in heaven; and being wishful that all of them should be eternally saved, he desired them to live to God, and meet him in the skies. At another time, being surrounded by Christian friends and his son James, he said, "Now, folks, I wish you to pray while my son James is in the house; I particularly wish his salvation, believing that there is something in him calculated to make him useful. I will leave it with the Lord, as I have done before." Having finished his work, and borne his testimony for God, he sank into extreme feebleness for two or three days, and then passed into heaven, December 20th, 1861, aged sixty-two years. Many of the local brethren joined the funeral procession from his house to the chapel, in which he had frequently mingled his prayers and praises with God's people; thence he was borne to his last resting-place.

Thomas Howarth was a lover of peace. That Divine peace which filled his bosom made him a peace promoter, so that the blessing of the Saviour was his enjoyment. His master, M. Bottomley, Esq., states that since he removed to Shelf, there never had been any unhappy feeling or improper expression between them, either in reference to business or religion.

He was an affectionate husband, and deeply concerned for the happiness of his wife. Their married life was blessed of the Lord.

His fatherly affection for his children, and his pious concern for their salvation, were evidenced by his mild government and his daily prayers with them and for them.

As a preacher he was generally well received. His sermons were experimental and practical, and were accompanied by the influence of the Holy Spirit.

"The scene how solemn, yet how sweet,
When Jesus calls His saints away;
They meekly gather up their feet,
Their bodies mingle with the clay."

2. DAVID SIDWELL was born at Coventry, of poor but honest parents, in 1789. Like many others in the last century, when educational establishments were few, his intellectual powers were partially neglected, and, like many of his companions, he ran in the ways of sin and folly. Religious services were not so numerous in his early days as they are now, consequently he would receive fewer checks and less opposition in his way to ruin.

When he was about thirteen years of age, a people called the Revivalists visited Coventry and its neighbourhood; and it was under these people the Lord convinced him of the error of his ways, and turned him from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Being grafted into Christ, "the living Vine," and having tasted the love of God, he set out on his heavenly pilgrimage, and, as far as we know, he never turned back. Among the Revivalists he became a local preacher. When the Primitive Methodist missionaries entered Coventry, they soon organised a society, and Brother Sidwell and the Revivalist society, with the travelling preacher at their head, were taken up by the Primitive Methodist Connexion. From that time to the day of his death, he continued a stedfast local preacher and class-leader. Of late his age and infirmities prevented him from travelling long journeys, but whenever he could supply appointments he did so willingly.

The affliction which proved fatal to him was a stoppage in the urinal passage. The medical gentleman who attended him informed him that his end was near, and that he had done all he could do for him. His sufferings were of the most acute nature; however he bore them with patience and resignation to the will of God. He was sensible and self-possessed to the last, telling his attendants, if he had had religion to seek then, it would have been too late. When his friends and grandchildren stood weeping by his bedside, he gave them his parting advice, to the effect, that they should always adhere to the truth, avoid bad company, and love and serve the Lord, so that they might meet him at God's right hand. When the friends were holding a watch-meeting, at the close of the old year, he said, he hoped he should be one of the first to go to heaven in the new year.

On January 2nd, 1862, he breathed his last, in the seventy-second year of his age; sweetly falling asleep in Jesus, his spirit took its flight to the paradise of God.

David Sidwell was upright in his life and deportment, reflecting the truths of his religion among the people wherever he went. He was greatly respected by his neighbours and by the freemen of the city, being a freeman himself and a member of their committee. He was well received as a local preacher. Some of our members received their first impressions under his ministry, and are now on their way to that world, where, if faithful, they will meet him again.

He had not the most happy way of doing business in official meetings, being very rigid in the maintenance of rule, and sometimes speaking rather warmly. He was occasionally brought into collision with his brethren; nevertheless we believe his object was right. May it be our happiness, with the friends of the departed, to meet him in heaven. Amen.

WILLIAM PEACEFULL.

3. Mrs. ELIZABETH MAYLARD was born at Reading, September 27th, 1817. She received her first religious convictions under the ministry of the Rev. J. Sherman, at that time minister of Castle Street Chapel, Reading; she was an earnest seeker of salvation when the Primitive Methodists missioned Reading. Having obtained through the ministry an evidence of God's favour, by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, she became a member of the Connexion, and continued in fellowship with it during the remainder of her life.

She was governess of a village school at Whitley, and succeeded in gaining the affections of her scholars, and imparting to them sound religious instruction. Being apt to teach, and zealous in the cause of God, she received appointments on the preachers' plan, in company with Miss Herridge, now the wife of Mr. J. Sharpe, missionary in Tasmania. Though she was of a meek and quiet spirit, she manifested remarkable firmness and courage in the discharge of her duties. Primitive Methodism was at the time of her conversion passing through a fiery ordeal of persecution. In many of the country villages, where services were conducted in the open-air, the preachers were grossly insulted. She took her first appointment in the open-air, at a village where the preachers had been much persecuted. She went alone, and quietly took her stand on the village green; her courage and gentleness disarmed the persecutors, and they stood and listened respectfully to her discourse. This triumph encouraged her to persevere, and she was never known to neglect an appointment.

In 1841 a camp-meeting was held on Burghfield Common. The congregation was large, and many of the baser sort attempted in various ways to annoy the preachers. Though not planned, she was requested to address the meeting in the afternoon. There was great confusion with the drinking, smoking, brawling disturbers. She rose in the midst of the tumult, and in gentle, clear tones gave out her text, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." The parties were instantly hushed, and gathering round the waggon in which she stood, they listened to the earnest and faithful declaration of the gospel contained in that text. Her preaching was generally expository of the leading truths of Christianity, delivered in chaste and appropriate language, and in a manner becoming her sex. No masculine effort marred the effect of her ministrations; but she meekly and earnestly appealed to the heart and judgment of each of her hearers.

In May, 1844, she was married to John Maylard, travelling preacher, and removed to the Forest of Dean, Pillawell Circuit; there she laboured much in the good cause, and preached with success the glorious gospel of the blessed God.

In 1845 we removed to Glastonbury mission, the station then belonged to Frome Circuit, which was not able to pay its preachers. In that mission she preached often, and assisted her husband in opening several places for preaching, and for the enlargement of the mission.

In 1848 she removed with her husband and family to Pembroke Circuit, a station which had failed to pay its preachers. The prospect was indeed gloomy. Her husband was tempted to retire from the ministry, and suggested to her that there was about money enough in the house to carry them home, and they had better return. She replied, "We are doing the Lord's work, and the little money we have is the Lord's, and must be spent in His service; let us remain and trust in God, He will surely provide for us if we devote ourselves to His work." God honoured her faith, and brought us through many trials of poverty and affliction; we took a little cottage and furnished it. Though her family was increasing she laboured much, and with great acceptance in this station, usually preaching every second Sabbath, and God was pleased to crown our efforts with His blessing. Many souls were converted, and the station improved in every respect; yet there was no probability that it would soon become self-sustaining, therefore it was placed among the mission stations, under the care of the General Missionary Committee in 1851. Our pecuniary circumstances improved a little, but owing to much affliction in the family we were several years struggling with debts which were contracted during the years in which we did not obtain my full salary. These facts are painful, even in remembrance, but they were more painful to endure; yet through all her sufferings she was never heard to utter a murmur, nor to complain of her lot. She loved the cause of God, and was prepared to suffer in it, and for it.

After labouring three years in the Isle of Wight, two years in Brighton, and one in Ramsey, I was appointed by the Conference of 1858 for Bradford Circuit. In 1860 Shipley was made a branch, whither we removed; this was her last earthly home. She continued to preach, but her health and family cares prevented her from labouring in the last two stations as much as she had done in others. About six weeks before her death she received a serious injury in her back, which confined her to her room for a week; she never fully recovered her strength. On December 19th, 1861, she was confined, and all appeared to be progressing favourably, till about one o'clock next morning, when she sent for me to pray with her. I did so, and after prayer she exclaimed, "I am dying." The doctor was sent for, but just as he entered the room she breathed her last. She has left a family of eight children to mourn the loss of an affectionate and devoted mother, who laboured to store their minds with religious truth, and set before them the example of a consistent Christian. May they follow her to glory. She was generally respected by those who knew her. In meekness and faithfulness she studied "to be quiet and mind her own business." The Bradford Society manifested great respect for her, and at her funeral the local preachers of Shipley bore her remains to the grave, from whence the Saviour, in whom she trusted, will redeem her. May we meet her in glory.

JOHN MAYLARD.

4. ROBERT PEARCE was born at Massingham, Lynn Circuit, in 1806. He was a steady, moral man, previous to his conversion. In his twenty-fifth year he was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, through believing in Christ Jesus. And about two years after he was appointed to the office of a local preacher, and his labours were owned with some success. He was honest and industrious, but it would be assuming too much to represent him as being entirely without faults. There are few whose lives are blameless, who have nothing to regret. He, nevertheless, generally enjoyed the approving smile of Him whose favour is life, and whose loving kindness is better than life. For the last few years Mr. Pearce was the class-leader of the Massingham society, and the members say, that of late he earnestly exhorted them to devote themselves more fully to God, to love the Saviour with all their hearts, to be continually advancing toward Zion, and in good things to be growing evermore. Amid much opposition he held on his way rejoicing, trusting in God to clear his road, to open his path, and make his enemies to be at peace with him.

“His eye upon the land of life he kept.”

He preached his last sermon at Massingham, on Sunday, November 10th, 1861, from Hebrews vii. 25. He expressed his confidence in God that he would save him to the end. Little did he think that end was so near. On the 13th he attended a missionary meeting in the Wesleyan chapel, and delivered a short speech, which produced a good effect on the congregation. On the 15th he was taken ill of the small pox. His affliction was short but severe. He told his wife that the Lord gave him grace to bear his sufferings without murmuring. He had learned to kiss the rod that smote, and to rest his head on the bosom of divine love. “It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good.” How happy is such a state. Having a desire to depart or stay, just as our heavenly Father pleases; no fear of death; but to die is gain; yea

“Then to die is rapture.”

Should the pale messenger come the servant of the Lord was ready. And come he did. On the 23rd, Mrs. Pearce went into a neighbour's house to obtain some one to watch with her during the night; but before she got home he had passed into the spirit world. The battle was fought, the victory won, and the veteran gone home to rest “in the long glad sabbath of the skies.”

WILLIAM THOSEBY.

5. ELI TAYLOR, class-leader and thirty-five years a local preacher, in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, died Nov. 23rd, 1861, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was born at Leeds, December 9th, 1789, of hard-working and pious parents, by whom he was taken to the house of God from his infancy. Being the only one of a family of several children that survived the age of childhood, he was better fed and clad than many poor men's children were, and he had the advantage of going to a day school—a privilege enjoyed by comparatively few at that time. He acquired not only ability, but also cultivated a taste for reading. He was also furnished with money by his mother to buy books, and when very young was much taken up with the "Pilgrim's Progress."

In due time he was apprenticed to be a wool-sorter, his father deeming it a good business; "but," he says, "it went down with other trades in this changing world. I was out of my time before I was twenty-one years old, and was eight months out of work the first year." In 1811 he went in search of employment through a great part of England and Wales. In the latter part of that year he married, and afterwards became the father of a numerous family, several of whom died in infancy, but eight lived to enter the married state. "And often," he says, "in hard times, and when out of work, the Lord marvellously opened our way." In 1815 he was employed at Leicester, but he was a stranger to God and neglected his sanctuary. He found in his travels that "evil communications corrupt good manners," and fell into the habits of swearing and drinking excessively.

In 1817 his father died of an inflammation, but before his departure he charged his son with his dying breath to meet him in heaven. Yet he lived in rebellion against God for two years after this solemn event, but at length on January 16th, 1819, after repeated convictions for sin, he was so powerfully wrought on by the influences of the Holy Spirit that he was led to cry for mercy, and through the grace of God he obtained pardon. He joined the Wesleyans by whom, after a time, he was put on what was called a Home Mission plan, and went to exhort and hold devotional services in the villages around Leeds.

He says, "When the veteran Clowes preached in Sampson's warehouse,* Wade-lane, I heard him in the forenoon from this text, 'Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having a wedding garment?' I was much impressed with the people and attached to them, and having friends among them, I was frequently hearing them, and sometimes preached for them in 1824." About that time, through an impression that he should be more useful among the Primitives, he was led to join them, "and soon found," he says, "abundance of work for both mind and body. I was then made a class-leader at Hunslet, and retained the leadership till about the end of 1837; I had many trials, and, thank the Lord, many blessings. J. A. Bastow went out to travel from our Hunslet class." But being much out of work, and having frequently to work at a distance of several miles from home, he was obliged ultimately to give up that class. In 1834 he went to work awhile at Oldham, was put upon the plan of that circuit, and was appointed to lead a class at Old Delph, Saddleworth. The next year he returned to Leeds, but, for six or seven years afterwards he was much out of work, and suffered considerably in consequence thereof. In 1842 three of his family were ill at the same time of the typhus fever, "but," says he, "our extremity was the time when the Lord gave us special help. To him be glory, world without end." Some ten or twelve years ago, he was re-appointed to lead a class, and retained the office to the day of his death.

In some memoranda which he has left, and from which we have already had occasion to quote, he says, "Oct. 30th, 1854. Bless the Lord, O my soul, for he is my portion. Though the harvest is past, and the summer is ended, I have not to deplore that I am not saved; and though my strength is prostrated, and my energies have failed, the Lord is the strength of my heart and my portion; all my trust is in the atonement of the Lamb of God; and though it is more than two years since I gave up my regular employment, hitherto the Lord has helped me. Glory to his hallowed name! This year and the last have been seasons of great bodily affliction both to me and my wife. To me it has been, blessed be God, greatly mitigated during a long and fine summer. In the month of April last, my poor wife was taken away in a cab to the infirmary, to undergo a severe surgical operation, and her case was deemed hopeless by the faculty; but, thank God, she was so far restored in less than six weeks as to be brought home again. O that all our mercies and all our afflictions may be sanctified by the grace of God to his glory and our benefit. Amen.

"How oft do we find in this changeable world,
Where so many afflictions oppress,
That the tokens of love which descend from above
Are reserved for the day of distress:
Instructions are given in trial and want
That are never imparted to wealth;
And the knowledge we gain, amidst sorrow and pain,
Is unknown in the season of health."

"Nov. 9, 1856. All my children, except William, seem to be walking after the course of this world. Lord, help me. Give me more faith and patience to be earnest in prayer. I have prayed for them nearly thirty-eight years. O Lord convert and save them all very speedily. I may soon be taken from them; but my God is witness, holy angels are witnesses, how I long for their souls' everlasting salvation. Father of all my mercies, God of my life, grant me my earnest request, for Christ's sake. Amen and amen. My soul believes. Have faith in God. Jesus, robe me in snowy raiment, store my heart with precious jewels from thy treasury. This world is not my rest ; but when I depart hence, let my ransomed soul return to thee. There is no happy death but that which conducts us to a happy immortality ; no joy in putting off the body, if we have not put on the Lord Jesus Christ ; and no consolation in escaping from the trials of this life, till we have obtained a well grounded hope of a blessed eternity."

"December 20, 1857.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, for all his mercies through another year, so nearly gone into eternity. It pleases my heavenly Father still to suffer afflictions to be my lot. In this tabernacle, I groan, being burdened. Lord, through the fulness of thy love and pity, and unmerited mercy, help thy servant, thy poor unworthy servant, to endure thy perfect will ; and enable me through the power of thine own Spirit, in every thing to return thee thanks, and not to faint in the day of trouble. O for the sake of Jesus Christ, who died to save a fallen race, give me perfect love that casteth out all fear. Friend of sinners, spotless Lamb of God, thy blood was shed for me ; grant that with humility and godly fear I may honour thee, and show forth thy praise while I have my being. O may I continue to sing :—

My Jesus has done all things well."

"1859. My dear partner is gone—she died January 3rd, and left me alone. Lord help me ; for who knows what bereavement is but they who feel it. I firmly trust that my loss is her infinite gain. A little while, and I shall quit this mortal scene."

"October 14, 1860. I am still alive. Bless the Lord, O my soul, for he has supplied all my needs to the present moment. How good the Lord is ! Though I am lonely and infirm, the Lord fulfils his promises before my eyes daily. To old age I will be with thee ; I will never leave thee ; I will never forsake thee. This is the Sabbath of the Lord. I feel it a great trial to be kept away, by my infirmities, from the house of the Lord. How lonely I feel, but my sufficiency is of God. I must endure through a work of faith, as well as a labour of love."

The affliction from which he suffered so much during the latter part of his life, was a very distressing asthma ; superinduced, it was believed, in a great measure by the dust arising from his work of wool-sorting. He was of an amiable and peaceful disposition, and of unblemished reputation. He was punctual in attending his appointments, and diligent in frequenting the means of grace. His public exercises were characterized by intelligence, earnestness, point, and divine unction, hence his labours were acceptable and useful, and he departed this life much respected.

On the day previous to his death, he was visited by Bros. T. Howard and J. Ogden ; by whom he was found to be in a very interesting state of mind. He was not the subject of ecstatic joy, but had an unshaken and all-sustaining trust and confidence in the atonement of Christ, and felt peace with God—peace that passeth all understanding—and divine consolation. Piously he lived, and happily he died. “Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.”

6. RICHARD HOSKING was born at Tregrehan Mills, St. Austell Circuit, January 10th, 1806. The early part of his life was spent in the pursuit of worldly pleasures, until the Primitive Methodist Missionaries visited his native place, when under their ministry, he was brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, became a member of society, but in time of temptation he fell from grace, and walked in darkness for some time. At length he was restored to the favour of God, and the church, and ever after adorned the gospel of Christ. He was subsequently appointed to the offices of class-leader, and local preacher ; he was punctual in attending his appointments, was generally accepted, and the Lord crowned his labours in the conversion of souls. When he was taken ill he was a leader of three classes, and all the members speak in very high terms of him. He never allowed a member to be lost to the connexion for want of attention, he was wont to visit from house to house after he had finished his day's work. He felt a great interest in the cause of God, and laboured in different ways to promote its welfare ; and none were more delighted than he when the circuit prospered.

When he was confined at home, he was anxious about the interests of the circuit and connexion generally, and when told that a revival was going on, he would start from his pillow with his countenance lighted up with joy.

He suffered much through family affliction and bereavement, but he bore the whole with Christian fortitude and resignation. In the spring of 1861, the complaint from which he had suffered for some years seemed to gain ground, so that little hope was entertained of his recovery ; however he was so far restored as to be able to walk out, but still he suffered much from a severe cough ; in a short time after he was again confined to his home, and he gradually sank.

When his plan was taken to him, he said, “ This is the last you will bring me,” A friend said to him, “ You have walked some hundreds of miles to preach, through wind and rain, and on dark nights ; do you feel any regret at having so laboured ? ” With a look of surprise he said, “ Regret, my brother, that I have laboured for the Lord ! I only wish I had done more.” He was happy, and often shouted aloud. He exhorted all the members who visited him to be regular in their attendance at their class-meetings, and other means of grace. He was patient in his affliction ; the writer saw him a few hours before he died, when he said, "My work is done, I am waiting to go." He wished that a hymn might be sung as they were bearing him to the tomb, and said, "While you sing below, I shall sing above."

On the evening of January 2nd, 1862, he fell asleep in Jesus, leaving a widow and family to lament their loss, but he has gained the haven of rest.

ISAAC HEDGES.

7. DIED at Heathrow, Maidenhead Circuit, January 4th, 1862, JAMES OXTON, in the full triumph of faith, aged sixty-three years. Previous to his conversion he was strictly moral, and regularly attended a place of worship, but he lived a stranger to the saving grace of God, till about 1832, when the Primitive Methodist missionaries visited the locality where he resided. He went to hear them and was struck with their earnestness and the manner in which they made known the great truths of religion. He saw the necessity of a change of heart, sought and found the pearl of great price, and cast in his lot with our people. He soon after his conversion opened his house for preaching, and became the leader of a class, the duties of which office he sustained till within a few weeks of his death. For many years he was a member of the circuit committee and a warm advocate of the missionary cause. He was a faithful man and feared God above many.

His last affliction was short, and part of the time reason was dethroned. But at lucid intervals his conversation was about the "precious blood of Jesus," and "the water of life."

He was an affectionate husband, a pious Christian, and a good supporter of the cause, but our loss is his gain. May his sorrowful widow meet him in heaven.

8. BETTY BAILEY, of Bocking, Keighley Circuit, was born at Harewood Hill, in the parish of Keighley, September 1st, 1819, and exchanged mortality for life, January 5th, 1862, in the forty-third year of her age. It has never fallen to the lot of the writer to sketch the character, or improve the death, of a female so thoroughly Primitive Methodist, so generally beloved and deservedly esteemed, as was the subject of this memoir.

Mrs. Bailey was the daughter of John and Sarah Mitchell, who were Wesleyan Methodists, and whose religious example greatly contributed to the formation of her character, weakened the attraction of the world, and fostered in her youthful mind thoughts of religion, immortality, and heaven. Her mother withdrew from the Wesleyan body, united with the Primitives, and was a consistent member with us for many years, and died in the Lord in 1848. Betty was sent early to a Wesleyan school, and being an attentive scholar, she was soon able to read the Bible ; she also took great delight in attending the school and the house of God. When but a girl she evinced a strong attachment to religious people, and especially to the ministers of the Gospel, and this principle strengthened with her years to the close of her life. When she was about ten years of age, her parents removed to Vale Mill. At that time the Primitive Methodists preached in her grandfather's house ; she attended their ministry, under which she was awakened to a sense of her danger, trembled under the word, and frequently vowed to give her heart to God, but failed to comply with the dictates of an enlightened conscience, until she was about sixteen years of age.

In 1836 the Rev. Robert Kaye was stationed in this circuit, and being appointed to preach at Vale Mill, Betty and her companions attended, and by his preaching and prayers they were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. Before she found the pearl of great price, she experienced deep sorrow of heart, felt her sins a burden intolerable to be borne, and earnestly sought the Lord ; and in a band-meeting, held March 19th, 1836, she was enabled to " behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the world," and then could sing,—

" My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear," &c.

Her views and feelings then were similar to those of the Psalmist when he said, " Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." She immediately joined the society, from which she was never separated until her exit to the church triumphant. Soon after her conversion, she felt it to be her duty and privilege to " grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." According to a document of her own writing, her soul panted for entire holiness, and while using the means for the attainment of this inestimable favour, she realized the blessing, and was enabled to love the Lord " with all her heart, and with all her soul, and with all her might." Experience soon taught her that heaven was not gained by the first victory over sin and Satan, but that her spiritual life would prove a constant warfare, that her enemies were strong and numerous, and her trials great and sometimes severe ; but she courageously fought " the good fight of faith," held on her way rejoicing, and she is now more than a conqueror. " When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren," is a maxim worthy of universal adoption. When she had obtained mercy, she united with her parents to pray for the rest of the family. Four brothers and three sisters were the burden of her cry ; for them she prayed fervently, and at length she had the pleasure of knowing they were all converted.

About seven years after her conversion, she recorded her gratitude to God, for having made her a partaker of divine grace in early life, and this was to her a source of satisfaction during her pilgrimage towards a brighter world. She was soon appointed assistant leader to the class in which she met, and after a while the leadership was placed in her hands. Her natural abilities, deep piety, and constant zeal for the Lord of hosts, qualified her for the important office. For the welfare of the class, and the cause generally, she always manifested great solicitude.

In addition to her ordinary household duties, she had the chief management of a considerable grocery business, but temporal matters did not supersede the observance of higher spiritual obligations. It was her custom to close the shop, and travel upwards of half a mile to lead her class, and attend other week-night services. She was a brilliant exemplification of the apostolic precept: "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." She took a sitting in Mill Hey Chapel, when it was opened in 1836, which she held until she took her seat in the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." She was one of the founders of the Sunday-school at Mill Hey, and was the teacher of the first Bible-class to the time of her last affliction. In this capacity also she was eminently useful, not only in communicating instruction, but in leading her youthful charge to the Saviour, some of whom have died trusting in Jesus, who would probably welcome her to the shores of a blissful immortality, and several of her scholars are members of society. Sometime ago she presented a copy of the Scriptures to each member of her class, and as a token of respect for her attention and kindness, she received from them a neat family Bible in return. She was one of the best and most effective speakers in a lovefeast I ever heard. While she related her Christian experience, a powerful influence was generally felt in the congregation. She was strongly attached to the denomination to which she belonged, and contributed cheerfully and liberally to its various funds. It was a real pleasure, both before and after her marriage, to minister to the wants of the preachers, local and itinerant, Primitive and Wesleyan, for they entertained both. God's servants were always welcome to the best her house afforded, and as soon as they were seated by her comfortable fire-side, it was her customary enquiry, "How is the work of the Lord getting on in the circuit?" She was often requested to visit the sick and the dying, and whether the request came by day or night, her willing feet moved hastily to the house of mourning, to encourage the afflicted Christian, or point the dying sinner to Him who is able to save to the uttermost. Two of my brethren, who have recently travelled in this circuit, have supplied the following:—

The Rev. J. Dodsworth says, "Mrs. Bailey was a staunch and warm-hearted friend to Primitive Methodism, when she was known as Miss Mitchell. The first time I saw her was at a missionary meeting at Mill Hey, and so severe was the snow storm in the neighbourhood, that not more than a dozen persons pressed through it to the chapel, but to the best of my remembrance our departed sister was one of the two or three who assembled in the Saviour's name ; and though it may be fourteen or fifteen years ago, I still do gratefully remember how kindly she entertained the deputation, who were drenched with wet, and shivering with cold, placing us before a blazing fire on the cheerful hearth of her father's house ; and after her marriage, both before and since, it was my great happiness to travel in Keighley Circuit, I invariably found her the same affectionate, generous, and unfeigned friend to our society. Her attachment to our ministers was strong and constant ; they came to her house too little, enjoyed her hospitalities too seldom, they came too late for her and went home too soon, and I trust that she is now in the happy possession of a full and everlasting reward ; for she was not only a lover of all good people, and a succourer of many of the saints, but she was steadily kept in the hope of eternal life by faith in Christ Jesus, and such when absent from the body are present with the Lord.

The Rev. W. Bennett says, "From observation, for the space of three years, I have every reason to believe that Sister Bailey was a spiritually-minded woman. In her life she developed 'firmness of moral purpose, growth of moral force, and conformation of moral character.' Secular things were held by her in subservience to spiritual things, and business by her must be suspended to worship God. Her spirit was catholic, her disposition benevolent. She dealt of her bread to the hungry, and of her garments to the naked ; she was a Primitive Methodist, yea, a Christian."

The first symptom of sickness was in the latter part of August, 1861 ; she thought it was a slight attack of rheumatism, from which she apprehended no danger. She, however, gradually became worse, and in October she experienced severe pains over her whole body, and it was with difficulty she attended to her household duties and other business which devolved upon her. In November she became still worse, and on the 26th of that month she took her bed, where she lay till death separated her happy spirit from the body.

She was attended twice by a medical man before she was confined to her bed and he had great confidence in her recovery. But when he visited her a third time, he found on examination, that consumption had taken place. After she took her bed her pain ceased, and more than once she was heard to say, "I am gently dealt with by the Lord." All who knew her were anxious for her recovery, but medical skill, earnest wishes and fervent prayers were unavailing ; she gradually sank until January 5th, 1862, when she fell asleep in Jesus.

During her affliction she had no fear of death, and was perfectly resigned, for she had the kingdom and crown in prospect. She was favoured with manifestations of the Divine presence and glory. One evening she called her husband and said, "that it seemed as if the whole host of heaven were waiting for her," and shortly after this she observed, "this room seems to be filled with glory." On another occasion her husband on entering the room remarked, that her countenance appeared unusually bright and cheerful, to which she responded, "Who would not be so that was just going to enter glory?" At another time, when conversing with him on heaven and heavenly things, she said, "John, if I'm brought back I shall be disappointed." He thought she meant that having got so near heaven, if again restored she would be disappointed. I visited her several times during her affliction and always found her trusting in the Lord. Her confidence never wavered. I saw her about two hours before she died; she was calm and conscious, and believed she was going home. I asked her several questions relative to the state of her mind, which she answered satisfactorily. When the hand of death was upon her, Christ was her rock and pillar of support. Her end was peace. She was a dutiful daughter, an affectionate sister, and a good wife. In her removal, the world has lost another light, her class its leader, the school a faithful teacher, the circuit one of its best friends, and the church one of its most useful members.

JOHN HARVEY.

9. WILLIAM, son of Robert and Mary LUSHER, was born at Ashill, Norfolk, February 18th, 1820. William was sober and sedate. There being no Dissenters in the place, he was trained to a strict attendance on the services of the Established Church. Having a strong inclination for reading, his mother judiciously encouraged and stimulated it by placing in his hands a number of religious books, calculated to impress his mind: and one day, when about ten years of age while keeping sheep in a field, and filling up a few leisure moments by reading one of his books—Divine light beamed upon his mind, he felt convinced of his state as a sinner, and cast himself on the Saviour, and obtained a sense of pardoning mercy. This heavenly treasure he retained for some time, but having lost his mother, the guide of his youth, he was unhappily drawn into the vortex of evil, and again became a restless wanderer after rest. He continued in this dreary state for twelve years. The Wesleyan Methodists had entered Ashill, and in a gracious revival of religion which took place among them, brother Lusher was fully restored to the Divine favour; he embraced the privilege of church membership, and continued his union with them until the unhappy disruption of 1849, when he cast in his lot with us, was appointed to the office of local preacher, and continued to discharge the duties thereof till near his death.

He was a man of sound religious principle; he could be fully relied upon; the purity of his motives, the uprightness of his character were evident to all. Being in business, he was determined in all his commercial transactions, to obey the apostolic injunction, "Owe no man anything." This was seen and admired, and men glorified God in him on that account.

He was a man of deep piety, a devoted and consistent follower of the Lamb; his path was indeed that of the just, shining more and more to the perfect day." Previous to his conversion he had belonged to a benefit society, which was kept at a public house, but after the Divine change had taken place, he felt he could not conscientiously keep up the unholy alliance, and therefore, although at a sacrifice, at once abandoned it, and united to a friendly society conducted upon Christian principles. His piety shone with peculiar lustre in the domestic circle; he erected an altar unto the Lord, and there, as the priest of his own house, he daily presented the sacrifices of prayer and praise.

He was a liberal supporter of the cause of God, besides aiding the funds of the Connexion. His house was always open to the ministers of Christ, and many of them will not soon forget the cordial shake of the hand with which he greeted them on entering his hospitable dwelling.

As a local preacher he was plain, practical, and experimental; he delighted greatly in the doctrines of a free, full, and present salvation; and in his enunciation thereof he was constant and fervid. In this capacity he did not labour in vain; he was honoured with an encouraging share of success, a number of spiritual children now bless his memory, and we trust they will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus. His attention to his appointments was exemplary; he never wilfully neglected one.

The affliction which terminated his earthly existence was constipation of the bowels; this had been making inroads upon his constitution for years, and had not that constitution been strong it must have succumbed long before it did. The best medical skill was resorted to, and temporary relief was generally afforded, but no permanent cure could be obtained. So great was the organic derangement which took place in his system during some of his last days through the obstinacy of the disease, that reason was beclouded, and his conversation was incoherent; in his lucid moments, however, Christ was his theme, and a short time before death his reason was restored, and then, to the joy of his friends, it was evident that the work of God was uppermost in his mind. On one occasion when thinking on the state of many of the inhabitants of Ashill, he burst into a flood of tears, and exclaimed, "Oh! if the sinners in Ashill, after all the privileges they have had, reject the great salvation, woe betide them, woe betide them." On another occasion, when some pious friends were besieging the throne of grace, he said, "Stick to it! stick to it! stick to it!" On one of his pious sisters interrogating him on his state, he answered,— " Our souls are in His mighty hand,

And He shall keep them still;
And you and I shall surely stand,
With Him on Zion's hill."

On Friday night, January 10th, 1862, he exchanged this region of robe me in snowy raiment, store my heart with precious jewels from thy treasury. This world is not my rest ; but when I depart hence, let my ransomed soul return to thee. There is no happy death but that which conducts us to a happy immortality ; no joy in putting off the body, if we have not put on the Lord Jesus Christ ; and no consolation in escaping from the trials of this life, till we have obtained a well grounded hope of a blessed eternity."

"December 20, 1857.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, for all his mercies through another year, so nearly gone into eternity. It pleases my heavenly Father still to suffer afflictions to be my lot. In this tabernacle, I groan, being burdened. Lord, through the fulness of thy love and pity, and unmerited mercy, help thy servant, thy poor unworthy servant, to endure thy perfect will ; and enable me through the power of thine own Spirit, in every thing to return thee thanks, and not to faint in the day of trouble. O for the sake of Jesus Christ, who died to save a fallen race, give me perfect love that casteth out all fear. Friend of sinners, spotless Lamb of God, thy blood was shed for me ; grant that with humility and godly fear I may honour thee, and show forth thy praise while I have my being. O may I continue to sing :—

My Jesus has done all things well."

"1859. My dear partner is gone—she died January 3rd, and left me alone. Lord help me ; for who knows what bereavement is but they who feel it. I firmly trust that my loss is her infinite gain. A little while, and I shall quit this mortal scene."

"October 14, 1860. I am still alive. Bless the Lord, O my soul, for he has supplied all my needs to the present moment. How good the Lord is ! Though I am lonely and infirm, the Lord fulfils his promises before my eyes daily. To old age I will be with thee ; I will never leave thee ; I will never forsake thee. This is the Sabbath of the Lord. I feel it a great trial to be kept away, by my infirmities, from the house of the Lord. How lonely I feel, but my sufficiency is of God. ### THE MOURNERS BLESSED.

A SERMON, BY GEORGE TUDOR HALL.

“Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted.”—Matt. v. 4.

EVERYTHING in the economy of redemption, and the dispensation of grace, illustrates the love of God to fallen man, and proves that He has thoughts of goodness towards us. As a gracious and faithful parent He acts not so much according to our wishes, as our welfare, and yet He regards and treats man as a moral agent who should act from principle, and under the influence of moral motives. Man is capable of knowing and loving God, and of being holy in heart and life, compared with which the wealth, fame, honour, pleasures, and attractions of the world fade and sink into insignificance. Man was created in the image of God, his body fearfully and wonderfully made, his soul stamped with the divine impress, and his intellectual powers capable of unbarring the strongholds of the universe, and ascertaining the magnitudes, revolutions, and laws of the heavenly bodies. Creation harmonized in one song of gratitude and praise to God; no discordant sounds were heard in man's primeval state. Sorrow was unknown before the fall. The star-spangled heavens, and all created things were encircled with beauty and magnificence. Man had not learned to mourn, but the image of God was obliterated by the fall, and man became debased, corrupted, and polluted. “Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.” But God to restore our lost happiness provided a Saviour, and gave His Spirit to work conviction in the hearts of the careless, to reveal to them their depravity; and also to comfort those who mourn. “To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord that he might be glorified.” “Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted.” Observe :—

There are many causes of mourning referred to in the sacred Scriptures, and various kinds of grief are therein described. In some places for instance, we have pathetic descriptions of mourning over lost or departed friends. For example :—“When Sarah died in Kirjath-arba;” the same is Hebron in the land of Canaan, and Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep for her." When the deceitful and guilty sons of Jacob, brought in their brother's coat saturated with blood, the venerable patriarch wept over that coat, and said, "Joseph is without doubt rent in pieces." "And Jacob rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days. And all his sons and all his daughters rose up to comfort him, and he refused to be comforted; and he said, for I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning." When the children of Israel were brought near to the promised land and had reached the first month of the fortieth year after their departure from Egypt, they encamped in Kadesh, where Miriam died, thence they came to Mount Hor, where Aaron died. "And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel." When that cruel and most unnatural rebellion raised by Abesalom terminated in his death, and in the overthrow of his party, instead of rejoicing, the people mourned when they saw the king's immoderate grief, and heard his exceedingly pathetic lamentation. "And the victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people, for the people heard say that day how the king was grieved for his son." Solomon shows the advantage of visiting the house of mourning when he says, "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting, for that is the end of all men;" and the living will lay it to his heart. Sorrow is better than laughter, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth." And in answer to a question propounded by the disciples of John, the Saviour said, "Can the children of the bridechamber mourn as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast." And again in many places we have representations of mourning over national sins and wicked rulers. For instance, we read, "When the righteous are in authority the people rejoice, but when the wicked beareth rule, the people mourn. The country mourns when vice is in affluence, and bears rule; such was the case when the prophet Jeremiah grieved at the prosperity of the wicked, said "How long shall the land mourn, and the herbs of every field wither, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein? The beasts are consumed, and the birds, because they said he shall not see our last end." Ezra mourned over those who trespassed against God, and weeping, cast himself down before the house of God, refusing to eat bread and drink water, because he mourned over them who had transgressed against God; the people also wept sore. And when Nehemiah inquired concerning the Jews who had returned from captivity, he received the most discouraging information, which greatly affected him, and when he heard these tidings he said, "I sat down, and wept and mourned certain days, and fasted and prayed before the God of heaven."

The prophet Ezekiel was commissioned to declare to the rebellious house of Israel the terrible judgments of God that would very shortly come upon the whole land if they repented not. The roll he received was spread out before him, and there was written therein, "Lamentations and mourning, and woe."

But again, the people of God sometimes mourn over their own frailties, and also in affliction and temptation they bemoan their weakness. Christians, like other men, are the subjects of pain, sorrow, change, and death, but in many cases these afflictions are correctives, proofs of God's love. Our afflictions should remind us of our frailty and weakness, and while under them we should be obedient to God, and should trust in Him for support and comfort. But often the Christian mourns, that when his patience is assailed, his temper is not so calm as he could desire. When his heavenly mindedness is assailed, he does not manifest that resignation which becomes his Christian character. When his spiritual strength has been assailed he has perhaps gone at times to the conflict in his own might, and not glorified God in the trial; so that when he has had a "great fight of afflictions," when one combat has succeeded another, he has not manifested at all times those Christian graces which became him, and he mourns over his weakness in the hour of conflict. In addition to this how powerfully at times Satan tempts the believer to murmur and complain at the dispensations of God's providence, and suggests it would be better to take his cause into his own hands, and manage his own affairs, and while in the struggle he is burdened, but groans out his wishes to God, and gains strength and comfort at the throne of grace.

"Men have not power or skill,
With troubled souls to bear;
Though they express good will,
Poor comforters they are;
But swelling sorrows sink apace,
When we approach the throne of grace."

To all the tempted followers of Christ we say, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness, and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all taking the shield of faith wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked." And O what glorious triumphs will then be achieved. "Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted." But there is another kind of mourning to which we wish especially to refer. That godly sorrow which needeth not to be repented of, which every sincere penitent feels; and observe, first, this kind of sorrow is altogether different from that of the worldling, occasioned by some loss of property, or the peevishness and discontent of covetous persons, because their hearts having been set on some additional worldly goods, the possession of which they desired, but were never able to realize. This kind of sorrow is sinful, its principles wicked, and its tendency mischievous; its subjects may hang down their heads like bulrushes, and experience great mental wretchedness; but their sorrow worketh death. "Go to now, ye rich men; weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten; your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days." Nor is the mourning of the true penitent mere animal excitement. "All zeal is not commendable;" men are sometimes powerfully wrought upon, and their animal feelings are excited, while the deep and hidden recesses of their hearts remain untouched, and the deeper feelings of their nature unmoved; such mere excitement is not, however, the mourning to which we refer. Nor is it that sorrow of the world which is caused by wounded pride and self-mortification; persons who experience this kind of sorrow may think they do well to be angry. They are envious of their fellows, and when they see other persons in apparently happier circumstances, prospering and successful, they mourn the hardness of their lot. But such misery and wretchedness is not the mourning which is blessed. O how deluded are men! How many are trusting to mere frames and feelings, impressions, impulses, visions, emotions, and dreams, and hence the necessity of self-examination, and prayer for genuine repentance. For the mourning which is pronounced blessed, is the result of self-investigation, as by this means true penitents discover their depravity, and the perverseness of their evil hearts. Their mental anguish is the result of a true knowledge of themselves, and in some cases that agony is more acute than others. In some cases penitents experience much bitterness of soul when they see their awful condition, by the light of God's blessed Spirit. Then their fearful indifference subsides, and they experience a lively concern about their eternal interests. They mourn over their selfish and perverse nature, and seek the Lord with full purpose of heart. O let every sinner pray—

"Give us ourselves and Thee to know,
In this our gracious day;
Repentance unto life bestow,
And take our sins away."

But again. When true mourners discover their own state, they begin to read the Bible with new light; and the more they read the Scriptures of Divine truth, the more correct knowledge they attain, and the more they perceive there is to be known on the sublime subjects of religion relating to their souls and eternity; and these subjects occupy the attention of all true penitents as well as believers in a greater or lesser degree. And considering how depraved and deceitful is the heart in its unrenewed state, the sinner being dead in trespasses and in sins, it is no wonder when his eyes are opened that he groans and gives utterance to the bitterest lamentations, when in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

But again. True mourners grieve because they have sinned against God who has been so good to them. They exclaim, "Against thee and thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." Surrounded with many blessings, and the means of gratifying every reasonable wish, the mourner discovers that the bounteous Giver of all his good demands his obedience, whereas he has employed the very gifts of providence to increase his rebellion against God, and consequently he is unfit for the kingdom of heaven. To all impenitent sinners we would say, consider your state; you are sinners against God, and there is no home in heaven for you in your unconverted state. There are many mansions of blessedness and glory, which are delightful for the Christian to contemplate, but there is no mansion for the man who is at enmity against God. He goes into eternity clinging to his own condemnation, and as he passes into the spirit world, the recording angel writes against him, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy still;" and when thousands of ages shall have rolled away, he will still retain his character. It is, therefore, no wonder that when a sinner fully realizes the truth of these things, his grief should be distressing and that he should write bitter things against himself; no wonder that his sufferings are increased by self-reproach and inward condemnation. He has discovered the mote in his own eye, the sins he has committed, the many times he has pierced the Son of God afresh, and put Him to an open shame, and hence with anguish and sorrow of heart untold, he exclaims, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

But many worldly spirits and philosophic minds have regarded such sorrow as stupidity and dulness. Such, however, is not the case, for true sorrow has a tendency to promote the highest interests of those who weep, "Their sorrow may continue for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." The light of God's countenance will chase away the gloom, and though the mourner may never cease to remember his multiplied transgressions until the day of his death, yet the joy of pardon will elevate his mind, giving him consolation and peace, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." A young man of fashion, of wealth and education, of high social position, found out during the progress of the American revival that he was a sinner. He was bowed down under the load of his sins; he sought relief and found it not. The requirements of the law stared him in the face, and he felt justly condemned. His heart was filled with sorrow, his countenance bore marks of woe ; day after day he went about with his load, and his head bowed down like a bulrush ; and day after day his burden became more and more intolerable. What could he do ? Whither could he fly ? He had at home a young wife whom he loved as he did his own life. She, like him, was devoted to the pleasures of the world, knew not what religion was, nor did they care about it. He had a sister living with them ; they had been united in the love of fashionable folly ; the gaities and worldly amusements commonly enjoyed by persons in their position in life. The wife and sister looked on with mute astonishment at the change which had come over him. One day at a meeting that hardened young man found his burden removed ; faith in the Saviour sprang up in his soul. He believed that God for Christ's sake had forgiven him, and he determined he would never be ashamed of Christ but would acknowledge and honour him everywhere. The opportunity, the time, the place soon came. He was returning to his home in the evening ; "Now," said he, "I must honour and obey God in my family. I must set up family worship." "Oh, no," said the tempter, "not yet ; don't be in a hurry, take time ; get a little stronger and then you can go on better." "I must begin to-night ; I don't know what my wife and sister will say, but it is a duty and I am resolved to do it, and trust to God for the rest ; I must pray in my family." "Not to-night," said the tempter, "you don't know how to pray ; you have never prayed much, you are unacquainted with the language of prayer ; wait and learn." "No, no ; I must pray to night ; I will pray to night ; get thee behind me, Satan." He passed into his dwelling, and into his library, and there before God his heavenly Father, and in the name of Jesus Christ he poured out his heart, and asked for strength and grace from on high to assist him in his duty. When he met his wife that evening she saw at once that a great change had taken place in him. At length he said, "My dear wife, would you have any objections to our having family prayer?"

After a moments pause and surprise, she said, with true politeness, "Certainly not, if it is your pleasure." "Bring me a Bible then, please, and draw up under this gas light, let us read and pray." He read a chapter and then kneeled, but his wife and sister sat upright in their seats ; and he felt that he was alone on his knees ; he lifted up his eyes to God and cried out in the bitterness of his soul, "God be merciful to me a sinner ;" and gathering strength, he went on in his prayer, pouring out his most earnest cries and supplications, that God would have mercy on his beloved wife and sister. So earnest, so importunate was that prayer that God would shew his converting grace and power on the spot, that the heart of his wife was melted and overcome, and she slipped from her seat upon her knees beside him, and putting her arms round his neck, ere she was aware, she burst out into an agonizing cry to the Lord Jesus for mercy on her soul ; and then the sister knelt on the other side of him, and she too, put her arms round him and burst into a flood of tears. He continued to pray, he devoted himself and those with him to God, he confessed and bewailed his sins and their manner of life hitherto, he pleaded the promises of God to all those that seek him, and with unspeakable joy he made mention of the amazing grace of God in the pardon of his sins, and he besought that they all might find and attain together peace and forgiveness through a crucified Saviour. The submission was complete, the surrender was fully made ; repentance and faith sprang up in their hearts, and as they rose from their knees, it was to acknowledge each to the other what new determinations and resolutions, and consecrations, they each had made during the progress of that first prayer in the family, in that parlour, of all they were, and all they would be to Christ.

Since that first prayer in the parlour, God has been daily acknowledged in the same place, by the same circle. When from that circle they go from day to day in their walks of usefulness, and on their errands of mercy seeking out the perishing, ten thousand times happier than they ever were before. O how trumpet tongued does such an instance proclaim, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." And in times of mourning there is a power and privilege in weeping, the tears of a mourner are like the meltings of the snow around the heart, and hence we have cause for thankfulness, that we are permitted to weep, and that we are followers of a Master who wept. The man who sneers at a weeping penitent must have a heart as hard as a stone ; tears when expressive of Godly sorrow often afford sweet relief when our hearts have been overwhelmed with anguish, we have felt as though they would burst, had they not been suffered to vent their sorrow in tears. The pain we have felt, the deeply seated anguish, by a mysterious power has produced external indications of sorrow, and the wellings forth of the fountains of the soul are relieving to nature. We are not stoics, and have no desire to possess unrelenting hearts, while it is written, "Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted." Shall be comforted with a knowledge of that true propitiation which was made for their offences. A refuge from deserved wrath, "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested in the flesh, that he might destroy the works of the devil."

Shall be comforted with the presence and power of God's Holy Spirit ; "I will pray the Father and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever," and when the comforting presence of the Holy Spirit is experienced, the mourner's sufferings and humiliation are turned to rejoicing. The alarms of conscience are silenced by the peace of God ; anxiety, remorse, and unbelief taken away, his soul becomes the abode of the Holy Spirit, and that Spirit gives him power over his spiritual foes, and enables him to bear with patience his temptations and trials.

They that mourn shall be comforted with the peace of God ; which is a pledge of the divine approbation, and the seal of divine forgiveness. Discordant passions are subdued and conquered. The bright rays of the Sun of righteousness fill their souls, and the Christian rejoices in the quietness and assurance of the Gospel.

Shall be comforted with an abiding confidence in God ; he no longer doubts the power, love, and faithfulness of the divine Being, but possesses a comfortable persuasion of the favour of God. There is no longer a disturbed state of feeling resulting from an evil heart of unbelief, but being justified, renewed, and made happy in God, he can confide in the veracity, power, and love of his heavenly Father, and in times of trial he is prepared to say, "Though He slay me yet will I trust in Him." O when will universal peace prevail, the peace of individuals, the peace of families, the peace of nations, universal peace. Then sorrow and sighing shall flee away, grief and woe be banished from human society, and glory, dominion, and power, be ascribed to Him who came to bring "peace on earth, and good will to men."

In conclusion. To the timid I would say, Shrink not in the hour of trial, for your mourning shall be turned into joy and peace, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted. But to the hardened impenitent I say, Because you have resisted his mercy, he will laugh when your fear cometh. God will have you in derision. A day of retribution is approaching, and if you persist in rebellion, your joy will be turned into eternal lamentations, weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Your cries will be heard amidst the howling tempest of eternal wrath, where suffering the everlasting anguish of the worm that never dies, you will sigh and wish for death, while streams of woe will roll through your dark abode. O stop, consider your ways, fly to Christ, God has declared he has no pleasure in your destruction, turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die. Now forsake all your sins, and come to Christ for mercy and salvation, and all the blessings of the gospel will be yours. And then when the ransomed of the Lord shall come from every kindred nation, people, and tongue, to stand upon the sea of glass, and join the angelic shout of "glory to God, and to the Lamb," you will wave your palms of triumph, "exalted on the everlasting hills." Your days of mourning will then be for ever gone, and God shall wipe away all tears from your eyes.

"No slightest touch of pain, nor sorrow's least alloy,
Can violate our rest or stain, our purity of joy ;
In that eternal day, no clouds or tempests rise ;
There gushing tears are wiped away, for ever from our eyes."

MINISTERIAL PIETY.

HOW FAR THE SUCCESS OF A MINISTER DEPENDS UPON HIS PERSONAL PIETY.

A Paper read before the Nottingham District Association of Primitive Methodist Ministers, by the Rev. J. W. HOWELL.

DEAR BRETHREN,—The subject assigned to me at the last session of this association is, How far the success of a minister depends upon his personal piety? When I accepted this subject, it seemed remarkably simple and easy. As I thought of it, however, it appeared much more difficult than I at first supposed it to be, so that I ultimately despaired of meeting its requirements, and of determining the exact relation between a minister's piety and success. It has only been therefore during the last few days that I could bring my mind to the task of writing a paper upon it.

If the question refers to the exact degree of success which will accrue from the influence of a minister's piety, I frankly avow I cannot answer it. The degree of a minister's success may be affected by many things over which he has no control, therefore, his success may be very dissimilar in different places, owing to the circumstances connected with those places. In one place his piety may influence the promotion of religion, and in another this result may not be produced. The reason may be to some extent the peculiar circumstances of the places, and other things, and not to the lack of piety on the part of the minister. Christ Himself did not meet with equal success in every place which He visited, for we read of one place at which He could not do many mighty works, "because of unbelief," and He intimated to His disciples that the same results would attend their ministry, and hence He told them that when they were persecuted in one city they must flee to another.

If the question means, does the piety of a minister always secure success? I think not. Many things may operate against him, e. g., political agitation, commercial depression or panic, worldliness in the church, division in societies, family discords, etc. These may all operate so prejudicially on his efforts as to prevent that success which would, in all probability, under more favourable circumstances, attend his labours. Neither does the realized success of a minister depend wholly upon his piety. Two men of equal endowments, piety, etc., may not succeed in exactly the same degree, because, perhaps, of the more powerful and effective delivery and manner of the one than of the other, although, in every other respect they are equal. The same minister, too, with exactly the same degree of piety, for reasons already indicated, may not enjoy equal success at all times and in all places. This was the experience of the apostle, who said, "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil." (1 Tim., iv. 14.) These remarks, however, are not intended to furnish any excuse for defective ministerial piety, or any apology for any minister's neglect to cultivate that pure morality and deep-toned piety which both his position and profession alike require and demand.

The question suggesting this subject very properly assumes that a minister must be pious. Nothing can supply this lack, nor can any man be really and truly a minister of Christ who is not pious. On this subject a French writer says—"The ministry does not suppose an extraordinary measure of talents; piety, will, up to a certain point, supply the lack of them; piety in itself is a great talent. But if piety can, to a certain extent, supply the lack of talent, talent cannot supply the lack of piety."

It was a saying of the ancients, "No man can be an orator without moral virtue," and I may add, no man can be a truly efficient preacher of Christ's gospel without religion. To do as the Christian ministry requires,—to renounce self-love, to prefer the advantage of his hearer to his own glory, to choose rather to touch than to charm him, to convert him than to be admired by him, to force tears rather than applause from him, and to give up everything to his advantage and salvation,—these are things which a man can never do without deep and heartfelt piety; he may declaim, but he cannot preach.

But some have said, "If we are not good, we will at least appear so." In other words, We will perform the most sacred and solemn, the highest and the holiest duties, by the aid of imposture and hypocrisy, as if there were no difference between the employment of a minister and that of a comedian, between appearing in a pulpit and appearing on a stage. Such individuals could not long maintain a correct representation; sooner or later the sheep's clothing must fall off, leaving only the wolf to view.

For successful study and efficiency in the ministry, as a general rule there must be deep piety. The Scriptures must be read with the same spirit with which they were composed, and without which they cannot be comprehended. Paul's meaning cannot be understood until his spirit is imbibed, nor can David's significant utterances be properly received until his experience is enjoyed. Payson says that without piety, "listless indifference will invest the discharge of every spiritual duty, and failure follow as the result of every effort." How are we able to be holy and successful ministers of the New Testament without the life of God in our souls? In vain we assume the air of devotion, zeal, and sanctity, it may serve for a while to maintain our position with the people; they may be deceived, but the searching eye of God pierces the deep veil of hypocrisy. We wave the censor before the Lord, but the fire that glows in it is strange; we preach, but it is with art; we declaim, but it is professional; we diligently prepare, but our laboured productions are designed but to exhibit our rhetorical attainments, taste, and originality, and to display our genius, ingenuity, and skill. If we kindle into ardour, it is forced; if a tear falls from our eye, our own impassioned oratory has excited it; if a beam of joy plays athwart our countenance, an admiring throng hanging in breathless wonder on our lips has lighted it; or if in the minds of the listening auditory, emotion has been awakened and impression has been produced, with the breath which called it into being it has melted away, as beautiful, but as "unsubstantial and transient as a dream." And so we have our reward. Oh! my brethren, who can estimate under such circumstances how we should start as from a deep reverie, to the consciousness of the solemn truth, "Thou hast a vineyard of thy own to cultivate, a soul of thy own to be lost or saved."

Ministerial piety is indispensable for the proper discharge of the Christian minister's duties. This, perhaps, slightly differs in its essential elements from that which distinguishes the mere private member of a Christian church. At all events it ought to be greater, stronger, more intense. The minister of Christ should not only, like other professing Christians, be a converted man, but he should also have more light, a more profound acquaintance with Divine truth, should be deeper and richer in his Christian experience; in his life an embodiment of the principles of the Gospel, in his crucifixion of the flesh the completeness of his surrender, and the entirety of his devotion to God. If he be not thus hallowed to God, how can he rightly guide the people of God? How can he raise them, if they be on a level with himself, or even farther advanced in the Divine life? How can he exalt their piety while his own languishes? What power will there be in his appeals? What life in his sentiments? What cogency in his arguments? What force in his exhortations? What pathos in his utterances? What thunder in his declamations? To be successful a minister must be pious, and to be pre-eminently successful he must be pre-eminently holy.

By success, I understand the general prosperity of the church in the building up of believers, their growth in grace and in knowledge, together with the multiplication of their numbers by the conversion of sinners to God.

I may perhaps be asked, is success always or in every case, an evidence of piety? I answer, I think not. Most of us have probably known cases of success, where it has subsequently appeared there has not been true piety in the minister engaged. A case in point of this kind appears in Numbers xxiv., in connection with Balaam, whom Dr. Clarke supposes to have been at one time a true prophet, but who, in consequence of practising divination, and sorcery, and greediness, and love of gain, or, as St. Peter calls it, "the wages of unrighteousness," forfeited his prophetic spirit, character, and position. Yet upon this man, fallen and apostate though he was, and who, at the request of Balak, went out to curse Israel, upon him the spirit of God came. (Num. xxiv. 2.) His eyes were opened, or his mind was Divinely enlightened, and under the influence of the Divine afflatus, he pronounced the richest blessings upon the people whom he had been employed to curse. And that God may sometimes employ the ministry of a bad man to accomplish his purposes appears evident from the case of Judas, of whom Dr. Clarke says, "he was indisputably a bad man," and yet was sent out with the rest of the apostles, and doubtless, like the seventy, rejoiced to see Satan, like lightning, fall from heaven. This seems to be evident also from Matt. vii. 21-22, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father, which is in heaven. Many will say to me on that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works; and then will I profess unto them I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity." On this Dr. Clarke says, "Many will say to me in the Day of Judgment, Have we not prophesied, taught, publicly preached in thy name, acknowledging Thee to be the only Saviour, and proclaiming thee as such to others, cast out devils, impure spirits, who had taken possession of the bodies of men, done many miracles, being assisted by supernatural agency to invert even the course of nature, and thus prove the truth of the doctrine we preached? I never knew you, I never approved of you. You held the truth in unrighteousness while you preached my pure and holy doctrine, and for the sake of my own truth, and through my love to the souls of men, I blessed your preaching, but yourselves I could never esteem, because ye were destitute of the spirit of my Gospel, unholy in your hearts, and unrighteous in your conduct. Alas! Alas! how many preachers are there who appear as prophets in their pulpits? how many writers and other evangelical workmen, the miracles of whose labours, learning, and doctrine we admire, who are nothing and worse than nothing before God, because they perform not His will but their own? What an awful consideration, that a man of eminent gifts, whose talents are a source of public utility, should be only as a way-mark or finger-post in the way to eternal bliss, pointing out the road to others, without walking in it himself."

Another instance of this kind occurs in John xi. 51—"And this spake he not of himself, but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation." "Wicked and worthless as he was," says Dr. Clarke, "God so guided his tongue that, contrary to his intention, he pronounced a prophecy of the death of Jesus Christ." And the whole of the thirteenth chapter of Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians proves beyond dispute that a man may be successful who has no piety, and therefore is only as "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." From this it appears that the notion that success is an infallible evidence of piety is not correct. We may, however, safely affirm that where there is deep-rooted piety there will be some measure of success enjoyed, while it is hardly probable that there will be very extensive and constant success where there is not real vital godliness.

THE SALVATION OF LITTLE CHILDREN: AN ADDRESS TO PARENTS.

BY R. WARD, NEW PLYMOUTH, NEW ZEALAND.

"Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew xix. 14.

L. Consider that little children are objects of God's special regard.

THIS is without doubt an interesting subject to you. Amidst the busy things of life, its toils and cares, its uncertainties and sorrows, the smiling helplessness and innocent prattle of your children, contribute to relieve your hearts of their burdens. The claims of your offspring stimulate your industry, the formation of their character should make you careful of your own, and the thought of their eternal destiny should lead you to inquire what your everlasting destiny may be. Are your little children at a distance from you then, among the sweetest anticipations in which you indulge, one is to clasp your babes as you were wont to do. Are they removed by death? then you may possibly be mourning for your children and refusing to be comforted, because they are not. Wipe away these tears, and remember that your children are not, for God has taken them. Heaven may be more interesting to you because your loved ones are there.

Little children are objects of solemn importance. The most helpless of beings during the earliest portion of their life, but being capable of constant improvement, both intellectually and morally, your children demand your care and anxious solicitude to train them aright. "The inferior creatures seek their food and build their nests in the same manner they did three thousand years ago." The laws best suited to their preservation and happiness are given them, and they know no change. But your children are destined to change the raw materials of nature into beauty and worth, to replenish the earth and subdue it, to amass the information of many generations, and use it in carrying out their purposes. The great law of their nature by which this is to be done is improvement—constant improvement. What an exciting subject is this to the guide of youth! Enquire to what extent your child may be improved, both in mind and heart in the present life. Can you describe the boundary line? Where will you place it? It should be nothing less than "a perfect man in Christ Jesus," which should form the standard to which your child may rise.

Nor is your children's advancement interrupted by death. To die is gain. Follow out the idea of your children's improvement in heaven, they being filled with the glory of Christ, bounding forward to new fields of thought, and wider spheres of vision.

Your children are redeemed. Their ransom was as much the object of Christ's death as was your own. They are interested in every pang which the Saviour bore.

His resurrection from the dead has secured theirs. The work of the Holy Spirit is as certainly wrought in them, fitting them for the celestial world, as in you; with this difference, that they do not grieve the Spirit, but their nature, passive in the hands of the Holy Ghost, is moulded into the image of their Lord. A little child was deemed a fit representative of our renewed nature. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The birth of a child is really a great event. No parent can tell what his child will become. In numberless instances obscurity has shrouded the early years of men who became the lights of their generation; and forebodings of evil which hung over an infant's cradle, have given way to a career of splendour and usefulness which will never be forgotten. Moses seemed to be born only to be destroyed; as a babe one might have supposed him bereft of every earthly good, except a mother's love and a sister's watchful eye; but he became the most honoured man of his day, and his name and deeds will never be forgotten. A mother in America called her child "Ichabod," as if she would insist that the glory had departed from Israel; yet that child became a useful and eminent minister of Christ. Although eminence in the things of this life may not be within the reach of every child, a well defined and honourable career may be secured by all. Look in the face of your little children, and ask, What may they become with proper training and divine grace? What blessings may they diffuse? What springs may they touch, which may affect other minds and hearts? How much glory may they bring to Christ in the present life, and in the life which is to come? Or what will become of them if they be neglected, if the mind be untrained, if the heart be the nest of every evil principle, if sin be wrought into habit, and if base passions be let loose; reckless of character, and risking both time and eternity, they rush onward to inevitable ruin. O, ye parents, remember that all this evil, and much more, may overtake your babes if they be neglected. Left to themselves they may bring your grey hairs with sorrow to the grave. Hasten with them to Jesus; lose not an hour. Take encouragement from the proverb, that if you train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it.

II. Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

Too much prominence cannot be given to these gracious words. Parents are generally anxious to prepare their children for a position in the present life; they watch their opening faculties, give them what assistance the school can afford, and look forward with interest to the time when they shall stand in the place or position themselves occupy, at once their honour and their joy. But how seldom, comparatively, are they equally anxious about the salvation of their souls. Schools may train their mind, and well ordered society may polish their manners, industrious habits may secure respectability in the present life; but nothing less than the work of the Holy Spirit in their heart and mind, can prepare them for the life which is to come.

The invitation of Jesus is most gracious. To occupy any place in the kingdom of grace, to engage in the most humble department of Christian effort, were an honour; but your privilege is to introduce your children to Jesus. Let no power on earth prevent you from bringing your babes to Christ Himself. Rites and ceremonies may be instruments used to bring them to the Saviour, but they must in no case take the place of Jesus. Hear Jesus saying, "Stand aside ye useless ceremonies and ye men of earth, that fill the field of vision, and let me be seen." "Suffer little children to come unto me." If they can do no more than lip My name, let them come; if they cannot even do this, bring them that I may bless them; let those who can wave their branches and shout their hosannahs in the temple do so; let them come without exception of name or place, of sex or age—"Suffer little children to come unto me."

These words may be understood in two respects. First, in reference to the present life, in which sense the meaning is very important, for Jesus is the best friend and guide of the young. If in mature age, when the judgment is formed and the world is known, it is difficult to steer a steady course through the sea of life; how can inexperienced childhood and youth, opposed by a thousand foes, pursue the right course unharmed? Let the motive arising from this view of your children's danger have its proper influence in determining you to present them at once to the Lord.

MISCELLANIES.

1. THE SHOEMAKER IN SPAIN.

A MINISTER of the Gospel, who resided for a time at Gibraltar, made several excursions into the Spanish territory for the purpose of distributing a few Bibles and Testaments in that unhappy country, where the power of the apostate church of Rome is so great, that the poor priest-ridden people dare not read God's word. At one time he visited the house of a shoemaker, with whom he held a very pleasing conversation. He found this poor man of an inquiring mind, greatly dissatisfied with the existing state of things, and yet unable to see any door of hope, or any prospect of remedy for the wrongs and woes of his country. He stated that he and a number of his friends were in the habit of meeting together every week, and discussing public affairs, when politics were talked over, but they generally left off as they began, such discussions seldom proving very profitable.

"Why do you not get the Bible and read that?" said the minister.

"Ah!" replied the shoemaker, "I wish I could get it; but the priests take care we poor Spaniards shall not have the Bible."

"Well, now," said the minister, "I know the risk I am running, and that if the priests learn that I am here distributing copies of God's word, I shall be stilettoed before I get back to Gibraltar; but I think I can trust you. Would you really like a Bible to read?"

"There is nothing I should like so much," was the reply.

A copy was then given to him, which he received with evident delight, and with many expressions of gratitude. On being asked if his friends who met with him during the week would also like copies, he declared that they would be highly prized and diligently read, and he received several more books for their use. The minister gave him a few parting words of exhortation, told him where he might be found, and, after distributing the remainder of his little volumes, reached Gibraltar in safety.

Some weeks after this, the minister was sitting alone in his room, having told the servant that no one was to be admitted to see him, as he was engaged in study. During the day, however, a Spanish peasant, dressed in his gay holiday attire, called at the house and asked to see the minister. He was told he could not be seen, as he had given orders that he was not to be disturbed.

"Oh, but," said the Spaniard, "I think if you tell him that a man to whom he gave a Bible has come a long distance to see him, he will not deny me."

Struck with the earnestness of the man, the servant at length consented to go with a message to his master, and said that a person was at the door who would not be denied.—The peasant was therefore shown up into the minister's room.

"Don't you remember me, sir?" was the exclamation of the Spaniard, on perceiving he was not recognized, "Don't you remember sir, calling at the house of a shoemaker a few weeks ago, and leaving him some Bibles?"

"Yes," replied the minister; "but I really did not recognize you again in your smart holiday dress."

The man then began to tell what joy the Bibles had caused to himself and his friends, and that now, instead of meeting to talk politics, they met to read the word of God together, and that in the volume of truth they saw the true remedy for all the ills that afflicted their country. After the heart-felt expression of many thanks, the shoemaker concluded by saying, "As a mark of my gratitude for your coming, at the risk of your own life, to bring me the precious Bible, I have brought you, sir, a pair of shoes, which I hope you will accept."

"Well," said the good minister, "it is very kind of you, but I fear your good intentions may not be of much service, for the shoes will probably not fit me."

"O, yes, sir, I think they will, if you will try them."

The trial was made, and the shoes were found an excellent fit; and on the man being asked how he had guessed the size so accurately, he replied, "I knew, sir, after you left my house you had to pass over some soft clay, so I followed you, and from your foot-prints I took the size of your foot, which enabled me to make you the shoes, which I hope you will wear as a mark of my gratitude for the book you gave me."

Surely there is hope for poor Spain, when it is thus that her sons appreciate the word of God, though for centuries deprived of its light and truth.—From "The Book and its Mission."

2. THE VICTORIAN EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

HAVING through the kindness of our friends in Australia, especially the Rev. G. T. Hall, been enabled to furnish our readers with a brief account of the outfit, and sending forth, &c., of the Victorian Exploring Expedition, and having furnished an account of the success which crowned the efforts of the brave explorers; having also published information relative to the melancholy end of the party which reached Carpentaria, Mr. King excepted, we shall draw the subject to a close, praying that the spirit of religious enterprise may keep pace with the extension of civilization, and that the hallowing influence of a healthy Christianity may permeate all classes of society throughout our colonial possessions; and that the benefits resulting from the labours of Burke and his associates, may be duly appreciated and richly enjoyed to the end of time.

BURKE'S LAST LETTER.

Dépôt No. 2, Cooper's Creek.

Camp No. 65.

The return party from Carpentaria, consisting of myself, Mr. Wills, and King (Gray dead), arrived here last night, and found that the dépôt party had only started on the same day. We proceed on tomorrow slowly down the creek towards Adelaide, by Mount Hopeless, and shall endeavour to follow Gregory's track, but we are very weak. The two camels are done up, and we shall not be able to travel further than four or five miles a day. Gray died on the road from exhaustion and fatigue. We have all suffered much from hunger. The provisions left here will, I think, restore our strength. We have discovered a practicable route to Carpentaria, the chief portion of which lies on the 140th meridian of east longitude. There is some good country between this and the stony desert. From there to the tropic the country is dry and stony. Between the tropic and Carpentaria a considerable portion is rangy, but it is well watered and richly grassed.

We reached the shores of Carpentaria on the 11th February, 1861. Greatly disappointed at finding the party here gone.

22nd April, 1861.

P.S. The camels cannot travel, and we cannot walk, or we should follow the other party. We shall move very slowly down the creek."

WILLS' LAST LETTER.

The following is Mr. Wills' letter, which he buried in the cache at Cooper's Creek, after finding it impossible to get through to South Australia :—

Depôt Camp, 30th May.

We have been unable to leave the creek. Both camels are dead, and our provisions are done. Mr. Burke and King are down the lower part of the creek. I am about to return to them, when we shall probably come up this way. We are trying to live the best way we can, like the blacks, but find it hard work. Our clothes are going to pieces fast. Send provisions and clothes as soon as possible.

W. J. WILLS.

The depôt party having left, contrary to instructions, has put us in this fix. I have deposited some of my journals here, for fear of accidents.

(Signed) W. J. W.

The following extracts are from the despatches of Mr. Howitt, the leader of the Victorian contingent exploration party.

Sept. 15.—Camp 32. Lat. 27 deg. 44 min., Long. 140 deg. 40 min.—On leaving this morning I went ahead with Sandy, to try and pick up Mr. Burke's track. At the lower end of a large water hole, found where one or two horses had been feeding for some months; the tracks ran in all directions to and from the water, and were as recent as a week. At the same place I found the handle of a clasp knife. From here struck out south for a short distance from the creek, and found a distinct camel's track and droppings on a native path: the footprint was about four months old, and going E. I then set the black boy to follow the creek, and struck across some sandy country in a bend on the north side. No tracks here; and coming on a native path leading my way, I followed it, as the most likely place to see any signs. In about four miles this led me to the lower end of a very large reach of water, and on the opposite side were numbers of native wurleys. I crossed at a neck of sand, and at a little distance again came on the track of a camel going up the creek; at the same time I found a native, who began to gesticulate in a very excited manner, and to point down the creek, bawling out, "Gow, gow!" as loud as he could; when I went towards him he ran away, and finding it impossible to get him to come to me, I turned back to follow the camel track and to look after my party, as I had not seen anything of them for some miles. The track was visible in sandy places, and was evidently the same I had seen for the last two days. I also found horse tracks in places, but very old. Crossing the creek, I cut our track, and rode after the party. In doing so I came upon three pounds of tobacco, which had lain where I saw it for some time. This, together with the knife handle, the fresh horse tracks, and the camel track going eastward, puzzled me extremely, and led me into a hundred conjectures. At the lower end of the large reach of water before mentioned I met Sandy and Frank looking for me, with the intelligence that King, the only survivor of Mr. Burke's party, had been found. A little further on I found the party halted, and immediately went across to the blacks' wurleys, where I found King sitting in a hut which the natives had made for him. He presented a melancholy appearance—wasted to a shadow, and hardly to be distinguished as a civilized being but by the remnants of clothes upon him. He seemed exceedingly weak, and I found it occasionally difficult to follow what he said. The natives were all gathered round, seated on the ground, looking with a most gratified and delighted expression. Camped where the party had halted on a high bank, close to the water. I shall probably be here ten days to recruit King before returning.

Sept. 16.—Camp 32.—King already looks vastly improved, even since yesterday, and not like the same nan. Have commenced shoeing horses and preparing for our return. Wind from S.W. with signs of rain. The natives seem to be getting ready for it.

Sept. 18.—Camp 32.—Left camp this morning with Messrs. Brahe, Welch, Wheeler, and King, to perform a melancholy duty which has weighed on my mind ever since we have camped here, and which I have only put off until King should be well enough to accompany us. We proceeded down the creek for seven miles, crossing a branch running to the southward, and followed a native track leading to that part of the creek where Mr. Burke, Mr. Wills, and King camped after their unsuccessful attempt to reach Mount Hopeless, and the northern settlements of South Australia, and where poor Wills died. We found the two gunyahs pretty much as King had described them, situated on a sandbank between two water-holes, and about a mile from the flat where they procured the nardoo seed, on which they managed to exist so long. Poor Wills' remains we found lying in the wurley in which he died, and where King, after his return from seeking for the natives, had buried him with sand and rushes. We carefully collected the remains and interred them where they lay; and, not having a prayer-book, I read chap. xv. of 1 Cor., that we might at least feel a melancholy satisfaction in having shown the last respect to his remains. We heaped sand over the grave, and laid branches upon it, that the natives might understand by their own tokens not to disturb the last repose of a fellow-being. I cut the following inscription on a tree close by, to mark the spot:—

W. J. WILLS, XLV. YDS. W.N.W. A.H.

The field books, a note-book belonging to Mr. Burke, various small articles lying about, of no deep value in themselves, but now invested with an interest from the circumstances connected with them, and some of the nardoo seed on which they had subsisted, with the small wooden trough in which it had been cleansed, I have now in my possession. We returned home with saddened feeling; but I must confess that I felt a sense of relief that this painful ordeal had been gone through. King was very tired when we returned, and I must most unwillingly defer my visit to the spot where Mr. Burke's remains are lying, until he is better able to bear the fatigue.

Sept. 21.—Finding it would not be prudent for King to go out for two or three days, I could no longer defer making a search for the spot where Mr. Burke died; and with such directions as King could give, I went up the creek this morning with Messrs. Brahe, Welch, Wheeler, and Aitkin. We searched the creek upwards for eight miles, and, at length, strange to say, found the remains of Mr. Burke lying among tall plants under a clump of box trees, within 200 yards of our last camp, and not thirty paces from our track. It was still more extraordinary that three or four of the party and the two black boys had been close to the spot without noticing it. The bones were entire, with the exception of the hands and feet; and the body had been removed from the spot where it first lay, and where the natives had placed branches over it, to about five paces distance. I found the revolver which Mr. Burke held in his hand when he expired, partly covered with leaves and earth, and corroded with rust. It was loaded and capped. We dug a grave close to the spot, and interred the remains wrapped in the union jack—the most fitting covering in which the bones of a brave but unfortunate man could take their last rest. On a box tree, at the head of the grave, the following inscription is cut :—

21   9 '61.
A. H.

Sept. 23.—Went down the creek to-day, in search of the natives. One of the party accompanied me, and we took two days' rations, in case it should be necessary to prolong our search. Two days after we camped here the natives left, and have not been seen since; and I could not think of leaving without shewing them that we could appreciate and reward the kindness they had shown to Burke's party, and particularly to King. For three miles we travelled over alluvial flats along the creek, timbered with box and large gums, and dotted with bean trees, orange trees of large size, but at present without fruit, various kinds of acacias, and other bushes. To the right hand level flats and sand ridges, apparently tolerably grassed. We then came on a large reach of water, where four or five natives had just been fishing; their nets were lying on the sand to dry, and the fire yet burning. Not seeing any one about, and getting no answer to a cooeey, we went on. At three miles more we past the first feeder of Stralezki's Creek, going to the southward, and at a large reach of water below found the natives camped. They made a great commotion when we rode up, but seemed very friendly. I unpacked my blanket, and took out specimens of the things I intended giving them—a tomahawk, a knife, beads, a looking-glass, comb, and flour and sugar. The tomahawk was the great object of attraction, after that the knife, but I think the looking-glass surprised them most. On seeing their faces some seemed dazzled, others opened their eyes like saucers, and made a rattling noise with their tongues expressive of surprise. We had quite a friendly palaver, and my watch amused them immensely. When I gave them some of the sugar to taste, it was absurd to see the sleight of hand with which they pretended to eat it, I suppose from a fear of being poisoned, which I suppose is general, as our black boys are continually in dread lest the "wild black fellow" should poison them by some means. I made them understand that they were to bring the whole tribe up next morning to our camp to receive their presents, and we parted the best of friends. The names of the principal men are Tchukulow, Mungallee (three in number), To-quanter, Pitchery (three in number, one a funny little man, with his head in a net, and a kite's feather in it—another a tall man, with his beard tied in a point), Pruriekow, and Borokow.

September 24.—This morning, about ten o'clock, our black friends appeared in a long procession, men, women, and children, or, as they here also call them, piccaninnies; and at a mile distance they commenced bawling at the top of their voices as usual. When collected altogether on a little flat, just below our camp, they must have numbered between thirty and forty, and the uproar was deafening. With the aid of King, I at last got them all seated before me, and distributed the presents—tomahawks, knives, necklaces, looking-glasses, combs, among them. I think no people were ever so happy before, and it was very interesting to see how they pointed out one or another who they thought might be overlooked. The piccaninnies were brought forward by their parents, to have red ribbon tied round their dirty little heads. One old woman, Carrawaw, who had been particularly kind to King, was loaded with things. I then divided 50lb of sugar between them, each one taking his share in a Union Jack pocket handkerchief, which they were very proud of. The sugar soon found its way into their mouths; the flour, 50lb of which I gave them, they at once called "white fellow nardoo," and they explained that they understood that these things were given to them for having fed King. Some old clothes were then put on some of the men and women, and the affair ended in several of our party and several of the black-fellows having an impromptu "corroboree," to the intense delight of the natives, and, I must say, very much to our own amusement. They left, making signs expressive of friendship, carrying their presents with them. The men all wore a net girdle, and of the women, some wore one of leaves, others of feathers. I feel confident that we have left the best impression behind us, and that the "white fellows," as they have already learned to call us, will be looked on henceforth as friends, and that, in case of emergency, any one will receive the kindest treatment at their hands.

The Report of the Royal Commission on the fate of Burke and Wills, is as follows:—

In conformity with the terms of her Majesty's commission, we have made inquiry into the circumstances connected with the sufferings and death of Robert O'Hara Burke, and William John Wills, the Victorian explorers. We have endeavoured to ascertain the true causes of this lamentable result of the expedition, and have investigated the circumstances under which the depot at Cooper's Creek was abandoned by Mr. William Brahe. We have sought to determine upon whom rests the grave responsibility of there not having been a sufficient supply of provisions and clothing secured for the recruiting of the explorers on their return, and for their support until they could reach the settlements; and we have generally inquired into the organization and conduct of the expedition.

Our investigation has been confined to the above matters, the Government having already taken into consideration the claims of the colony of the surviving members of the expedition, &c.

We have examined all persons willing to give evidence who professed, or whom we supposed to possess, knowledge upon the various subjects of our inquiries; and we now, after mature consideration, submit to your Excellency the following report:—

The expedition, having been provided and equipped in the most ample and liberal manner, and having reached Menindie, on the Darling, without experiencing any difficulties, was most injudiciously divided at that point by Mr. Burke.

It was an error of judgment on the part of Mr. Burke to appoint Mr. Wright to an important command in the expedition without a previous personal knowledge of him; although, doubtless, a pressing urgency had arisen for the appointment from the sudden resignation of Mr. Llandells and Dr. Beckler.

Mr. Burke evinced a far greater amount of zeal than prudence in finally departing from Cooper's Creek before the depot party had arrived from Menindie, and without having secured communication with the settled districts as he had been instructed to do; and in undertaking so extended a journey with an insufficient supply of provisions, Mr. Burke was forced into the necessity of overtaxing the powers of his party, whose continuous and unremitting exertions resulted in the destruction of his animals, and the prostration of himself, and his companions from fatigue and severe privation.

The conduct of Mr. Wright appears to have been reprehensible in the highest degree. It is clear that Mr. Burke, on parting with him at Torowotto, relied on receiving his immediate and zealous support; and it seems extremely improbable that Mr. Wright could have misconstrued the intentions of his leader so far as to suppose that he ever calculated for a moment on his remaining for any length of time on the Darling. Mr. Wright has failed to give any satisfactory explanation of the causes of his delay; and to that delay are mainly attributable the whole of the disasters of the expedition, with the exception of the death of Gray. The grave responsibility of not having left a larger supply of provisions, together with some clothing, in the cache at Cooper's Creek, rests with Mr. Wright. Even had he been unable to convey stores to Cooper's Creek, he might have left them elsewhere, leaving notice at the depot of having done so.

The Exploration Committee, in overlooking the importance of the contents of Mr. Burke's dispatch from Torowotto, and in not urging Mr. Wright's departure from the Darling, committed errors of a serious nature. A means of knowledge of the delay of the party at Menindie was in the possession of the committee, not indeed by direct communication to that effect, but through the receipt of various letters from Drs. Becker and Beekler, at various dates up to the end of November—without, however, awakening the committee to a sense of the vital importance of Mr. Burke's request in that despatch that he should "be soon followed up"—or to a consideration of the disastrous consequences which would be likely to result, and did unfortunately result, from the fatal inactivity and idling of Mr. Wright and his party on the Darling.

The conduct of Mr. Brahe, in retiring from his position at the depot before he was rejoined by his commander, or relieved from the Darling, may be deserving of considerable censure; but we are of opinion that a responsibility far beyond his expectations devolved upon him; and it must be borne in mind that, with the assurance of his leader, and his own conviction, he might each day expect to be relieved by Mr. Wright, he still held his post for four months and five days, and that only when pressed by the appeals of a comrade sickening even to death, as was subsequently proved, his powers of endurance gave way, and he retired from the position which could alone afford succour to the weary explorers should they return by that route. His decision was most unfortunate; but we believe he acted from a conscientious desire to discharge his duty, and we are confident that the painful reflection that twenty-four hours' further perseverance would have made him the rescuer of the explorers, and gained for himself the praise and approbation of all, must be of itself an agonizing thought, without the addition of censure he might feel himself undeserving of.

It does not appear that Mr. Burke kept any regular journal, or that he gave written instructions to his officers; had he performed these essential portions of the duties of a leader, many of the calamities of the expedition might have been averted, and little or no room would have been left for doubt in judging of the conduct of those subordinates who pleaded unsatisfactory and contradictory verbal orders and statements.

We cannot too deeply deplore the lamentable result of an expedition undertaken at so great a cost to the colony; but, while we regret the absence of a systematic plan of operations on the part of the leader, we desire to express our admiration of his gallantry and daring, as well as of the fidelity of his brave coadjutor, Mr. Wills, and their more fortunate and enduring associate, Mr. King; and we would record our feelings of deep sympathy with the deplorable sufferings and untimely deaths of Mr. Burke and his fallen comrades.

3. DO YOU LOVE THE LORD JESUS CHRIST?

A MISSIONARY had been sent for to visit a dying man. He had a long way to go, but he mounted a horse and rode fast. He had to pass through a gate; it was closed, but at last a man came out and opened it for him. "Thank you, my friend, and now tell me, do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?" The man stared, but, making no reply the missionary rode off. Many years afterwards, he was holding a meeting, and after it was over, a gentleman begged to speak with him; and what was the surprise of the missionary, when he said, "I am greatly indebted to you, sir." "In my debt! I do not understand you. I do not remember ever seeing you before." "Sir, I am more in your debt than I can ever repay you, for through your words I have been brought to a knowledge of Christ. Do you remember riding quickly through a gate, and saying to the man who held it, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' I am that man; but then I had never heard of Christ, your words sunk into my heart, and I asked every one I met if they could tell me who Jesus Christ was, and why I should love him. At last I found a pious negro woman, and she told me all you had taught her, and now I am a Christian." Thus did God bless the missionary's words.

"Speak wisely, who can tell
The power of a word?
A sinner it may save from hell,
And turn him to the Lord."

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. Charges and Sermons on Special Occasions, during a ministry of fifty years. By ANDREW REED, D.D., as pastor of the church assembling at Wycliffe Chapel, London. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row. 1861.

DR. REED has stood on a lofty pedestal as an author for a lengthened period, nor is his position likely to be less elevated, now that he has passed from among us to the blissful regions of a glorious immortality.

This excellent volume contains five charges and nine sermons. The former may be considered as models in many respects. Deeply sympathizing with his youthful brethren in their glorious, but solemn position, his pious heart pours forth streams of natural, refined, pathetic eloquence, which, while it is especially calculated to secure and rivet attention, is also well adapted to promote spirituality of mind and devotedness of life to the grand purposes for which man was created, and for which he was graciously redeemed.

The work is truly excellent, and although the "Discourses" have been published in a separate form, and "most of them have passed through several editions," very many persons who are good and wise, and, we trust, many who wish to become such, will gratefully accept this work of the late esteemed Dr. Reed, in its present form, as a real treasure.

The style is chaste, perspicuous, and popular. The great fundamental doctrines of our common Christianity are clearly stated, while they are logically and scripturally enforced under an influence which gilds, burnishes, brightens, and burns as one reads. In the charge delivered to his son, the Rev. A. Reed, A.B., in 1841, we not only felt very greatly profited in the perusal, but we were at a loss to determine which to admire most, the Christian father or the devoted minister. In both relationships the Doctor appears to very great advantage. We heartily recommend the book.

2. The Works of Thomas Adams; being the sum of his Sermons, Meditations, and other Divine and Moral Discourses, with Memoir. By JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D., Principal of the Baptist College, Regent's Park, London. Vols. I., II., and III. Edinburgh: James Nichol; London: James Nisbet and Co.; Dublin: W. Robertson. 1862.

NICHOL's series of Standard Divines, Puritan period, come to us under the patronage of the following gentlemen, who constitute the council of publication, viz.: W. Lindsey Alexander, D.D., Thomas J. Crawford, D.D., S.T.P.; William Cunningham, D.D.; D. T. K. Drummond, M.A., William H. Gold, D.D., and Andrew Thompson, D.D., aided by other literary gentlemen of note, whose services have been secured to make more complete the several works selected for publication. The "Works of Thomas Adams" are terse, masculine, and quaint, and illustrate a mind of superior power, thoroughly disciplined, profoundly fruitful, and decidedly original, but eccentric. We furnish an extract from Vol. II., page 38, which will give our readers a tolerably correct view of our author's style. The text is Matt. xii. 43—45:—

"The white devil, the hypocrite, hath been formerly discovered in a previous sermon, and the sky-coloured veil of his dissimulation pulled off. I am to present to your view and detestation a sinner of a contrary colour, swarthy, rebellious, and besmeared profaneness—an apostate falling into the clutches of eight unclean spirits. Needs must he be foul that hath so many foul devils in him. Mary Magdalene had but seven, and they were cast out; this hath gotten one more, to make his soul the blacker, and they keep in. If hypocrisy then were justly called the white devil, apostasy here may be as justly termed the black saint. In the former was a white skin of profession drawn over an ulcerous corpse; here, hide and carcass, hand and heart, shadow and substance, seeming and being, outward profession and inward intention, are black, foul, detestable. Therefore we call him the apostate, or black saint."

A bold originality and almost endless variety, with other excellencies, characterize the "Works of Thomas Adams," which will commend them to many readers.

3. The Works of Thomas Goodwin, D.D., sometime President of Magdalen College, Oxford; with General Preface by JOHN C. MILLER, D.D., Lincoln College, honorary Canon of Worcester; Rector of St. Martin's, Birmingham; and Memoir by ROBERT HALLEY, D.D., Principal of the Independent New College, London. Vols. II. and III., containing expositions of various passages of the Epistle to the Ephesians; Patience and its perfect work, being an Exposition of James I. 1—5. Also an exposition of the Book of Revelation; certain select cases resolved; and the vanity of thoughts discovered. Edinburgh: James Nichol. London: James Nisbet and Co. Dublin: W. Robertson. 1861.

THE name of Thomas Goodwin, D.D., has long been held in veneration and he ranks high among the theologians of his day. The valuable works now being issued by Mr. Nichol will extend his fame. For our views on Vol. I., see our issue for April of the present year, pages 232, 233, which views, as a whole, we endorse, and deem them generally applicable to the present volumes. Dr. Goodwin was a man of superior powers, and the masterly manner in which he handles the subjects he has selected must contribute to improve the taste of the present age on sound practical divinity. We deem these works a valuable acquisition to our Theological library.

4. The Doubting Christian obtaining the Light of Life. Second edition. By THOMAS MILLS. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co. 1862.

SEE our notice of the First Edition of this excellent work on page 234, under the title "The Light of Life," &c. We have good reason to believe this book has been made a great blessing to many souls, and we doubt not will be blessed to many more.

5. The Great Conflict of the Age; or, Protestantism and Popery contrasted in their Leading Doctrines. A manual for the million. Dedicated to the Right Honourable the Earl of Shaftesbury. London: John F. Shaw, Southampton-street, and 48, Paternoster Row. Edinburgh: J. Nichol. Dublin: John Robertson. 1862.

THE author of this manual has done good service to the cause of saving truth. Cool, clear, concise, and forcible in his method, and possessing a good knowledge of his subject, he will secure a verdict from a large majority of his readers in favour of his own conclusions, "That Romanism is a formidable system of error." But had he been a dissenter, we think many of his remarks would have come with a better grace; witness Baptismal regeneration, &c. We can, however, cordially recommend the book.

6. Aylott's Improved Editions of Irving's Catechism. General Knowledge. Aylott and Co., Paternoster Row. Price 1s. 6d. sewed, or 2s. bound.

THE valuable compendium on our table is especially adapted to expand the mind, and awaken in ardent youth an increasing thirst for useful knowledge.

7. The Wanderings of a Bible. By CLARA LUCAS BALFOUR. S. W. Partridge, No. 9, Paternoster Row.

THIS is a truly graphic picture of life under different aspects, equally creditable to the talents and sympathies of the fair author. "The Wanderings of a Bible" will be a great favourite with many of its readers.

8. The Revival at St. Ives, Cornwall: being a full report of the revival services conducted by the Rev. Wm. and Mrs. Booth; together with a brief sketch of the life and ministerial labours of the Rev. Wm. Booth. By a Converted Deist. London: George J. Stevenson, 54, Paternoster Row, and C. T. Stephens, Fore-street, St. Ives, Cornwall.

THE tractate before us furnishes an account of what appears to us to be a very excellent and extensive revival of religion. We pray that the book may be made a great blessing to professors generally, and to ministers of the gospel especially. "He that winneth souls is wise."

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

1. SOUTH MOLTON MISSIONS.—My dear Brother Harland,—You and the numerous readers of our highly appreciated Magazines will be glad to learn that God still continues to bless the labours of His servants on this station.

Bishop's Nympton is a village about three miles from South Molton, numbering upwards of five hundred inhabitants. Formerly it was a noted place for vice, cock-fighting, card-playing, wrestling, and drunkenness; but, through preaching Jesus, as the Saviour of sinners, a great change has taken place; and many of those who were ringleaders in these wicked practices, are now happy in the Lord.

February 9th, 1862. The writer preached at Bishop's Nympton; and four penitents presented themselves at the feet of Jesus, two of whom were made happy.

Two of the four above-named were noted wrestlers. At one time, about twenty-four years since, they wrestled an hour for a silver cup; but how it gladdened our hearts that night in seeing them wrestling for the blessing of pardon. One was converted, and has identified himself with us. Praise God!

We have recently opened a new place, called Molland Cross; and there God has blessed our labours. We have formed a society, numbering four members, and the congregations are very good. Praise the Lord.

May we live holily, may we follow the example of Jesus "who went about doing good," and may we emulate the indefatigable zeal of those holy men who have lived to Jesus, laboured for Jesus, and who are now in the land of the happy and free.

2. RADSTOCK CIRCUIT, March, 1862.—Dear Brother Harland,—It may not be uninteresting for you and your readers to know that the Lord has graciously visited us in this circuit with a blessed revival of His work. We now number at Radstock 200 members, having added 94 this quarter. We have opened a commodious new schoolroom, and many of the scholars are in church fellowship with us.

At Welton, we only numbered 24, now 78, and a new gallery is needed to accommodate our congregation.

At Single Hill, we were oft much tried after visiting and distributing tracts, &c. We, however, sometimes had to return home without preaching. We were reduced to six members, now we number fifty-six. The people have not only become sober, but have indeed proved the Gospel to be the "power of God to salvation." We can say, "The Lord has done great things for us whereof we are glad."

Our increase is about 260 souls, and we are looking forward for greater things. Last summer, we paid considerable attention at Radstock to open-air services, preaching in and about the market; and on Sunday mornings, at six o'clock, we held open-air prayer-meetings in different places. We waited in faith and duty, and we have now proved the truth of the inspired words, "Your labour shall not be in vain in the Lord." To God be all the glory. Amen. J. WILSON.

3. ST. IVES, CORNWALL.—"The LORD reigneth: let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of the isles be glad thereof. Clouds and darkness are round about him:

righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne."

Twelve months ago, a storm had gathered over our church in this Circuit, which threatened fearful destruction, but that Divine Being who — "rides upon the stormy sky,

And calms the roaring seas."

has brought us through the difficulties which lay before us, and caused a brighter day to shine upon us.

In August, 1861, the Lord visited our societies with tokens of His grace, and gave us signs of a powerful revival of religion at St. Ives, and every week since that period up to our March quarterly meeting, 1862, sinners have been saved and united in fellowship with us. During the months of October, November, and December, when the revival was pretty general in this neighbourhood, and the Rev. W. Booth was labouring successfully in several chapels, we received the largest portion of our ingathering; but both previous to, and since that period, many precious souls have been plucked as brands from the burning.

We have formed four new classes, which unitedly amount to eighty-four members; and some of the old leaders have more than doubled their numbers, so that our town society has risen from 235 to 444 members, and the good work is still moving on.

As far as we can judge, the work appears likely to be permanent. There are not so many children as we have sometimes seen; but there is a goodly number of young men and young women. There are many in their prime, from thirty to fifty years of age; and we have some who, far advanced in the journey of life, have found salvation in Christ.

In these times of refreshing, my colleague, Mr. R. Killingrey, with our local preachers, leaders, and praying people, have laboured with untiring zeal and much success.

I am happy to say that souls have been saved throughout the Circuit, and our societies at Lelant, Trevalgan, Nancledria, Balnoon, and Trenerom, have had some gracious visitations of the Spirit, and accessions have been made to the several societies.

During last year, seven have been called from us by death, and others have fallen or removed from the Circuit; but through the blessing of the Most High, we have filled up their places, and report an increase of 200 members to the district meeting. To God be all the glory. We have now peace in all our borders, and our prayer is that soon the whole earth may be filled with the Redeemer's glory.

WILLIAM HARVEY.

4. BAGSHOT MISSION.—Dear Editor,—God has been with us on this mission and still is with us. It may be well to refer to several places on the station.

Bagshot.—A short time since the inhabitants of Bagshot were generally opposed to Primitive Methodism, but the success which our missionary collectors have lately met with, proves that a good impression is being made in the place. Bagshot is hard soil, but God is working, our congregations are improved, and on Sunday evenings the improvement is very great. We often see men shake and women weep under the preaching of God's word.

Sunninghill.—At this village we preach in a cottage. In December last we had no society, and very few hearers, but since then the Lord has saved souls, and now we have six or seven members, and the house in which we preach is generally crowded with hearers.

Compton.—At this village on the 23rd of February, a fiddler's eyes were opened, and he saw and felt his condition, resolved to use his fiddle for holier purposes than he had been wont to do, gave God his heart, and now he sings

"O happy day that fixed my choice
On thee my Saviour and my God."

The conversion of this man is becoming a great attraction.

Guildford.—This is a pleasant town with a population of ten thousand inhabitants, and it is improving in appearance, in business, and in its religious condition. Our society is very young. Brother Fawcett commenced preaching at Guildford, and on the 6th of October, 1861, the writer was sent to reside at the place, and from that time we have continued our religious ordinances. Preaching was conducted in the open air until the 10th of November; on the 17th, we opened the theatre for Divine worship, and to give publicity to our movement we circulated bills in the neighbourhood, but this did not attract many; we tried another method, namely, visiting five or six courts on Sabbath mornings; and sung, prayed, and invited the people to attend Divine worship. Many came, and we soon witnessed an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. If space had permitted, we could have referred to some extraordinary conversions of degraded females who have been saved, and have since obtained good situations. In one family, the father, mother, daughter, and niece have been saved. At our March Quarterly meeting, we reported for Guildford twenty members, £1 1s. quarterages, and 13s. 2½d., quarterly collection. We have also raised for the rent of the theatre, stove, fuel, gas, and repairs £5 19s. 4½d. A few of our most distinguished friends have also subscribed privately for an elegant Bible, and a desk for the preacher, and best of all the converting work is still going on. That He to whom all glory belongs may continue to succeed our efforts is the prayer of

GEORGE DOWSON.

5. My Dear Brother Harland,—I am sure you will be glad to hear that the work of God continues to progress in Ireland. Our increase this year is encouraging. PORTADOWN was made a separate station from Donaghmore last Midsummer, and since then our increase is thirty-three. A foundation is laid for a great extension of labour, and I should be thankful to see our beloved Connexions spreading over this land. The conflict in America, diffuses a blighting influence over the weaving trade, which is the staple business in this neighbourhood; but through the kindness of friends to missions, and the desire of our General Missionary Committee, we have been enabled to go on and increase. The Lord give His blessing to the united efforts of His people! Amen.

THOMAS RUSSELL.

6. EDINBURGH MISSION.—Dear Brother Harland,—I have great pleasure in stating that the Lord is with us on this station. Soon after I last wrote you, the Rev. W. Graham, a minister in the Established Church of Scotland, preached on a Sunday evening in our place of worship, and at his request I preached in his church at Newhaven. The church, notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather, was well attended, the Lord was with us, and at the prayer meeting held at the close of the service one soul professed to find pardon.

Dalkeith is a town a few miles from Edinburgh. A Baptist brother was very desirous that I should preach one evening at this place, but not having an evening to spare, I could not comply with his request. However he was very urgent, and after several weeks delay I was able to make arrangements with him to hold a service at Dalkeith. The evening was very dark and wet, but notwithstanding that we commenced in the open air by singing, "The Lion of Judah," &c. A large company soon gathered round us, to whom I preached for about a quarter of an hour on heaven, hell, death, and eternity. We then sang, "My rest is in heaven," &c., as we marched to a school-room, which had been placed at our disposal. Here the Baptist brother gave a short address, and was followed by myself. I spoke on the nature and necessity of the new birth. The Holy Spirit was poured copiously on us, penitential tears flowed on every hand, and at the close of the service, several persons with streaming eyes, confessed their sins to God, begged for, and obtained mercy. The people at this place are very desirous that I should preach to them again, which I intend to do as soon as possible. At the close of a service at Portobello last Monday evening, a poor woman cried for mercy, and professed to obtain the pardon of her sins. A class of six members had been formed at Stockbridge. The room in which I preach is crowded at every service. About a month ago I commenced preaching at the Water-of-Leith. While conducting the first service at this place one soul was saved, who afterwards became an advertisement for me. The congregation has so increased as to compel us to seek a larger place. We intend to form a class at this place immediately. On looking over the class-books I find twenty persons have been brought to God, and added to our ranks since November last. To God be all the glory.

JOHN VAUGHAN.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

1. HULL SECOND CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—Assisted by an able deputation, we have recently concluded a successful course of missionary services. Preparatory sermons were preached by the Revs. W. Sanderson, of Kirton Lindsey; P. Milson, of Epworth; T. Greenbury, of Scarborough; and W. Garner, circuit preacher. The congregations were very good, and the collections liberal. The public meetings were numerous attended and well sustained. Before the services our expectations were not sanguine. The unhappy fratricidal war which has been raging for a considerable time, and on an extensive scale, in the American States, has very seriously checked the commercial prosperity of this port, and thrown thousands of operatives out of employment. This state of things inevitably imposed on the middle and upper classes of society a heavy tax, and interfered materially with the surplus funds at the disposal of benevolent persons. Under these circumstances it was difficult to avoid fearing that we should experience a falling off in our revenue. The beneficence of God and the liberality of our friends, however, have scattered our fears, and reassured us in the trustworthiness of the voluntary principle. At Cottingham the receipts were £16 0s. 6d., exceeding those of last year by nearly £1, although a large amount of money has been raised during the year towards the erection of a new chapel. At Holborn-street chapel, Hull, the balance just turned in our favour, the sum realised being £5 9s. 6d. The same remark applies to Church-street chapel.

In a locality where the people have suffered extremely through the unwanted depression of trade, the amount raised is £20 7s. 0d. At Clowes' chapel the income is about £10 in advance of that of 1861, being £72. Towards this amount, Alderman W. Hodge and Henry Hodge, Esq., with their families, in accordance with their habitual liberality, contributed £40. Two other brothers, Messrs. Samuel and Thomas Hodge, each contributed £5 at the Church-street meeting.

In a financial sense, this bountiful harvest has placed the circuit in a creditable position, and enabled us to transmit a considerable sum to the General Treasurer. With the progress of time, we hope to do still more for the noble missionary cause, till the entire proceeds of our best efforts are placed at the disposal of the Managing Committee.

WILLIAM GARNER.

2. A VISIT TO THE IRISH MISSIONS.—According to arrangement I went to Belfast to attend the annual missionary services there on the 30th of March last. I was kindly received by the friends, and had a good Sabbath there and at Lisburn. In the afternoon the Wesleyan and New Connexion superintendents attended the preaching service, and we had a good time. At night a rich influence pervaded the service at Belfast, and the friends expressed the assurance that good was done. On Monday, the 31st, a meeting of officials belonging to the different missions was held at Belfast. We inquired into the state and prospects of each station, and I was happy to learn that all were making some progress. The increase of members in Ireland is about seventy for the year, and, considering the poverty of the people, and the difficulties the missionaries have to encounter, I felt glad to learn they had realized even that amount of prosperity. Brother Stroud's health is somewhat better, and he thinks he will be able to resume his labours at Midsummer, if stationed in the south of England. On the evening of the same day, we held a missionary meeting in Melbourne-street chapel, Mr. Alderman Hamilton in the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Bickerdike, Russell, Stroud, and myself. On the following days of the week I was on the Lisburn station, and addressed three meetings and preached one sermon. A new chapel is much needed at Lisburn, and if one could be secured, I trust the cause would make more rapid progress. We had good meetings, and the people, though poor, did what they could to aid the good cause. On Saturday I went to Portadown, where I had to preach three times on the Sabbath for the benefit of the chapel. I was pleased with the neat and convenient place of worship which has been there erected, and am sure the friends in general, and brother Russell in particular, must have worked hard to get it up, and to place it in such favourable circumstances. The Sabbath congregations were good, and much of the Divine presence was enjoyed. Monday, April 7th, I went with brother Russell to Armagh, the see of the Primate of the Established Church. I was pleased with this ancient city, but regretted we had no interest in it. The missionary meeting at Richhill, at night, was a very excellent one. Dr. Gibson took the chair, and the respected Independent minister assisted at the meeting. On Tuesday I gave a lecture at Portadown—largely attended. Wednesday, had the curate of the church for chairman, at Donaghmore, and a Presbyterian minister assisted at the missionary meeting. Messrs. Russell, Lawley, and Lang also assisted me at the meeting. On the following morning our valued friend, R. Wilson, Esq., kindly drove me to Poyntz Pass station, whence I took train to Belfast, and at night I sailed for Fleetwood on my way home. I found the friends invariably kind, and altogether the cause is doing as well as I could expect. If another missionary or two could be sent to assist in opening Dromore, Armagh, and a few other places, I think it would be well. Of course money is scarce, and the prospects of the stations becoming self-sustaining, at present, are not very bright; but persevering labour will not be lost even in Ireland. The brethren generally, both ministers and lay brethren, seem in earnest, and they are doing a good work among the poor and neglected around them. I hope all the friends of the missions will remember Ireland in their prayers. May a harvest of prosperity soon be realised.

W. ANTLIFF.

LAYING FOUNDATION STONES.

1. PLOUGHFIELD, PRESTON-ON-WYE, CWM CIRCUIT.—Dear Mr. Harland,—The friends connected with our society at the above place have long felt the need of a suitable house in which to worship God, but for want of an eligible site on which to build, they have not been able to erect a house to the honour of His Name. This difficulty has, however, in the providence of God, been removed. Mr. G. Jones, of Preston Mill, having purchased a portion of land, in a suitable part of the village, kindly gave a site to the trustees and Connexion, and on this plot they are about to build a Primitive Methodist chapel. The ceremony of laying the foundation stone was performed April 21st, 1862, in the presence of a respectable audience. The service was commenced at half-past 2 P.M., by singing an appropriate hymn, after which prayer was offered by the Rev. H. Worth, of Hereford. Mr. J. Gwillim, on behalf of the trustees, then presented a silver trowel to John Gilbert, Esq., of Madeley, who proceeded to lay the stone in the name of the Holy Trinity, Mr. Gilbert then presenting £5 to the trust fund. Addresses were delivered by J. Gwillim, H. Worth, and the writer, after which a collection was made. A sermon was preached at 6 P.M. by Mr. Worth, and a collection was made. The total sum realized at the two services was £10, and £60 was promised at the first trustees' meeting. To Him whose kingdom shall have no end be glory, now and evermore. Amen.

JOHN QUARMBY.

2. SPORLE, SWAFFHAM CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—Sporle is a village containing about one thousand inhabitants, and is situated two and a half miles north-east of Swaffham, Norfolk. Our people have had a cause in the place for more than thirty years, and much good has been effected. Our brethren, Robert Ward and Horatio Hall, were converted at this place, and subsequently became travelling preachers; the former was the first of our missionaries who entered New Zealand, where he still labours; the latter continued his itinerancy till his health declined, and he is now superannuated.

Our people have had no settled place of worship, but God has, in his providence, enabled them to purchase sufficient land in the centre of the village, and in front of the main street, on which they intend to erect a house for God. On Good Friday, April 18th, 1862, services were held on its behalf. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, the Rev. T. Lowe, of Lynn, preached to hundreds of people in the open air. The stone was laid at the close of the service by Mr. J. Fuller, of Swaffham, and he laid on the stone £5 5s. 0d. About three hundred persons sat down to tea in a barn, where we held a public meeting in the evening, addressed by Messrs. T. Lowe, W. Crown, G. Bell, J. Fuller, and G. Bell, sen. The collections and donations at the services, together with the profits of the tea, amounted to about £19, for which we thank our friends. May they enjoy from God a rich reward.

WILLIAM CROWN.

3. PETERBOROUGH is 76 miles north of London; it is an improving city, and has increased in population more than three thousand since the census of 1851. Primitive Methodism was introduced into this city by the Rev. W. Kirby, who was sent by the Lynn circuit nearly thirty years ago. Our friends have preached much in the open air, and have occupied several places of worship, and their labours have been owned of God in the conversion of many souls. Our present chapel has been built about ten years; it has been too small for some time. The London District Meeting was held here in May, 1860, the services of which were so influential that our cause received a gracious impetus for good. Three months after that meeting was held, we engaged a site of land in a very eligible situation for £200, the whole of which was paid by the exertions of our friends, and the proceeds of a bazaar, in less than twelve months. Great credit is due to the members of our society generally, but especially to the ladies.

Thursday, April 24th, 1862, was the day fixed upon for laying the foundation stone. It was a day we anxiously expected—a day we shall never forget.

The foundation services were commenced by the Rev. G. Lamb, of London, preaching a sermon in the Congregational Church; then followed two appropriate addresses on the new chapel ground, by the Revs. S. Antliff, of Derby, and R. Parks, of Lincoln. The stone was laid by W. Hodge, Esq., ex-Mayor of Hull, who kindly placed the sum of £25 upon it. Then commenced a course of what we call bricklaying—a sovereign per brick; among this list of bricklayers were the following: Mrs. Hodge, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Edis, John Edis, Miss Edis, Mr. Edis, Mr. Kerridge, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Lee, &c. It is worthy of remark that among the sovereign bricklayers were a good lady, her daughter and grandson, representing three generations. A beautiful piece of silver plate was presented with the best thanks of the trustees to W. Hodge, Esq., for his valuable services on the occasion, and a bottle was placed in the stone containing the usual documents.

Tea was gratuitously provided in the Corn Exchange, to which a goodly number sat down. An enthusiastic meeting was held after tea, presided over by Alderman Hodge, and addressed by Messrs. S. Antliff, R. Parks, G. Lamb, J. Ashworth, and T. Wilkinson. Several ministers of other denominations were present. The proceeds of the day amounted to upwards of £60.

The services were highly appreciated by our friends, the interests of our denomination were promoted, and we trust God was glorified.

J. ASHWORTH.

SPECIAL EFFORTS.

LAW LAITHE, PATELEY BRIDGE STATION,—Dear Editor,—At this place a chapel was built, with two small cottages underneath, at a cost of £305 17s. 2d; and after standing eighteen years, it was found absolutely necessary to take the building down, the foundation having given way. A meeting of the trustees was called on the 16th of September, 1861, at which meeting Richard Pullan, Esq., made the following proposal to the trustees:—“As it is necessary to take down the old chapel,* if the trustees will engage to beg and give the £140 which is the present debt, I will engage to pull down the old chapel, &c., and on the same site, and under the same trust, will erect a new school as large as the old chapel, and a preacher's house, and they shall be free from debt.” This was considered a providential opening, and the trustees accepted this generous offer. The case was laid before the building committee of the Leeds district; and permission being granted to build we laid our case before the General Chapel Fund

* The above named chapel has been used as a school exclusively for the last two years and a half, Mr. Pullan having erected a chapel within 300 yards of the school two years and a half since, at a cost of £550.

Committee, which kindly promised £40, if the trustees would raise £100. I and my colleague, Mr. J. Harrison, then commenced begging, and with the aid of a bazaar, we have been enabled to accomplish the desired object. Richard Pullan, Esq., has also fulfilled his engagement. On the site on which the old chapel stood is erected a good school, built of stone and covered with blue slate 30 feet long by 27 feet, and 12½ feet from the floor to the ceiling. It is properly ventilated and lighted. The house is built of stone, and covered with blue slate, and is 27 feet by 26 feet inside. It contains a good cellar, a large kitchen, and scullery, a good parlour, and four good sleeping rooms. It stands in a healthy place and in the centre of the circuit. Belle Vue Chapel, Belle Vue cottage and school are the best buildings in that neighbourhood. We tender our sincere thanks to Mr. Pullan for this timely help, to Mrs. Pullan for a donation of £10, to R. Benson, Esq., of New York, Joseph Crossley, Esq., of Halifax, and Mr. Ashworth, of Pateley Bridge, for a donation of £5 each, and to all friends who have helped us. To God, the giver of all good, be everlasting praise,

THOMAS SMITH.

JUBILEE SERVICE.

BAGSHOT.—Dear Editor,—On Sunday, March 16th, 1862, two sermons were preached at Bagshot, in aid of the Jubilee Fund, by the Rev. M. Lupton, General Missionary Secretary. On the following day, a public platform meeting was held, presided over by the Rev. D. Day, and addressed by the Revs. M. Lupton, G. Dowson, and Mr. C. Locke. A gracious influence was felt at each service and the sum realized amounted to £6 4s. 5½d.

G. D.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.

Dear Editor,—The anniversary services of the Primitive Methodist chapel, KING'S HILL, DARLSTON CIRCUIT, were celebrated on Sunday, April 20th, 1862, and three sermons were preached on the occasion. Miss Underwood, of Leominster, preached morning and evening, and Mr. J. Belcher, of Darlaston, in the afternoon. The congregations were good, and a gracious influence was felt during the day, especially in the evening.

The collections amounted to £6 4s. 0½d. That this chapel may be the birth-place of many souls, is the prayer of

R. G. WILLIAM.

SCHOOL SERVICES.

1. HALIFAX. — Our Ebenezer Sabbath School contains about 400 scholars, and on Lord's Day, March 30th, 1862, we celebrated its anniversary; the congregations were crowded. Several interesting pieces were recited by some of the children after each sermon. A variety of anthems were sung by our choir. The officiating preachers for the day were the Revs. A. Worsnop, S. Stubbings and William Birks. The collections amounted to upwards of £35. We are happy to state that this school has a branch school in the neighbourhood of Charlestown, Halifax, consisting of about 100 scholars and several devoted teachers. May all our teachers and children become the saved of the Lord.

W. BIRKS.

2. BROADWATERS, KIDDERMINSTER CIRCUIT. — Dear Editor, — On Sunday, April 6th, 1862, Mr. Thomas Morrall, of Princes End, Tipton, preached in our chapel, morning and evening, and Mr. Thomas Turly, in the afternoon. The children recited some interesting pieces and sang their hymns in a manner which gave great satisfaction. Heavy rain fell in the morning, but the clouds were subsequently dispersed, and the remainder of the day was fair. We are thankful to say notwithstanding the great depression in trade, the collections amounted to £5, being in advance of the proceeds of the anniversary services last year. We pray that our future efforts may be more abundantly successful.

JOHN BAKER.

FOREIGN RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

1. ADELAIDE DISTRICT MEETING. — On Friday, November the 1st, 1861, the fifth Adelaide District Meeting commenced its sittings at Koorunga, South Australia. Being the first meeting of the kind ever held by any denomination in the north of our colony, considerable excitement had been created by the announcement of our meeting, and many people had been anxiously looking forward to the great gathering of ministers and friends. On the Thursday night prior to the commencement, we arrived at Pancharpoo, 25 miles south of the Burra Burra, and 75 north of Adelaide. Here we met with Brother

T. Braithwaite and a great number of friends, who had provided a public tea. They gave us a hearty welcome, and we felt our hearts cheered by meeting so many kind friends in the bush.

Early next morning, we (nearly twenty of us in all) left for the Burra Burra (great, great), some on horseback, and others in carts. About ten A.M. we ascended the last hill on our journey, from the top of which we could see a number of mountains lifting their rocky heads in the light of heaven. High above all the rest, stood Mount Sugar-loaf as monarch, and around forty or fifty lesser ones. Here nature is seen in its wildest grandeur. A few minutes brought us to the township, where we were greeted by Brother Whittaker and family. We cannot tell you, or give you an idea of the joy we feel at the end of the year when we all meet. Our District Meetings are hailed with great delight. What will that meeting be when those who have left the field, and those who are in the field, and those that shall be in it, shall meet in the region of light? What joy! yea, what rapture!

After lifting up our hearts to the Father of lights in praise and prayer, in which the help of the Holy Spirit was sought, to assist us in all our deliberations; Brother J. Warner was appointed president. The examination of the circuit reports and chapel schedules was heart-inspiring. In every part of our moral machinery success was apparent; on our beloved Zion heaven had smiled, and the hands of all our ministers had been strengthened. During the year ten chapels had been erected, £3,459 11s. 3½d. had been collected during the year for chapel purposes, thirty-seven members had been added, and an increase of children in our Sabbath-schools of 469. We have now in our District 50 Connexional chapels, 1015 members, 12 ministers, 101 local preachers, 66 class-leaders, 47 Sabbath-schools, 342 teachers, and 1,889 scholars. The Lord is with us, and doors of usefulness are opening before us, but we have not the men to send. Willunga made a request for another missionary. Wallaroo wants a second man, and one ought to be sent to Mount Gambier. This was painful to the minds of all in the District Meeting; men were required, but we had not the men to send. For usefulness, our colony is second to none for Primitive Methodist ministers. When will our soul-loving young men yield to the constraining love of Christ, so as to offer themselves on the altar for this field of labour? My young friends, let us on this side of the seas beg you to offer yourselves as a sacrifice for the happiness of poor fallen humanity, and for your Lord's sake. You may have to leave a large circle of dear friends, but you leave them for Christ's sake, and He will reward you. "Come over and help us!"

The religious services were truly profitable. On Friday night, the opening sermon was preached by the writer; the Lord was with us. Brother J. Standrin preached on the Saturday night to a large congregation. We felt near heaven, while the Lord helped our brother to place before our minds the work of Christ in His redemptive character—the Deity enshrined in humanity, the body of our Lord, that bled on the cross, now in mysterious union with Jehovah. The Son passed into the heavens, there on His mediatorial throne making intercession for us. We felt we could sing while listening—

"There sits our Saviour crowned with light, Clothed in a body like our own," &c.

The Sabbath was a time of great attraction. Early in the morning we commenced singing in the streets in real old English style—

"O for a thousand tongues to sing,

My great Redeemer's praise."

As we moved on the streets became thronged, and the power of the Highest fell upon the people; some wept and praised God aloud. From the township we moved on, in a dense body, to the campground. A more beautiful place could not have been selected in the neighbourhood. On a gentle declivity with the creek, the township, and the mine before us; the smelting works on our right, and a range of hills behind us. The day was delightful, not a leaf seemed to move. About 3,000 people were listening to the words of life, and it is to be hoped many will have to bless God for what they heard. Both ministers and laymen were heart and soul in the service. There was no effort at display, no aiming to please, no exhibition of self, no shunning to declare the truth, but throughout the discourses the healing virtues of the cross were proclaimed. The style was clear, distinct, and earnest, and we believe could not fail, through the blessing of God, to enlighten the ignorant, cheer the penitent, comfort the distressed, reprove the wayward, admonish the thoughtless, and warn the reckless. The lovefeast was emphatically a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord.

The meeting on the Monday evening was held in the Bible Christian Chapel; Brother H. Gole was called to the chair. The assembly was afterwards addressed by Brothers J. Standrin, T. Braithwaite, J. Warner, J. Read, and the writer. The business of the District Meeting closed, and the brethren left with hearts glowing with love to each other, and to the friends at Koorings.

There was one source of sorrow mixed with our joy; it was the last time we should in all probability meet with Brother J. D. Whittaker, who was about to leave our colony for New Zealand. May the Lord make him a blessing in his new field of labour.

May all our friends in dear old England enjoy every blessing of the new covenant. J. G. WRIGHT.

2. MY DEAR SIR,—The following extract relating to our camp-meeting, at Sandhurst, appeared in the "Christian Times," and I herewith send it to you for insertion in the Magazine. The meeting was a very powerful one, and two of the sermons were preached by Wesleyan local preachers. Yours very truly, GEO. TUDOR HALL.

OPEN-AIR SERVICE.—The Primitive Methodist Church, on Bendigo, held an open-air service, on the hill at the back of their chapel, a short time ago, commencing at ten o'clock A.M. The situation chosen was a most delightful one, commanding a view of the country for miles round, and a large number of tents are situated within sound of the singing. The attendance was large, especially in the afternoon, and the whole company behaved themselves well with the exception of one man, who appeared to be under the influence of intoxicating drink. The service was conducted by the Rev. G. T. Hall, the resident minister, and several very interesting, powerful, and intelligent sermons were preached during the day. A public lovefeast, or fellowship meeting, was held in the chapel adjoining at half-past six in the evening, when several persons were brought under deep concern about their salvation, and before the meeting closed most of them professed to find peace and pardon through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Our hope is, that meetings of a similar character may be held by the various sections of Christ's Church throughout the colony, as we believe they would help to promote a revival of religion.

3. RE-OPENING OF THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHAPEL, KENT STREET, SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.—This chapel having been closed eight weeks for completion, was re-opened for divine worship on Sunday, February 2nd, 1862. Sermons were preached by the Revs. R. Hartley, J. B. McCure, and W. Kelynack. The congregations were good, and the collections liberal.

On Monday, February 10th, a tea-meeting was held, after which there was a public meeting, and there were about 200 persons present. John Fairfax, Esq., occupied the chair, the Rev. R. Moneymont gave out a hymn, and the Rev. J. Reid offered an appropriate prayer. The chairman, in a very feeling and impressive manner, referred to the impressions made on his mind when he was first informed by the Rev. J. Sharpe of the intention to erect the chapel in which they were assembled. These impressions were unaltered, and he had always felt sympathy with the denomination in their struggles in connection with this building. He believed that the efforts generally employed by the Primitive Methodists were of the character especially calculated to benefit the population by which the chapel was surrounded, and he had consequently always felt a pleasure in aiding them when requested to do so, considering them more adapted to the work which seemed assigned to them by Divine Providence than any other denomination of Christians. He expressed himself much pleased with the altered appearance of the chapel. The last time he presided there, many references were made to its unfinished and unattractive appearance; no such remarks could be made now. He concluded with urging the necessity of paying off the debt thus occasioned. Mr. S. S. Goold, one of the trustees, was then called upon to address the meeting. He said he felt much pleasure at seeing so many of their old friends, and in seeing the platform graced with so many ministers of different denominations, but he was especially pleased to see the chairman present, when he remembered that it was not the first or second time he had occupied that position, and had rendered them valuable assistance on various occasions. He could not refrain from expressing on behalf of himself and his fellow-worshippers, his gratitude for such timely aid. He said the only object they had in view in the erection of that building, was the social, moral, and spiritual welfare of the numerous inhabitants of the locality, and referred to the causes which led to the completion of the chapel. Although the amount of success had not been what they could have wished, it was known to many that a great change for the better had taken place in the neighbourhood. Many of the scenes which he had witnessed, in connection with some of his visits to the lanes and alleys, were of a character which he could not describe to that audience. Some of the worst individuals had been benefited, and there was one member in the church now who was almost on the verge of destruction when he entered this chapel. He hoped that on the arrival of their new minister to labour as the colleague of their much respected superintendent, the Rev. R. Hartley, they would be able to pay more attention to this part of the city, and that much good would result. He stated that the amount expended in completing the building was about £110 5s. 10d., toward which £45 19s. 9d. had been collected, leaving a balance of £64 6s. 1d.

Rev. R. Moneymont delivered an interesting speech, in which he assigned many weighty reasons why debts should not be left on places of worship, especially where a minister's time is occupied, and his energies crippled by collecting efforts, instead of being devoted to the work assigned to him by the great Founder of Christianity.

The Rev. R. Hartley here said he endorsed the remarks in the speech just delivered, being able to testify from experience their truthfulness, but hoped the time was not distant when financial difficulties in connection with the places of worship with which he was associated would be removed. There was a luxury in giving, and many were prepared to pray for the extension of the lives of those who were liberal, while few were found who did not regard misers as hinderers of every good work. There was a person present belonging to another part of the colony, who had resolved to give £20 to every £80 that should be collected till the debt on the chapels in his locality was extinct. Those were the men whom we wished to be multiplied, and whose lives we wished to be lengthened.

The Rev. W. R. Fletcher, M.A., of Sandhurst, Victoria, referred, in a pleasing manner to a Primitive Methodist camp-meeting scene in South Wales, in the old country, in which he took part, and of his co-operation with their ministers in Victoria. He spoke very impressively of the duty and privilege of persons giving a stated portion of their income for benevolent and religious purposes, particularly urging the necessity of raising on this occasion what was necessary to cover the expense of these improvements.

An appeal was then made by the Chairman, who promised that if those present would engage to collect or give the rest, he would subscribe the last £10. This gave an impulse to the meeting which, with the collection, soon produced in subscriptions and promises the amount required, £64 6s. 1d., which, with what was previously raised, amounted to £110 5s. 10d. While the subscriptions were being received, Captain Welch delivered a very animating speech, which was often interrupted by announcements of different sums and frequent bursts of applause.

The Rev. T. Johnson, next addressed the meeting in a strain which indicated a familiarity with Primitive Methodist operations, referring to the fact of his uncle having been a preacher in the denomination, and his satisfaction at having made the acquaintance of the minister of the chapel in which they were assembled, and assured him that it would give him great pleasure to see the cause of religion flourish in this locality, and to reciprocate those evidences of a disposition for Christian union now manifested. Remarks had been made about local preachers. They were a class of labourers whose increase and efficiency he much desired, believing as he did that their labours were much needed, and of much service to the church and the world. The rev. gentleman was frequently applauded during the course of his speech.

Mr. Hartley announced that Mr. Forrester had generously promised to give a time-piece for the chapel.

A vote of thanks was given to the chairman, the doxology sung, the benediction pronounced, and the meeting closed a little past 10 o'clock.

ROBERT HARTLEY.

P.S.—The financial state of the chapel is £33 18 7½d. better than it was last year, in addition to the amount raised and promised for its completion.

OBITUARY.

1. WILLIAM WALLER, late the beloved husband of Sarah Waller, of Filey, Scarbro' circuit, was born in 1831. He lived a stranger to saving grace until 1858, when, being at sea in a heavy storm, he promised the Lord if He would spare his life, he would give his heart unto Him. This promise he fulfilled: for when he got on shore he went to the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Edgefield, Bristol Circuit, and at a prayer-meeting, as a trembling penitent he approached the feet of Jesus, he sought and obtained mercy. When he gave his heart to God, he gave his hand to God's people. Being often very much exercised with poverty while in the south of England, he thought he would come into the north. He prayed for Divine guidance, and felt an impression that it was the Lord's will he should remove. He told his wife what were his designs; she at first could not consent to it; she said, if anything should happen to him, what could she do if left among strangers. He said, "We must leave that with the Lord, He will provide for you, and if anything should happen to me, sudden death will be sudden glory." Accordingly they came to Filey, and he engaged himself to Mr. Francis Crowford. He and his wife began to attend the Primitive Methodist chapel at Filey, and soon after they joined Mr. Jenkinson Haxby's class, which he attended regularly until his removal to a better world. Often in his experience he said he felt religion was a good thing, and in stating his experience for the last time he said he felt the blood of Christ cleansed him from all sin. On Saturday, Nov. 2nd, 1861, when at sea in a storm, he was washed overboard. Mr. Crowford says the morning they lost him he appeared to be in deep thought, occasionally singing,

"There will be no more sorrow there," &c. And some time between eight and nine o'clock, a heavy sea struck the vessel, and he was carried overboard, and sank in the mighty waters. Mr. Crowford and his men believe he was a good man and was prepared for death. He has left a wife and three children to contend with the trials of the wilderness, but their loss is his eternal gain. William Jenkinson met a similar fate during the same storm. May the living lay these things to heart and prepare to meet their God.

JAMES AUSTERBURY.

2. MRS. MARY NUNN, of Deighton, Huddersfield Circuit, departed this life October 19th, 1861, in the sixty-sixth year of her age. She followed the course of this world until her forty-seventh year, when she was led to hear the word of God in our preaching-room at Deighton, and that word found its way to her heart. She sought and obtained forgiveness of her sins by faith in a crucified Redeemer. For a few years she held on her way, but a heavy family trial of a peculiar nature calculated to deeply wound a parent's feelings, intervened, and, for a month or two retarded her devotedness to God.

However, being kindly spoken to, she with renewed vigour buckled on the armour, and prosecuted her journey towards a brighter clime.

During the nineteen years of her Christian pilgrimage she was called upon to suffer severe bereavements in the loss of two daughters. In 1858 her beloved husband was brought to God under the ministry of the Rev. G. N. Hutchinson, and nine weeks after he fell into the arms of a fellow labourer, a class-mate, and expired. These heavy afflictions she bore with Christian meekness, looking to Him who is touched with the feelings of our infirmities. As a member of Christ's church she was very regular at her class, and her house was ever open to receive God's servants.

As a parent she travelled in birth for the conversion of her family, and she had the pleasure of seeing them all, save one, walking in the way of holiness. She was the honoured instrument, in God's hands, of leading at least one soul to the fold of Christ. As a neighbour she was peaceable, obliging, and charitable, and the loss sustained by her death will be greatly felt in the village.

During the four months of her heavy affliction, the writer had frequent conversations with her on things pertaining to godliness, and he always found her in possession of the strongest assurance of her acceptance with God. Indeed, it has never fallen to his lot to visit one more happy and joyous in prospect of another world. When visited by her class-mates, during her affliction, her soul rose into ecstasies, and to all present they were truly times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. For the last three weeks of her life her sufferings were very acute, but in patience she possessed her soul and was kept in perfect peace; though her pain of body at times for the last day or two was excruciating, yet her language was, "AIP's right! All's well! Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!" and about six o'clock on the above-named day she calmly fell asleep in Jesus. JOSEPH BATTYE.

3. ISABELLA GALEBRAITH died at Lowick, Berwick Circuit, on the 22nd of October, 1861, in the twenty-ninth year of her age. The early years of her life were spent in her grandfather's house, and while there she was a frequent attendant on the services of the Established Church. The death of one of her aged relatives rendered it prudent for her to return to her parents at Lowick, where she regularly attended Divine worship in our sanctuary. She was of a very amiable disposition, not easily moved, and always manifested considerable attachment to the services of the Lord's house. Yet she was a stranger to the covenant of promise. But in 1855, when the church in Lowick was graciously revived, Isabella was among the number of those who found peace, and for four years she stood fast in the liberty where-with Christ had made her free; but after that she became entangled again with the yoke of bondage, but in the spring of 1861 she was mercifully restored to a state of favour with God in Christ. At that time she was suffering from the affliction which terminated her life. She gradually grew worse, her sufferings increased, but she continued to trust in the Lord, and to rejoice in the God of Jacob as her help. Her confidence was unshaken, and with unwavering faith in Christ she put off her mortal coil. Her last words were "All is well." "There will be no more sorrow there." Her friends sorrow, but not as others "which have no hope." For, believing that Jesus died and rose again, they also believe that they who sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

4. SARAH DIXON, of Walesby, Market Rasen Circuit, went to her endless rest, November 2nd, 1861, aged fifty-seven years. She was always steady in her deportment, and often much impressed with a sense of her need of religion, but remained destitute of the "pearl of great price" until she was forty years of age. About that time she became deeply concerned for salvation, and under this religious influence, she went to a class-meeting, and offered herself for membership in our society, evincing a great desire to "flee from the wrath to come," and having commenced in earnest to seek the salvation of her soul, she was soon made a recipient of the Divine favour, and "rejoiced in hope of the glory of God." She thenceforward held on the even tenour of her way, "growing in grace, and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ." Hers was an intelligent piety, she was always ready to give a scriptural reason for the hope that was in her. She was an ardent lover of our cause, and helped it in a variety of ways. She took a great pleasure in entertaining our ministers; our missions, too, shared deeply in her sympathies, and year after year she assisted them according to her ability. She was a good wife, a kind neighbour, and a generous and consistent Christian.

Her affliction was very protracted, for many years she suffered from general debility, which terminated in dropsy, and during the last two years her sufferings were very severe, but she was enabled to possess her soul in patience, and to say,

"It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good." During the last two or three days of her earthly career, she was very happy, her soul seemed rapt in sweet visions of glory. She talked much about her heavenly Redeemer, and the bright mansions He had gone to prepare for her; she also, with the utmost calmness gave many directions to her dear husband and others, how they were to proceed after she was gone, and exhorted them all to attend to their religious duties, and be sure to meet her in heaven. When very near her end she had a severe struggle with the powers of darkness. She said to her friends, "It seemed as if Satan appeared to me, and endeavoured by a violent attack, to shake my confidence and rob me of my peace; but in the midst of the conflict it seemed as if Jesus made His appearance, and said, 'Get thee away, Satan, she is Mine, I have redeemed her with My blood, she is Mine and I am hers, she shall have part in the first resurrection.'" After she had thus got the victory over the great enemy she was exceedingly joyous, and in that heavenly frame of soul she closed her mortal career, and went to the "realms of the blest."

5. DANIEL RANKIN was born at Enniskillen, county Fermurragh, Ireland, in 1798, and departed this life at Glasgow, November 4th, 1861. When a boy, he took leave of his relations, bade adieu to old Erin, and emigrated to Scotland. He lived a stranger to vital godliness till the spring of 1855. He was converted to God at one of our places of worship in Glasgow, under the preaching of his son John. Convinced of his rebellious state, in penitential sorrow, he cried to God for mercy, and laying hold of the hope set before him in the Gospel, he obtained redemption through the blood of Jesus, even the forgiveness of sins. Filled with joy and peace in the Holy Spirit, he immediately united with our people, and testified by his works that he was born of God.

His illness was of short duration—only eight days. The Sunday week prior to his death he went to hear the Rev. S. Todd. He felt very happy under the word, but was forced to leave before the service was concluded. On his arrival at home he went to bed, and never afterwards rose. About three hours before he died he sent for me. On my entering his room, he looked at me and said, "My dear Mr. Kenny, I am so glad to see you. I longed to see you to tell you of the happiness of my soul. Jesus is precious, His blood cleanseth me from all sin. I am going to the realms of light."

And looking at his children, who stood weeping, he told them to meet him in heaven. He commended them to God, and said he believed that his prayer would be answered. A little before his death he looked up and said, "I see Jesus, and in a few minutes his anointed spirit took its flight from its earthly tabernacle to a mansion of glory in the Paradise of God. May his family meet him there."

BERNARD KENNY.

6. Died, at Hanging Langford, Salisbury Circuit, November 7th, 1861, MARY GILES, in the forty-third year of her age. She was brought to the Lord under the ministry of Brother H. Parham, at the above place, in 1848. She united at once with our society, and maintained a consistent walk until death. She was a lover of God's people, was regular in her attendance at the means of grace, took a deep interest in the welfare of God's house, was very active in the Sabbath-school, and cheerfully contributed towards the spread of true religion. She was highly esteemed by those who knew her, and she met with great sympathy and kindness in her last affliction. The writer found her resting on the atonement enjoying peace of mind, and in possession of a good hope of future happiness.

She suffered much from a severe cough, but was very patient. Her death was sudden and unexpected, she had retired to rest for the night, and suddenly breathed her last.

G. PRICE.

7. CHARLES PUGH, of Hope, Minsterly Circuit, was born July 22nd, 1841; from childhood he evinced traits of character which endeared him to all who knew him. His father died and left him when he was but a child, and this seemed to increase his attachment to his widowed mother, and as soon as he was able to earn a few shillings a week, he gladly carried his small earnings home to assist in maintaining the family. He was however a stranger to saving grace till October 17th, 1859, when he found forgiveness of sins. His name was put on the preachers' plan in March, 1860, and he creditably acquitted himself as an exhorter till about five months before his death, when he was prevented from labour by consumption, and was confined to his bed. I visited him several times during his illness, and always found him resigned to the will of God and confiding in Divine mercy. His class-leader asked him some questions concerning his hope in the Lord, only a short time before his death, when he replied, "The Lord is more precious to me than ever." In this happy frame of mind he entered into rest, October 25th, 1861.

JOHN THOMAS.

8. Died at Causey Row, Shotley Bridge Circuit, October 11th, 1861, ANN GIBSON, aged twenty-six years. When she was about nineteen years of age, a gracious revival took place among the Primitive Methodists at the place where she was living. She sought and found the "pearl of great price," and maintained her faith in Christ till she was taken to that happy place where faith is lost in sight.

Her affliction was short, but very severe; she, nevertheless, expressed her resignation to the will of God, and told those around her that she had given her two little ones into the hands of the Lord, and added, "Come, Lord, and receive me to Thyself," "I shall go straight to glory." And she left her weeping friends to mourn their loss, but their loss, we doubt not, is her eternal gain.

ROBERT WEARMOUTH.

9. JANE GOULDER, Tarnagulla, Victoria, Australia, was born August 22nd, 1799, and died October 28th, 1861. She was under religious influences from her infancy, the home of her childhood being the home of the ministers of Christ. When attending their appointments at the place where she resided, deep impressions were made on her youthful mind, which ultimately ripened into a desire to consecrate her being to Christ. She became a candidate for membership with the Wesleyan Methodists, and received a ticket on trial, December, 1813, when she was just fourteen years of age. On August 21st, 1822, she was united in marriage to him who mourns her departure. What a mercy that her character was formed, her principles fixed before the cares of a family devolved upon her! First married to Christ, then to one of His servants! 1839 brought a change in the family residence. In that year they removed to London, and, for many reasons, she (in connection with her husband) united with our people, and became an assistant leader of a class. They emigrated to Australia in 1854, and at Back Creek, Dunolly, and Tarnagulla, she was united with our societies. Her attachment to Primitive Methodism was not the result of fortuitous circumstances, but from a deep conviction of its scriptural polity. Relative to her end, she appears to have had an impression it was nigh. While visiting her, a fortnight previous to her decease, she requested that on the next Sabbath I would preach on death. A few days before the time named, while out with her daughter, she walked to a cemetery and selected a place in which to rest till awakened by the trumpet-sound, on the morning of the resurrection. She conversed about death frequently, but the subject wore no gloom. The evidences of her triumph at the time of her departure were not so striking as is the case with some—arising, I think, from protracted illness, which affected her mind and rendered it partially inactive. Three days before her final hour, I paid my last visit to her, and when inquiring what was her state of mind, I received the following answers, "I have solid peace," "No care as to the time of my end," "I am in the hands of One who knows best, and will do right." She enjoyed solid peace and unflagging trust in the Lord. Although unconscious for twelve hours, except a momentary flash, and then, with a soft utterance, she said, "Let my children trust in the Lord." Doubtless, she felt in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. She was an amiable, kind, and affectionate Christian, a good wife, devoted mother, and a pious member of the Church,—her life was useful and her memory is blessed.

WILLIAM ADAMS.

10. The late Mrs. JANE WALTON, of Scarborough Circuit, Canada west, was a native of Alston Moor, county of Cumberland, England. She left her native country for this land in 1818. About nine years ago, she was bereaved of her beloved husband, which stroke she bore with becoming and Christian fortitude, believing God was too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. She was the mother of ten children, and she felt it to be her duty and pleasure to train them aright, both for this and the better world; and her efforts for their welfare have not been in vain. For more than half a century she enjoyed a sense of God's pardoning mercy, and was a member of some portion of the great Methodist family. She became a member among us, shortly after our people visited the neighbourhood in which she resided, and she continued a steady and consistent adherent to our cause up to the time of her removal hence to a higher and better world. During her last illness, I and my colleague visited her as often as our other engagements would allow; we always found her the subject of the power and consolations of our holy religion, and fully resigned to the will of God, either to live or die. Her decease took place, September 9th, 1861, at the advanced age of eighty-two years five months and ten days. Her remains were interred on the 11th. She has left behind her, to mourn her loss, nine children, sixty-eight grandchildren, and thirty-two great-grandchildren. May her numerous posterity and friends meet her in heaven.

JOHN GARNER.

11. ELIZABETH AINSLIE was born at Hexham, October 20th, 1836, and died at Shotley Bridge, November 13th, 1861. Her mother was a consistent member in our Connexion for many years, and died in the faith. The subject of this sketch was always of an amiable disposition. During the winter (1860-61), a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit was enjoyed by the society at Shotley Bridge. It was during that refreshing season that our departed sister, along with her husband, looked by faith to Christ and obtained salvation.

We hope that many who were born for glory at the same time will ultimately join her in the skies.

In May, 1861, consumption confined her to her bed. During her affliction I often visited her, and always found her happily resigned to the will of God. She could say with the apostle, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory." She used often to sing, and get others to sing,

"Come sing to me of heaven.

When I'm about to die," &c.

When she could no longer speak, her husband, who stood at her bedside, repeated the following words—

"Yonder's my house, my portion fair,
My treasures and my heart are there,
And my abiding home."

When he had done, she held up her hands, smiled, and passed away to where consumption wasteth not.

ROBERT WEARMOUTH.

12. Mrs. E. HARRISON was brought to God about thirty years ago, through the agency of the Primitive Methodist missionaries who visited this neighbourhood (now the Motcombe Circuit). Her heart, like Lydia's, was opened, and her house also, for the ministration of God's word, and as a home for the servants of the Lord, who were always welcome. She esteemed it an honour to have the ministers of the Lord under her roof. For many years her path has been very rough and thorny, but she held fast her confidence from the beginning to the end, without wavering. I have been intimately acquainted with her about five years, and always found her resting on Jesus, who alone was her stay.

She evidenced her love to the Saviour by her attachment to the means of grace, and her liberality to the cause of God. For two years she was confined to her house by affliction, but she was supplied with the means twice a week, for which she was always grateful. She lived a Christian life about thirty years, and died in the faith, on the 16th November, 1861, aged sixty-nine years.

T. M. WILLIAMS.

13. MILLCENT BARBER, of Bradwell, Derbyshire, was born about the year 1792. Early in life she was the subject of deep religious impressions, and joined the Wesleyan Methodists. Unhappily she fell from grace, and remained for some time in a backsliding state till, perhaps, thirty-five years ago, when, through the instrumentality of our people, she was restored to Christ. Thenceforth her walk has been as becomes the Gospel, her light shone, and she was beloved as an Israelite indeed, in whom was no guile. Her habits of industry and frugality were such as to enable her to provide things "honest in the sight of all men," without depending on others. Our leaders and friends, fearing she might be straitened in circumstances, sometimes suggested that she need not pay her class and ticket moneys, but her answers were, "While I can get it I shall pay it freely." She had an unwavering attachment to our Connexion.

Her last affliction was dropsy in a severe form, but during its progress she was very patient and submissive. Praise and thanksgiving were her delight. Christian assurance bore her up, and enabled her to look forward to a better state. While sympathising friends stood round, she said "Sing for me, sing—

"There is rest for the weary."

"The Lord is good," "He is faithful," "He will never leave me," "He will be with me in the sixth trouble, and in the seventh He will not leave me," "He has been with me for many years, and will not cast me off now." Such joyous hope and strong consolation in prospect of death, made visiting her a pleasure. On November 10th, 1861, her happy spirit was liberated from mortality, and, we doubt not, entered into the joy of her Lord.

T. DOODY.

14. ANN BLACKBURN was born at Crosby-le-Moor, Winterton Cireuit, Lincolnshire, and died, June 7th, 1861.

From a child she was the subject of religious impressions; the Holy Spirit often strove with her until she gave her heart to God. During the winter of 1800-61, the above place was favoured with a gracious revival of religion, when Miss Blackburn with several others started on the heavenly way. From the time of her conversion till called to her reward above she gave satisfactory evidence of the reality of the great change she had experienced, her deportment was such as becometh a follower of Christ. A few weeks before her death she left home on business, not thinking that she was never to return alive.

Though young, healthy, and strong, the decree went forth that she must die—her sun was to go down before noon. The disease with which she was assailed was diphtheria; and, in about a fortnight it accomplished its fatal errand.

However, she was prepared for the solemn event. A short time before "life's last hour," she was visited by an aged pilgrim, who questioned her as to her spiritual state and her prospects for eternity. She at once declared that she had experienced a real change of heart, and was ready to die if it pleased the Lord to take her.

When dying, she said to her mother, who sat sorrowing by her side, "Weep not for me"—"Let me go, let me go." Death appeared, but he had lost his sting. And the dying saint departed this life in peace, lamented it is true by her earthly friends, but welcomed by the blood-bought throng in glory.

WILLIAM WHITE.

15. MRS. RACHEL CRAWFORD, the subject of this obituary, was one of the first members of the Primitive Methodist Society in Belfast. In early life she embraced religion, and united with the Wesleys, with whom she remained until 1832. When Mr. Haslam visited Belfast and preached in the open air, he was soon invited to Mrs. Crawford's house, in which the meetings were held for some time, and he being desirous of forming a society, Mrs. C., her husband, and others were united in a class, and in this society Mr. C. remains to the present. Mrs. C. was also a member with us till she was removed by death.

Of late they have been reduced in circumstances, and none but the Lord knows what she has borne, but she did not complain. She was supported by religion, and often looked with joyful anticipations to the time when she should be "absent from the body and present with the Lord."

On the day on which she died, she was engaged, as usual, in her household duties, retired to bed in the evening, and about midnight her aged partner found her dead and cold by his side. Although no friendly hand wiped the cold death-damp from her brow, though no one caught her dying words, if any were uttered, yet, doubtless,—

"Angels watched the sinking clay,
And bore her to the realms of day."

Thus she peacefully left this vale of tears November 27th, 1861, in the eighty-third year of her age. May the writer and reader find an eternal home in that happy place—Amen. S. BROCK.

16. Died, at Greetland, Halifax Circuit, October 23rd, 1861, CHARLOTTE HOWE aged seventy-four years. She remained a stranger to Christ till she was fifty-six years of age. At that time she attended a prayer-meeting near her residence, was deeply convinced of sin, and, shortly after, she obtained salvation by faith in Christ. From her conversion till death she honoured her profession. Though she was unlearned, yet she understood the deep things of God, so that when she gave a statement of her Christian attainments in public assemblies, a gracious influence generally attended her remarks. To Christian fellowship she was warmly attached, and regularly attended the house of God, when health and circumstances permitted. At last the infirmities of declining life prevented her constant attendance; her earthly house could no longer endure the toils and cares of life; but she had a building of God. Of this, she had frequently given testimony when in health, and she gave similar evidence to her family and friends when she was near the swellings of Jordan. To her son she said, "I am waiting till Jesus comes to call me away." To her husband, she said, "I am going to Jesus." Her last expressions were "Bless Him! bless Him! glory! glory!" God grant that every member of her family and the writer may meet her in heaven.

A. WORSNUP.

17. CAROLINE WADSWORTH was born at Greetland, Halifax Circuit, March 1st, 1825. When about twelve years of age, she became a scholar in our Sabbath-school, at Greetland, and became a teacher before she was sixteen.

During her attendance at the Sabbath-school, she became enlightened by the Spirit of God, but she remained unsaved till she was more than twenty-one years of age. During some special services, she yielded to the terms of mercy, and became reconciled to God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Having tasted of the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, she shrank not from publicly acknowledging the Lord. but at once united with the Primitive Methodist Society, and continued a useful member with us till her death. During the last few years she has been the subject of occasional affliction, but recovered after a little medical aid and rest. Her last affliction came, and all efforts to restore her failed, and her happy spirit, attended by angelic beings, triumphantly rose to the Paradise of God.

As she neared the last conflict, she exclaimed, "I shall soon have the victory." During her afflictions she was continually blessing and praising God. As she had recommended religion in health, she did the same in affliction. She told her cousin to meet her in heaven, stating, at the same time, "I have been a member upwards of fifteen years, and I never regretted." Though detained from the means of grace, she loved the communion of saints, and when she had lost all hope of mingling any more with the teachers and scholars in this world, she sent a message to them, requesting them to meet her in heaven. A similar message she also sent to the young women among whom she had daily laboured. As she drew near the eternal conflict, she sang—

"If this be death, I soon shall be
From every pain and sorrow free," &c.

In this happy state she continued till she fell asleep in Jesus, November 14th, 1861, aged thirty-six years.

18. MRS. HANNAH SIMPSON, widow of the late Rev. Thomas Simpson, Primitive Methodist minister, was born November 3rd, 1779, in the parish of Howden, Swinefleet Circuit. For many years she lived without God, and without hope in the world; but God who is rich in mercy even when she was dead in sin, quickened and saved her. Being convinced of her state as a sinner, and having obtained the assurance of salvation by faith in Christ, she became united to the Wesleyan Methodist Society in Hull, in 1816. About three years after this time the venerable William Clowes, as a Primitive Methodist Missionary, visited the above-named town. A great revival of religion followed, when the subject of this notice and her husband, having derived much spiritual profit from the services that were being held, united themselves with the infant society. Ardently attached to the cause they opened their house for the entertainment of its ministers, and the conducting of its ordinances. When a service was intended to be held in her house, Mrs. Simpson was accustomed to invite her neighbours to attend, nor was her labour and that of her associates in vain in the Lord, as appears from the progress of the cause in that town. In 1823 her husband entered the itinerant ministry. In reference to this period of our departed sister's life, the Rev. J. Lightfoot says, "I first was inroduced into the company of the late Mrs. Simpson in 1823, in the neighbourhood of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was struck at that time with her Christian demeanour. I was afterwards stationed with Mr. Simpson, in Sunderland, Hexham and Brompton Circuits, and at all times was strongly attached to them both. Mrs. Simpson diligently cultivated those habits of economy which were indispensable in her situation. She was, moreover, a wise counsellor, both to her husband and others, and a pattern of order, cleanliness, and neatness, both in her person and dwelling. She was also highly endowed with a meek and quiet spirit, and, I believe, lived near to the Lord. In one word she was always regarded by me as a 'Mother in Israel.'

She was a strict observer of the Sabbath, and was truly exemplary in her conduct in all the relations of life. As a wife she was industrious and affectionate, and as a mother she laboured to promote the welfare of her children in every respect.

Her piety shone more at home than abroad, but it was deeply rooted. The public and private means of grace she loved and prayerfully attended. Her love to the Word of God was strong. She daily searched the Scriptures. She delighted much in secret prayer, and was evidently being made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. A short time before her decease she removed from Selby to Hull. At the latter place she suddenly exchanged the sufferings of time for the glories of eternity, October 29th, 1861, in the eighty-second year of her age. Her end was peace.

JAMES R. PARKINSON.

19. Our dear and valued friend ELIZABETH WOOD, of Sigston, has left us, and gone to a holier clime. Though there is nothing very eventful in her history, yet for her words of love and deeds of charity, her name deserves a niche among the annals of God's loved ones. For upwards of forty years she was a firmly attached member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. When the Lord opened her heart and filled it with His love, she opened her house for the reception of God's ark, and beneath the roof of the old cottage at Sigston, many of the ministers of our Connexion have been refreshed, and found a shelter and a home. Though not possessed of much of this world's goods, yet she ministered cheerfully to the necessities of God's servants. Elizabeth Wood was well known to the ministers who travelled in Brompton Circuit, and though her spirit has passed away from earth, we have no doubt she lives in their grateful remembrance. For a long series of years the Gospel of the blessed God was preached under her roof, and that old cottage has been the place where the germs of spiritual life have been communicated to many precious souls. In the day of accounts it will be said of this and that man that he was born there. The family of the Woods are highly respected in the circuit for their sincere and strong attachment to Primitive Methodism. By their deeds of kindness they have greatly endeared themselves to us. As a whole they have been great helpers to our Israel; and what with their collecting-books, boxes, and missionary basket, they have gathered many a sovereign for the mission fund. The record of their deeds is registered in heaven. Our departed sister always felt an interest in these matters, and rejoiced in the prosperity of Zion. Since the death of her husband, who was a good man, she has resided with her son Thomas, who is our class-leader at Sigston. Of late years growing infirmities have been stealing upon her, and at times her sufferings were severe. On several occasions her life was despaired of, but while her outward man decayed, her inward man was renewed day by day. There was evidently in her a growing meetness for heaven. During my visits to Sigston I found her always cheerful and an attentive listener to the Word of Life; and the ordinances of God's house were to her wells of salvation. A brother who had been preaching at Sigston the Sabbath before she died, spoke of her as being very happy. There were then no symptoms of death, nor was she worse than usual. Her death was very sudden and very unexpected, and has been a cause of much grief to the family. She had retired to rest in her usual way and fallen into a deep sleep. Early in the morning something in the shape of a groan aroused her son Thomas, who passing speedily to his mother's bedside, he found to his great grief that the spirit of his beloved parent had fled. Thus died Elizabeth Wood, of Sigston, on October 10th, 1861, in the seventieth year of her age. W. FULTON.

20. The Primitive Methodist Society at Wyson, Ludlow circuit, has sustained a loss in the removal from earth to heaven of Mr. POWELL, of the above-named place.

Our departed friend was converted to God in 1828, and united with our society in 1829. It being a settled conviction of his many years ago that a sanctuary was greatly needed in the neighbourhood, he made an offer of land to two or three different communities of Christians for a chapel site, and, having associated with us, he made us an offer, which we accepted, and a chapel was built, in which hundreds have heard the tidings of salvation, and many precious souls have been converted to God within its walls.

Mr. Powell was a sensible, consistent professor of the Christian religion, and, consequently, adorned the doctrine of God our Saviour, and was an ornament to our society.

For a number of years he was the superintendent of our Sabbath school at the place aforementioned, and remained such until incapacitated by the affliction that terminated his life,—the duties of which office he fulfilled with acceptability and credit. He was particularly interested in the welfare of his youthful charge, which interest was joyfully reciprocated by the children in respect and partiality for him. In the school it will not be an easy matter to fill his place suitably.

His decease (stricture of the rectum) was of a peculiar and very painful character. His sufferings at times were extreme, and sometimes he felt very low in spirits; but still he was by grace enabled to bear up beneath his pain, and had a bright and blissful prospect of immortality and eternal life.

About an hour and a half before he died, a friend who was in his room said to him, "You will soon meet them who are gone before," and he, nodding assent, said "Victory! victory!" but spoke very little after. He finished his earthly journey on the 22nd of October last, aged sixty years. His widow has lost a kind partner, and his children a tender parent and wise guardian.

Oh! may they ever hear his warning voice,—ever regard him as from his bright seat in the Paradise world, beckoning them away to the better land, and may they render God their hearts, and follow their friend to heaven.

CHARLES SMALLMAN.

21. GEORGE, son of Robert and Hannah Maria GIBSON, of Bishopwearmouth, Sunderland, was born September 19th, 1841, and died November 8th, 1861, from the effects of a fall from a ladder while he was engaged in his ordinary employment.

He was among the first fruits of an extensive revival of religion, especially among young men, with which God graciously favoured us in Hopper-street chapel, 1858.

For this happy change he had been prepared by the holy counsels he had received at our well-conducted school, in Hopper-street, and by a course of systematic training at home, to which his parents tenaciously adhered, and which resulted in the conversion of most of their children.

As a Sunday scholar, his superintendent states that he was regular in his attendance at school, obedient and attentive to the instructions therein imparted, mild and amiable in his disposition, loving his teacher and class-mates, and orderly in his conduct; hence he was promoted to be a teacher, and afterwards to be an assistant superintendent, in which offices he discharged his duties with fidelity.

After his conversion, one who knew him well declares that his evenness of temper, meekness of disposition, humility of mind, uprightness of deportment, and spiritualness of conversation, were exemplary. The testimony of his father is, that he was everything that could be desired in a son,—very prayerful and attentive to his books, especially the Bible, which he studied systematically. He was mighty in prayer,—frequently, in private, engaging in this exercise with strong cries and tears.

We don't wonder to find that he was a strenuous advocate for revivals, and an active and efficient labourer in them, frequently exhausting himself therein. He was engaged in this work up to the last day of his life. An intense desire for the salvation of souls led him and others to hold a course of mighty revival prayer meetings, in which, in the true spirit of Primitive Methodism, he engaged in his usual manner, seeking for present blessings, and evincing a spirit in close fellowship with God. On the evening before his death he was observed to be very devout, solemn, and earnest; and, which is very remarkable, within a half-hour of the catastrophe that terminated a life of so much promise, he was conversing with his fellow-workmen on death, and on the fear of death, when he remarked that he was not afraid to meet death, being fully prepared for it. We believe he was, and that he was transferred at once to the kingdom of glory.

We have only now to add that during his short life, he was also characterized by a spirit of pure benevolence, disposing him to economise his small means, so as to preserve something to purchase books for the children, and clothing for the naked, and frequently also, when dining from home, to divide his provision among those who were less plenteously supplied. Such Christians are indeed lovely in the sight of both God and man. May all who read this sketch follow him as he followed Christ. JOHN LIGHTFOOT.

22. ELIZA SELLWOOD, of Woodyates, in the Salisbury Circuit, died in peace the 23rd of November, 1861. The death of one of her children, about four years ago, deeply impressed her mind, and she felt that without pardon she should be lost for ever, and she exclaimed, "O Lord, save my soul!" she could say nothing more, but continued to cry, "O Lord, save my soul!" Divine light broke in upon her mind; she ventured her all on the atonement and found peace. She at once joined our society at Wood Yates, about March, 1861. It was evident that she was consumptive, and, under a consciousness of approaching dissolution, she came to the prayer meeting, and there commended herself, her husband, and her children, her parents, and the society, into the hands of God. Never shall I forget that meeting; such was the earnestness with which she pleaded with God that some of the members thought she would have died there. I visited her many times during her affliction, and in answer to questions which were proposed to her she said, "I have no doubt on my mind; I feel Jesus precious; I believe He has pardoned all my sin; I trust in nothing but Jesus, I know He loves me, I know He died for me, and I know that I love Him, I love Him!" I visited her about two hours before she died; she was very happy, and requested that her parents and husband would come and engage in prayer for the last time, which they did; she also wrestled with God in prayer, and responded to the petitions that were presented for the conversion of her parents, husband, and children. After prayer I said, "How sweet the name of Jesus sounds," she answered "In a believer's ear." Thus died, Eliza Sellwood, aged twenty-seven years. B. HERRINGTON.

23. Mrs. MARY WILLIS, Cassop, Durham Circuit, departed to be with Christ, December 2nd, 1861. For many years she was spiritually dead to all religious concerns, and seemed to think that religion would abridge her happiness in this world. This impression was considerably strengthened by the influence of surrounding example and general custom. But though impelled from evil within, and drawn forward from evil without, tranquillity and gladness of heart were not realized. In this state she was met by religion. It put in its authoritative and Divine claims, urged her to seek and secure a spiritual and superior good. Many times her heart was on the point of yielding obedience to its sway. The struggle was sharp—worldly temptations were presented. The prevailing idea was, not that religion should be abandoned or its claims dismissed; it should only wait till she had made a further trial of the world. The happy death of a neighbour, however, made plain to her mind the inconsistency and danger of putting off and trifling with the call of God. Henceforth she conferred no more with flesh and blood, but she believed in the Redeemer, and came unto God by Him for salvation, which blessing she realized. In October, 1859, she became identified with our Church, and exemplified in her life and conversation the blessed fruits of the Spirit and the excellent graces of piety to the time of her sudden removal.

She exhibited an example of conjugal affection, fidelity, and maternal virtue, exceeded by but few in her station. It was impossible to be familiarly acquainted with her domestic habits, and not see at the same time the characteristics of the prudent housewife of the Old Testament. The zeal and diligence with which she ordered her household and sought the welfare of her children was only exceeded by the devotion to her spiritual interests, and her intense anxiety to have a name in God's house better than that of a son or a daughter. After the Gospel began to exert its attractive influences over her, love to its ordinances, its worship, and association with its disciples were fully manifested by a punctual, stated, and regular attendance on the means of grace. She was laying up for herself treasure in heaven, by acts of zeal and benevolence, performing the different duties of life with activity, care, and perseverance. Her decease was both painful and unexpected, but the Lord was her stronghold in the day "when the sorrows of death gat hold upon her." She died in the assured hope of eternal life.

WILLIAM SAUL.

24. Died, at Broadhill, Stafford branch, Wrockwardine Wood Circuit, WILLIAM SIMILL, November 17th, 1861. Our departed brother was born at Bramstead Heath, in August, 1824. He was a stranger to the grace of God until about four years ago, when several of the members of the Gnosol Society determined to mission Broadhill, which they continued to do for several weeks, through much opposition and persecution. Towards the end of the year 1857, we invited Sister Newman from Stafford to preach at the place, and our late brother attended that service, with the avowed purpose, as he afterwards acknowledged, of opposing the preacher; but the Spirit of God accompanied the word to his heart. He felt he was a sinner; and determining to give his heart to God, he united with the people of God, and was the first member enrolled in our society at Broadhill. He continued zealous and active to the time of his death. The affliction that terminated his life was the result of severe cold. About three weeks before his death he felt convinced that his earthly career would be short, and though at times delirious, yet in his lucid moments he rejoiced in God his Saviour.

I visited him several times during his affliction, and always found him happy. My last interview with him was indeed a blessed one. I asked him what he would have done if he had neglected religion till this time of his extreme suffering, and he answered, "I could not have sought it now, but bless God I enjoy it." During the latter part of his affliction, he was visited by several of the friends, who found him exceedingly happy, and he passed away from earth without a groan or struggle, to enter the blissful regions of endless life, aged thirty-eight years. C. HALL.

25. JANE SMITH, of the South Shields Circuit, was born at Oxolose, November 17th, 1799. The general character of the life of the deceased, up to the time of conversion, was strictly moral. Her heart, however, contained the germs of natural depravity, which, had it not been for counter-working influences, would have developed itself as fearfully in her case as in others. She attended the Church of England in early life; whether her attachments and leanings in this direction arose from family interferences or personal choice I have not learned. She became devotedly pious about thirty-five years ago, and till her death she continued to adorn her profession as a follower of Christ. The last three years of our sister's life were passed under affliction.

In her last moments there were no ecstatic outbursts, no shouts of triumph, yet there was reflective calm, the quiet and peace of a well-grounded hope. It was the setting of a light that had shed its mild lustre in its own sphere. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

26. ELIZABETH TRAVENOR, the subject of this brief sketch, was born at Lodgvan, Cornwall. She bade adieu to weeping friends, and left the shores of time on the 29th of November, 1861, aged fifty-two years. Followed by her husband and six children, her body was interred, December 3rd. Of her early life I have no knowledge. She was a member with the Primitive Methodists several years in various parts of the county.

She was very attentive to the means of grace, especially to her class, and she was liberal to the cause, always willing to assist, as far as her limited means would allow. She was taken ill about seven months before her death, and her suffering at times was very severe: but, "in patience she possessed her soul." Firm on the Rock of everlasting ages, amid the billows of afflictions, she enjoyed a perfect calm, an inward heaven. She many times said to me in her illness, "Jesus is mine and I am His." "I am, glory, I rest on Him!" Her confidence in Christ was strong. Just before she died she sung—

"I love Jesus, Hallelujah!" &c.

And as she was merging into the light of heaven, she cried, "Lord, take me home." Her dying prayer was answered, and she went to the bosom of Infinite Love. JOSEPH SHEPARD.

27. ANNE PEARCE, the subject of this brief sketch, was the daughter of William and Mary Scholefield, of Warren Vale, Rawmarsh, Rotherham Circuit. She was deprived of her mother when she was very young, and little is known of her life until she was united in marriage to Joseph Pearce, more than nineteen years since. She received serious impressions under the preaching of the Gospel by the Primitive Methodists, and about sixteen years ago, at a prayer-meeting held in a private house, she was enabled by faith in the merits of Christ Jesus to realize the forgiveness of her sins, and she united with our society.

She was a subject of severe sufferings for a long time, but in her affliction she had not religion to seek. During her last night on earth, she twice earnestly prayed that God would give her patience to bear her sufferings, and she sweetly, without a struggle, fell asleep in the arms of her Redeemer, on the 16th of November, 1861, aged forty-one years, leaving a husband and seven children to lament their loss. JOHN GOULDSBRO.

28. CATHERINE, the daughter of Robert and Abigail SMALLWOOD, was born at Winges, near Egremont, Cumberland, February 11th, 1822. In early life, she was the subject of serious impressions, and at the age of sixteen she attended a field meeting at Distington, held by the Wesleyans, when she was enabled by faith to lay hold of Christ, the hope set before her in the Gospel, united with the Society, and remained a steady, useful, and consistent member, labouring to support and promote the cause of God. In 1841 she was united in marriage to Robert Foster; in 1844 they removed from Distington to Dearham, where she attended our chapel, and being strongly attached to the Primitives, she joined the Society. When health and opportunity permitted, she regularly attended the means of grace, took great delight in the service of God's house. Three years ago there was a very gracious revival in the village. Since that time our sister has been making pleasing progress in the Divine life. She often said, "I love my class. My bliss is much sweeter when I share it with others; it is joyous to my heart; it is like a little heaven below." The last time she was present, speaking of her trials and afflictions, she said, "I had rather suffer affliction with the people of God than enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." Cheerful in her disposition and sweet in her temper, I never heard her utter a word of complaint. She desired and delighted in religious company and spiritual conversation. As a Christian she was sincere, as a wife faithful and frugal, as a neighbour much respected, as a mother strongly attached to her children; and she endeavoured to instil into their minds the principles of piety. This was lately manifested when her two daughters were afflicted with typhus fever. She watched over them with streaming eyes and a throbbing heart, anxious for their spiritual safety. But it pleased the Lord to restore them and take her. She took the fever, submitted with Christian meekness to her lot. Her illness was short but severe, and she was frequently delirious: but when able to converse, she spoke of her confidence in God. On the 17th of November, 1861, while her sister stood by her bedside she exchanged mortality for life. May her partner, family, and friends, prepare to meet her in heaven.

JOHN THOMPSON.

29. DIED at Little Farrington, High-worth Circuit, in full assurance of heaven, THOMAS LYNN, aged ninety-nine years. He lived without a saving knowledge till 1825, in which year he was awakened to a sense of his danger at a camp meeting held at Aston, conducted by Mr. Alcock, one of the first Primitive Methodist missionaries who visited this part of the country. He did not obtain the assurance of sins forgiven on the camp ground, but early next morning he was enabled to believe in Christ, and instantly he received the blessing, and could rejoice in God. As soon as he was converted he established family prayer, and the altar erected was ever kept up. His house was opened for the reception of the preachers, travelling and local. He was a liberal supporter of the cause of God, and he often went with the preachers to neighbouring villages, and stood by them when they were violently persecuted. He re-proved sin among rich and poor, and did it in such a way as not to give offence, but was productive of good. His love to God was constant. He was a great sufferer for some time before he died, but he bore his affliction patiently. His end was peace. May his aged widow and children meet him in heaven. Amen.

GEORGE BEALE.

30. ROBERT COUSINS, of South Ferriby, Barton Circuit, furnished, during a severe and lengthened affliction, a brilliant testimony to the sustaining influence of Divine grace, and the joy and confidence with which a Christian can die. The place of his birth was West Halton, near Barton, Lincolnshire. He was the son of pious parents. For many years his father sustained the office of a class-leader in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, so that Robert had the advantages of an early religious training. At the age of twenty-seven he entered the marriage state with Elizabeth Carlie, with whom he lived in conjugal happiness for forty years. In 1837 he was converted to God, and united with the Primitive Methodists, with whom he continued a consistent member to the day of his death.

He was more a man of deeds than of words; his religion was not characterized by many public and striking events which would have placed him before society with marked prominence. He was not, however, an idler, he worked in a humble and modest manner, but with great credit to himself and usefulness to the church. He was chapel-keeper twenty-four years, and chapel-steward nine years. He was an honest, industrious, upright man.

In an eminent degree Robert Cousins possessed the graces of the Holy Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, faith, meekness, temperance. And in the possession of these graces he was a useful member of the church, and an example to society at large. His death, he believed, was accelerated by a fall which he had whilst cleaning the chapel, and which occasioned a tumour in his body. Towards the close of his life he was a great sufferer, but he bore all with patience and resignation. Divine grace enabled him to say—
"Since all that I meet shall work for my good,
The bitter is sweet, the medicine is food."

On Sunday, November 24th, 1861, being the sixty-seventh year of his age, his peaceful spirit took its flight from this region of mortality to be for ever with the Lord, leaving for a time his sorrowing family behind.

BIOGRAPHY.

1. WILLIAM GOLDSBY began his earthly existence in 1793, at Marston, St. Lawrence, Northamptonshire. Upwards of thirty-eight years of his life were spent in the neglect of the welfare of his soul. When about twenty years of age he enlisted into the army; was a private in the 95th regiment of foot, commanded by Sir D. Dundas. In the fourth year of his service, when in New Orleans, he received a wound which resulted in the amputation of his right arm. Thus disabled, he became an out-pensioner of Chelsea hospital, and returned to his native village, and for more than forty years sustained the office of school master.

About thirty years ago, the Primitive Methodist Missionaries were labouring extensively and enduring many privations in the counties of Oxford and Northampton. They at length visited the birth-place of our departed brother, who was induced to go and hear them; the word was made a blessing to him; he prayerfully and believingly sought and obtained the remission of his sins. In the face of much opposition he united with our friends; opened his house for the preaching of the Gospel; and for more than twenty-seven years he was a consistent member, and also for many years the steady, persevering leader of the church which met in his house. The village of Farthinghoe, a mile and half from Marston, was visited about the same time; at that place a class was raised, and brother Goldsby was its constant leader for twenty years.

He was one of the first local preachers in Banbury Circuit. As his Sabbaths were generally employed in managing the Sabbath-school of the Established Church, it was only the evenings which he could devote to preaching; but in this sphere his labours were both acceptable and beneficial. He was strongly attached to the Connexion, and cheerfully and liberally supported it. From the time of his conversion to the close of his life, his house was a home for travelling and local preachers, who were welcome there. Several inducements were held out to him to turn from the people of his choice, but he held on his way, adhering to his principles immoveably, while the cause was strengthened, and his piety appreciated. But,

“ We cannot hush the ever rising thought
That we are subjects of mortality;
Probationers of this sublunary sphere,—
Mere travellers from the cradle to the grave.”

Four years since, the health of our brother began to decline; he became afflicted with asthma and a heart disease, from which he suffered by night and day. But he submissively bore the burden, cheered with the hope of eventually gaining the realms of the blest. The evening before he died, I preached in his house; after service I spoke to him on his future prospects; he answered confidently relative to his trust in Christ. Early the next morning, January 2nd, 1862, the last enemy was under his feet, and he safely and calmly entered into the joy of his Lord.

May his widow and the members of his class imitate his devotedness, emulate his zeal, and follow him as he followed Christ.

2. JOHN GARNER, late of Doncaster, son of William and Sarah Garner, was born 22nd April, 1815, at Bradfield, a village about eight miles from Sheffield.

In 1820 the family removed from Bradfield to Norton, in the Doncaster Circuit. At a suitable age John was apprenticed to learn the shoe-making business at Campeall. In his youthful days he was volatile, and lived in forgetfulness of God, and thus he went on till 1836, when he, with some other young men, were led by the good providence of God to the Wesleyan chapel at Norton, to hear a sermon by Edward Brooks, Esq. His object was to make sport rather than to get good. But the word preached was with power, conviction pierced his heart, he felt his state as a sinner. His sorrow for sin was great, and he did not rest till he could rejoice in hope of future glory. After he had found the Lord he joined the Wesleysans at Norton, but continued with them only a short time.

In 1839 he united with the Primitive Methodists at Norton, and he laboured hard for the prosperity of the infant cause, being anxious to glorify God and be useful to his fellowmen. Soon after he had a protracted illness, but he found the Lord precious to his soul. On his restoration he was appointed class-leader, and was made a blessing to the members of his charge. He also tried to train others to the work of class-leading, and to get them more fully into the work of soul-saving. The time came for the erection of a Primitive Methodist chapel at Norton, in which our brother took an active part. He was deemed by the Quarterly Meeting a fit person to sustain the office of a local preacher, and he was appointed thereto, in which sphere he strove to be useful, labouring zealously to win souls to Christ. His preaching was generally acceptable, and the people were glad to hear him enforce the doctrines of a free, full, and present salvation through faith in the atoning blood of the Lamb. He was favoured with a measure of success in his work of faith and labour of love, and some souls will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord. He was held in high esteem by the members and friends at Norton.

On April 5th, 1857, he was united in marriage to Mrs. C. Jones, of Doncaster. As a husband he was kind and indulgent, but in less than five years death dissolved the union. After he had been at Doncaster about three months, he was appointed assistant leader to Brother Huntington's class, which duty he faithfully discharged. Soon after he was appointed to raise a new class to meet on Sunday mornings, which proved very successful. Brother Phanton says he met with him two years and nine months, and never knew him absent except he was sick or was preaching. He very much enjoyed class-meetings. He often lamented his being detained from the means of grace on work-day nights, but he strove to make the best of the Sabbath. He had humbling views of himself, but as a class-leader he was very faithful. He told the members of his class the last time he met them December 16th, he was determined to be more in earnest for his own salvation, and in leading others in the way to heaven. He took an active part in street processional movements; in the Sunday night prayer-meetings, he laboured hard to bring souls to Christ.

Some time ago he had a severe illness, and it was thought by his family and friends he would not get better, but by the blessing of God on the means used, he partially recovered.

About the middle of December last he was in a precarious state of health. He, nevertheless, was present with his brethren at the quarterly meeting, December 17th. On Friday December 21st, he was much worse, and medical aid was procured, but his disorder was of such a nature that it was ineffectual. During the fortnight he was confined to his bed, his sufferings at times were acute and distressing. He was regularly visited by the preachers and friends. The enemy of his soul appeared to take advantage of his weakness, and he felt it hard work to contend with the powers of darkness. On one occasion he said to me, "There are many things that would keep rising up to prevent that comfort and peace of mind which I desired, but I am determined to plead the blood of Jesus, and cling to the promise, Whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life."

On the Monday before he died, I saw him, and he appeared quite calm. He said all was well, and he had no doubt of his acceptance. His sufferings on the Wednesday night following were very distressing and he seemed at times quiet insensible. Brothers Wadsworth and Newburn spent the night with him, and on Thursday morning, January 2nd, 1862, his spirit passed away to be with Christ.

On Sunday January 6th, his remains were carried to the grave by the members of his class, followed by his family, and a large number of members and friends.

THOMAS KENDALL.

3. ROBERT NASH, the subject of this brief memoir, was born at Sleaford, September 11th, 1807. The early part of his life was spent in sin, but a short time previous to his marriage he found salvation, joined the Wesleyans, and was a member with them till about half a year after his marriage, when in an unguarded hour he fell, and was a backslider about thirteen years. He and his family removed to Hardaley, in Yorkshire, and whilst there he again sought the Lord. He sometimes wavered in reference to religion. On one occasion, when he had not lived so near to the Lord as he knew it was his duty to do (being ashamed to attend his class-meeting), he sought a solitary place, and there confessed his sin unto the Lord, and found forgiveness through the blood of Christ, and by the grace of God he became established. He was a member with us nearly nineteen years, and a local preacher about ten of those years. About four years ago he and his family came to live at Glentworth in Lincoln Circuit, and during that time he was very zealous in the cause of Christ. He was punctual in attending to his appointments. A long journey, a wet day, a little indisposition, were not to him sufficient reasons for disappointing a congregation. He was an earnest preacher, and was well received. He was ill about nine months of an ulcerated throat.

On the night of January 11th, 1862, between twelve and one o'clock, he ruptured a blood vessel. He looked at his sorrowful wife, and said, "It's all over." One of his sons said, "You will soon be in heaven;" and with strong confidence in Christ he replied, "Yes; be good boys," and his happy soul entered the realms of the blessed. Since his death his bereaved widow and two of his sons have sought the Lord. That they may meet him before the throne of God, is the sincere prayer of

JOHN CHENEY.

4. STEPHEN COOPER, of Wrockwardine Wood Circuit, died January 13th, 1862, aged sixty-seven years. Being the son of unconverted parents, he had no religious training, but he grew up indulging himself in the sinful sports of his country. He delighted in gambling and bull-baiting, but, thank God, through the Gospel these practices have been abolished. When the first Primitive Methodist missionaries visited these parts of Shropshire, he went to hear them. The Spirit of God had been striving with him powerfully, and he had been frequently troubled by dreams in the night. When he got to the meeting he was greatly surprised, and deeply convinced of sin when he heard the text announced—"For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not. In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction."—Job xxxiii. 14—16. About a fortnight after, he was praying while at his work in a coal-pit, when the Lord made Himself known to the penitent as his God and Saviour. He then joined our society, and was a consistent member for about thirty-nine years. He also was a local preacher for perhaps thirty-seven years. When he became such, the journeys were long and friends were few, so that great fatigue, &c., had to be endured; yet he was faithful in his office, and not a charge of immorality was ever brought against him. He endured his last affliction with Christian fortitude. The friends and his children were comforted, finding that he ever possessed a well-grounded hope of heaven. To his son he said, "O Moses, what a holy, heavenly visit I had last night; I thought I was going home." At another time his son said, "Father, is Christ precious?" The old man said, "He is always precious to them that abide in Him." During his illness he continued happy, and, at times, greatly rejoiced, saying, "Glory, glory, glory be to God! He is the fairest among ten thousands, and altogether lovely!" In this state of holy peace and joy he continued till January 13th, 1862, when his happy spirit departed this life to be with Christ. May all his friends and children follow the Lord as he did, and may their last end be like his.

5. WILLIAM MARSH, late of Weston Colville, Saffron Walden Circuit, was born June, 1813. With eager steps he ran the downward road to ruin for about thirty-six years. The neighbourhood in which he lived was notorious for daring profligacy, drunkenness, Sabbath desecration, and various cruel sports. Among the ungodly throng Brother Marsh was found, until by a Divine hand he was saved from sin about sixteen years ago. The means which appear, under God, to have led to his conversion were prayer-meetings. Previous to our people missioning Weston, Brother Thomas Marsh and others attended a camp-meeting at Saffron Walden. At that meeting their hearts were fired with love to Christ and precious souls; and on their return home they began to hold cottage prayer-meetings. Among those that attended them was the subject of this sketch. God, in His infinite mercy, met him, and gave him to feel his need of Christ. He wept bitterly on account of his sins. He resolved, however, upon gaining the blessedness of sins forgiven, and one evening when returning from his labour, thinking and praying, and trying to venture on the Crucified, the words of one of our hymns were powerfully impressed upon his mind:—

"I can but perish if I go,
 I am resolved to try;
 For if I stay away I know
 I must for ever die."

He thought, "If I remain as I am I shall be lost; and if I make the attempt to go to Jesus, and should fail, I can only be lost!" In this agitated state of mind he cast his all at the feet of Jesus. The gracious Spirit helped him, and on that spot he believed in Christ with all his heart; his chains were snapped, his soul was fully freed, and God that night sent him home to his wife and family a "new man in Christ Jesus."

As soon as our people found their way to Weston to mission it, Brother Marsh joyfully cast in his lot with them, and when a Sabbath-school was formed, he became a teacher in it; he was appointed a class-leader also, which office he sustained, as long as he was able, with credit to himself and profit to his members.

As a local preacher he was generally acceptable; he was earnest and sincere in the administration of the Word of life, and ever aimed at being useful. He was distinguished for punctuality in taking his appointments; he had not his name on the plan to disappoint congregations, and thus wound God's cause. He was indeed a judicious man. He walked many long journeys after six days' hard toil, that he might break the bread of life to the perishing to whom he ministered. He had to walk sometimes ten, twelve, or fourteen miles out and home again; and we have good reasons to believe that he did not labour in vain. He was returning from an appointment which he had fulfilled at Whittelsford, when he was seized with his last illness. It commenced with a pain in his side, which continued to get worse, and he was confined to his bed. Sometimes we hoped he would recover, and then our hopes were blighted; he had medical aid, and was attended by kind friends, but he gradually sank.

During the time of his affliction, he found that the Saviour, whom he had so often preached to others, was ever present to comfort and support him; it was a pleasure to visit him. He was a humble Christian. His affliction was painful and protracted; but he was fully resigned to the will of God. As death approached, he was calm and thoughtful; he selected the parties who should bear him to the tomb; and spoke of the text which he thought might be taken for the improvement of his death, which was, "Weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children."

He was visited the night before his death by Brother Frost, to whom he said, "Christ is here—all is well." He was visited by the same friend in the morning, who asked him whether he knew him; he answered, "Yes, pray, pray, pray;" prayer was offered, and at its close the dying saint said, "Amen." A short time after our brother charged his wife and children to meet him in heaven; then bade them farewell, and left this world's woes for heaven's glories December 19th, 1861. We do not say that Brother Marsh was faultless, but his excellencies were many. He was much respected, was faithful to the people who were the means of his salvation, and religion was exemplified in him as servant, neighbour, class-leader, preacher, husband, and father. E. MASTERMAN.

6. JOSEPH FRITH was born at Skelmanthorpe, Yorkshire, September 6th, 1805. When about seven years of age, death deprived him of his father, and he, with four other children, were left to the care of his widowed mother. When about fourteen years old his mother died. He being a Sunday scholar learned to read the sacred Scriptures, which in after life became the support and solace of his soul. Serious impressions were made upon his mind in his youthful days; but after leaving the Sabbath school these good impressions quickly passed away, and he was wild and unruly until he arrived at the age of sixteen years, when he became a hearer of the Primitive Methodist ministers, and while listening to the truth he felt himself a miserable sinner, and sought for mercy through the atoning blood of Christ. As soon as he obtained a knowledge of the forgiveness of his sins, he was anxious that others might enjoy the same blessing, hence he began to exhort in prayer-meetings. Primitive Methodism being then in its infancy, a want of labourers was felt, to carry on the work of God. Our departed brother's name first appeared on the plan, September 1822, in the Barnsley Circuit. He laboured with acceptability in the capacity of a local preacher upwards of thirty-nine years, and class-leader thirty years, and he was beloved by his members. He was a trustee for Clayton West Chapel, and the treasurer from the time of its being built up to his death. He was much respected as a superintendent in the Sabbath school, by the teachers and scholars. When he had been a member about four years he entered into the marriage state with Elizabeth Lawton. During the time of their sojourn together on earth, they lived in peace, and patiently bore up under their afflictions. God was pleased to remove the partner of his joys and sorrows from the church militant to the church triumphant. This was a painful dispensation to Joseph, but he still continued to labour in the vineyard of the Lord for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom. He knew too much of the power of religion and its ultimate triumphs, to slacken in his work in the time of bereavement. He was not constitutionally strong, hence he saw the necessity of having some one to attend to his domestic affairs, and act the part of a mother to his beloved children, and hence he was married to Mary Exley, and he found in her an agreeable partner and an affectionate mother to his children. She lived a few years, loved and prized by the family, and then died happy in the Lord.

Although death made breach upon breach in his family and removed them all but three, he steadily pursued his Christian course, making advancement towards the prize which he now enjoys in the regions of bliss. There was no trouble with his appointments, he always attended them or got an accredited supply. He never gave an appointment in to the circuit steward during the whole time of his being a local preacher. This gave him an additional influence at the places to which he was appointed. The writer frequently called to see him during the time of his last illness, and found him calmly relying on the Lord. While reading a portion of Scripture, he cried out, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me praise His holy name; and forget not all his benefits." He remarked, "I murmured some time ago about seeing little success in my preaching, but the last place at which I preached the word was made a blessing and souls were converted." He was not so particular as some in systematically arranging and writing his discourses, for he never but once penned the outlines of a sermon, Acts ii. 21. He delivered his message in a plain and pointed manner, depending upon the power of the Holy Spirit for success. For some weeks previous to leaving his work, he was assailed by symptoms of the disease which proved fatal. On the 23rd of last December, he was forced from his employment by the stern hand of affliction, yet he sometimes entertained hopes of his recovery, but the earthly house of his tabernacle got weaker and weaker. His affliction was inflammation on the glands which baffled medical skill. He had not been ill long before he felt reconciled to the will of God, and expressed strong confidence in the promises of the Bible, and often sung—

"Now I have found the ground wherein," &c.

The day before he died, while conversing with one of his most intimate friends about his sufferings, he broke out in a rapture

"His own soft hand shall wipe the tear
From every weeping eye," &c.

A short time after he said, "Not one of the promises of God has failed; He has fulfilled them all."

He hovered a little on the verge of heaven, and said, "Bless Jesus, bless Jesus." A short pause, and he added, "Salvation," and he fell asleep in Jesus, January 22nd, 1862.

7. JOHN HAMBLY was born at Tywardreath, in the county of Cornwall, England, April 8th, 1799, and died at Sandhill, North Fredericksburg, in the county of Lennox and Addington, Napanee Mission, January 17th, 1862, aged sixty-two years and nine months.

Brother Hambley was convinced of sin when a child; and felt the strivings of the Holy Spirit when he was very young, but did not yield to be saved by grace until he was about seventeen years of age.

Through the labours of pious friends and a Wesleyan minister, he was led to see that his morality would not do; he sought the Lord with all his heart, and found Him able and willing to save.

He united with the Wesleyan Church, and remained for more than twenty years a faithful member, when he united with the Bible Christian Church, which was convenient for him, and with which he remained until he left the old country for Canada.

Twenty-one years ago, he was married to her who is left to feel her loss. Brother Hambly, his wife and eight children, left England and came to Canada in the spring of 1855; he procured a farm, and settled down in this New World. About that time, Brother Wood went and held a successful protracted meeting at Sandhill, and formed a Primitive Methodist class, when Mr. Hambly and his wife united with our little interest there, and his house has been a preacher's home ever since. Brother Hambly was a useful member until the day of his death. The writer became acquainted with him about three years ago, and in justice must say, I never saw one fault in him. He was one of the most consistent, exemplary, and best Christians I ever knew.

He was a good husband, a loving father, a kind neighbour, a warm-hearted friend, and a humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ.

A volume might be written about this good man, but as we have only a limited space, we hasten to the closing scene of life.

On the 14th of January, 1862, Brother Hambly was helping a neighbour to thresh, and after dinner he had gone upon the mow, but fell thence on to the barn floor, receiving from his fall serious injury. For a time he could not speak. He was taken into the house, and as soon as he was able to speak, he requested to see his dear wife. His son Joseph quickly fetched her; when he saw her, he said, "Oh, Ann! I am not long for this world." She said, "My dear John, look to Jesus, look to Jesus! the Lord can help you." When he replied, "Do not trouble yourself about me; it will be all right." He was taken home—the doctor was fetched, and he had hopes that he would recover, but soon his hopes were cut off. He lingered in pain, constantly lifting his heart in prayer to God, until the morning of the 17th, when he died in peace, but sleeps in Jesus. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." His death was sudden, but, bless the Lord, it was perfectly safe.

He leaves a wife, four sons, and three daughters to lament their loss, besides many friends in England and Canada. The Church has lost a good member, a willing supporter, a kind friend, a Christian man. Our loss is his infinite gain.

May God bless and keep his dear widow, and save all his children, that we may all at last meet him in heaven, where we shall have to say no more, "Farewell."

W. COOK.

8. JOSEPH, the son of John and Sarah ROLLASON, was born at Dudley, Worcestershire, June 14th, 1804. His father being a member and leader in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, he was early in life brought under the influence of religious impressions, and gave his heart fully to God at the age of fourteen; he at once united with the New Connexion Methodists. Some years after he became a member with the people of his father's choice, and was afterwards invited to accept his father's class; he at once acceded, and God made him useful in his day and generation. Occupying an official position in the Connexion, his responsibilities increased, and he gave himself to the work with that assiduity and zeal which evinced a determination to be "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

His piety keeping pace with his Connexional status, he was called to the office of a local preacher, and he became very useful. His preaching was pathetic, practical, and acceptable. He was not a great reader; lack of time and other things prevented an extensive acquaintance with this source of intellectual and spiritual power; nevertheless, it appeared he was well acquainted with the leading features and main principles of "the best of books."

Our late brother was fond of music, and with delight he took an active part in the singing portions of the service of God. He was appointed to the leadership of the choir at George-street chapel, Dudley, and for about twenty years that office was sustained by him with great satisfaction to the society and congregation assembling therein.

Of his Christian experience, it may be said that great confidence was felt and expressed by him as to his personal acceptance with God; his piety was very lively and firm, not characterized by fluctuations: it was often during life the subject of very severe tests, but he came from the furnace unscathed.

During the last few years of his life, his affliction prevented his preaching anywhere but at two or three places near home, yet he was enabled to give attention to his other duties. His afflictions increased until he was confined still more at home, when his piety and confidence in God were more especially tried. The writer, his colleague, and circuit steward, with others, visited him, and found him in a very happy state of mind; though his prospects might not be luminous, yet he felt the presence and power of religion, and up to the hour of his death, which to us appeared sudden, the God of his fathers was the never-failing source of even and strong consolation to his mind when "mortality became swallowed up of life."

Thus lived and died, Joseph Rollason, blest with religious usefulness, and laden with religious honours: being a trustee of George-street chapel and school, the treasurer of the estate, the leader of the choir, a local preacher, and the leader of two classes. His departure from this life took place on the 14th of January, 1862. Devout men from the Dudley and Brierley Hill circuits, on the day of his interment carried him to his burial, and made great lamentation over him.

N. W. STAFFORD.

9. Died, at Walpole St. Andrew's, Wisbech circuit, Jan. 18th, 1862, ROBERT POINTER, aged seventy-one years. He received his first religious impressions while living as a farmer's servant with the late Mr. Sutterby, of Tilney Fen. Mrs. Sutterby was a pious member with the Wesleyans, and took a lively interest in the spiritual welfare of all who were brought under her influence. While living in that family, brother Pointer was led to see himself a sinner, and began to pray, but he did not unite in membership with the church of Christ; this good beginning was of short duration, and he relapsed into his former worldly habits. A little more than thirty years ago our people missioned the neighbourhood where he was residing; many sinners were awakened, among whom was our departed brother and his wife. They were soon both of them made happy in God; their house became a home for the preachers who visited the place, and for thirty years their hospitality refreshed and comforted the servants of God. He was a trustee for our chapel at Walpole, a class-leader, and the society steward. Kindness and fidelity adorned his official conduct, and his path was that of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day. His affliction was of short duration. On the Monday he was in his usual health, and the following Saturday he died. To those around him he said, "There is no thorn in my pillow;—all is right." He passed from our midst beloved and regretted; and entered upon his glorious reward. Several of his children are walking in the way to heaven. His daughter Dinah, who was residing in America, finished her Christian course in holy triumph about two months before her father.

ROBERT CHURCH.

10. JOHN COOPER, the subject of this memoir, was born at Blackheath, Dudley Circuit, in the parish of Rowley Regis, county of Stafford, December 11th, 1829, and departed this life, January 25th, 1862. In his boyhood he was sent to a Sabbath-school, but his general conduct was bad. As years advanced, however, he changed his course, becoming a better boy, and he was more regular in his attendance at school; he also became very much respected by his teachers, and frequently received rewards for attendance and good behaviour. When he arrived at manhood, he was not given to open vice and wickedness, nevertheless he lived without hope and without God in the world. When about twenty-three years of age he received an invitation to attend the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Blackheath, and very soon after, while sitting beneath the sound of the Gospel, he was deeply convinced that he was a sinner in the sight of God, and that without a change of heart he should be forever lost. He sought and very soon obtained the blessing of pardon, became a member of society, and subsequently was appointed to the office of teacher in the Sunday-school. He was willing to go to any class when requested. After being a member of society for three years, he was made an assistant leader. In this new position, so long as health permitted, he was very fervent, faithful, and attentive to his duties. Two years after he was made leader of the same class, and as a leader he was very faithful with his members, and punctual also in his attendance at this means of grace. He was much attached to the Connexion, a faithful conservator of its laws, and on account of his affection for, and attachment to, the cause of God at Blackheath, he was much beloved, and very frequently visited during the illness which terminated his earthly career. After his arriving at manhood his health was in a precarious state, yet he manifested great resignation. Some time ago symptoms of consumption were manifest, and his health declined until

Fond nature ceased her strife,
And let him languish into life.

During his illness he was frequently visited by his brethren and sisters in the church, and many happy seasons they had together. These visits were to him especially "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Many were the testimonies from his lips that God was true, and that religion was a glorious reality. He does not appear to have had anything like great raptures while in afflictions furnace, but was calm and triumphant. One of the most distinguished features of inherent piety is a yearning desire for the salvation of others. This desire was very strong in him during his affliction, and he was especially anxious for the salvation of his parents and relatives. A visit which I paid him just before his death was made an especial blessing to him. His mind from that time was full of divine assurance and hope. He consoled his sorrowing partner by assuring her that he should "die to live again." To the last visitor, who was favoured with seeing him leave this world, he said, "Tell them," i.e., his friends, "I am going to rest without doubting." Previous to his departure his eyes were fixed as though he beheld some of the angelic throng, who were sent to accompany his spirit home, when he said, "Come, come, come." He then took his farewell of those present, saying, "Good by, meet me in heaven, the blood will bear me through;" and he passed in triumph home.

11. THE subject of this sketch, Mrs. ANNA BURRELL, was born at King's Lynn, Norfolk, March 27th, 1811.

She received her earliest religious impressions from the pious example and teachings of her parents. About twenty years ago, her mother died in peace; her father, Mr. Charles Brown, still survives. For about half a century he has been united in Christian fellowship with an Independent Church at Lynn.

Mrs. Burrell became a member of our society October 17th, 1835, in a class of which Mrs. C. Lee was the leader, and which was held in Norfolk street. Her old leader says that the period of the conversion of the deceased "was a very delightful time." She remained in the class with which she was first connected until she became an associate of the number which no man can number, which surround the throne of God.

For nearly twenty years she officiated as an assistant leader, in conjunction with the late Martha Morris, who was her pious and faithful maid for many years.

The class with which she was identified became very important and influential, numbering at one period about sixty-five members. From its ranks several brethren entered the ministry, viz., the Revs. R. Ward, missionary in New Zealand; J. Sculpher, E. Rust, and others. Mrs. Burrell was a spiritual Deborah; she occasionally blew the trumpet of salvation. Wolverton was the scene of her first attempt, and Marham witnessed her last effort in preaching the "word of life." She moved quietly, but she actively and energetically exerted a potent moral influence.

"Stillest streams, oft water fairest meadows,

And birds that flutter least are longest on the wing."

Pure and peaceful as a meadow streamlet, her life rippled on to the eternal ocean of being. She was an indefatigable visitor of the sick and poor.

In this respect, she was a tender-hearted and benevolent "sister of mercy." She has been known by some of her most intimate friends cheerfully to forego her personal convenience and gratification to relieve and bless the languishing invalid, the desolate widow, the fatherless, penniless, helpless poor. She was fluent in prayer and "very mellow," as her friend, Miss A. Lock, expresses it.

Her spirituality of mind was high-toned. Her gentleness of disposition shone out beautifully. Her attachment to the Primitive Methodist Connexion was unwavering, "in good report and evil report." Her liberality in supporting Connexional claims and interests, was freely and cheerfully manifested. In her friendships she was firm and constant. Her general deportment was truly exemplary.

Her last affliction was a cancerous throat affection, attended with extreme suffering. Its first insidious and fatal advances were observed about two years ago. The best medical advice that could be secured in Lynn and London, failed to arrest the ravages of her painful affliction. Her sufferings were intense, but were borne with perfect patience. When Dr. Lade informed her that her life would be embittered with severe suffering, she said, "I have trusted the Lord with my soul for twenty-five years, and can now trust my body with Him." She was unable to partake of any solid food for about three months. And for nearly that time articulation almost entirely failed, hence she expressed her wishes in writing. On one occasion, when Mrs. Lowe and others were with her, one remarked, "How patient she is." Her eyes brightened, and overflowed with tears, and she pointed upwards! During one of my visits, she said, "I am safe in the atonement;" and on another occasion, "I am going home. Praise the Lord."

On Sunday morning, January 12th, 1862, she calmly and safely passed from earth to heaven. In the morning, her faithful maid, Anne Morley, in waiting on her, quoted the lines,—

"When I feel my heart strings breaking, Peace, peace is mine."

Mrs. Burrell's fading eye brightened and her cheek glowed with unearthly radiance. The golden gleams of heaven was then upon her death-dewed brow.

"Though the mist hangs o'er the river,
And its billows loudly roar;
Yet we hear the song of angels,
Wafted from the other shore."

12. JOHN WEBB of Leadwell, Chipping Norton Branch of Witney Circuit, completed his spiritual warfare and entered on his reward, December 22nd, 1861. From the information communicated by the sorrowing relatives of our deceased brother, it appears that his character prior to his conversion was openly profane. For thirty-five years he rendered allegiance to Satan, the prince of the power of the air, and was held in spiritual captivity, constantly developing in his conduct and conversation, the unhallowed elements of a depraved heart. When the Primitive Methodist missionaries entered the village at which he resided, he became an occasional attendant on their ministry, and through their preaching, accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit, he was aroused to a right apprehension of his spiritual danger, and became deeply solicitous respecting his eternal interests. His convictions were keen in the extreme, and he drank deeply of the wormwood and gall.

In 1840, on Christmas eve, after having retired to his chamber, the surges of a guilty conscience arose and rolled with such violence across his disconsolate bosom, that he was prevented from enjoying "nature's sweet restorer balmy sleep." With tears and groans he earnestly besought the Lord to remove the load of guilt from his soul, and after struggling for some time he was enabled to confide in the all-sufficiency of Christ to pardon his transgressions, and he afterwards rejoiced in a consciousness of his reconciliation to God. With a heart disburthened of its load, he said to his wife, "I can now lie down and sleep in the arms of the Saviour." His transition from sin to holiness was so apparent that none who knew him questioned the reality of his conversion. He forthwith separated himself from his ungodly companions, and united in church fellowship with the people of his choice. After having for twelve months evinced his sincerity by a deportment that harmonized with his profession, he was appointed to labour in the capacity of a local preacher, which office he honorably sustained, till prevented by affliction. His education was very limited, and his talents were by no means brilliant, hence his sermons were not adorned with poetic effusions, nor bursts of eloquence, nevertheless his profound humility, deep piety, fervent zeal, and affectionate manner, rendered him a successful labourer in the Lord's vineyard. He was a man of much prayer, and his heart was the temple of the living God. Neither long journeys nor inclement weather deterred him from going to his appointments.

For twelve years John Webb had been class-leader, and for some time he superintended the Sabbath-school, and his kind and gentle manner secured for him the affections of the children, and also of the members of his class. For the last four years his health gradually declined, and in June, 1861, he was obliged to have medical aid; and he was unable to follow his employment. Satan sought to disturb his spiritual repose by suggesting that he would lose his harvest, and might in consequence suffer temporal privation; but he committed his way unto the Lord, believing that He who feeds the birds of the air and clothes the grass of the field, would also provide for his temporal necessities. His bodily sufferings were great, but he endured them with Christian fortitude; his language at all times was "the Lord's will be done." Through the peculiarity of his affliction, which was a disease of the heart and dropsy, he was unable during the last two months of his life to lie down, hence he sat in a chair by the fireside; and several times during the night watches, he wished those who sat with him to engage in prayer. On one occasion he said, "Here is a weather-beaten sailor, just going into harbour,—

"Blow, breezes, blow; come, gales of grace;
A heaven of glory is my landing place."

The day before he died he tried to sing,

"With steady pace the pilgrim moves," &c.

The last day he spent on earth was a Sabbath, and the writer being planned to preach at his residence, had an opportunity of seeing him several times, and found him rejoicing in the prospect of an abundant entrance into heaven. His house being the preachers' home, I sat with him till near eleven o'clock. Soon after I retired, he was heard to pray for his relatives and neighbours, and for the prosperity of Zion, concluding with the benediction; and at a quarter to twelve he died without a groan. He is gone to inherit the promises, but though dead he yet speaketh.

W. PALMER.

13. SAMUEL WILDGOOSE was born at Over Haddon, Winster Circuit, in 1813. In early life he was sent to a Wesleyan Sabbath-school, in which he was taught to read the Bible, and shewn the necessity of giving himself to God. But he remained in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity till 1829, when it pleased the Lord to send the Primitive Methodist preachers to mission the village in which he resided, and conducting their services principally in the open-air, he was induced to go and hear them; when the truth being preached under the influence of the Holy Spirit, it found its way to his heart, he saw his fallen condition and the danger to which he was exposed; he wept, prayed, and believed in Christ, with his heart unto righteousness, and with his mouth he made confession unto salvation. He could then sing—

"My God is reconciled," &c.

When he was converted he was only sixteen years of age. In about a year afterwards his name appeared on the circuit's plan, and for thirty-two years he performed the duties of a local preacher with profit to his hearers. He was always received with pleasure. He possessed a good knowledge of the Scriptures. His preaching was characterized by great plainness and energy. His appeals to the hearts of sinners were powerful, and his admonitions to believers were pointed. When he commenced his public labours the journeys were long, and the difficulties great, but love to Christ enabled him to surmount them. He often stood by the missionary and spent much of his leisure time in assisting him to carry out the great purposes of mercy, not only in the village where he resided, but in others adjoining. His zeal for God in this respect was fervent.

In his Christian duties he was fervent, zealous, and punctual. His presence at the class was much valued. His experience was clear, simple, instructive. In prayer he was mighty; he had power with God. His faith was strong in the promises. His great object was to glorify God with his body and his spirit.

In 1850 he removed to Hasland, near Chesterfield, and having his worldly calling to attend to, he could not take up his appointments on the plan so well as he would have liked, and this, with the difficulty arising from his poverty and a nervous temperament, often made him mourn. But still he held on his way, and was "stedfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." He had a firm confidence in God. His aim was to be a Christian at home and abroad. In his household he shone with heavenly lustre, and bore his family difficulties with great patience. He was a good husband and an affectionate father. He was kindly disposed towards his neighbours, and often invited them to the house of God. He was a faithful and trusty servant, and was highly esteemed by his employers. For the last five years he lived with Mr. O. Oliver, who has been a Primitive Methodist for above forty years. Mr. Oliver speaks of Samuel in the highest terms, both as a man and a Chrisman, and believes ere long he shall meet him on the plains of Paradise, to sing with him and all the ransomed, "Worthy is the Lamb."

The death of our brother was remarkably sudden, and powerfully appeals to the living, "Be ye also ready."

On February 14th, 1862, he was watering his master's horse, when he fell into the river, which was only about knee deep, and in a minute and a half he ceased to breathe, and it was found that his spirit had fled. He has left a widow and three children to lament their loss, but we have no doubt their loss is his infinite gain.

DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—If you make some little allowance for the quaintness and peculiarities of the worthy divine, to whom the following outlines of a sermon are attributed, I think the sketch will be perused with pleasure and profit by many of your readers.

OUTLINES OF A SERMON.

BY THE LATE REV. MR. BERRIDGE, Rector of Tetworth, Bedfordshire.
With a few slight Alterations by the Editor.

"Ye are our epistle."—2 Cor. iii. 2.

THIS was the language of the great apostle Paul (who, in his own eyes, was less than the least of all saints), in an address to the Corinthian Church, the members of which had been some of the most abandoned characters; and to whatever place the apostle went, where letters of commendation were required of the visiting ministers, he pointed to those conspicuous converts, who were living epistles, and so eminent as to be "known and read of all men." The change in them was so great as to render it evident to every one. The drunkards were become sober; the dishonest, just; the miser, liberal; the prodigal, frugal; the libertine, chaste; and the proud, humble. To these the apostle appealed, for himself and fellow labourers, as letters of commendation, who were living epistles at Corinth, and as lights in the world.

In an epistle there must be paper or parchment, a pen, ink, a writer, and somewhat written.

1. The paper or parchment. We may consider, in these Divine epistles, as the human heart, which, some people say, is as clean as a sheet of white paper; but if it be so on one side, it is as black as sin can make it on the other. It may appear clean like a whited sepulchre without, but it is full of all uncleanness and defilement within.

2. The pen may be well compared to the ministers of the Gospel, who are used in those living epistles as such, and many are willing to acknowledge themselves as very bad pens, scarcely fit to be written with, or to be employed in any way, to do so great a work.

It seems they have been trying for many years to make good pens at the Universities; but after all the ingenuity and pains taken, the pens which are made there are good for nothing till God has nibbed them; when they are made, it is well known the best of pens want mending. I find that the poor old one that has been in use now for a long while, and is yet employed in scribbling, needs to be mended two or three times in a sermon.

3. The ink used in these Divine epistles, I compare to the influences of Divine grace on the human heart; and this flows freely from the pen when it has a good supply from the fountain head, which is continually needed: but sometimes the ink appears to be exhausted, and the pen almost dry. Whenever any of you find it so, either at Tabernacle, St. Ann's, or Tottenham Court Chapel, and are ready to say, "O, what a poor creature this is; I could preach as well myself;" that may be true, but instead of these complaints, lift up your hearts in prayer for the poor pen, and say, "Lord, give him a little more ink."

But if a pen is made well, and quite fit for use, it cannot move of itself; there must be an agent to put it in motion; and,

4. The Writer of these glorious and living epistles is the Lord Jesus Christ. Some people talk about, and are very curious in, fine writing; but there is something in the penmanship of these epistles which exceeds all that was ever written in the world; for, as the Lord Jesus spake, so He writes, as never man either spoke or wrote. One superior excellency in these epistles, is, that they are all so plain and intelligible as to be "known and read of all men."

As pens cannot move themselves, so we profess, when we take upon us, the sacred character, to be moved thereunto by the Holy Spirit, nor can we move to any good purpose without his Divine assistance.

Lastly, in all epistles there must be somewhat written. Many things might be said here; but I shall include the Divine inscription of these epistles in repentance, faith, and holiness. Repentance is written with a broad-nibbed pen, in the old black letter of the law: faith is written with a crow-quill pen, in fine and gentle strokes: holiness is progressively written, is the most interesting part of the letter; and when this character is completely inscribed, and the epistle is finished, it is ultimately sent to glory.

WORKS OF CREATION.

THE VASTNESS OF THE UNIVERSE.

The following Extract is from "The DEITY," by the Rev. W. COOKE, D.D.

THE omnipresence of Jehovah is thus established by the clearest	evidence; but, while it commands our assent, it overpowers our imagination. In contemplating the immensity, as well as the eternity of God, we feel we have a truth which irresistibly forces itself upon the mind, but yet surpasses all our powers of comprehension. Whatever numbers and symbols we call to our aid, they fall infinitely short of the reality. Science has, indeed, greatly enlarged our conceptions of the vastness of the universe, and yet the whole dwindles into a point, contrasted with the ubiquity of the Divine Being. To gauge the extent of the universe, miles and leagues are too short; and even the velocity of light estimated by time, and that time stretched to millions of years, affords but a faint idea of its magnitude. Light, the swiftest body in existence, travels at the rate of nearly 200,000 miles in a second. Compared with other bodies, the sun is near to us, yet it takes eight minutes for a beam of light to pass from that sun to our planet, a distance of 95,000,000 of miles. The planet Neptune, though belonging to our system, is said to be distant 2,900,000,000 of miles, and it takes a period of four hours for a ray of light to pass from the sun to that planet. The great comet of 1680, at its aphelion, wanders to a distance about twenty-five times more remote than the planet Neptune, and it would take light above four days to travel from that distance to our world. Yet that comet belongs to our system; it is one of the group belonging to the solar family. But vast as must be the circumference of a sphere whose radius stretches so far into the fields of space, it is only a diminutive point, compared with the distance of the nearest body unconnected with this family group—a point so diminutive, indeed, as scarcely to form a parallax to some of the fixed stars. The time required for light to travel from the centre to the circumference of our system, we reckon by the narrow measures of minutes, hours, and days: but the moment we emerge from hence to the nearest star, the journey of light, rapid as it is, has to be computed by years.
---	--

The star α Centauri is computed to be two hundred thousand times further from us than we are from the sun; the star 61 Cygni is three times the distance of α Centauri; and the star α Lyre is nearly three times more remote than 61 Cygni. Thus, the remotest of these three stars is so distant, that a ray of light would be thirty years in passing from it to our world. We cannot realize these enormous distances, and yet they are "but our first mile stones among the trackless space." For, if we extend our observations to those stars whose distance renders them only just visible to the naked eye, we behold objects so remote, that their light does not reach us until one hundred and twenty years after it has left the twinkling orbs. It is vain to give this distance in miles; we have to heap billions upon millions until the imagination, becomes confused by the enormous multitude. Yet here, in these remote regions, we are only on the frontier of creation. Beyond the visible stars, we come to that faint light called the Milky Way, whose belt infolds a space far beyond the smallest stars visible to the naked eye. This luminous zone consists of myriads of stars, which, from their distance, are invisible to the eye; but they are resolved by Herschel's telescope, and in one quarter of an hour one hundred and sixteen thousand of these stars were observed to pass through the field of vision of that powerful instrument. These stars are estimated, on satisfactory data, to be four hundred and ninety-seven times more remote from us than some of the fixed stars; and it would require one thousand six hundred and forty years for a ray of light to pass from thence to our world ; or a cannon ball flying at the rate of five hundred miles an hour, would occupy more than two thousand two hundred and sixty-seven millions eight hundred thousand years in passing through the same space ! How prodigious the distance, then, of those orbs whose light constitutes the Milky Way ! and yet we have made but little progress through the vast systems of created being ; for the Milky Way is, with good reason, supposed to be but the outer bounds of that great stellary congregation to which our sun, and his planets, and all visible stars belong. In depths of space immeasurably beyond the Milky Way, there lie other congregated systems, and groups of congregated systems, each as large, or perhaps larger, than the entire field of creation we have hitherto explored. Our own galaxy, sufficient itself for a universe, and made up of millions upon millions of suns so remote that light itself cannot pass from one star to another until hundreds or thousands of years, is yet but a unit among myriads. Beyond it are other galaxies which hang as wreaths or folded curtains of light ; and beyond these, again, are others, appearing as filmy flakes, of faint and dubious aspect ; and again, beyond these are others which the telescope alone reveals to our vision, the succession appearing in every part of the heavens, so long as instruments can be found capable of extending the view deeper into space. The nebula of Orion, though visible to the naked eye, "lies a deep so far away, that its light cannot reach us in less than sixty thousand years after its departure ;" yet even this is near, compared with others, for Herschel states that "the rays of light from some remoter nebulae must have been two millions of years on their way." And since the power of Lord Rosse's six feet mirror has pierced yet deeper and deeper into space, it has brought some nebulae into view which may be so distant that their light does not reach us in less than thirty millions of years.

Let us only reflect for a moment upon the fact that light travels at the rate of nearly twelve millions of miles in a minute, and yet objects are so distant that light itself cannot pass from them to our eye in less than a period of thirty millions of years. It must be remembered, too, that as these nebulae are seen in all parts of the heavens, this amazing distance is only the radius of the known universe. We must double it to find the diameter, and we must six times double it to find the circumference ; yet even this is only a sphere of the known congregated systems. But who can tell how far the beams of light, issuing from them on every side, pierce into the depths of space ? How many times shall we have to double the circumference of the whole, to reach the utmost limit to which the flooding starbeams dart ? What aids shall imagination call up to stretch its view to the most distant rays, shot forth with the velocity of twelve millions of miles each minute of time, since the first moment of creation ? But hitherto, lost as we are in immensity, we have been contemplating merely those objects which are visible through the telescope ; yet, shall we suppose that our little tubes and mirrors, in this corner of the universe, are capable of sounding the depths of God's creation ? Rather let us suppose, as reason and analogy require, that all we have explored, and all we can explore, compared with what remains unexplored, are as the sands of an hourglass compared with the stupendous Andes, or the still more stupendous globe itself. This vast universe Jehovah fills with His presence. He resides in every part. His being and consciousness pervade the whole; His intelligence guides, His power preserves, and His presence fills and replenishes the whole. But beyond creation, magnify as we may—let imagination roam till it is weary with squaring and multiplying all we have yet contemplated—beyond all this there is an infinite amplitude where no planet rolls, no nebula looms, no stray star-beam has pierced, no seraph's wing has swept, and no creative fiat has yet reached—an infinite amplitude to which all imaginable creation bears no proportion; yet Jehovah fills the whole—His presence and attributes absolutely fill immensity, "The heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him."

MINISTERIAL PIETY.

HOW FAR THE SUCCESS OF A MINISTER DEPENDS UPON HIS PERSONAL PIETY.

A Paper read before the Nottingham District Association of Primitive Methodist Ministers, by the Rev. J. W. HOWELL.

I AM not now disposed to discuss the question whether it is right to test a minister's success by the number of members which he reports. We believe that some test should be applied, and I am not prepared to furnish a better. Doubtless a minister may be very useful to the Church who does not always, nor even frequently, report a large ingathering of souls. In consequence of his peculiar gifts, manner, &c., his particular work may be as a "son of consolation," to build up believers in their most holy faith, rather than as a "son of thunder," to arouse, awaken, and turn many to righteousness. Still, however, every true minister will unquestionably be blest with some fruit in the salvation of souls, and he who is never favoured with such tokens of the Divine approval ought seriously to ponder his ways and solemnly to inquire whether he has not mistaken his vocation, and is consequently an intruder in the sacred office, offering "strange fire" upon the "altar of God."

That men eminently successful, as Bramwell, Stoner, Smith, Fletcher, &c., have been deeply devoted, is beyond dispute, though, it may be, that some men of equal piety have not enjoyed such large success, so that their success might, perhaps, in some measure, be owing to the doctrines they preached, and to their peculiar manner of delivering them. Piety, however, is indispensable. There may be the most splendid talents, the richest endowments, the loftiest acquisitions, dazzling rhetoric, and perfectly finished oratory, but without the vitalizing, unctuous influences of the Holy Spirit, there is not likely to be very great success in the salvation of souls. These things, apart from deep-rooted piety and the Holy Spirit, may please, but they will not convince; they may charm, but they will not save; in fact, in the day of battle they will only be as the armour of Saul to Jessie's son.

"But if," says one, "there be a spirituality, whose attributes are lowliness, prayerfulness, humbleness of mind, vigorous faith, singleness of aim, simplicity of purpose, constraining love, inward unction, persevering industry, and entire devotedness, we shall most likely find such a man a successful preacher of the Gospel.

"Many preachers," says a good writer, "are either altogether without unction and emotion, or if they are not entirely destitute of both, they yet give little proof of either, except in the manner of pronouncing their discourses, which generally are very flat and insipid, and so deficient in these qualities as to show evidently that the head has more share than the heart in composing them. It is, however, necessary to enliven the productions of the purest reason, and to join heat with light. It is not sufficient to instruct a disorderly hearer—we must move him too—or all we say will be to little purpose. He is convinced of his duty, yet finds in himself no inclination to practise it. Those preachers therefore who aim only at satisfying the reason are not eminent for conversions.

In order, therefore, to be successful, there should be in all our ministrations a direct aim at the conversion of souls. He who preaches with any other aim mistakes his work, and need not wonder if he fail to win souls. However elaborate may be our discourses, however brilliant their imagery, graceful their periods, polished their sentences, or cogent their arguments, if there be not in all a direct aim at the conversion of souls, they will not affect the heart and consciences of men to their regeneration, any more than the snow-flake will affect the rock. But where there is a direct aim at this work in humble dependence on the Spirit of God, I greatly question whether the really and deeply pious minister can fail of success.

I know of no instance of such failure.

Of course, in order to this, Christ must be "first and last," "all and in all." He must give light to our sentences and enchantment to our discourses; He must be the centre around which we must constantly revolve, the Sun whence we derive all our heat; He must be the music of our songs and the fragrance of our flowers, the burden of our theme, and the object of our glory. If we descend into the deepest depths of the mine of truth, it must be to gather His treasures, if we study philosophy or science it must be in the light of His cross, if we speak of the heavens, it must be to show the glory of the "Sun of Righteousness," or the brightness of the "Morning Star;" if we cull flowers for our sermons, they must drop with the dew of Hermon and be redolent with the perfume of Sharon's lily and the fragrance of Sharon's rose; in fine, if we mean to save men, "pulling them out of the fire," our theme must be "Christ crucified," in all its fulness and its power, and our ministerial language must be "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I may, perhaps, be allowed to glance a moment at the hindrances to ministerial success. That it may be hindered, who can doubt? That it is frequently hindered we have many sad and mournful proofs. The hindrances are too numerous to admit of particular reference to them all in this paper. Suffice it to say, that where the spirit of the minister is not uniformly maintained, there will be a blight upon that person's ministry. The Holy Spirit, grieved by such minister, his ministerial usefulness will be contracted. His best hearers will be likely to see that he does not live in God, that he is one man in the pulpit and another man out of it, while his worldly spirit, foolish jesting, recital of silly and unprofitable tales, light and trifling conversation, his jokes about spiritual and eternal things, will leave him without ministerial power possessing, perhaps, light, but without heat, a mockery and a jest, a Judas in the apostle's seat, or a practical infidel, singing hymns and saying prayers.

Indolence on the part of a minister will hinder his success. An indolent minister is an anomaly; the grief of the good, and the sport of the wicked, if not the wonder of demons. Upon this subject one of our own brethren, in the Christian Ambassador, says, "Temptations to indolence in every part of duty will be experienced by a minister. He may devote so great a proportion of his time to light and flippant visitation, as to leave him little time and less taste for intellectual pursuits. The man who spends his time in running from door to door, and from table to table, and who neglects the improvement of his mind, will become light-headed and empty-hearted. His memory will be crowded with fireside gossip and the secrets of the tell-tale; and he will become a walking store-room of all the passing occurrences of his neighbourhood." We know well, the deep attachment to loved ones at home, and attention to their wants and comforts, are demanded alike by nature and scripture; but is not he who allows these to engross the whole of his time, and who, consequently, has to appear in the pulpit without due preparation, and who passes week after week without attending to the requirements of his flock, guilty of turning aside from the ministry and serving tables? And he too, who, from early morn to dewy eve deserts his closet and study, and sports like a butterfly from place to place for his own sensual gratification, will find that his course will incur merited contempt, and that, consequently, his success will be hindered. No wonder if the ministry of such men prove an abortion, or, something worse. Their course is destructive of all vitality and godliness; it degrades the ministry, deprives the people of that spiritual help which they justly demand, leaves souls to perish, and will, very probably, issue in the utter ruin of such a minister, who will, perhaps, ultimately be left to merge in the common mass of the ungodly, or to seek shelter from the storm of a guilty conscience in the blank negations of scepticism. And oh! the fall of a minister of Christ is almost too awful to contemplate: an event from which each ought to shrink with the utmost horror.

Allow me, brethren, in closing my remarks, to quote an American minister on this subject. He says, "The falls of so many ministers are awful and affecting warnings to those who think they stand. The bleak shores of eternity are strewn with the fragments of many a beautiful wreck—men who once stood high in the Church—too high for their own safety, but who made shipwreck of their profession and their faith, and now serve as beacons of warning to those who follow. What see I yonder? A spectacle over which demons have exulted, the Church has mourned, and, if it be possible, angels have wept. I knew him well. He was my compeer in age, my associate in study, the companion of my works, the confidant of my bosom. His fine mind was redolent of thought, his bright eye gleamed with genius. Few men ever entered the ministry with higher prospects. He bade fair as his sun rose to its zenith to be a bright and a shining light. Distinguished posts of labour were proffered him, and crowds eager to receive his instructions clustered around his pulpit, drawn together by the tender, subduing eloquence of his lips. But—he fell! and fell deeply, awfully. He grew prayerless, unwatchful, self-confident, worldly, presumptuous, and by slow, but certain and fatal degrees, he descended from his lofty eminence; his sun went down while it was yet day, and around him is now gathered, in thick and gloomy folds, the dark pall of guilt, of infamy, and shame.

Dear brethren, our office is no ordinary one. We are ambassadors from the King of kings and Lord of lords to a revolted world. Never had men committed to them an embassy of such deep and everlasting moment. Among all the thousands to whom we preach, not one but will take an impression from us that will never wear out. Heaven and hell will for ever ring with recited memorials of our ministry. And oh! our own responsibility; there is for us no middle destiny. Our stake is for a higher throne of glory, or a deeper hell. For, to say nothing of the souls committed to our care, our work leads to the work. We have daily to go where Nadab and Abihu went, and to transact with Him who darted his lightning upon them. It is a solemn thing to stand so near the holy Lord God. Let us not fail to devote to our work our best powers. Soon shall we appear with our people before the judgment-seat of Christ. What a scene will then open between the minister and those of his charge, when all his official conduct towards them shall be scrutinized, and all their treatment of Christ and His Gospel shall be laid open.

Let us, brethren, cultivate deep toned piety as the requisite to ministerial usefulness, and we may rest assured that success will attend our labours, and amidst the solemnities of the judgment we shall see, as we never have seen, that, "He that winneth souls is wise."

2. OUR HABITS AND THEIR INFLUENCES.

From a Lecture on "Our Habits, Influence, and Responsibilities," delivered before the Young Men's Christian Association, Oxford, by W. BATMAN.

[The following extract contains many valuable sentiments, and as they were designed for young men, we pleurably give them a place in our Junior Preacher's department. We trust they will be read with the interest which they merit.—EDITOR.]

THE importance of our habits arises also from our influence with others. "Iron sharpeneth iron, so sharpeneth a man the countenance of his friend." We influence each other both individually and collectively; when we hold familiar intercourse with each other as friends, and when we meet on the common platform of our universal brotherhood to discharge the duties of our social relationship. Were it possible to limit the influence of man's habits to himself, or his responsibility for that influence to the few short years of his own life, it would then be a matter of little consequence comparatively how his life was spent or his habits regulated. But when we remember how greatly we influence others, and the necessarily eternal consequences of that influence, we are bound, not only by considerations for our own present and eternal welfare, but also by considerations for the present and eternal welfare of others, keenly to scrutinize and well to calculate the influence of our habits upon the destinies of mankind. Death may sever the subtle bond of union between the mortal and the spiritual in our nature, and may consign these earthly tabernacles to the dust and to the worms ; but death itself, keen as is his arrow and universal as is his dominion, cannot destroy that subtle power by which we live in the influence we leave behind us after we have bowed to his sceptre and passed from the circles of the living. The habits of a good man's life are productive of results which exert an influence in the world long after he has passed from the scene of his toils and cares. Equally lasting is the effect of evil habits, and he greatly miscalculates his criminality who limits it to the immediate consequences of his actions.

The time has come when, as Christian young men, we are called upon to make a decided stand, claiming, as we do, the high and glorious honours of that sacred name. Ours is at this critical juncture in the moral history of our world a most solemn responsibility. There never was a time when the agencies in operation for evil were more numerous and more powerful than they now are ; there never was a period in the moral history of man when all the influence of the Christian character was more called for than in the present day. Christianity lays open its high claims before us, and from its rich storehouse we may draw those principles of action which will render us an unspeakable blessing to our race ; and by imbibing its spirit and living according to its instructions, we may—we shall—exert an influence favourable to human progression in the highest sense of the term. Under no circumstances does man live for himself alone, and under every circumstance the sentiment of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is unworthy of all. But now that the sources of evil in our land are being thrown so widely open, and profligacy, atheism, and immorality are making such rapid strides in our island home, every man's individual character and conduct is of the highest consequence. Religion and irreligion, righteousness and worldly-policy, bold principle and cowardly expediency, spiritual Christianity and cold conformity, marshal their opposing forces and mingle in incessant conflict. There is no neutral ground upon which we may stand ; if we do not, in our daily intercourse with society, exert an influence favourable to Christianity, we must be drags upon its wheels.

Our position is an important one. We are yet but young men, it is true, and there are some who would tell us that it would greatly endanger the interests of society for young men to take a lively interest in the cause of human progress, before their youthful enthusiasm is sobered down by age. We reverence experienced age ; it is entitled to, and shall ever have, our deep respect, but at the same time we maintain that it is highly requisite for us as young men to realise the importance of our position in society, that by the cultivation of our habits and character now, we may lay the foundation of a mighty influence for good in the world ; for certain it is that if ever we must accomplish anything either good or great in the world, we must begin now.

Thirty years ago the great men of the present day were young men ; thirty years hence, the young men of the present day will be the great men. Thirty years ago the leading characters which now stand so prominent in society were being moulded. The ambition which has led to the wars of the past few years, and all their mournful consequences, was being nourished as a tender plant ; and that noble-hearted, self-denying enterprise, which is now bearing the gospel of peace and salvation to the dark and distant parts of the world, was being fostered and strengthened. Thirty years hence, the habits and principles cultivated by the young men of this day will supply the great and mighty impulses by which society shall be moved and governed. The literary, scientific, and Christian luminaries of the next generation must spring from the young men of this.

The generation of our fathers is fast passing away. The grey hair, the wrinkled cheek, the feeble step—sure harbingers of approaching dissolution—are fast spreading themselves through the ranks of those whom we deeply reverence and dearly love. Soon they must bow to the just decree of heaven, and their dust return to dust. Soon we may visit the scenes of our boyhood, and range over the places endeared to us by the gambols of childhood and the sweet reminiscences of our early days; we may there lift up our voice and cry, "Our fathers, where are they?" and, as though to mock enquiring sorrow, instead of the old familiar voice which so often welcomed us in the home circle, an echo shall answer from the deep, dark chambers of the grave, "Where are they?" and

"Some are risen—a feeble race, Awhile to fill our fathers' place."

It is to the heroic courage and devoted piety of our forefathers that we owe our present pleasing position. To confer upon us the liberty and the privileges which are a Briton's birthright in every corner of this civilized world, heroes have bled and martyrs have suffered; peace then to their ashes, honour then to their urns: long may their memory live with and be cherished by us. Let us emulate their example, that we may hand down unsullied to the generation that shall follow us the ancestral honours which we now inherit from them.

Lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.
Footprints that perchance another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn main!
A forlorn or shipwreck'd brother,
Seeing, shall take heart again!

THE SALVATION OF LITTLE CHILDREN: AN ADDRESS TO PARENTS.

BY R. WARD, NEW PLYMOUTH, NEW ZEALAND.

"Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew xix. 14.

(Concluded from page 351.)

THE Church of the Old Testament made provision to receive infants into the covenant of grace, of which circumcision was the outward sign; and the promise of God in the Christian Church is to you and to your children; else were your children unclean, but now are they holy. The means of grace belong to your children. The sacred Scriptures are so written that many parts are peculiarly attractive to the young. The gospel should be so preached as to feed the lambs of the flock, and to lead them to devote their impressible hearts to the Saviour.

"A flower when offered in the bud,
Is no vain sacrifice."

Let the words of Jesus be understood, secondly, as referring to the life which is to come. "Suffer little children to come unto me," "where I am to behold my glory." Where that place is we know not, nor how it is garnished; but as God has spread the earth with every form of life and beauty, may we not suppose that the place where His throne is may be ineffably glorious? We know that it is so. And that is the home of your departed children. Accidents may suddenly remove others, or lingering affliction may lead them slowly to the border streams; but all is well, suffer them to go to Jesus and, as you take your last fond gaze, say "The Lord gave, and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Your departed babes are safe. The sun shall not smite them by day, nor the moon by night; they shall neither hunger nor thirst; neither sickness, sin, nor death shall ever touch them more. Cannot you hear Jesus saying, "I have been below; I have stooped to childhood's cries; I made my bed in a manger; I know all the sorrows of infancy; I will compassionate these babes; "Suffer little children to come unto me."

III. Consider, thirdly, the obstacles which lie in the way of children coming to Christ.

These are not to be confounded with the hindrances which you may experience. For evil habits may have enslaved you; your heart may be so hard that the ordinary work of the Holy Spirit could make no impression on it. Fear and shame may prevent you from confessing Christ. Or care may lay its heavy weight upon your spirit. From all these things your little ones are free.

But men forbade children's coming to Christ. On what false principles may we suppose such a course was taken? Was it that Jesus would not stoop to notice childhood? The whole Bible is a refutation of such a thought. Some perchance, may suppose that religion is so serious a subject children must not touch it; that the healthful playfulness of a child's spirit would desecrate it; that the knowledge of salvation is so far beyond the faculties of children, that they must stand aside for the present, and be initiated slowly. And so they would forbid them from coming to Christ.

We can imagine such persons saying, "It was well for the leper to come and kneel before Jesus; and yonder blind and deaf man was right in requesting to be cured; it was proper for blind Bartimeus to come when Jesus called him; but for mothers to bring their babes to the Saviour! It is preposterous; we will forbid them."

But the men who forbade them in the days of Christ's sojourn on earth were disciples. Had they been men of the world their opposition might have been attributed to their ignorance of Christ's purposes; but the disciples were supposed to know their Master's will, to be interested in his cause and the promotion of His glory. There are such disciples in the present day. They may be found in the Sabbath-school, confining their efforts to enlighten the mind rather than to convert the heart; they may be found in the pulpit, where no pains are taken to provide the sincere milk of the word; they may be found in the family of Christian profession, hence the multitudes of unconverted children belonging to the families of those who profess religion.

Ye parents, partake not of the guilt of those who forbid children to come to Christ. Remember if you train them up without religious principles, you in effect forbid their approach to Jesus. In what an awful position will many parents stand at the day of judgement. They educate their children, and give them wealth, without leading them to Christ. They fasten them more securely to the world with, so called, elegant accomplishments. Their minds are dissipated by dancing, charades, and plays; their time is wasted in fashionable morning calls and novel reading. The catalogue of vanities is a long one. The Spirit of God is grieved; and the young heart, which might have been the seat of brightest hopes and noblest purposes, becomes "earthly sensual, devilish."

IV. How are the obstacles, which lie in the way of children's salvation, to be removed?

Christ saw this to be such an important question, that He gave a distinct command concerning it—"Forbid them not." Nothing less than a positive command could meet the case. It must not be left to be drawn as an inference from the general teaching of the Scriptures. "Forbid them not" must be written, it must pass into a law, and remain in force for ever.

Forbid not appropriate means being used to win your children to Christ. Such are Sunday-schools, Bible classes, and meetings for prayer, among many others. Forbid them not under any false pleas of pride, or shame, or fear. Manifest no improper conduct, nor let an improper word be heard, against the people of God; lest you wither some bud of repentance, and check the rising of a desire to be saved. Had your lot been cast in the days of your fathers, when, to confess Christ in Scriptural purity, might bring upon your children the fiercest rage of men and demons, exhibited in the darkest days of persecution, the voice of Jesus might be heard above the storm, saying, "Forbid them not."

V. Consider the reason given in support of the course commanded by our Lord—"Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

How vast the number who have gone from earth to heaven in childhood. They are not natives of heaven, but going thither so young they are almost such. Their experience of earth was so brief, they were so early sanctified by the Holy Spirit, that they know no dwelling-place but heaven. They have been gathered from every land. Slavery has contributed multitudes; hundreds of thousands have been ransomed from heathen lands; many have been selected from mansions and from palaces; the number is so great that no man can count them; truly, of such is the kingdom of heaven.

These words may convey two ideas to our mind. 1. The freedom of childhood from the cares and sins of this wicked world. No man is free from these things till the grace of God sets him free. 2. That little children submit to the Spirit of God. Suppose a change were to pass over society, freeing it from every case which is sinful, from every thing which is traceable to unbelief, to the lust of the flesh, to the lust of the eye, and to the pride of life, and from everything which grieves the Holy Spirit, and you have a type of the heavenly society. The best representative of that blest state to be found on earth is a little child.

Here is an unbounded source of consolation to those Christian parents whose children are gone before them to heaven. A little while and you will meet them again if you be faithful. And the children now left in your charge are precious in the sight of the Lord. The seal of Heaven is upon them. You may well rejoice with trembling. Bring them at once to Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

ON REWARD-BOOKS FOR SUNDAY-SCHOLARS.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—In perusing our large magazine for November, 1861, I was startled by reading an article by X. Y. Z., relative to the giving of rewards to our Sabbath School children; that the sum of three pounds worth of books should be given to the scholars of a certain school, and only one of them, "like Primitive Methodism," appears surpassing strange. I hope that the hint given will stir us all up to seek to place in the hands of our dear children, books which are sound in Methodist (that is scriptural) theology; as in all probability the books the children receive at our Sabbath Schools will be taken by them into different situations, and read by them and others for years to come. Hence the inconceivable importance of the books being of a good character and sound doctrine.

Allow me here to state the course I have adopted in my stations for many years. When a school anniversary has been held, at its close I have met the school committee, first, to ascertain the state of the funds; secondly, to fix on the sum that should be applied to the purchase of reward books; thirdly, to examine our own catalogue, which we are glad to find has recently been much improved, many valuable works having been written by our own ministers, and many other works of a superior kind, which are offered at very reasonable prices.

We have, not long since, held three school anniversaries in this station. The books we have selected for rewards have been the following:—Bibles, our own Hymn Books, School Hymn Books, Jackson's Alarm, Mrs. Jackson's Mothers' Remembrancer, Dodsworth's Better Land, Eden Family, Dixon's Christian Parent, Lowe's Folded Lambs, Simpson's Prodigal, The Two Sons, a Contrast, Smiles and Tears, Garner's Candidate, Widow's Mite by Dixon, Ducker's Flowers, &c.

GEORGE WALLIS.

[The course pursued by our esteemed friend at Leamington, must commend itself to truly loyal Primitive Methodists, hence no need of our eulogy. Another respected correspondent has favoured us with some powerfully pungent remarks on this subject, which we had extended and prepared for publication, but as several valuable articles have laid over for want of space for many months, and as we hope the above will be sufficient to secure the attention, and command the future conduct of Connexional Sunday school committees, we forbear to enlarge.—ED.]

MISCELLANIES.

1. "THEREFORE BE YE ALSO READY."

1. ASHCOTT, BRIDGWATER MISSION.—Dear Sir,—On my journey from the above place to the Isle of Wight, I was informed that one of the villagers had met with a serious accident. On enquiry I found he had been climbing a tree, and had ascended nearly forty feet, when, taking hold of a withered branch, it broke, he fell with it, and broke his back. Hearing of his dangerous state, I called to see him, and found him very anxious for salvation; but very weak, unable to move, or speak very distinctly, as the lower part of his body and legs were dead. I immediately directed him to come to the Saviour, by simple faith; and while I was relating an anecdote, he laid hold of the atonement, and exclaimed, "I do believe the Lord has pardoned me," "Praise the Lord," "My blessed Lord," &c., &c. I then engaged in prayer, and such an overwhelming measure of the Spirit came upon us that all who were in the room wept; one wept tears of penitence, the others wept tears of holy joy. To God be the praise! Hallelujah! Amen! For such a salvation in such imminent peril, and for such a holy baptism.

Reader, take warning by this narrative. Its subject, as you learn from the above, took hold of, and trusted his life on a withered branch which was unable to support him, and he fell. Allow me affectionately to ask, are you trying to ascend to that country that "eye hath not seen" without the support of the "Green Tree?" If so, you will find that the "dry tree" cannot support you across the stream of death; and when that sifting, trying, fixing moment comes, you will prove to your everlasting sorrow, the folly of trusting to a withered earthly hope, a dead branch. Trust in the Lord alone, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

2. A LECTURE BY MISS STANSFIELD,

ON THE EVIDENCES AND PURPOSES OF CHRISTIANITY.

My design in examining the Christian religion, is to unfold its realities, refer to its boundless benefits, and the numberless mercies which it is constantly propagating. Such an enquiry is not only calculated to enlighten, but to bless abundantly the earnest seeker after truth. There is great vitality in the Christian system; with what life are its truths explained, its doctrines enforced, and its principles unfolded! To examine the practical part of Christianity, according to the dictates of the Scriptures, has a saving influence, it is a revelation of God's will. The matured Christian abounds in love to God and man, he feels deep sympathy for those who are in the gall of bitterness and the bonds of iniquity; and his sympathy prompts him to acts of devotion and self-denial. He cannot see his fellow-creatures sporting in sin on the brink of an awful eternity without lifting a warning voice, or supplying for them repentance unto life. Christianity in its sanctified subjects not only evidences itself in purposes of devotion and self-denial, but in deeds of charity, indeed it is fruitful in good works.

One clear evidence and strong proof of Christianity is a life of faith; it not only lifts us above the transitory state of these changing scenes which surround us, but it adds an interest and gives sunshine to life, and impels to the noblest objects of pursuit, and the most sublime anticipations. What is it that faith cannot claim? Faith is the lustre of the soul, itself being powerful evidence of our glorious Christianity, (Heb. xi. 1.) It is one of the fruits of the Spirit, and is accompanied by love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, temperance. Few things illustrate Christianity more profitably than a life of piety, sanctified temper, holy dispositions, frequent works of charity, faith, and love. These spread abroad a benign and hallowing influence, and constrain many to admirably say, "See how these Christians live." Such were the happy effects consequent on the lives of the pious Fletcher, Baxter, and others who closely walked with God. Some of our reformers, philanthropists, and self-denying missionaries, have been noble examples of the evidences and purposes of Christianity.

Consecration of life, enlightenment in God's word and will, love to our neighbour, to God's sanctuary and His people are each and all manifestations of Christianity. Unity in love, is one of the most sacred elements and one of the most substantial proofs of Christian feeling. Proper religious life is a life of love, of tenderness, compassion and forbearance; "God is love, he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." The all-redeeming love of Christ, and the gracious witness of the Spirit, illuminate, cheer, and direct the Christian's path. What would it signify, or what efficacy would our best works have if they were not sanctified. It is the Spirit of truth which sustains individuals in persecution, affliction, and trial: "His truth shall be thy shield and buckler." Christian fortitude will sustain the faithful, while he travels on his earthly pilgrimage. Possessing the spirit of Christ, gives success to individuals in their Christian enterprises. Whoever are partakers of the Gospel of Christ, are wishful that others should be partakers of the same grace and knowledge. When light and truth beam into the heart, they prompt to sacred duty, and "Thy kingdom come," is the prayer of the heart and life. Christianity of the soul, which is in such a state, also evidences itself by upholding the hands of God's servants, and by assisting them in their works of faith and labours of love. Zeal for the ambassadors of Christ manifests a sympathy towards the Redeemer's cause, and a knowledge of a world being dead in trespasses and sins. Christianity is active in those who possess and retain it, and it ever will be; hence it is always operating on the believer's mind, leading it to its highest good; it is also an effective system which will direct and influence men in the path of duty in spite of counteracting agencies; it seizes the conscience, and when the Holy Spirit accompanies its searchings, what earthly power can resist its progress. It is a divine agency, a spiritual element and power that is superior to all carnal, worldly influences and instruments.

When Christianity possesses the heart of an individual, what an instrumentality he is for usefulness; in the name of God he lives, and conquers, and he is enabled to exclaim, Life! life! eternal life! He knows that time is on the wing, carrying either a swift message of life unto life, or death unto death. Before the throne of God every action must be accounted for. Thought and action may be trifled with here, but before God a sentence is pronounced upon it. From well directed thought, under divine influence, springs our salvation. It is in right thought on the nature and character of God on which our belief is determined. The Christian religion brings things to the Scripture test, and listens as Jehovah speaks, "Be ye holy." That which relates to our closest interests we are most anxious to weigh, sanction, and compare thus with the soul, the immortal part of man; if he be right with God he thinks no pains too great, no labour too much to secure his immortal interests. He knows that the work of conversion is essential to his being happy in God, and that justification by faith, and sanctification through the power of the Holy Spirit are among his privileges, and all must enjoy these blessings before they can live in the enjoyment of Christian perfection, and be prepared to associate with the spirits of the just made perfect, what preceding laborious thought must have existed. I presume the enjoyment of the different degrees of glory depends on the different degrees of the saving knowledge of God and His grace, and to the distributing of that knowledge to the very utmost of our powers.

If eternal interests are our great objects of pursuit, there are many means for directing our thoughts thitherward, when we reflect on the mutability of existent things around us whose destiny is a sufficient emblem of our mortality, and of the necessary preparation for another changing scene. What is there in life, but teacheth us to be "wise and consider our latter end."

The design of Christianity is to place us beyond things temporal, and exalt us to things eternal, that we may "Set our affections on things above, not on things on the earth," that when Christ who is our life shall appear, we may also appear with Him in glory.

Christianity is one great evidence of a life to come, its hopes are blooming, full of immortality and eternal life. Thus it testifies to the world that joyful hope, those blissful anticipations and heavenly foretastes which are being revealed in Him. The unregenerate considers these things as visionary, enthusiastic, and beyond the sense of man to conceive, so absorbed are they in the concerns and pleasures of this world. Faith, repentance, and good works, must be thought of at a more convenient season. But alas, to many that convenient season never arrives. May the Most High help us to yield to the convictions of the Holy Spirit.

Again, Christianity is evidenced by the rich consolations of the Gospel, and an abiding assurance of Divine assistance for the awakening of fallen man, and of drawing him to Christ.

Trust in God is one great standard of the truth of Christianity. In this life we are subject to trial and disappointment; nothing can so effectually support us as the grace of God; how can we glorify God more than by a constant dependence on Him? "They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth for ever." A person that humbly depends on God will not be liable to fall into temptation, he will feel that his strength is weakness, without he has sufficiency in Christ, whose strength is made perfect in our weakness.

Those who trust in God feel a holy guardianship that screens them from the fiery darts of the wicked one, and from the besetments and allurements of the world. God has not only promised to be with us in trouble, but to deliver us. Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. The Lord not only ministers unto us His own presence, but His angels are ministering spirits. Those that live up to their privilege, what a hallowed influence encompasses them, and what honoured witnesses they are for Christ.

To be a faithful follower of the Saviour, is a high vocation. To be in the world yet not of the world, is a high attainment in the Divine life. Eminent piety is mostly accompanied with eminent zeal in God's service. Thus, such an individual will be a faithful worker in God's vineyard, whether he be a hewer of wood or a drawer of water, so that he may not lack in his service towards them who are without.

A living Christianity is a powerful principle which causes to stream forth a mighty influence among the children of men, turning the bias of their minds, leading them from the broad road of destruction, to the narrow path of peace, and joy, and heaven. Religion is a salutary principle that edifies, reproveth, directs, cheers, and revives. Its purposes are to enlighten the dark, to instruct the ignorant, to direct the wanderer, and to arouse the careless; these it seeks to bring to an acquaintance with God, with His precepts, His sanctuary, His people. It strives to unfold to the inquirer after salvation the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit, and to make known the pardoning love of God. These are great essentials in the communication of the revealed religion of God. "That the communication of thy faith may become effectual by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus."

I will bring these remarks to a close by the following anecdote:—

Locke spent the last fourteen years of his life in the study of the Bible, and he wrote, "The common place book of the Scriptures," which is an invaluable fruit of his Scripture studies. These facts, of themselves, give strong proof of the high estimation in which this profound thinker and acute metaphysician held the sacred Scriptures. He admired the wisdom and goodness of God in the plan of salvation which His word reveals; and it is said that when he thought on it he could not forbear crying out, "O! the depths of the riches, of the goodness, of the knowledge of God!" He was persuaded that men would be convinced of this by reading the Scriptures without prejudice, and he frequently exhorted those with whom he conversed to a serious study of these sacred writings.

A relative inquired of him, what was the shortest and surest way for a young gentleman to attain a true knowledge of the Christian religion. "Let him study," said the philosopher, "the Holy Scriptures, especially the New Testament; therein are contained the words of eternal life. It has God for its author, salvation for its end, and truth, without any mixture of error, for its matter. If we would be useful Christians, we must study the Bible; its precepts must be the constant rule of our life. May God help us to discharge our several duties faithfully and earnestly." "Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

3. A SOLDIER'S ADVICE TO HIS COMRADE.

A SOLDIER, addressing one of his comrades in arms, said:—"Are you afraid of the sneers and taunts of the barrack-room? Then you have not counted the cost of following your Captain. And one of his warnings perhaps you have forgotten, 'Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he comes in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.' Your evil habits of drinking and adultery are ruining you. Some of you are looking ten years older than you did only one year ago. What with bad habits, the punishment of pack-drill, extra parades, guard-rooms, imprisonments, &c., the smittings of conscience, and the troubles of mind, you are well nigh an instance of self-destruction.

"Come, brother comrade! be no longer afraid. The self-denial I wish you to practise will not be so difficult and irksome. It is not so hard to struggle against obstacles if prayerfully and manfully met. Give up your habits of drinking, and all other vices. There is nothing like striking at the root. Seek the Lord in earnest, and He will be found of you. His Spirit will guide and teach you. His grace will keep you in the path which leads to holiness and heaven—as well as strengthen and fortify you against the attacks of the enemy.

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. A Bible Dictionary; Being a comprehensive Digest of the History and Antiquities of the Hebrews and neighbouring nations; the Natural History, Geography, and Literature of the Sacred Writings, with reference to the latest researches. By the Rev. JAMES AUSTIN BASTOW. New Edition. London: Longman, Brown, Green, Longmans, and Roberts.

As this valuable work was passing through the press certain parts came under our review, and we did not fail to express the very favourable opinions we entertained of our author's production. Since the completion of the work the sentiments of critics and reviewers have been generally of a flattering character in reference to the research and ability manifested by the Author in this elaborate work; but while such has been the general character of the articles written on the "Bible Dictionary," there have been not a few thoughtful, experienced, judicious, and learned individuals who have maintained opinions not at all favourable to the orthodoxy of certain articles embodied in this volume.

As the author of the Dictionary is an esteemed minister in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and as the work is calculated to be very useful, if sound in theology, and as it might, on the other hand prove highly injurious, especially to junior preachers, if heterodox on subjects of vital importance, it was deemed advisable to subject the book to the careful perusal of a few brethren who should be desired to transmit their views to the Editor, and he was, after reading the remarks of his brethren, directed to prepare an article for insertion in our Magazine. Hence the rather lengthy notice which follows.

In our remarks we have used as much brevity as is compatible with a clear expression of our sentiments on the important subjects of which we have treated.

ATONEMENT. — On this subject Mr. Bastow says, p. 106 (new edition), "The primitive meaning of the word atonement was to set at one those who had been at variance; and in conformity with its formation it was pronounced at-one-ment. Hence the term properly designates not the means by which reconciliation is effected, but the reconciliation itself. It would thus seem that the death of Christ and the atonement of Christ are often erroneously employed as synonymous terms; whereas, in the Scriptures the one is represented as the material of which the other is made. So the Hebrew word Kaphar, rendered "to atone," in its primary meaning, signifies to cover sin, to hide, to atone by some expiatory act, by presenting the blood of the victim." Lev. xvii. 11. Our author adds, "If Christ by his death on the cross has made atonement for the world, it then follows that the world is at one with Him, and that sinners are reconciled even in a state of impenitence; otherwise atonement is made for the world, and yet sinners are not forgiven. Christ died for all sinners, but atones for none until they are truly penitent and believe on Him."

Into the philology of the word atonement, and the sentiments of our Author relative thereto, we do not wish at present to enter, but the theological deductions and doctrines as set forth under this term we can by no means receive as being in accordance with the Scriptures of truth.

We assert that Christ by the shedding of His blood made an atonement for all mankind, "by means of which reconciliation is effected between God and man," and until man becomes personally guilty, from personal transgression, he is saved through this atonement. In the making of an atonement under the Jewish dispensation three things were essential, the victim; the blood of the victim;—"for it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul;" Lev. xvii. 11; and the officiating priest, acting according to the Law of Moses.

In the great work under consideration Christ was the victim for the world's atonement. For this purpose the Father gave Him; "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son;" for this purpose "He gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity;" "Now, once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself;" "Christ was once offered;" "This man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sin, for ever sat down on the right hand of God; for by one offering He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified;" "Unto Him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father, to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

In Christ we have the sacrificial victim; in His blood, the atoning medium; in Himself, the high priest of our profession, who in the one sacrifice of himself atoned for a guilty world, including all mankind from the first offender to the last transgressor of Jehovah's righteous law.

Mr. Bastow says, "If Christ by His death on the cross has made atonement for the world, it then follows that the world is at one with Him."

On the doctrines contained in the preceding quotation, we further remark, that the world, was severed from God by the sin of Adam, and was atoned for and restored by Jesus Christ, "as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men to justification." Hence, through the atonement of Christ all children and other individuals who are not amenable for their moral conduct, dying in such state, are saved through the blood of Christ, and shall inherit eternal life. "He gave himself a ransom for all."

Such are the doctrines of the Scriptures, and such are the views which are held on these doctrines, by our best Methodist theologians, and such are the doctrines required to be taught by our ministers, and such are the sentiments in many of our hymns, as sung by hundreds of thousands who attend our ministry.

"His blood atoned for all our race,
And sprinkles now the throne of grace."

We close these remarks by an extract from Dr. Adam Clarke on the subject under consideration (see his comment on Lev. xvii.: "It is well worthy of being remarked that Christ not only died for sinners, but our redemption is everywhere attributed to his BLOOD, and the shedding of that blood; and that on the altar of the cross this might make an atonement for the lives and souls of men, he not only bowed his head, and gave up the ghost, but his side was opened, the pericardium and the heart evidently pierced, that the vital fluid might be poured out from the very seat of life, and that thus the blood, which is the life, should be poured out to make an atonement for the life of the soul."

ARK.—On this word our author holds certain ideas, which are not only novel, but some of which we deem decidedly dangerous in their tendency, as likely to shake the faith of not a few in the authenticity of the Sacred Scriptures.* We presume relative to the creatures preserved in the ark, the genera of such creatures only are to be understood as having occupied a place therein. To this conclusion we had come, when, on perusing Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary on the sixth chapter of Genesis, we read the following sentence: "It is a question whether in this account any but the different genera of animals necessary to be brought into the ark should be included." We could assign several reasons for entertaining the above sentiment, but the fact that, from a single family of the human race have sprung the diversified species of mankind, and that the same causes exist to a great extent for effecting that diversity in the brute as well as in the rational creation, we think we are not speaking at random in concluding that the genera were preserved, and not the species of the animal creation, at the time of the Deluge, and if so, the ark contained ample accommodation for all its occupants, although we believe that "male and female of all flesh," with an addition of the clean beasts and birds, were present therein. See Gen. vi., vii.

As the Ark was designed to preserve the lives of those creatures which could not ordinarily subsist in water, and, as far as we know, no Scripture will warrant any other conclusion, we are sorry that our author should think of a necessity for elementary and other accommodation for fishes, &c., and that to meet an emergency which never had an existence, aquatic animals and fishes, &c., are conceived to need providing with room in the ark, while in the deluge they would be in their own element. The statements and conclusions on this subject are not reliable.

Taking the common cubit as our standard of measurement, according to Dr. Hales, the ark would be of 42,413 tons burden, but some authorities claim a much larger tonnage for the general home of human and animal nature at the time of the Deluge; and if so, then we hesitate not in coming to the conclusion, that there might be representatives of all the creatures "that moved upon the earth" preserved with Noah and his family, according to the Scriptures.

Having expressed a few of our sentiments on the subject before us, we close our observations by stating that the statistics referred to on page 95 are indefensible, and from the unhappy tendency of the part referred to we think it ought to be expunged from the book. That to pursue such a course as is therein taken would lead to disastrous consequences in the interpretation of the oracles of Divine truth, and afford infidelity an advantage which we believe Mr. Bastow, as well as ourselves, would deeply deplore.

The mode of argumentation pursued by Mr. Bastow, when applied to the Scriptures, as in this article, is extremely dangerous. That the ancient philosophers pursued such a plan we admit; but we had hoped that, among philologists, exegetists, and metaphysicians of this day, it had been exploded. To adopt hypotheses that cannot be sustained, and then to accept or reject revelation only as it accords therewith is a very dangerous course to pursue.

Whether the flood referred to in the sixth and seventh chapters of Genesis was universal or partial we stop not now to ask, only the Scriptures warrant the opinion of a general deluge; and until something more tangible than what is adduced by our author be advanced, some people will think themselves well sustained in their sentiments that "all the high hills that were under the whole heavens were covered."

The following are among the remarks found in connection with this article: 1. The author of the "Dictionary" says that the ark "could scarcely have been capacious enough to hold the pairs of some animals, and the septuples of others, of all the species." High authorities think otherwise. The statistics of animals, &c., used well sustain this argument, while we presume most people will be incredulous relative to the numbers given by our author. 2. The species of mammalia, birds, insects, reptiles, amphibious animals, and fishes, &c., form a medley that we presume Jehovah never intended to exist together in the ark. What evidence have we that amphibious animals and fishes were ever designed to occupy a place in this floating home? 3. Because our author cannot conceive how the ark could contain this vast family, he is "irresistibly driven to the conclusion that the deluge was not absolutely universal, and that every species of animal could not possibly, nay, never was intended to find a home in the ark." We ask, should Divine revelation be subjected to such an objectionable test?

EXODUS.—In the article on the Exodus of Israel from Egypt, Mr. Bastow says:

"As the Scriptures speak, with the exception of one poetical passage (Pa. cxxxvi. 15,) of the destruction of Pharaoh's host in the Red Sea, rather than of Pharaoh himself, it would appear, that the impious monarch did not advance into the sea, and thus survived the ruin of his army." Several objections lie against this novel view, but we simply invite attention to the unsound and dangerous principle of interpretation here adopted, namely, that an important historic fact recorded in inspired poetry, unless corroborated by sober prose, is not to be regarded as a real fact, but merely as a poetic embellishment. If this principle of Scripture interpretation be admitted, how uncertain is the meaning of a large portion of the Old Testament, a considerable part of which is poetry? If all the facts recorded in the poetical portions, are to be regarded as figures of speech, or poetical embellishments, unless confirmed by some prosaic narrative, how shall we ascertain their import? Do they mean anything or nothing?

The theory of the north-east wind driving back the ebb tide and leaving the shallows bare in the Red sea to allow Israel to pass over, looks like German infidelity. This scheme does not agree with the views of Dr. A. Clarke on the subject. The Doctor has no violent N.E. wind continually blowing to drive out and keep out the sea. No shoals, no channels left dry by an ebb tide, &c. He thinks the place where the Israelites passed was about twelve miles across, and the water fourteen fathoms deep. To lift a broad and deep mass of water out of its bed and sustain it, not as two broad sheets of water, Mr. Bastow's theory, but as a wall on the right hand and on the left while Israel passed over, would be a real and stupendous miracle. Shoals in the Red Sea left dry by the joint influence of an ebb tide and a violent N.E. wind would be no miracle at all, but only somewhat like the sands on the beach, which are left bare by the receding sea. Mr. Bastow, however, cannot obtain much help from the ebb tide, if, as some authorities say, the Red Sea "is almost tideless."

GOD.—A part of the article on "God" must, we think, have been written in haste. "The term 'God,'" says the author, "is quite a different word from the Anglo-Saxon word 'god=good.' In the Icelandic Godi, whence perhaps 'God' signifies Supreme Magistrate." This is surely a singular mode of accounting for the etymology of our word God. Though Mr. Bastow admits that the word God, in the sense of good, is found in the Anglo-Saxon, from which, be it remembered, the greatest portion of our language is derived, he seeks for the meaning of our word God in the Icelandic term 'Godi.' This is, however, a matter of comparatively little import. There are far more objectionable sentences in the same article. Mr. Bastow admits that the Hebrew word Elohim, translated God, is in the plural form, though generally connected with a verb in the singular, but he denies that this is any proof of a plurality of persons in the Godhead. He explains the use of this plural form on the ground of what is frequently called, in Hebrew grammars, the plural of excellence or of majesty. But though some, perhaps most, eminent Hebrew scholars believe that the plural form of words is sometimes employed in the sense of the singular to denote excellence or majesty, yet this is not universally admitted, it being a disputed point. But should this point be conceded, does it follow that the rule applies when the term Elohim, referring to the Supreme Being, is connected with a singular verb? When it is considered that the term does sometimes occur in the singular form, and that when it is employed in the plural form in relation to false gods, it is mostly, if not always, to be understood in the plural, we may well pause before we relinquish the old argument for the Trinity derived from the plural form of the names of God being frequently used with singular verbs.

We do not, however, regard this argument as equal in weight and importance to that which is derived from the use of plural pronouns by the Divine Being, as in the following passages: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—Gen. i. 26. "The man is become as one of us."—Gen. iii. 22. "Let us go down, and there confound their language."—Gen. xi. 7. "Who will go for us?"—Isa. vi. 8. Here surely plurality of persons is indicated. How does Mr. Bastow deal with these passages? He disposes of them in a very summary and singular manner. "That pronouns" he says, "were used in a similar way, among the Oriental nations, seems to be somewhat certain: 'The letter which ye have sent unto us,' it is king Artaxerxes who says this; (Ezra iv. 18.) 'We will take the interpretation of it.'—Dan. ii. 36. These are the only examples which Mr. Bastow gives in support of his theory, except several of the passages which we have inserted above, which, strange enough, he cites for this purpose! One would have thought he would have tried to prove that the Oriental nations employed plural pronouns in the singular sense, from independent passages, and not from those adduced to prove the plurality of persons in the Godhead, which is a fair begging of the question. And what bearing on the point in dispute have the two passages he quotes from Ezra and Daniel? Truly little. Instead of being examples selected from the patriarchal ages, and from the Hebrew nation and language, to which the Book of Genesis belongs, from which most of our quotations are taken, they are taken from a heathen court, and belong to a period after the exile of the Jews to Babylon. Such examples as these can have no weight in the case before us; and we cannot but regret that Mr. Bastow should thus attempt to get rid of the argument derived from the passages we have quoted in favour of a plurality of persons in the Godhead.

MIRACLE.—Mr. Bastow says, "Miracles long to a superior order of things, to a superior world;" and again, "In that world miracles are not miracles, they belong to the course of nature." But where are the proofs in support of these assertions? To what world does Mr. Bastow allude? The Bible says "Miracles are a sign to them that believe not." But are the operations of natural laws signs to unbelievers? Can the laws of nature, as they operate on earth, open the eyes of the blind, give hearing to the deaf, magnify loaves, raise the dead, bestow the gift of tongues, &c., all in a moment? The illustrations stated by Mr. Bastow signally fail to accomplish his purpose. They are strongly fainting with neology, and powerfully calculated to shake the confidence of mankind in the wonderful working hand of God. Does Mr. Bastow know that the place where the Israelites passed through the Red Sea was, in its ordinary state, a shallow, and that the "strong east wind" continued to blow in the direction of the divided sea till all Israel had passed over? If so, how is it that the strong wind which lifted up and kept out the waters from the opened passage did not lift and sweep away the Israelites and all their cattle and baggage? The manner of treating the miracle which consumed the sacrifice of the prophet Elijah is not satisfactory. Will the laws of nature account for the concentration of the electric fluid and darting it down just when and where it was required to justify Elijah and to confound the prophets of Baal. Do these circumstances constitute no miracle? Are they merely an extraordinary collection of coincidences? We understand Mr. Bastow to mean so. By what natural law or agency was the rapid river Jordan divided before Joshua and all Israel at a time when Jordan overflowed its banks? there was no wind and shoals to do this. Such theological effects put forth as are manifested in this article may arise from a sincere desire to promote the truth of God, but we certainly do not think them well adapted to accomplish this object.

ORIGINAL SIN.—Our author says, "Original sin is not a thing, but the lack of a thing, it is the universal absence of original righteousness, and not the hereditary transmission of a quality positively vicious throughout the race," &c. St. Paul says, "By the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, that by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation." If infants are not contaminated by sin, they will need no purification, but will form an exception to the number of them who shall sing, unto Him that hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His own blood. The notion entertained by our author will not be found, we think, in accredited Methodist theology, nor is it supported by the Word of God.

THE RESURRECTION.—Mr. Bastow says, "All the particles of the body may be changed between the process of death and resurrection, and the body yet retain its identity." Where in the Scriptures of Divine truth do we find any support for the above sentiments? Surely not in the following passages, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth," &c. "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption," &c.

TEMPTATION.—Mr. Bastow says, "In the figurative costume of the Mosaic narration there is no evidence that Satan appeared to Eve, either as a serpent, or as an angel of light, or in any other form in the work of temptation." Adopting such a course as is herein pursued, what must be the consequences? Who will be prepared to read the Scriptures with confidence? To say the least, such a course is in many respects very unsafe.

THE TRINITY.—On this article there are several objectionable sentences, some of which, for the sake of brevity, we shall pass over. Towards the conclusion we meet with the following startling passage, "As to the Trinity, the Father is God as revealed in the works of creation, providence, and legislation; the Son is God in human flesh, the Divine Logos incarnate; the Holy Ghost is God the Sanctifier, who renovates the hearts of sinners and dwells in the hearts of believers. The personal distinctions of the Godhead consist in these developments, made in time, and made to intelligent and rational beings. Strictly considered, distinctive personality, according to this view, is not eternal, and from the nature of the case it cannot be, because it consists in developments of the Godhead to intelligent beings, and those developments could not be made before those beings had existence. In the Scriptures no more than three personal developments are spoken of, because our natural and moral wants require no more for our full alleviation and satisfaction." Here we have a revival of the Sabellian heresy which arose in the third century of the Christian era. "Sabellius taught," says Watson, in his Theological Institutes, "that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are only denominations of one hypostasis; in other words, that there is but one person in the Godhead, and that the Son and Word are virtues, emanations, or functions only; that, under the Old Testament, God delivered the law as Father; under the New, dwelt among men, or was incarnate as the Son, and descended on the apostles as the Spirit." Here is a substantial agreement at least between Mr. Bastow and Sabellius. The Sabellian heresy is nearly akin to Socinianism, and naturally and necessarily leads to it. So the history of Christian theology demonstrates, and we are persuaded that Mr. Bastow's language above quoted would not be intelligently read and believed without carrying most persons forward toward Unitarianism. The sooner Mr. Bastow corrects these serious errors the better. We should be glad to see his book freed from all its objectionable portions and become throughout what many parts of it are already—highly creditable to himself and to the community to which he belongs. In its present state some of our influential ministers and judicious friends cannot conscientiously recommend the work to our junior preachers. Let him purge it from its dangerous portions, that it may be without fear recommended to the whole community.

There are several other articles in connection with the respective headings which, in our judgment, need a careful revision,—those under Avenger, Creation, Flood, Judgment, Oracle, Providence, Sanctification, Star, Scripture, &c.

In closing this rather long article, we have very great pleasure in stating that we have received from the author of the "Bible Dictionary" the most frank assurance that "anything unsound, or against the vital doctrines of John Wesley and the Church of England, I shall be happy to alter, nay, I shall think it a duty and privilege to do so." If Mr. Bastow carry out what is here contemplated, we have much pleasure in saying that the "Bible Dictionary" will be one of the best we know of, and it will certainly have our warm recommendation.

We have only to add that if in any way our efforts, with those of our esteemed brethren, many of whose sentiments are incorporated with our own, shall in any measure promote the advancement of the great doctrines which Primitive Methodists inculcate, and render this valuable work more extensively useful to our own community especially, and to Bible students generally, we shall feel amply repaid for what to us has certainly been no pleasurable task.

2. Faith and its Fruits: a Funeral Discourse, on the occasion of the death of the Rev. Andrew Reed, D.D. By the Rev. T. W. AVELING. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster-row. Price 1s.

DR. A. REED was a man of superior ability, large-hearted, practically and profoundly Christian, and after being pastor of the church assembling in Wycliffe Chapel, Commercial-road, London, for half-a-century, he has left behind him a saviour which is as ointment poured forth. Mr. Aveling has furnished an excellent sermon, which will be read with much profit.

3. A Lecture on the Public Life and Character of Elizabeth Fry. By CHARLES GORDELIER, Secretary to the Trustees of the Elizabeth Fry Refuge. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster-row: Nisbet and Co., 21, Berner-street; A. W. Bennett, 5, Bishopsgate-street without; J. Coventry, Church-street, Hackney. 1862.

"This woman was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did." If a woman of the present century has merited the motto above, which is also placed at the head of the lecture, Elizabeth Fry was that woman. The lecture is pregnant with interest. We hope it will have a wide circulation.

4. England's Shame and England's Hope: An Essay on the Social and Moral condition of the People, with suggestions for their elevation and improvement. By T. CARTWRIGHT. London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co., Paternoster Row. Nottingham: Dearden and Son. 1862. By the united efforts of philanthropists and Christians much, very much, has been done to elevate the people of this country; indeed, enough has been accomplished to thoroughly stimulate well-directed efforts in the God-like enterprise. Mr. Cartwright is a practical man, and his essay is well adapted to aid in the good work which he evidently has so much at heart.

5. The Great Prophetic Question: Is the Millennium to be expected before the Second Advent of the Lord Jesus? A lecture, by THOMAS FREEMAN, B.D. London: Printed for the Author, by Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row. 1862. Price 6d.

THIS manual presents a calm consideration of a subject that is exciting increased attention in the church and in the world. The manner in which the author treats his subject is very creditable, and the manual is of a superior character, but we cannot endorse his sentiments relative to the second advent of Christ.

6. Has Sir Benjamin Brodie spoken the Truth about Homœopathy and its Practitioners? By J. HARMER SMITH, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., Member of the British Homœopathy Society; formerly Lecturer on Medical Jurisprudence at the Sheffield School of Medicine. Woolwich, S.E.: E. Ruddock, 40, Wellington-street; London: Henry James Tresidder, 17, Ave Maria-lane. Price 4d. WITHOUT entering into the merits of homœopathy or allopathy, we deem the lecture before us a valuable contribution to medical science, and we doubt not it will tend to advance the healing art as well as dispel certain prejudices against a system which at least merits a candid investigation.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

DISTRICT MEETINGS FOR 1862.

1. TUNSTALL.—Dear Editor,—It is a pleasing task to record what is really good, and especially so when that good relates to the souls of men and the glory of God. The whole of the business of this very large district was attended to with much honesty and frankness, yet, with the utmost harmony and good feeling. Each delegate seemed ready to do his best to serve the interests of the cause of his Divine Master, and to promote the welfare and comfort of every preacher throughout the district. It added much to the happiness of all present to find nearly every station in a state of health and prosperity.

The increase in the district for the year is 1,159. The trust estates throughout the district have been increased in number and value, and in some cases the debts have been reduced.

The examination of the young men for the ministry was interesting. The night on which the candidates related their Christian experience and call to the ministry was a season of mental and spiritual profit. The address delivered by Brother P. Pugh was to the point, and comprehended the great essential studies for young men in the ministry.

All the religious services were well-sustained, and attended with much Divine influence. The Sabbath was a high day; processions were formed in different parts of the circuit, which proceeded to the market-place, where Mr. T. Bateman delivered an encouraging address to a large concourse of people. Thence the consolidated procession moved to the camp ground. The preachers occupied three stands the whole of the day. The congregation in the afternoon was large. The sermons were short, pointed, plain, and powerful. Six love-feasts were held in the evening, and all of them were crowded. The speaking was excellent, and about thirty souls professed to find peace with God, through believing. The attention of Brother J. Graham, and the hospitality and kindness of the friends, were duly appreciated and gratefully acknowledged by the speakers at the platform meetings. We wish to make honourable mention of the kindness of the mayor, who granted us the use of the town hall and assembly rooms for our services, free of charge.

At the close of the meeting, the respective delegates returned home much refreshed in spirit and strengthened in fraternal affection.

JAMES PRITCHARD.

2. NOTTINGHAM.—The business in connection with the annual meeting of this district was commenced at Melton Mowbray, on Thursday afternoon, May 1st, 1862, when the financial position of the various chapels in the district was investigated; the result showed that, with a few exceptions, they were in a prosperous condition. This business, together with that of the preachers' fund, occupied the meeting until Friday evening, and the district meeting was opened on Saturday, at 6 A.M.

On examining the circuit reports it was found that there was an increase of 323 members for the year, but as Uttoxeter branch, with 125 members had been transferred to Tunstall district, the number of members was only 198 in advance of the number reported last year.

The meeting was pained to find that some of the stations had done nothing in support of the general chapel fund. The authorities of each station were written to, and they were urged to be attentive to the matter for the future.

Several candidates for probation and for the list of approved preachers were examined, and subsequently recommended to the district meeting. The public religious services were well attended, and as this was the first meeting of the kind ever held at Melton, much interest was manifested. Wesleyans and Independents, as well as our own people, were anxious to entertain the delegates, and though we were not able to furnish guests for all applicants, those who could be accommodated, and many who could not, manifested much kindness. The chapels of other denominations were thrown open to us, and homes, lodgings, and accommodations were freely offered, and we are glad to be able to state that the services held in the places thus offered, as well as those held in our own chapel, and in the open air were of a very satisfactory character. Sunday May 4th, was a good day: at 6 A.M. the chapel was well filled with attentive hearers, who listened to an earnest and feeling address, touching the serious visitations which had removed from our midst two of our most active and energetic ministers, viz., Rev. J. Brownson and W. Carthy. Many tears were shed, and a solemn awe rested on the whole assembly.

At 9 A.M. services were held in three different parts of the town, whence the several companies made their way to the market-place, and listened to an address, and then united in one body and proceeded to the camp ground, where the power of God was eminently manifested. The sermons were earnest, pointed, powerful appeals to the hearts of saints and sinners. In the afternoon from 3,000 to 4,000 persons listened to the word of life. Two love-feasts were held in the evening; the power of God was felt, and several sinners were converted.

Throughout the whole, a deep-toned seriousness was manifested, and the experience of the young men before referred to, the speeches at the public meetings, the unanimity of mind in the business transactions, and the thoroughly good influence felt in all the services, were very encouraging.

The Rev. W. M. Colles, M.A., presided at the temperance meeting.

WILLIAM WATTS.

3. HULL.—The services in connection with the sittings of this district were commenced on Thursday, May 1st, when a sermon was delivered to a large congregation in the Jubilee Chapel, by the Rev. T. Kendall.

On Friday morning, at 9 o'clock, the members of the Chapel Committee assembled in the Jubilee school-room. On examination it was found that, with the exception of a few small chapels in rural districts, the Connexional property was in a prosperous condition, debts amounting to £1,337 having been paid off during the year. A great number of title-deeds had been enrolled, and thus a large amount of property legally secured to the Connexion. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the members of the Preachers' Friendly Society met, and the utmost brotherly feeling prevailed. In the evening a temperance meeting was held in Sepulchre-street Chapel. Addresses were delivered by the Revs. T. Whittaker, R. Cheeseman, and J. Dawson. The chair was occupied by the Rev. C. Kendall.

On Saturday, at 6 A.M. the business of the district meeting was commenced. In the evening the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered in the Jubilee Chapel by Revs. J. Petty and T. Kendall. A very gracious influence pervaded the service.

On Sunday morning friends crowded into the town to help us in processioning the streets and to unite with us in imploring God's blessing. After an address had been delivered in St. Helen's-square, by the Rev. H. Knowles, a procession was formed, which moved to the camp ground, where multitudes listened to the word of life. In the afternoon the spectacle presented was very imposing, about 5,000 persons gathered around the preachers' stand. The starting tear, the excited countenance, and the fervent response, evidenced that the people were moved and melted. In the evening three love-feasts were held simultaneously. The two chapels and the Jubilee school-room, were crowded, and, best of all, we hope upwards of twenty souls were converted.

On Monday morning, at 6 o'clock, business was commenced. Three candidates for the ministry were examined and approved. In the evening a public meeting was held in the Jubilee Chapel. H. Hodge, Esq., occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. T. Whittaker, C. Kendall, H. Knowles, R. Cheeseman, and J. Dawson. Thanks were publicly tendered by the delegates to the friends who had kindly entertained them during the sittings of the district meeting, also to the chairman.

Tuesday morning found the delegates assembled again at 6 o'clock, ready for business, which was concluded by 3 o'clock in the afternoon. In the evening a sermon was preached in Sepulchre-street chapel by the Rev. T. Whittaker, and I believe the services have left behind them a savour that will long be remembered.

THOMAS GREENBURY.

4. SUNDERLAND.—Our district meeting commenced its sittings at South Shields, May 3rd, 1862. God has favoured this district with prosperity, during the past year, and the various sittings of the brethren have been characterised by general unanimity. We report 667 increase of members, for the year. Seven young men, after passing the usual examination, have been received on probation for the itinerancy. The Chapel Committee reported a reduction of chapel debts for the year amounting to £1,364 7s. 9d., while the sum of £1,197 13s. 6d. has been expended on improvements and alterations. Ten new chapels have been built at a cost of £5,861 10s. 4d., of which the sum of £2,568 8s. has been realized. Two other chapels have been erected, of which no report has yet been received. The public services were attended. The various speakers and preachers were favoured with liberty. God graciously imparted his Holy Spirit; and several souls were converted. The delegates from the various stations have returned home with refreshed spirits, after recording their heartfelt thankfulness for Divine mercies, and the kindness of our friends in this town. The services will be long remembered as times of refreshing from on high.

THOMAS SOUTHRON.

5. NORWICH.—Dear Editor,—The thirty-seventh annual meeting in connection with this district commenced on Thursday evening, May 1st, in the ancient city of Norwich. The religious services were commenced by R. Key, of Halesworth, who preached in Cowgate Street chapel, and many felt it good to be there. On Friday, May 2nd, W. Kirby, of Bury St. Edmund's, preached at six o'clock A.M., in Lakenham chapel, in which the business sittings were commenced at nine o'clock for the purpose of examining into the circumstances of our Connexional property within the district, and which were found to be very satisfactory, there having been twelve chapels erected, several new school rooms built, and upwards of £611 reduction in chapel debts during the year. In the evening, while the persons appointed were examining candidates for the ministry, sermons were preached and addresses delivered in various parts of the city by E. Blake, of Docking; W. Yeadon, of Colchester; W. H. Meadows, of Brandon; W. Rudd, of Ipswich; and W. Dolman, of North Walsham. On Saturday morning, at five o'clock, preparatory to opening the full district meeting, G. Dawson, of Aylsham, preached an appropriate sermon. H. Gunns was chairman, and R. Howchin the secretary, of the district meeting. The reports from the various circuits were examined, and on the whole were found satisfactory, the increase being 325. In the evening of the same day an interesting meeting was held in Lakenham chapel, when the four candidates for our ministry gave clear accounts of their conversion to God, religious experience, and call to the work. Sunday morning opened with favourable weather, and the friends of truth from the surrounding neighbourhoods were seen at an early hour hastening to our old city, and at six o'clock A.M., R. Howchin, of Yarmouth, preached, after which the Lord's supper was administered by R. Key, R. Howchin, W. Yeadon, and the writer, and throughout the service all seemed to feel an unusual measure of heavenly influence. At nine o'clock many friends assembled at Lakenham, Cowgate, and St. Benedict's chapels, and processioned thence through various parts of the city towards the Market Place, where the processions united, and after a short address and prayer, the whole company moved in order to the Chapel Field, (which is a beautifully spacious green, surrounded with majestic Elms, within the old city walls,) where three preaching stands were occupied to a good purpose. In the evening four love-feasts were held, one in each chapel, and one in Lakenham school-room, and in the prayer meetings which followed several individuals bore testimony that the Lord of hosts was present to save sinners and sanctify believers. On Monday morning, after a sermon by W. Rudderham had been listened to, the preachers were stationed, and though each delegate appeared to feel a deep interest for the circuit he represented, yet there was an anxiety manifested for the general good of the district. In the evening a missionary meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, where upwards of one thousand persons were present; the chairman and speakers realized much divine aid, and the audience was enthusiastic. After a vote of thanks for the loan of the hall, and to the friends who had entertained the delegates, the multitude withdrew. Thus closed the public services of this annual gathering. May much fruit be seen in eternity. H. GUNNS.

6. MANCHESTER.—Our district meeting was held at Northwich. The religious services were commenced by a sermon from the Rev. D. Tuton, in the open air at half-past six on Friday evening, the 2nd of May. The Rev. W. Inman preached in John Street chapel at half-past seven the same evening. On Saturday evening a large meeting was held in the same place to advocate the temperance cause; John Thompson, Esq., occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Morton, T. Doody, W. Inman, D. Tuton, G. Stansfield, and W. Antliff. On Sabbath morning, at six o'clock, the Rev. W. Antliff preached in the chapel, after which the Revs. J. Osocroft and G. Stansfield administered the Lord's supper. Two open air services were held at half-past nine, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. T. Jones, S. Bennett, M. Dickenson, G. Smith, &c., and two processions sang to the chapel, when the Rev. J. Garner preached at half-past ten. At one o'clock the friends formed two processions, and marched singing to the camp ground, where several thousands assembled. But the weather proved wet, and to some extent interfered with the success of the services. Sermons were preached, however, by Messrs. J. Morton, J. Ball, T. Meredith, and D. Tuton. In the evening very excellent love-feasts were held in our chapel and school; also in the Wesleyan school, kindly lent for the occasion. Several souls obtained salvation by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. In the forenoon of the Sabbath the Rev. J. Oscroft supplied the Wesleyan pulpit, and the Rev. G. Stansfield that of the United Methodist Free Church; and in the evening the Rev. W. Antliff preached in the former and the Rev. J. Garner in the latter. The congregations were large and attentive, and much good is believed to have been done. On Monday evening the services were closed with a missionary meeting, addressed by Messrs. J. Garner, G. Stansfield, and C. Jackson. Two young men, who have passed through their four years' probation, have been examined and approved by this district meeting. They gave an account of their conversion and call to the ministry, and were afterwards suitably addressed on the importance of the ministerial work, and the qualifications requisite to an efficient discharge of its various duties, by the General Committee Delegate, the Rev. W. Antliff. Mr. J. L. Buckley, of Stockport, occupied the chair, and Mr. S. Rains, of Manchester, the vice-chair. Votes of thanks were accorded to Mr. Antliff for his able address, and an expression of regret that he was likely soon to leave the district; and also a vote of thanks was passed to the chairman for his services; and the services, which throughout had been of an interesting and profitable character, were brought to a close with votes of thanks to the Northwich friends for their kindness to the delegates. May they and their guests meet in heaven!

W. ANTLIFF.

7. BRINKWORTH. The services in connection with the meeting of the delegates from the several Circuits in this district, were commenced at Banbury, on May 1st, in the evening, when a sermon was preached by the Rev. T. Powell. Sermons were also preached in the chapel at five o'clock in the morning, and in different parts of the town in the open air at six in the evening, to orderly and attentive congregations. On Friday evening, May 2nd, a service was conducted by the Rev. S. Turner, commencing at seven o'clock, when four junior brethren related their Christian experience, and call to the ministry. At eight o'clock a temperance meeting was held in the Town Hall, which was presided over by Mr. R. Brazier, and was numerously attended.

On Saturday evening, May 3rd, the Lord's supper was administered after a sermon by the Rev. E. Rawlings. Many of our friends had been anxiously desiring a fine day for the camp-meeting, and on the morning of the Sabbath, we were delighted with the weather. At nine o'clock, a large number of ministers, delegates, friends, and others assembled in front of the Town Hall, and listened to a graphic description of the "Better Country, and the Way to It," by Rev. H. Yates. The procession then moved to the Britannia cricket ground, when earnest sermons were delivered and the morning service was closed by a sermon to the children. At half-past one the procession started from Banbury Cross; the singing was good, and attracted a vast concourse of people. During the afternoon it was thought there were not less than four thousand persons present, many of whom paid good attention to the appeals which were made to them. In the evening, two love-feasts were held, one in the chapel the other in the central corn-exchange. The speaking was lively, some spoke of their attainments in sanctification, and there was rejoining over the conversion of sinners to God. On Monday evening, a public meeting was held, and the chapel was crowded, the Rev. S. Turner occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by several speakers. The delegates were gratified with the kindness they had received from the society at Banbury, and by the hospitality which had been shown to them during their stay.

On Tuesday evening the religious services were brought to a close by a sermon from the Rev. H. Heys.

Great harmony prevailed during the transaction of the district business. Most of the stations reported progress, we have an addition of 244 to our ranks, several of the chapel debts have been reduced, our schools are prosperous, and peace is in our borders. Praise the Lord.

HENRY PLATT.

8. LEEDS.—The seventeenth annual meeting of the Leeds district was held in the city of York. The various sittings of the meeting were characterized throughout by brotherly love. Most of the stations were found to be in a healthy condition. The net increase for the year is 351. The meeting was gratified with the improvement of the financial state of chapel property, debts having been reduced to the amount of £2,314 13s. Nine new chapels have been opened, and the sum of £1,426 13s. 5d. has been realized towards their erection.

Eight young men, two of whom were candidates for the list of approved preachers, and six were candidates for the ministry, passed through a close examination in theology, grammar, logic and rhetoric.

The public services commenced on Thursday evening, May 1st, when the Rev. J. Harvey preached. On Friday evening the Rev. T. Newell held forth the word of life. On Saturday evening, the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by the Revs. R. Smith and H. Leigh. On Sunday a camp meeting was held in St. George's field, and was numerously attended, there being not fewer than from 5000 to 6000 persons present. Lovefeasts were held in the evening, in the chapel and school-room, the cloud of the divine glory rested upon the church, and several sinners professed to be converted.

On Monday evening, an interesting jubilee meeting was held in the chapel, under the presidency of Alderman James Meek. The Revs. J. F. Parish and H. Harris related their Christian experience and call to the ministry, after which addresses were given by the Revs. R. Smith, T. Newell, J. Harvey, W. Jackson and J. Simpson. During the meeting, H. J. McCulloch, Esq., presented £50, and the chairman £100, to the jubilee fund. The several delegates returned to their stations highly delighted with their visit to York.

CHARLES SMITH.

9. BRISTOL.—The annual meeting of this district commenced its sittings at Hereford, on May 3rd, 1862. The greatest unanimity prevailed among the brethren throughout the whole of the meeting. The honour of God, and the good of the circuits appeared to be kept in view in the transacting all parts of the business. From the circuit report it was found that the stations were in a healthy and improving state, some of them enjoying a rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit. We have not a decrease on any station, but have the pleasure of reporting a district increase of 651 members for the year. To God be all the glory. Religious services were held in the chapel at five o'clock in the morning and also in the evening of each day. Open air meetings were conducted in several parts of the city, the whole of which were well attended, and much Divine influence was felt by the people assembled. The young men who are finishing their probation, underwent an examination, preparatory to their being received into the list of approved preachers, stated their Christian experience, and call to the ministry, before a large and attentive congregation, and received a very suitable charge from one of the senior brethren. May they be faithful in the great work of the ministry to which they have been publicly set apart.

Sunday was a great day; in the morning at eight o'clock, processions were formed and moved through the principal streets of the city, to the High town, where a sermon was preached, after which the procession re-formed and proceeded to Widemarsh common, at which place the camp-meeting was held. From two to three thousand persons were present in the afternoon, who behaved with the greatest decorum. The sermons were short, plain and powerful. The prayer-meetings were well supported and mighty, and the weather was all we could desire. Praise the Lord! In the evening while the love-feast was going on in the chapel, some of the brethren held a meeting out of doors as there were large numbers who could not get into the chapel. At both of these services, the Lord was with his people of a truth, hard hearts were broken down in penitence, and loud cries for mercy were heard from many a tongue, nor was the cry in vain. He who is "mighty to save" came to the help of the needy, and made them to rejoice in his favour. Before the day closed, we took the names of above thirty persons, who professed to have found peace through believing in Jesus. May they be faithful unto death. A public platform meeting on Monday night, brought our district services to a close. It was good to be there. We believe the visit of the brethren will be long and profitably remembered. That the Connexion may become increasingly prosperous is the earnest prayer of

JOHN BUTCHER.

10. LONDON.—Services in connection with this district were commenced at Newport, Isle of Wight, May 1st, 1862. In the evening a sermon was preached in the open air by the Rev. T. Penrose, after which a discourse was delivered in the chapel by the Rev. G. Lamb, which was listened to by an interested and attentive audience. On Friday morning sermons were preached at six o'clock by the Revs. J. Hall and J. H. J. Beckhurst; and in the evening in the open air by the Revs. C. S. Willis and L. Mainprize, after which a temperance meeting was held in the Queen's Rooms. On Saturday morning a sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Nixon, and in the evening a meeting was held in our chapel, when the Revs. C. S. Willis, J. Young, E. Masterman, J. Hall, and S. Hart, related their religious experience, call to the ministry, &c., and they were afterwards addressed by the Rev. W. Harland. This service was succeeded by the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's supper. On Sunday morning at seven o'clock the Rev. M. Lupton preached in our chapel, and at nine o'clock the delegates met in the chapel, and proceeded to the Town Hall, where a sermon was preached by the Rev. S. Loxton, after which the procession moved on to the camp ground, but the weather proving unfavourable, the people returned to the chapel, in which, services were conducted morning and afternoon. At five o'clock a sermon was preached at the Drinking Fountain by the Rev. W. Harland, after which a love-feast was held in the chapel, but hundreds of people being unable to obtain admission, preaching was resumed in the open air by the Rev. G. Austin and others; a mighty influence rested on the love-feast, and in the prayer meeting following several souls sought and obtained pardon. Sermons were also preached during the day by several of the delegates, who occupied the pulpits of nearly all the chapels in the town. On Monday a tea and public meeting were held in the Queen's Rooms; the former was attended by about 260 persons, who partook of an ample repast gratuitously provided by the friends. The public meeting was presided over by the Rev. M. Lupton, and addressed by Messrs. T. Huckle, M. Wilson, T. Penrose, G. Lamb, and W. Harland. The Ryde chapel choir kindly favoured us with their services on the occasion, and materially helped to sustain the interest of the meeting. The business of the district was attended to with much harmony and good feeling. The successes during the past year are of a pleasing character, the reports shewing an increase of members for the circuits of 182, and for the missions 676, while the chapel debts have been reduced £1,199 4s. 5d. We desire to make grateful mention of the kindness evinced by those friends (many of whom are connected with the several churches in the town) who have entertained the delegates, and we feel persuaded the delegates will long cherish pleasing reminiscences of the Isle of Wight.

WORK OF GOD.

OLDHAM CIRCUIT.—Dear Brother Harland,—I am directed by our quarterly board to send you a few lines respecting the progress of the work of God in this station.

It is very gratifying to be able to state that during the five years of my residence here the number of members has been nearly doubled, there being about 550 when I entered the station, and nearly 1050 now. We report 220 increase this year. Our finances have improved in proportion to our increase in members, the ordinary income being £40 per quarter five years ago, and upwards of £70 now. We had then two travelling preachers, and now four. Then we were one moderate station, and now on the point of being made into two. During the same time we have built two new chapels, at a cost of £1,500, and bought land for three more, which it is intended to proceed with as soon as trade shall revive. The debts on our chapels have been reduced some hundreds of pounds, our missionary revenue has greatly increased, and so has our circulation of connexional literature, for we found twenty-six subscribers for the large magazines, but now we have a hundred, and the small one has risen from about a hundred to two hundred and fifty. The seats in our Oldham chapel are nearly all let, and the average attendance has risen from about two hundred to six hundred, and the other places have a corresponding improvement to note. Hollinwood society, when I came, was composed of eighteen persons, and now it numbers a hundred and four. At nearly every place in the station the improvement has been heart-cheering. The progress has been gradual, and almost uninterrupted. Some extra labour has been resorted to, and many of our excellent brethren have laboured very zealously to promote the present state of prosperity. And my colleagues deserve great credit for their untiring zeal in the blessed work—those who are now with me and those who have removed. General harmony has characterized our official meetings, and with here and there a little drawback, we have had all along great cause for devout thanksgiving to Almighty

God. I am by no means disposed to claim for myself the honour of the good that has been accomplished, but to the united and persevering efforts of the brethren generally, under God, much of our success is cheerfully attributed. I hope and pray that the next five years may be as prosperous here as the past, and that when I shall be elsewhere I may often hear of the growth of my old station, and that the blessed work of God is still going forward gloriously. Praise ye the Lord. W. ANTLIFF.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

DRIFFIELD CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We have recently closed a course of very interesting and profitable missionary services in this station. On Sunday, April 13th, 1862, preparatory sermons were preached at Driffeld, Cranswick, Kilham, and Nafferton, by the Revs. J. North of Tadcaster, J. Whittaker of Hornsea, P. Newton, and J. Hodgson.

Public meetings were held at the above-named places on the four following days,—Addressed by Messrs. J. North, T. Whittaker, T. Giles, and J. Hodgson; Brother William Bowes occupied the chair at Cranswick, Brother E. Tyas at Driffeld, Brother H. Jordan at Kilham, and Brother G. G. Cherry at Nafferton. We were also assisted at the Driffeld meeting by the Revs. W. Mitchell (Independent), and E. F. Monk (Baptist), and the Rev. J. Scruton, helped us at Cranswick.

The meetings were of a very profitable character, and a fresh impetus has been given to the missionary enterprise at each of these places. Our deputation, J. North and J. Whittaker, did us good service.

The following sums were raised, —Cranswick, £13 12s. 2d.; Driffeld, £28 1s.; Kilham, £3 12s.; and Nafferton, £3 4s. 1d.;—Total, £48 9s. 3d., being £1 12s. 11d. above what was raised at the same places last year.

That the speakers, collectors, donors, and hearers may meet in heaven is the fervent prayer of

THOMAS GILES.

SEASONABLE AID AND SPECIAL EFFORTS.

1. BARNSELEY.—Dear Brother Harland,—As supplementary to the account which appeared in our Magazine for November of last year, you will be happy to learn that we have recently received another donation of £25 from Mr. Henry Wombwell, a gentleman in India. At the time of his canvass for the reduction of the debt on our chapel and schools at Barnsley, Mr. S. Hockaday wrote to Sir G. Wombwell, of Newburgh Park (late high sheriff of the county of York), supposing him to be the owner of the Wombwell estate, near this town; Sir George, with the courtesy and kindness of a true English gentleman, wrote back, informing Mr. Hockaday that the Wombwell estate was not his property, as he had supposed, but the property of his brother Henry, to whom he would be happy to forward the letter in question, believing that his brother would feel a pleasure in aiding such an object. Mr. Henry, the gentleman in India, on receiving Mr. Hockaday's letter, sent instructions to Sir George for £25 to be paid as his donation, with an intimation that he would probably do something more on his return to England.

Now, sir, such generosity from British gentlemen demands our best thanks, and is worthy of record in our Connexional organ.

GEORGE NORMANDALE.

2. ALFORD CIRCUIT. — Dear Brother Harland,—The Alford Circuit authorities wish gratefully to acknowledge their gratitude to the trustees of the late Mr. Allison, of Sutton-in-the-Marsh, for the kind and faithful manner in which they have discharged their duties in the payment of the legacy left by the said Mr. Allison to the Primitive Methodist Connexion. The greater part of the money was received on November 30th, 1861, by Messrs. Maltby and Byron. And as the last conference kindly granted that a portion of it should be used for important purposes in the Alford Circuit, we deem it right to say that the Alford Chapel debt has been reduced £37, and the debt on the Mablethorpe Chapel £29. £10 have also been paid to the gentleman who lost that sum in the sale of the Markby chapel. £9 have also been granted to the trustees of Trusthorpe Chapel, and the friends there having raised about £6 more, have put a new boarded floor, new pews, &c., into the chapel.

£10 have also been granted to the trustees of Mumby-cum-Chapel, with that sum and a good effort of their own, a new boarded floor is being put into the chapel, the pewing renovated, and other improvements effected. £10 have also been granted to the trustees of Mablethorpe chapel, to pay off back interest, to enrol the deed, and to repair the chapel, making a total of £105, and leaving a balance in hand of £145 towards the erection of a preacher's house at Alford, as soon as a suitable site of land can be secured.

We would here also acknowledge the kind and prompt attention of Messrs. Byron and Maltby, in assisting the writer and others in the settlement of the above. What a great deal of good many of our wealthy friends might do in lowering chapel debts, building circuit houses, sending missionaries abroad, &c.

I would just say that the trustees of the Ingoldmells Chapel are also putting in a new floor, and otherwise renovating their chapel with the surplus money belonging to it, so that most of the chapels in this circuit will be comfortable. I hope the station will rise in spiritual matters and become powerful. We have had about eighty souls converted during the past year.

JOHN BURROUGHS.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARIES.

1. DEAL AND DOVER MISSION.—Dear Editor,—Services in connection with the second anniversary of our Charlton Chapel were celebrated on Sunday and Monday, March 30th and 31st, 1862. On Sunday three sermons were preached by the Rev. T. Penrose, of London. On Monday a tea was provided, when upwards of one hundred persons partook of the sumptuous repast. After tea a public meeting was held in the chapel; the chair was occupied by J. Diggle, Esq., and addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. B. Hart (Independent), R. Chapman (Wesleyan), T. Penrose, and the writer. The services passed off well, and we trust good was done. I have much pleasure in saying that the proceeds amounted to £6 7s.  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. Glory be to God. Amen.

JOHN COOPER.

2. SWANSEA.—Dear Editor,—On Sunday April 20th, 1862, we celebrated the first anniversary of our new chapel. We were graciously refreshed under three sermons preached by the Rev. M. Wilson of Reading, and three souls professed to obtain salvation at the prayer meeting held after the sermon. On Monday 21st Mr. Wilson delivered a lecture in the Town Hall: subject "The Flood and the Ark." J. T. Jenkin, Esq., Mayor, presided on the occasion, and referred with much sympathy and good feeling, to our difficulties, disappointments, and perseverance attendant on the erection of our "elegant new chapel," calling the special attention of the public to our loss by fire of the old chapel in Tower Lane on the 13th of March last. The fire originated in an adjoining workshop. Unfortunately for us, the Chapel was not insured, and a debt at the time on it was £124. The loss to the society is about £200. But it will we hope induce sympathy in those to whom this necessity compels us to appeal for help.

On Monday and the two following days we held our Bazaar, (on behalf of our new chapel). In this effort our ladies were found to have displayed much taste, and evinced great industry in the number of elegant and useful articles placed on the stalls. But owing to commercial depression, and the holding of another Bazaar in the town at the same time, our sale was rather limited. The amount realized exceeds £40, leaving an unsold stock of more than £20 to be disposed of as soon as practicable. This sum added to the £333 previously raised, more than meets the one third required by rule. To all who have helped in this enterprize, we tender our best thanks, especially, to the Sabbath school children, for their very great industry in penny gatherings, which amounted to £6 10s.

G. DOBSON.

3. EAST KNOWLE, MOTCOMBE CIRCUIT.—On Good Friday and Easter Sunday, April 18th and 20th, 1862, our chapel anniversary at East Knowle Green was celebrated. On the former day about 160 persons partook of an excellent tea. Subsequently a public meeting was held, under the presidency of the Rev. T. Powell, and addressed by Messrs. W. Gray, M. Lear, W. Blandford, and T. Kench. On Sunday Mr. Powell preached two sermons to good congregations. At each service much of the Divine presence was realized. The proceeds of the anniversary are £8 7s.  $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

T. KENCH.

4. COVENTRY.—Dear Editor,—We held our Coventry chapel anniversary May 4th, 1862, when two sermons were preached by Dr. Barlow. Considering the stagnation of trade, and the poverty of many of our people, we think the collections were creditable, amounting to £3 3s., being an advance on the sum realized last year. I am happy to add that six souls were made happy in the Lord Jesus Christ after the evening service. The Lord has been blessing his own word and crowning the labours of His servants on this station for the last twenty weeks, in the salvation of souls.

WILLIAM PEACEFULL.

OBITUARY.

1. Died at Spilsby, Nov. 18th, 1861, FANNY, daughter of William and Sarah BAILEY, aged twenty-three. During 1859, she became the subject of affliction; she then "thought on her ways, and turned her feet to God's testimonies." Afterwards she became a member of our church, of which she was an ornament till death. When health permitted her to attend the public ordinances, they were her delight. Her sanctified affection for her Christian associates was very strong, and her fellowship with them was sweet. When laid aside by affliction, her absence from the house of God was a great trial to her, yet she did not murmur, but knowing that it was the will of her heavenly Father, she with patient and cheerful resignation drank the cup of suffering and trial. When visited by the ministers and members of the church, their visits were gratefully received, and her countenance beaming with holy joy, bespoke the serenity and happiness which she felt. Her conversation indicated the clearness of her views of divine mercy, her simple and assured trust in the Lord Jesus, and the preciousness of the salvation which, as a believer in Him, she enjoyed. Though conscious that her end was approaching, she knew no fear; grounded and settled on Christ, her heart was fixed. Her last days and hours were mostly spent in speaking and singing of heaven, in exhorting her relations to meet her in heaven, and in earnest prayer for their conversion. To her most intimate companions, when taking their farewell of her, she spoke of the preciousness of Jesus in terms of singular richness and sweetness. A lovely flower, she was blooming under the shade of bodily suffering; now plucked by the hand of death, and planted in the shadeless and eternal sunlight of her Saviour's presence and glory. May we meet her in heaven.

GEORGE WEST.

2. MRS. SARAH FARR, of the Murdy, Cwm Circuit, departed this life November 26th, 1861, aged 40 years, leaving a husband and six children to mourn their loss. Our departed sister was of respectable parentage and connexions in life, she being a lineal descendant of the late Walter Marsh, Esq., who was a popular and influential magistrate in this neighbourhood. We are aware that her earthly connexions did not exempt her from the depravity of human nature, nor cause her to appear otherwise than a sinner before God; this she felt, acknowledged, deplored, repented of, and she found pardon through faith in Christ Jesus. During the last twenty years of her life, we believe she had a predilection for the Primitive Methodists, although she stood aloof from them till within about four years of her death. About that time she was enabled to rejoice in the God of her salvation; but through inattention to the Christian duties that devolved upon her, she did not long maintain that happy state. We are thankful, however, to say that during her illness—consumption—which was of long continuance, she regained more than she had lost; her natural disposition was subdued, her carnal mind at last conquered, and grace was strikingly triumphant. Soon after her connexion with our people, the society and congregation at Lower Meascood wished to build a chapel, and in their extremity Mr. Farr, the husband of the deceased, kindly offered to give a plot of land for a chapel site. It was accepted, and there stands a neat, commodious, and substantial chapel, with which are connected a respectable society and a day school, and the chapel is debtless. In this chapel our departed sister took a great interest, and considering the delicate state of her health, she exerted herself very much, and was also kind to the cause in other ways. During her confinement to her room, she was visited by several friends, but more especially by brother Jones, who visited her frequently, and who found her in a very happy state of mind. The fear of death was entirely removed, and her prospects were bright and cheering. In this happy state she bade adieu to sublunary objects. May the bereaved husband and children never forget they have another attraction to the skies.

J. GWILLIM.

3. Perished at sea, on the 2nd of November, 1861, JOHN WILSON, of South Shields. The sea-going mariner may leave his dearest friends at home, and start on his voyage, cherishing the fondest hopes of shortly returning to greet, and to be greeted by, his loved ones, but he knows not "what a day may bring forth." These remarks are strikingly illustrated in the unexpected death of Mr. John Wilson.

Brother Wilson attended the house of God on Thursday evening, October 31st, 1861, and on Friday, November 1st, about noon, sailed from Shields for London, with a fair wind, but during the following night a tremendous gale swept along the Durham and Yorkshire coasts, and lashed the ocean into fury, so that its angry surges made graves for many tempest-tossed sailors. The barque "Perseverance," of which Mr. Wilson had been captain for seventeen years, being unable to weather the storm, is supposed to have foundered between Flamborough Head and the Humber, early on the morning of the 2nd of November. In this heavy and sudden calamity, eleven individuals found a watery grave. Many are cut off as suddenly as the master of the ill-fated vessel "Perseverance," but few are better prepared to meet the "King of Terrors" on the open seas.

John Wilson was the son of Thomas and Jane Wilson, of Scarborough, at which place the subject of our remarks was born in 1808. His parents were church-going people, but John, in his boyhood, chose to attend the Baptist chapel, and being religiously impressed, he joined the choir of that place of worship. We are not aware that he was ever a member of the Baptist church, but he cherished religious emotions, and resolved to be good, and to do good. He was sober and industrious from his youth up. He served seven years' apprenticeship as a shipwright, with Messrs. Tindall, of Scarborough, and continued in their employ for about thirty-eight years; this servitude, under the same employers, speaks well for the departed.

About three years ago our departed friend united with the Primitive Methodists, meeting in Sutton-street chapel, London, and two years since he united with the same denomination at South Shields. He met in class both in London and at Shields when opportunities presented themselves, and if we are not misinformed, he held seats in both Sutton-street chapel and in our Glebe sanctuary, South Shields, and he always paid his seat rents. He did not desire that his religion should cost him little or nothing. He possessed vital godliness, and tried to show his gratitude by his offerings at the altar of Christ. He was a living epistle, observed and read by living men. Moral excellence did not exempt him from a grave in the open sea; there his mortal remains repose, and may repose, until, in compliance with the irresistible demand of Jesus, "the greedy sea shall yield her dead."

The "Perseverance" reached not her destined port, but the enfranchised soul of the saint would enter the haven sought and found. A widow and seven children are left to mourn the loss of an affectionate husband, and a kind and attentive father. May they meet him in heaven. Amen.

P. CLARKE.

4. Died, at South Shields, on the 18th of November, 1861, MARGARET WALKER, aged sixty-eight years. Religion is always the same, but human experience of its vitality and power differs widely, and human natural temperaments contribute very largely to the delightful variations found in the Christian life. Every Christian believer has the same Divine faith within him, but the Divine faith is not so influential on one mind as upon another, simply because all minds are not equally enlightened, sincere, and earnest. Religion is a Divine life, a life, too, which influences to a larger or smaller extent every follower of Christ.

In 1821, being the twenty-eighth year of her age, Margaret Walker was awakened, converted, and united with the Wesleyan Methodists at South Shields, and continued a member with that society for three years, when she joined the Primitive Methodists, and she continued a member of our society at South Shields till death. She lived a quiet and consistent life. There was nothing flashy about her saintly experience; hers was a meek and quiet spirit. There was no mystery surrounding her every-day life—it was readable. She was one of heaven's nobility, honoured with the avowal, "She is always the same." An admission this coming from her acquaintances, and implying a Divine harmony between the life and the Bible. Nothing could be more strikingly manifested than her ardent attachment to the house of God. In spirit she "served the Lord day and night in his temple." She was not one of the multitude of professing Christians, who, when judgment begins at the house of God, they will not be found there. Our departed sister often attended the house of the Lord when very unfit to attend; in fact, she has often attended, when, after service, she had to be led home.

Being of a delicate constitution, her life was emphatically a life of suffering; yet she patiently endured affliction, knowing that the sufferings of the present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. She suffered, trusting in the living God. In her last affliction, her sufferings were often very excruciating, and her oft-repeated prayer was, "Lord, help me."

A few days before her death, the writer of this obituary enquired "Are you happy?" Her reply was prompt, "Very happy." He again asked, "Do you rely on Christ alone for acceptance with God?" Her answer was ready,—

"Other refuge have I none, Hangs my helpless soul on Him."

Again the question was put, "Do you hope to enter heaven?" Her reply was calm and confident, "I am only waiting till the Master calls." And thus this blood-purified soul passed to the Paradise of God.

P. CLARKE.

5. PETER GREEN BARRON was born at Bradley, Silsden Circuit, October 14th 1841. When age and circumstances would admit, he was sent to our Sunday-school at the village in which he was born, and subsequently, when his parents removed to Eastburn, he went to the Sabbath-school at this place.

As his father was a local-preacher and his mother an Israelite indeed, Peter's mind was powerfully impressed with the importance of Christianity, the blessed and benign influence of religion was manifested at home amid the varied toils, anxieties, and difficulties of every-day life, consequently he seldom indulged in common vices; nevertheless, he was convinced that before he could please his heavenly Father he must experience a change of heart. A revival broke out at Eastburn in the winter of 1857, and Peter was among the first who obtained a new heart.

After his conversion his greatest ambition was to be a real Christian, and a useful member of society. When about eighteen years of age, he became a teacher in the Sabbath school, and—

"The Sunday-school was his delight."

He was also a total abstinence, and a member of the Band of Hope.

He paid some attention to the cultivation of his mind, as the writings he has left behind testify. He was also very regular at and devout in the public service of the sanctuary. Nor was he negligent of his closet duties. Consumption, for eight months, confined him at home. His parents tried all available means for his benefit, but all efforts proved futile. The writer occasionally visited him during his protracted affliction, and always found him confidently trusting in God and happy in the Saviour, and no wonder, for his time was principally spent in poring over the sacred pages, and in communion with his heart and heaven.

As the day of his death approached, he was most earnest in exhorting his companions in religion to endure to the end, and he was also faithful in warning his unconverted kinsfolk to flee from the wrath to come.

On the 21st of November, 1861, without a murmur or a groan, he sweetly expired in the arms of Jesus, in the twenty-first year of his age.

A. WATKINSON.

6. ANN KNAGGS, the beloved wife of Peter Knaggs, farmer, Wetwang Field, Driffield circuit, departed this life November 30th, 1861, in the seventy-fifth year of her age, and in the forty-first year of her Christian pilgrimage. Mrs. Knaggs was born at Lund, and by her parents she was induced to attend the Established Church. In the summer of 1820, the Primitive Methodists commenced preaching at Driffield, and the late John Hewson made his way to Wetwang, to preach the gospel of Christ. Through his labours she was awakened to a deep sense of her lost state, and she became an earnest seeker of salvation, but she did not obtain pardon till 1821, when, as John Oxtoby was labouring to promote a revival of religion, Sister Knaggs, among others, was enabled to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ unto salvation. She at once joined our society. She loved the house of prayer, but the people of her choice had no chapel at that time; but she did not rest till the desire of her heart was obtained by the erection of a chapel; on May 1st, 1824, the chapel was opened for public worship by Mr. Thomas Cook.

At that time she rejoiced much in the Lord. Her attendance at the means of grace was regular, her place at the class-meetings was always occupied. For the thirty years she met in my class I do not know that she was ever absent. Her experience was always clear; she always felt that God, for Christ's sake, had pardoned her sins, and her soul rejoiced in hope through our Lord Jesus Christ. In zeal she excelled many. Preaching services and prayer meetings were to her soul seasons of refreshing. In proof that she loved the gates of Zion more than ease at home, in thirty-three years of her Christian life she walked at least 10,000 miles to hear the word of God,* and to join in the services of the sanctuary. In her closet devotions she was regular and importunate. Her kindness to the preachers of the gospel will long be remembered. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Knaggs welcomed to their home both itinerant and local preachers. Her last affliction, which was a cancer near her breast, was endured with much patience and resignation to the will of God. For some time she was able to ride to the means of grace, and hopes were entertained by her family and the church of her recovery, but her affliction had taken deep root, and as her weakness increased, she seemed to be ripening for glory. In my visits to her house I always found her trusting in God. Upon her soul there rested a deep sense of the Redeemer's presence.

In May, 1861, it became manifest that her earthly house was dissolving, but her soul was strong in the Lord, thirsting *She resided a mile from the chapel.

for the salvation of her family and for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom throughout the world. Sunday, November the 24th, I spent the afternoon in her presence, and the room was as the gate of heaven to our souls. She rejoiced in the prospect of her future rest at the right hand of God. On Friday, November 29th, I found her too weak to sing much. Her last request was for prayer. I and her granddaughter, who is a pious woman and member of our society, knelt by her side and prayed, and while we were praying, the glory of God overshadowed us, and in a few hours her spirit entered into rest.

May her husband and family meet her in the kingdom of God. Amen.

GEORGE BULLOCK.

7. Died, at Cumberworth, Alford Circuit, December 7th, 1861, RICHARD COLLINS, aged sixty-seven years. Our departed brother had been the subject of saving grace for nearly thirty years. In the early days of Primitive Methodism in this part, he was brought to God, in a love-feast at Hogthorpe, on a Christmas day. He immediately joined the society, and continued a consistent member until removed to the better world. For some years he was a prayer leader, and for many years he was an assistant class-leader, a trustee for one of our chapels, and his house was frequently a home for one of our preachers. His example was good. He was a man of much prayer and strong faith. About two years and a half before his death, a neat Connexional chapel was erected in the village where he resided. With it he was much pleased.

I visited him frequently during the last eighteen months, when I always found him cheerful, and though very feeble, yet he delighted to talk about former days and the work of God, and he contributed cheerfully to the support of the cause, and often regretted that he could not give silver at the collections as in former days, when he could work. I saw him about four days before he died, and I found him all right, patiently awaiting the Master's call. His leader was with him when he exchanged mortality for life, and says his end was peace.

May his widow and family be Divinely sustained, and may we meet him in heaven.—Amen. JOHN BURROUGHS.

8. ANN, the wife of Philip WHITEHEAD, was born at Berwick-on-Tweed, November 11th, 1799, and died at Burnopfield, December 2nd, 1861. Her parents being members of a Presbyterian church, she received such an education and religious training as is generally given to the young people of that persuasion, which frequently has the high commendation of imparting to them a warm attachment to the Bible, and an intimate acquaintance with its contents. At the age of fifteen she applied for membership in the church of her fathers, and after answering the usual questions she was admitted, and allowed to sit down at the table of the Lord. But according to her own statement she was still a stranger to saving grace. In that state she continued to the fortieth year of her age, at which time the family came to reside at Pearsey-Main, where she heard a full, free, and present salvation preached by the Primitive Methodists. The word was with the demonstration of the Spirit and power. She was convinced of sin, and while the subject of Divine chastening, she laid hold of salvation, by faith in the Redeemer, and felt her sins were forgiven.

On her recovery to health, she joined the Primitive Methodist Society at Pearsey-Main, and from that day till the time she quitted this vale of tears, she maintained a steady, upright, onward Christian course. Like too many of her class, she was very much tossed from place to place by the varying employment of her husband, but, wherever her lot was cast, she sought out the people of God, and identified herself with them.

Some of the most sunny days of her Christian life were spent in the Shotley Bridge Circuit. At Causey Row, she enjoyed "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Her house was at the bottom of a deep glen, and was frequented by the servants of God. She had a closet and a family altar there, and besides these she might often be seen wending her way to a favourite spot in a solitary part of the glen, where, beneath a projecting rock, she was often heard pouring out her soul in prayer to God. An aged pilgrim at this time used to pay his daily visits to a favourite tree on the side of the hill in the same neighbourhood for the same purpose, and not unfrequently, while the voice of the one was rising above the murmurings of the stream below, the fervent prayers of the other were heard rising from the side of the tree, and ascending on the wings of faith and love to heaven, on behalf of his family, his neighbours, the church, and the world.

The prayer of faith cannot fail. Since the death of that good man, the whole of his family have been brought to God.

The house of God and the means of grace were Sister Whitehead's delight. She attended all the means of grace as long as she had strength to do so, and was in the habit of inviting others to attend, when an opportunity presented itself. She invited Mr. W. Reed to attend a preaching service; the word proved the power of God to his salvation; and has resulted in the opening of a preaching place, and the formation of a society at Burnopfield. Her last illness was protracted. Having come to reside at Burnopfield, she was near the means of grace, and attended till her feebleness prevented her, and where she enjoyed the kind attention and prayers of the ministers and members of the society to the last. Her prospects of future glory were cheering. When I visited her, I found her with her "lamp trimmed and her light burning, waiting for the Bridegroom," and I came away, leaving her joyful in the Holy Ghost.

A short time before her death she wished to be removed into a room that was empty, and which was above the place where we preached, that she might die there. She was gratified at this, and the services that were held below afforded her unspeakable pleasure. During a service which was held about three hours before she died, she was filled to overflowing, and exclaimed, "Bless the Lord! This is the victory!" At the close of the meeting, she wished the preacher and others to visit her. During prayer, she gave vent to the pent-up fire of her own heart, and it rose to the throne of God in praise and love.

She had a severe attack of pain, which continued for some time, but when she got ease she praised the Lord for the means by which it was secured, and said to Sister Reed, in her own peculiar way, "I would not like to go away in a storm; I would like to have a calm day to go away in." She had her wish. The storm was now over. She fell into a short sleep, from which she only awoke to praise God with her latest breath, and die. RALPH SHIELDS.

9. JAMES MONAGHAN, the subject of the following remarks, was born in the County Tyrone, Ireland, A.D. 1840, and he emigrated with his parents when he was eleven years of age, to Paisley, in Scotland, where he continued to reside till he exchanged mortality for eternal life, on the 13th of December, 1861, in the 21st year of his age. The earlier part of his pilgrimage was characterised by filial obedience to parental authority, and reverence for the Lord's day. The latter part of his life was distinguished by an unreserved consecration of himself to God, as a living sacrifice. While in Ireland he attended the English Church, but on his arrival in Paisley he entered the Primitive Methodist Sabbath school as a pupil, and continued steadily to progress until he became a teacher, in which vocation he faithfully laboured for eight years. Although a constant and an attentive hearer in God's house he remained destitute of saving grace, and it was not until within eighteen months of his decease that he felt himself to be a miserable sinner. Then with deep contrition of spirit he cast himself upon the world's atonement. From that time he devoted himself to the service of God, and was appointed a prayer leader and afterwards an assistant class-leader, which offices he continued satisfactorily to discharge until his last illness. In prayer he was importunate, indicating, "I will not let Thee go except Thou bless me." In the prayer meetings he took an active part, neither the fatiguing duties of the day, nor the inclemency of the weather deterred him from the path of duty nor induced him to sit at ease in Zion. Often in those meetings, with a heart flowing with love to the Saviour, he would rapturously burst forth into singing—

"My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear," &c.

He endured several afflictions, the last of which seems to have been a preparatory ordeal to nerve him to bear his approaching sufferings. During this trial he exemplified the life of a Christian. He was restored to his wonted good health only to be again visited ten months afterwards by an accident so severe as to defy all medical aid. On the day preceding his death he was visited by the Rev. Joseph Armstrong, who spoke pointedly to him of his present enjoyments and future hopes, when he replied, "All is well."

While we have given this cursory sketch of Brother Monaghan's death we are ready to say that the ways of God are inscrutable and mysterious. Here we behold a young man, having scarcely attained the meridian of life, alike useful in the social and family circles, and before whom in the womb of futurity appeared a longer life of prosperity and happiness, by a sudden dispensation of God's providence heralded to put his house in order, for he should die and not live. Why the Lord severed the domestic prop on whom, with others, leaned for support an aged father and mother; why he took away this pillar in the church, are queries, the solution of which would be as vain as impossible. We rest assured, however, that He who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind, transplanted the exotic to bloom with increased beauty in eternal glory. E. M. K.

10. MRS. SARAH COLEY, the eldest daughter of the late John and Frances Richards, was born at Besley, September 25th, 1795, and died at Hasburgh, Brierley Hill Circuit. She was brought up to industrious habits, and at an early age she left home for service, where she gained the confidence of her employers, being honest, industrious, and clean in her habits, and very peaceful. At an early age, she was the subject of religious impressions, gradually yielding her heart to God. Her path was that of the just, which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Mrs. Coley's married life was attended with much sorrow and bereavement, her husband was suddenly called away by death about seventeen years after their marriage, leaving her with eight children; her only surviving son also became the subject of a long affliction, which ended in death, and a married daughter was called from earth to heaven. Her eldest daughter who was a great help to her, was seized with a stroke, which rendered useless her right arm. Amidst these trials Mrs. Coley trusted in God, and He granted her consolation and support under all her bereavements.

Her leader states that she was seldom absent from her class, unless from some unavoidable cause, and not withstanding her limited means she cheerfully and liberally rendered pecuniary aid to the cause of God, and her house became a home for the ambassadors of the cross whom she cheerfully entertained to the best of her ability. She was a meek Christian. She had been in a weak state for some time prior to her death, but was confined to her bed for about a month. She was patient and submissive to her heavenly Father's will, and was often repeating certain promises of God. The visits of pious people delighted her much, and she entreated all her children most affectionately to begin to serve the Lord, indeed she recommended religion to all as the one thing needful. A short time before her death, she said, "I shall not be here long, but the sting of death is gone," and soon after she fell asleep in Jesus, on the morning of the 7th December, 1861, in the sixty-seventh year her age, having been a member of our society about twenty-four years.

JOSEPH HULSTON.

11. THOMAS MARTIN ALLEN, the subject of this sketch, was born at Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, in August, 1801. When in his teens he removed to King's Lynn. Prior to his conversion he was dissolute and addicted to drunkenness. On one occasion, when drinking with two young men of dissipated habits, the house in which they were revelling, narrowly escaped being set on fire through their intemperance. Subsequently he was induced to "consider his ways," and he abandoned the intoxicating cup. About twenty-three years ago he was converted under our ministry.

Shortly after his conversion he became a teacher in our North End School at Lynn. This was through life his chosen sphere of holy toil. Occasionally he officiated as an assistant class-leader. As a fisherman, the sea was the scene of his almost daily toil. While at the helm, he often turned over the pages of his Bible and Hymn Book. Twice amid the perils of the sea, he experienced the signal interposition of Divine Providence, in the preservation of his life from a watery grave.

Wherever he went on coasting voyages, he interested himself in the visitation of our Sabbath Schools. Thus, his humble life had a fixed moral purpose. He was well known at Hartlepool and Sunderland in our schools. In the early part of November, 1861, he made his last voyage in the "Undaunted," a small vessel which was his own property. He sailed from Hartlepool for Lynn, laden with coals. On Friday, November 1st, his wife, received a letter from him happily expressive of the peaceful and heavenly state of his mind. That letter was his last. He closed with some favorite lines—

"We'll weather the storm, it won't be long—We'll anchor by and by."

His-class leader, Miss A. Lock, says, that the last class-meeting which he attended was a season of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord." He led the meeting with great pathos and power. In addressing his leader, he said, "We have travelled long together both through fair and stormy weather, but if I should land first, I'll hail you welcome into the harbour of eternal repose."

Shortly afterwards he safely reached the emerald "Land of life." On Saturday, November 2nd, 1861, when homeward bound, the pitiless storm burst upon his frail bark. All day he tacked and toiled in the fury of the howling blast. Night gloomed on him, wild and terrible, the mad waves surged around his lonely ocean path, like trooping wolves ready to devour. For dear life he bravely but vainly struggled. Within about seventeen miles from Lynn, in the stormy night his vessel drove on the Snettisham beach, and became a total wreck, and all on board perished, brother Allen, his son about twelve years of age, and a man who usually sailed with him. The bodies were recovered. The countenance of Captain Allen wore a sweet expression, the poor boy was found with his hands clasped. Our departed brother has left a widow and six helpless children. May God protect them.

"The clouds arose in a giant shape,
And the wind with a piercing gust,
Dark as a murderer's mask of crime,
And sharp as a poniard thrust,
Morning came with a tale too true,
As sad as tale could be:
A homeward-bound went down with her crew,
'Twas a wild night on the sea!"

12. MR. JAMES BLACKWELL of Whitebough, Derbyshire, Bradwell Circuit, was born June 19th, 1799. In due time he was apprenticed to a paper maker at Abbots Langley, Hertfordshire, at the expiration of which term he travelled from place to place, and saw much of men and things, and unhappily became a lover of strong drink, and was subject for years to the degradation and, at times, to the privations which drunkenness often brings. It will soon be twenty years since he became a teetotaler, from which time his temporal affairs have been much improved, but he remained a stranger to saving grace till a recent date, when through affliction he was brought to see his need of Christ. A library in connexion with our Whitebough school had long been wanted. Some of our people who knew the interest our friend took in books, mentioned the matter to him; he at once entered into it with all his heart, and such was his zeal and tact in getting money and books, that he has left a well selected library of nearly 500 volumes as a monument of his energy. Early in 1860, he joined our society of which his bereaved widow has long been a member, and such was his happy respectful manner of conducting himself, that he soon gained the general good will of our people. In the Sabbath school too he was a great favorite, and the loss of him is felt deeply; to him the teachers and scholars always had access, and they found him a warmhearted friend. Being a man of industry and good common sense he won the esteem and confidence of his employers, one of whom (though not connected with our community) knowing that we had a mortgage of £100 on our chapel, generously proposed to raise £25, on condition that our friend tried to get the remainder, after considering the subject and getting the sanction of the trustees and Circuit, he entered on this great undertaking." At his request I went to a distant town on a begging excursion with him, when he seemed quite elated and said by the blessing of God he intended to manage his project by May 1862. He was wont to say "It is a good cause, sir, it is an honour to be engaged in it, and what a blessing it will be when our chapel is free from debt. I believe the public will help us, I shall not be in a hurry, but shall carry out the plans I have laid down; you see the people put confidence in me and what a thing it would be to abuse their confidence. I owe all my spiritual good to that place, and considering the good I have received I will do what I can for it." On this point I had no doubt, for such was his agreeable manner, skill, and perseverance, that difficulties vanished before him; few working men with his limited education had a more respectful and gentlemanly bearing. His last Sabbath was spent very actively and happily at public worship, when he requested our people to pray for God's blessing on his begging enterprise; on going home he said "I have enjoyed the prayer meeting much, it was the best I have had." Having obtained upwards of twenty pounds towards the chapel debt, he on the day prior to his death put it in the savings bank, and after consulting with his wife about the best way of carrying out the Christmas tea-meeting at our chapel, he retired to rest to be ready for his employment at 4 p.m. but "Boast not thyself of to-morrow for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." "One dieth in his full strength being wholly at ease and quiet." On being called to resume his labour all was still, and when his partner entered the chamber she suspected he was fainting or in a fit, but after calling a neighbour in and using some unavailing efforts to rouse him, the sad truth that she was a widow became evident. He seems to have had a painless removal. How sudden! On the morning of December 6th, 1861, in good health and spirits, in the afternoon numbered with the dead. How mysterious! A family bereft in a moment, without the least warning, of one whom they might well be proud. A society called to mourn the loss of a brother greatly beloved and in the height of his usefulness, but "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth him good." Since we believe while:—

"Mortals cry, 'A man is dead,' Angels sing, 'A child is born.'"

May this sad loss be sanctified to the spiritual gain of his family and our society.

13. Died at Rethall, Ludlow Circuit, December 4th, 1861, SARAH LUCAS, aged sixty-four years. Our departed sister was convinced of sin when quite young, but did not obtain a change of heart until she was about thirty-six years of age. This change took place at a prayer-meeting held by our people at Balaam's-heath. She united with our society and continued a member until her death. I visited her about an hour and a half before she died and found her looking to the Saviour, and waiting for the coming of her Lord. Prayer and singing were her delight, and on the Sabbath before her death, she seemed to be more than ever in earnest in praying for her family, the church, and the world. Her prayers for her family were not in vain, for some, it is believed, have gone to heaven, and others are on the way. O may they go on and meet her in glory. She was unable to meet in her class for two years, but now, thank God, she unites with the church of the first-born above. Our church has lost in her a consistent and venerable member, her children a watchful mother, and the world a shining light.

WILLIAM DAVIES.

14. JOHN LONGLY was born at Sandwich, near Ramsgate, Kent, May 10th, 1803, and died in triumph at Ramsgate, December 16th, 1861. From youth he was remarkable for his love of truth, and for his good morality. He was employed thirty years in the Customs. As a public servant he was faithful, as a parent kind, as a neighbour peaceable. Our deceased brother was a regular attendant on the Wesleyan ministry for many years, and was convinced of his need of salvation, but he lived without a change of heart until March or April, 1860, when he was induced to attend our chapel at Ramsgate, and under a sermon preached by the Rev. J. Fleetwood, his conviction was deepened, and while attending his duties at the Custom-house, one night soon after he was determined not to retire to rest until he had obtained pardon. He then cast his trembling soul on Jesus, and in a moment he felt the pardoning love of God shed abroad in his heart, and he shouted aloud the praise of God. At once he united with our society, and continued a consistent member till his death. His affliction was long, and at times the enemy of his soul harassed him much respecting his family, &c., but he triumphed through Jesus. I visited him frequently, and always found him ripening for eternal life. His last words were those of holy confidence and triumph, assuring his wife, children, and visitors, that all was right. He exhorted them all to meet him in heaven. He sang aloud till within three quarters of an hour of his death—

"I do love Jesus; because he first lov'd me," &c.

That his widow, children, the writer, and reader may meet him in heaven is the prayer of

J. BENDLE.

15. WILLIAM BRAME TUBBY, of Tottenham and Enfield Branch, died in the full assurance of faith, November 25th, 1861, aged seventy-seven years. He was converted about forty-eight years ago, at three o'clock in the morning, while he was praying in his own room. Christian friendship formed in youth, endeared by coincidence of sentiments and long habits of intimate union, is a delightful and inestimable privilege; it sheds lustre on our pilgrim state, and strews the thorny path of life with flowers.

The subject of this obituary was the honoured instrument in the hands of God in the conversion of the writer. The upright, steady, and pious conduct of our deceased friend produced the most salutary effect upon my mind. He reproved, admonished, and exhorted me in such affectionate terms that my prejudice gave way, and I esteemed him as the best man I ever knew. He having arranged to attend the first Primitive Methodist camp-meeting held in London, near New Gravel Lane, Shadwell, May, 1823, kindly invited me to accompany him. Thinking that I might be amused with something novel, I readily agreed to do so, and God in mercy broke my hard heart that day, and soon after converted my soul. He was himself, at that time, a Wesleyan, but thought I should do right to join the Primitives, which I did forthwith. O that I could find language that would adequately convey the feelings of my heart. Praise, eternal praise to God for having brought me under the influence of the godly W. B. Tubby. He had his trials, but he never gave way under them. His soul was calm under the approving smiles of heaven. He walked with God. He loved to converse on religion, and declared himself a pilgrim and a stranger here, looking for an inheritance beyond "the swellings of Jordan." Deeply imbibing the spirit of the doctrines which he loved and advocated, he seemed constantly to breathe forth love to God and good-will to mankind. His widow and family cannot but feel their loss to be irreparable. They may comfort themselves, however, in the firm hope that he has gained admittance into that rest, that society, that bliss, and is now engaged in those employments for which he was so happily prepared, and for which he was almost constantly longing, panting, and pleading.

RICHARD HOWCHIN.

16. MRS. EATCH was born at Lincoln, in 1811, and died at Bramcote, Ilkeston Circuit, December 20th, 1861.

Our departed friend was in her childhood regularly taken to the Church of England by her parents, and religious impressions were made on her mind at a very early period of her life. These impressions deepened as she grew up, till, under the ministry of the Independents at Nottingham, she was settled in her conviction of the need and advantages of religion, of her misery and danger as a fallen and disobedient creature, and that Christ alone could give her rest. Notwithstanding, she did not possess peace nor enter into rest.

About seven years ago she began to attend our ministry, and always showed a readiness to promote the interests of the cause. Still she lived without experimental religion; but about twelve months since her health began to fail, and she saw the necessity of obtaining religion at once.

About three months before she died, while the late Mr. Carthy was praying with her, in her own room, she found the "pearl of great price," and has since been enabled to rejoice in God her Saviour.

Her husband one day, just before her death, observing a smile upon her countenance while her body was in pain, remarked that she had a little comfort. "A little!" she replied, "I have a deal;" and in that comfortable state she expired.

J. WENN.

17. MARGARET HODGSON was born at Black Dean, near St. John's Chapel, Weardale, March 11th, 1795, and died at Castleside, Shotley Bridge Circuit, December 7th, 1861. Her parents were pious, and taught her the great principles of religion, and her youthful conduct was generally circumspect. But there is an inner life as well as an outer form of Christianity. She sought the former and found it, and in 1826 she became a member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and continued such to the day of her death.

In 1848 she located at Castleside, and with her husband joined our society there. In the same year her husband died in the faith and went to his reward; she has now joined him, and so shall they be ever with the Lord.

Her last illness, which continued for seven months, was often very painful, but she bore it with great resignation. When visited by the ministers and friends, she was always ready to give an answer concerning the hope that was in her. She was on the Rock of Ages.

On December 7th she was very weak, but her confidence in God was unshaken, and about eight o'clock in the evening she sweetly and serenely fell asleep in Jesus, having been a member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion thirty-five years.

RALPH SHIELDS.

18. HARRIET STRETCH, the subject of this obituary, was born May 23rd, 1825, at The Hough, Sandbach Circuit. She was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth at a Primitive Methodist camp meeting love-feast, and she continued a steady member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion till she left this vale of tears. Consumption removed her from amongst us. During her affliction she would have been thankful if she could have been spared a few years longer for the sake of her husband and children, but it pleased the wise Disposer of all events to take her to Himself, and through the grace of God she was enabled to give up her family into the Lord's hands. In her affliction she enjoyed much of the presence of the Lord. The last time her medical attendant called to see her she told him she was waiting for the Lord to call her to Himself. Her husband wished to have preaching in his house on his wife's account; the time was appointed; brother C. Smith, her leader, being requested, he gave a short exhortation. A good influence attended the word, and sister Stretch appeared to be much blessed and encouraged to trust in the Lord, and at a prayer meeting a short time afterwards she enjoyed much of the presence of God; but for her throat, which at times was very sore, and from which she suffered much, often preventing her from exerting herself as she would have wished, she thought that she could have shouted louder than anyone. When talking about her departure, she told her husband that she should like to be able to raise her hand, and she was divinely enabled to do so till she breathed her last. When death approached, and while her husband was holding her in his arms, he asked her if all was well; she replied "Yes, Christ is precious." She has left a husband, with five children, to lament their loss. She departed this life December 15th, 1861, in the 36th year of her age. Thus died this Christian, who was one of the excellent of the earth.

C. P. SMITH.

19. Died at Flegg Burgh, Great Yarmouth Circuit, Dec. 14th, 1861, E. ISABEL HALE, aged seventy-two years. From early childhood her life was strictly moral, and arriving at womanhood she became a constant attendant at the Wesleyan chapel, Filby; but as soon as our people visited this locality, she came to our preaching, and eventually united with our infant society. Her first ticket, which she carefully preserved, bears the date of 1836. She was a happy Christian, enjoying a consciousness of the Divine approval, and she was raised to transport and almost uninterrupted joy. Her peace flowed as a river. The trials and afflictions, common to travellers in this wilderness, seldom marred or disturbed the sweet repose of her happy spirit. She lived in hope, trusting in the Lord. She was a constant attendant at God's house, and in many instances when the society was low she has been found there alone with her God.

The last meeting she attended was on August 11th, being the camp meeting, and in the evening at the love-feast she spoke, feeling it her duty to do so whenever she had an opportunity. On October 6th, while engaged in heavenly contemplations, her happy soul was filled to the brim, and she shouted aloud, "Glory to God!" till all in the room felt the holy influence: that was indeed a memorable day, and it produced a salutary effect on the minds of her family. From that time her life gradually wasted. The last Sabbath I saw her she gave evidence of her meekness for glory, waiting in submission till her change should come. The day previous to her death the clergyman of the Established Church visited her, and on his leaving she said, "May we meet in glory," to which he replied, "The Lord grant we may, Mrs. Hales," and though in the possession of his usual health then, he only survived her a single week. A merciful providence has removed them both from this "vale of tears" to meet, we doubt not, in glory. May her family and the writer participate in the same bliss when this transitory scene is over. Amen.

WILLIAM RUDDERHAM.

20. PHILIP, son of John and Ann BALDWIN, was born at Collington, Bromyard Mission, Herefordshire, October 24th, 1813, and departed this life at the same place January 1st, 1862. He was very moral in his deportment from his youth. At what date his conversion to God took place I am unable to state, but it did take place—of this he gave evidence by his holy walk and conduct. On the Primitive Methodist ministers visiting Collington about 1835, his parents opened their house for preaching, and the Ark of the Lord found a resting place until 1849, when a chapel was erected.

By looking over his class tickets I find he joined the infant cause and received his first ticket November, 1837, and remained an honourable member to the day of his death. Of the religious life of our departed brother it may be said he was a good man; he loved the house of God, preaching, prayer meetings, and class meetings were wells of salvation to his happy soul while crossing the desert to the land of promise. His liberality was manifested in the support he rendered to the cause of God, and in providing a comfortable home for his aged parents, although he was only an agricultural labourer.

His last illness was of short duration. How blessed to be ready! Mr. Joseph Herring visited him and found him wholly resting on the Saviour; in that happy state he fell asleep. He has stripped off the robes of mortality, exchanged death for life, afflictions for health, the wilderness for Canaan, and has now joined the blood-washed in glory.

JOSEPH HALL.

21. MARY ANN SOWTER, the subject of this notice, was the daughter of pious parents, members of our Connexion, who had been brought to a knowledge of the truth through the labours of Brothers King and Herod, about forty years ago, when they travelled in this part of the country, now known as Louth Circuit. After their conversion to God, they opened their house for the preaching of the word of life at Theddlethorp, and many sinners were converted to God.

Sister Sowter was the eighth child of a family of thirteen. Her morals, while young, were watched over with prayerful interest. In early life she was amiable, much beloved, and very industrious. About thirteen years ago she obtained pardoning mercy in our chapel at her native village, and kept steadily pursuing her heavenward course, to the end of her earthly career. Her attachment to God's house was strong and permanent. She did say, "I love the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth." Her religion was not fitful, but steady. Her experience was an enlarged enjoyment of God's grace, and humble dependence on the Saviour for eternal life.

About nine years ago she was united in marriage to him who now mourns his loss. As a wife she was amiable, a keeper at home, diligent in business, and a kind and peaceable neighbour. About twelve weeks before her death she was confined of her fifth child, and did not fully recover her former health, but still hoped to rally till within a few days of her departure. She bore her affliction with patience and resignation to the Divine will. Still she had a strong attachment to her little ones, and said, if the Lord should spare her she should be thankful. One night, when suffering much pain, she exclaimed, "What must I do?" A good sister at once replied, "The Lord will help you; He will not lay more upon you than you are able to bear; and He will give you grace according to your day." At once Mrs. Sowter exclaimed, "He will help me—He does help me!" On the day before her death she was enabled to give up her husband and children into the hands of the Lord, and she felt loose from earth, and ready for the Lord's will. A pious Wesleyan visited her the day before her death, and inquired about the state of her mind and meetness for death. She answered with promptness and confidence, God was with her, and her hope of heaven was bright and clear. She quitted earth for heaven on the morning of December 15th, 1861, at North Somercotes, in the thirtieth year of her age. She has left behind a kind husband and five children. The youngest has, since her departure, been removed by death, and now lies with its mother till the morning of the resurrection.

JAMES CALVIN.

22. JANE JOSEPH was born in London in 1790, on the 17th of February, and died at Reading, January 1st, 1862. She was the daughter of a widowed mother. Her father died a short time before she was born, leaving her mother to struggle with poverty and trial, so that Jane had to share in many privations. She was sent to service at an early age, and it was her privilege to obtain a situation with a pious minister of the Gospel, who appears to have cared for her soul while in his service. At the age of fifteen she was brought into the enjoyment of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ, and united with the Baptists. She was afterwards married to a young man who was a member of the same church, moving in the humble walks of life, and having a large family, this servant of Christ had to suffer at times from the pinching hand of poverty, but amid it all she held fast her profession, and honoured the Saviour.

About twenty-six years since, shortly after the Primitive Methodists missioned Reading, Jane became a member of our society. Her little cottage was soon opened for prayer meetings, in which she felt much pleasure. In class-meetings and love-feasts, she often spoke of the goodness of God to her in such a manner as to show the grateful feelings of her heart, and when the last enemy had marked her for his prey, and she was brought to the verge of Jordan, she was not left to pass through it alone.

On one of my visits I found her confidence was strong, her faith in the Saviour seemed to be in full exercise, and she said, "Jesus is precious." I read the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. Her bodily strength being very much exhausted, I was led to think it probable she would not be able to follow me so as to understand it, but it soon became evident that her mind was engaged in attending to the words of the Saviour. As I read the latter clause of the eleventh verse, "Or else believe me for the very works' sake," she broke silence, and spoke of the work of redemption. After reading the chapter I engaged in prayer, directing my petitions on her behalf, that she might be delivered from the sorrows of earth she said, "Oh! don't say anything about sorrow. I have no sorrow now. How can I?" She requested me not to send any of our friends to see her that afternoon, as she expected her children, and wished to have a little time with them, and then said, "Tell them how happy I am." I saw her two or three times after this; she could not converse much, being very weak. She gradually sank beneath the pressure of increasing weakness, until the first day of the new year, when, after a lingering illness, she fell asleep in Jesus. EDWARD LONG.

23. ANN AINSWORTH was born at Staley-bridge, Cheshire, June 14th, 1840, and died December 28th, 1861. From a child to the time of her last illness, she attended the Primitive Methodist Sunday-school. She was of a quiet disposition and was very obedient to her parents. She frequently asked her mother's counsel when any thing perplexed her mind, and she studied much about heaven and heavenly things. She bore her affliction with Christian fortitude, and always seemed to enjoy close communion with God. On one occasion when her mother and she were engaged in prayer, she exclaimed "O that I had wings so that I might fly away to him whom my soul loveth." On another occasion feeling that her dissolution was fast approaching she called the family together, and exhorted them to prepare to meet her in heaven. About twelve hours before she departed, she held up her arm, and shouted as well as she could "Victory! Victory! All is right—I am ready." During her affliction she said "What should I do now if I had not the grace of God, if I had to contend with a guilty conscience and a weak body? But thank the Lord he has been good to me in changing my heart while I was in health and strength, and now I can feel him precious to my soul." When asked if she should like to get better, she said she was willing either to live or die, just as it pleased the Lord.

She was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth about ten years ago in a revival in the school. As a scholar she was much respected by her teachers, and afterwards even more highly as a teacher and member of society. Her illness was protracted, but she bore it with submission to the will of God. L. STAFFORD.

24. Died at Walsham Le Willows, Bury St. Edmunds Circuit, Dec. 27th, 1861, WILLIAM MOLE, in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

When the Primitive Methodists missioned Walsham, William offered them his house in which to conduct the worship of God, and for nearly twenty years Divine service was continued therein, and in his dwelling the preachers always found a home. Our brother was one of the first who joined the society, and he continued to the end of his life. On Christmas day 1861, he attended Divine service, read the word of God, and spoke much of heaven and heavenly things; all the following day he was happy in God, and his health was as usual. His wife left him in bed, but some time after she called, but receiving no answer, she approached the bedside and found that life was extinct.

25. LOUISA ANN WALKER, whose maiden name was VIRT, was born at Bradford, Yorkshire, 29th November, 1837, and was transplanted to "The land of the holy, the happy, the free" on the 7th January, 1862. Through the influence and good example of her pious mother, she was early taught the need of pardoning mercy, and the priceless value of true piety. Being naturally of a kind disposition, she soon began to pay attention to the instruction imparted to her. At a tender age she was sent to our Sunday-school and manifested an aptitude to learn. She was meek and very affectionate, but she felt the necessity of an inward work of grace.

At the age of fourteen she earnestly sought mercy and soon found redemption through the blood of Christ. "She believed and entered into rest." Having obtained the one thing needful, she was especially anxious that her father, brothers, and sisters, should know the power of his salvation, and she spent hours in pleading with heaven on their account.

In 1859 she was united in marriage to him who now deeply mourns his loss. For some time before her death, she was not well. On Christmas day she took cold and it resulted in inflammation on the lungs, which brought on premature accouchement. I visited her in her heavy afflictions and found her very weak in body, but strong in faith. Her frail house was dissolving, but all was peace within, and the prospect beyond was all brightness. It was a privilege to attend the chamber of this holy woman, on the verge of heaven. She was leaning with calm and steadfast confidence on God. Her medical attendant said there was no hope of her recovery. It was pleasing to hear her in circumstances so solemn declare her unshaken trust in the Lord. Her hopes rested on a sure foundation which supported her in the near prospect of death. On her mother saying to a friend (after she had sat up with her for a week) "All seems dark and not a passage of Scripture appears to cheer one," "Yes," said the dying saint, "there is one, mother. 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me,'" and she sweetly fell asleep in Christ. She was a dutiful daughter, and kind sister, an affectionate wife, a loving mother, and a pious Christian.

WILLIAM JACKSON.

26. Mr. JACOB HENRY JOHNSON, late of Swansea, was born in the Isle Arundel, Norway, April 8th, 1813. In reviewing his eventful life, I shall portray him as a successful citizen of this world, and as a candidate for the next.

His father was a pilot in the Norwegian seas, and having gone out in very rough weather, he was never heard of more, it is probable he perished in the storm. This sad catastrophe occurred when Jacob was only nine years of age and he was the oldest child; he entered on a sea-faring life, in the very face of this dire calamity, in order to help to support his widowed mother and her fatherless children. It is highly to his credit that he obeyed the fifth commandment, cheerfully denying himself that he might give up his hard-earned moneys to the support of his bereaved parent. After he had settled in this country, he ministered to his mother's necessities in life, and at her death he paid the expenses of a respectable interment. He loved his mother.

About 1832 he left his Norwegian vessel in Jersey, and forthwith came to Swansea, adopting it as his future home; and he ultimately obtained his certificate as a legalized denizen of Great Britain. This change, a yet unseen link of Divine providence in his behalf, became very eventful, in his after position in life.

About the period last referred to, the Primitive Methodist missionaries first visited Swansea, and he heard them on the quay. And being benefited and attracted by their earnest preaching and lively singing, he followed their ministry in all its removals from the quay until it found a rest in the erection of Tower Lane Chapel. In his after sea life of about eleven years he had the three following remarkable escapes from death. While lying in the port of Quebec, he was so violently attacked by cholera, as to be believed to be dead, and a coffin was prepared, but on his recovery it was taken to pieces and the boards brought to Swansea, as a witness of his hair-breadth escape from death. When in the Island of Cuba for copper ore, he was seized with fever, but death was not permitted to make him its prey. Under these circumstances he gave up foreign service, and entered a coasting steam packet, which was wrecked during his service near the Menai Straits. In this vessel he was accustomed to bank his little savings in one of his sea-boots, and finding the packet to be fast sinking, he hastened below to secure his bank, but unfortunately brought up the empty boot. On finding his mistake, he again ventured, and barely succeeded with his life. Having prior to this event become united in marriage to her who now mourns her loss, he left the sea, and took a ferry boat on the river, and by his rescued savings, industry and economy, he was enabled to commence business as a ship chandler, and now came the time and circumstances for providence to reward his past industry, integrity, and liberality, in a very speedy and remarkable manner. Often he was wont to say to his wife, while in this business, "Mary, I don't know how it is, but every thing I do seems to prosper in a way beyond what I am able to account for." But as every rose has its thorn, even this prosperous business so taxed his mental powers, that they gave way under the pressure, and compelled him to retire into private life at the age of forty-six years, but not without an abundant competency for all the wants of himself and family, although he had begun life a fatherless, uneducated boy, without purse, scrip, patronage, or education. Of his early training, or religious creed, little is known, but we presume he was brought up in the Protestant faith. His first religious impressions, leading to any practical good, were received under our open air services in missioning this town, and from that time he became an attendant on our means of grace. But although a hearer and liberal supporter, he did not obtain peace with God, until about fourteen years ago. The circumstance which led to this event was a severe affliction, under which brothers G. Price and Mr. J. R. Brenton, circuit steward, were sent for to visit him, and pray with him. Under their ministrations he received much spiritual comfort; and was wont to say that his life was then given him in answer to their prayers. This event was simultaneous with the beginning of his temporal prosperity. Immediately on his recovery he joined the Church, and became increasingly attached to the means of grace, and especially to Mr. Price. His rule was to leave home about fifteen minutes before the time of service, in order to join in the first singing, a part of the worship he much loved. In the love-feasts and class-meetings, he was wont ever to testify that not himself, but the grace and providence of God had made him what he was. Being quickened to newness of life, he felt for his brother seamen, and on each Sabbath morning, in company with a vicious neighbour, he was wont to take his share in visiting all the ships that were lying in port, with tracts, and continued this work until a sailor's missionary was duly appointed to the port. On the calling up of the mortgage loan, on the Tower Lane chapel, he generously offered to replace it, and in this and in every other financial matter affecting the interest of the circuit, he was ever ready to lend his aid.

A short time prior to his last illness, he was appointed society steward, this office, he held until completely prostrated. Mr. J. R. Brenton says, "I frequently visited him throughout his painful and protracted affliction, and ever found him resting on his Saviour." Also prayer-meetings were held with him by a few friends until his mind became so impaired as to render them a complete blank to his understanding. Yet after this in his lucid intervals, he used to refer to his heavenly inheritance with joy. He died January 4th, 1862. Prior to this melancholy event, he had happily set his household affairs in order. And after making an ample provision for his wife and daughter, (now about seven years old) he left a house as a home for a sister, who has also become a resident of this town. He also bequeathed £40 to the trust funds of our Tower Lane chapel, and ten shillings a year to the Primitive Methodist missions, to be paid in the name of his daughter, until she shall have reached the age of twenty-one years. Had health and mind permitted, he would have doubtless taken an important part in the burden of the new chapel, hence his death is a loss to the circuit; may it be sanctified to the church and his bereaved family. Amen. G. DONSON.

27. ROWLAND FLETCHER, of Doveholes, Bradwell Circuit, was born in the vicinity of Peak Forest, Derbyshire, about 1794. Of his early life I know but little nor have I any evidence at what period he gave himself to Christ. The office of parish clerk being held by his father, and now by his brother, leads me to infer that he was brought up to attend the Established Church. The love of strong drink made him more than once a miserable man. He was for some time a Wesleyan, but for the last few years he was connected with the Primitives. He was a man of extensive reading.

During the last year or two he was much afflicted with asthma. His death was rather sudden. At the class-meeting on the Wednesday previous to his departure, he seemed very happy and prayed with fervour; on the next day he complained of being worse than usual, and kept at home, but there were no symptoms of death till the Monday; when some of our friends prayed with him, and he assured them he was happy, trusting in Jesus, and on January, 21st, 1862, his voyage of life came to an end. ### I. LINES ON THE DEATH OF THE REV. JONATHAN THOMAS HARRISON.

By REV. R. JUKES.

The Shepherd from his flock below
By death's cold hand is riven,
The soldier from his post is gone,
To share the rest of heaven.

The mariner has reached the port
Where all is calm and peace,
The traveller sits down at home,
Where pleasures never cease.

Thus youthful Harrison is gone
From all the scenes below,
Where rivers of delight roll on
And trees immortal grow.

How short his ministerial course
How soon the stroke was given,
But what he sow'd in tears below
He reaps with joy in heaven.

With glowing heart to God and man
His inmost soul was fir'd,

He labour'd hard and labour'd on,
Undaunted and untired.

The work of an evangelist
He boldly did perform,
The same devoted saint was he
Alike in calm and storm.

When from his labours called to cease
Sweet hope inspired his breast,
His very looks then seemed to say,
I'm going to my rest.

As death approached, no anxious care
Disturbed his placid mind,
Tho' early called to leave his friends,
To this he felt resigned.

Death found him standing at his post
And there the stroke was given,
One moment prayer was on his lips,
The next he sang in heaven.

2. A VISION OF HEAVEN.

Lo! as I slept upon my bed,
With night's dim curtain drawn,
An angel stood above my head,
The third hour of the morn.
He bore me with him far away,
Unto his blest abode;
With brighter light than earthly day,
His flowing vesture glow'd.
Lo! in this vision of the night,
Far distant land I saw;
The veil of glory ever bright,
Far back appear'd to draw.
And then my eyes saw glorious things,
My ears heard wondrous sounds;
As flaming seraphs on their wings,
Circled their ceaseless rounds.
The city four square doth lie,
With walls built round about
Of burning jasper, wondrous high;
And twelve gates just without.
Down in the deep cerulean clouds,
Are the foundations laid,
Of stones most precious, God allow'd
His temple to be made.
The city like to clearest glass,
Transparently did show—
Each portal which its people pass,
Was whiter than the snow.
Hadleigh.

A peerless pearl each portal is,
On dazzling hinges roll'd;
And over all the streets of bliss,
Was scattered shining gold.
The trees of life, on either side
A silvery river, grew;
A crystal mirror, deep and wide,
Stretch'd forth within my view.
Lo! in this place ineffable,
Bright, rustling wings were spread;
And he who did the story tell,
Wav'd his above his head.
I caught the echo of the song,
That they were singing there;
Down through the clouds it came along,
And fell upon my ear.
Rang'd round a bright and starry throne,
Stood the harmonious choir,
And on each head a brilliant crown,
And in each hand a lyre.
They struck their lyres in praise to Him,
Whose palace is on high;
And cherubim and seraphim,
Sang most melodiously.
But, as I heard the vision broke,
The glory ceas'd to stream,
And I from out my slumber woke,
And lo!—it was a dream!

BIOGRAPHY.

1. JOHN RIDE, late of Benalla Mission, was born in the county of Derby, England, April, 1790. He lived a stranger to God, and followed the course of this world until January, 1811. At that time the Primitive Methodists sent their missionaries into the aforesaid county, and their labours were crowned with success. The venerable William Clowes was appointed to preach in the neighbourhood of John Ride's residence; and our departed friend, with others, agreed to hear this new preacher, intending at the same time to interrupt him in the service. Mr. Ride as the leader of the party took his seat in front of the preacher. Quietly he heard the singing and prayer, but when Mr. Clowes announced his text, "Awake to righteousness, and sin not, for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame"—the word pierced John's heart, and he thought the whole of the discourse was designed especially for him.

When the service was over he hastened home, and lest he should meet with his companions he at once retired to bed; but he could find no rest. His sins were set in battle array against him, and he feared before the light of the approaching day that he should have to meet his reward in hell. The words, "Awake to righteousness" sounded in his ears. Mr. Clowes soon paid a second visit to the place, and after service he invited those who had a desire to flee from the wrath to come to remain at class. John Ride accepted the invitation, united in church-fellowship with God's people, and for several weeks continued to attend the means of grace, both private and public. One Sabbath he had been at a class-meeting, and was returning home with the burden of sin on his soul, when it became intolerable. He knelt in a field belonging to his father, though snow was on the ground, and after long and earnest prayer, he thought he heard a voice saying, "Thy sins which are many are all forgiven thee." This so filled his heart with joy, that he took off his hat, threw it into the air, shouting, "Glory be to God! He has pardoned all my sins." His father seeing him in his distress, cried out,

"The Methodists have driven my poor boy raving mad." John soon began to exhort sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and he was appointed to the office of a local preacher. The Lord was pleased to crown his labours with much success. A door was opened into a more extensive field of usefulness, and in 1821 he became a Primitive Methodist itinerant minister, and entered upon his work without timidity, putting his trust in the mighty God of Jacob. He suffered many privations, persecutions, and even imprisonments for the sake of the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

His first station as an itinerant minister was Tunstall Circuit, and he was sent to superintend Burland Branch. From that station he was sent to Liverpool, where he was imprisoned for preaching in the open air. The late Dr. Adam Clarke having heard of the affair, went and offered bail for him, but he was released without needing the doctor's favour.

He subsequently travelled in Tunstall, Salisbury, Wrockwardine Wood, North Wales, Darlaston, Frome, Shefford, Reading, and London Circuits and Missions. In these places, under the instrumentality of Mr. Ride and his colleagues, hundreds of souls were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus; societies were formed, chapels were built, and living churches associated therewith.

In 1849 several missionaries were needed by the General Missionary Committee for Australia, and Mr. Ride, though advanced in years, offered himself for the Australian field. This offer was accepted, and in 1850 he landed in the colony of Victoria as a pioneer in the cause of Primitive Methodism. After two years of arduous toil his general health began to fail, and his nervous system was much shaken, which induced him to request superannuation. This request was granted by the Conference of 1853, and he located at Benalla, where there was no place of worship nor any religious service held; however, on the arrival of our departed friend, he determined on opening a mission, and for this purpose he took his stand beneath a gum tree, and there, in the open air, he preached the unsearchable riches of Christ. The services were productive of good; a small class was formed, and for several years Mr. Ride conducted religious worship in a cottage; ultimately a missionary was sent for, and the building of a chapel was commenced and completed, which it is hoped will be the birthplace of many souls.

Mr. Ride preached on each Sabbath, with but a few exceptions, until within some months of his death, when his bodily strength failed, and he felt he was drawing nigh unto the gates of death. Speaking on this subject he said, death to him would be a happy change, for he had set his house in order. Medical advice was sought, and it was hoped for some time that his life would be spared; but nature had done its work, and all hopes of his recovery soon vanished. He bore his affliction with patience and fortitude. Speaking on the advances that our beloved Connexion was making in chapel building and educational matters, &c., he said, "My work is nearly done, and I can but offer my best wishes and sincere prayers for its success." While speaking to the writer on his approaching dissolution, he said, "My time with you is very short, I am on the verge of eternity; I do not feel satisfied with my past life; I might have done more for Christ; but I feel quite satisfied with Christ as my all-sufficient Saviour; quite satisfied that my peace is made with heaven; and when I am gone you may tell everybody at home and in this country that I have gone to be with Christ, which is far better." He had a strong desire to be spared to see the opening of Benalla chapel. This was despaired of, as his death was expected daily; but on the evening previous to the opening, viz., Jan. 11th, 1862, he made known to Messrs. Grey and Walton his intention of being present at the morning service. This was thought impossible. The Sabbath dawned; the devotional part of the service was commenced, when to the pleasing surprise of all, Mr. Ride made his appearance in the house of prayer, in which he gave thanks to God, and wept much. Having heard the sermon, which was preached by Mr. Grey, he appeared ready to say with Simeon, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

The same night he was taken worse. He called his family around him, and after urging them to love and fear God, hoping he should meet them all in heaven, he spoke very pleasantly of meeting old friends in glory, referring especially to Messrs. Bourne, Clowes, and others, who had been his fellow labourers in the ministry. On Monday, the 13th, it was evident his feet had entered the waters of the Jordan. On Wednesday he was visited by Revs. G. Grey and W. H. Walton, who found him unable to speak distinctly. After giving them a sign that all was right, and that Christ was precious, Mr. Grey engaged in prayer, commending the spirit of the dying Christian to God. Mr. Ride lingered a few hours after this, and then sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, January 15th, 1862, in the seventy-third year of his age and the forty-second year of his ministry. His remains were interred the following day in the Benalla Cemetery by the writer.

Thus ended the life of the venerable John Ride, who for more than half a century was a member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and for thirty years was one of its successful pioneers and a very useful minister. That his sorrowing family and friends may meet him in heaven is the fervent prayer of

WILLIAM HENRY WALTON.

2. WILLIAM DEAN, better known as William Wavin, of Weston, Newbury Circuit, was born about 1796. His education in his youth was greatly neglected. According to his own statements he "was allowed to run wild without any restraint." He delighted in sin, and used various means to gratify his wicked propensities.

When a young man he was employed on the Welford estate as under-keeper, and being of a strong constitution, and possessing an undaunted spirit he was often engaged in some of the most difficult and dangerous branches of his calling. In very cold weather he was accustomed to break the ice in the fish-pond, and wade in search of fish for the family, as the other keepers did not fancy such work under such circumstances. At times he was in danger of being frozen to death, while watching poachers. On leaving the Welford estate he was employed at Weston, and a leading feature in his character seems to have been a regard for his employer's welfare. His master states that amidst his extravagant fondness for drink, he was never known to neglect his duty to his employer, whom he served with fidelity and unswerving obedience.

Sometime in 1830 an afflictive circumstance occurred in his family, which aroused him from his lethargy, and led him to reflect on his awful condition. One of his children, named Rachael, retired to rest one night in her usual health, but ere the morning dawned she was found a corpse. This awful proof of the uncertainty of human life weighed heavily on his mind, and caused him to view the circumstance as a merciful interposition of Divine Providence for his good. He said, how would it have been if the Lord had thus called me in my state of rebellion against Him. I should have been lost for ever, I must have been in hell, it could not have been otherwise. These, and similar reflections, produced a seriousness in his deportment. About that time Mr. T. Russell was preaching at Shefford, and Wavin was induced to go and hear him. Under the word delivered he became more alarmed, and began to seek mercy at the hands of God. Miss E. Smith was to preach at Shefford; poor Wavin concluded that must be wrong, yet he would go and hear her, and he purposed in his mind to oppose her, for he considered she must be in error. Scores flocked to the place of meeting, and William among them fixed in his purpose, but when he saw Miss Smith he thought she was an angel, and he was so confounded that he failed in his purpose of opposing her. His attention was arrested, and listening to her persuasive eloquence he was led to cast his soul on the merits of Christ for salvation, and he found peace and joy through believing. He then cast in his lot among our people, various intrigues were resorted to, to draw him away from the people of his choice. Soon after he obtained peace he was visited by a gentleman, who promised him certain emoluments if he would take his advice, and as a matter of course, if he did not obey him he was to have nothing. William respectfully informed the gentleman that while he was rebelling against God and running head-long to hell, he did not trouble himself about him, but now when he found him walking in the way to heaven he came to interfere with him. "I tell you plainly I would rather go to heaven naked, than go to hell "wrapped in your blankets."

In or about the close of 1830 a strange infatuation affected the labouring classes of the community in this neighbourhood, and manifestations of evil designs towards their masters appeared in Kent, and afterward spread rapidly over the southern counties of England. Fancying that machinery would throw them out of employment, large bodies of men collected, and laying violent hands on what they considered to be the evil, they dashed machines to pieces, and then demanded of the proprietors money for the injury they had done. Many of the labourers who were unwilling to assist in this work of destruction were compelled by the threats of others, some fearing that vengeance would be taken on them, ran into the woods and other places of refuge till the storm was over. At this trying period the moral character of Wavin was evinced. Not only was his determination fixed to avoid sharing in the lawless undertaking, but he resolved to assist his master in the hour of trial. Instead of hiding himself in the woods as others had done, he was employed to watch the premises of his master by night, lest they should be destroyed by the hands of incendiaries, and he was accustomed to extend his nightly labours as far as a neighbouring farm, where the inmates could not rest comfortably except they were satisfied that Wavin was near at hand. When the crisis arrived, and the disaffected men appeared at his master's gates, Wavin was ready to assist his employer in his expostulations with the lawless rebels, and the mob for once hearkened to reason, and dispersed without doing any mischief. Soon afterwards a detachment of Lancers was sent down by Government, and order throughout the country was restored. Wavin was quite a favourite with his master's sons, who used to be delighted to talk with him on subjects most interesting to them. He was a consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and evinced his progress in divine things by his increased attachment to God and his people, while those who knew him best respected him the most.

His name appeared on the circuit's plan in June, 1831 ; his preaching talents were not superior, he was often humorous, but his manner was earnest, and his addresses were powerful, reaching the hearts of his hearers. In the conversion of sinners he was successful. Men of different creeds and denominations were anxious to obtain his counsel in the time of their trial, and cases have been known where parties who despised his tenets while in health, have eagerly requested his assistance when in the furnace of affliction. The atonement was to him a frequent and a delightful theme, and he manifested great earnestness when soliciting others to seek an interest in the all prevailing sacrifice of Christ. He always contended that faith must be accompanied by consistency of character and conduct. He often dwelt on the great forbearance and long suffering of God towards him, in not cutting him down while living in a state of rebellion against Him. He acted on the principle of total abstinence, fearing lest he should fall from his steadfastness by that foul destroyer, of which he was so extravagantly fond while in his sinful state. His constitution which had been remarkably strong, began to fail a few years since, and during the winter season, he was troubled with a violent cough. During the winter of 1859, he did but little work, and still less in 1860. But his last long and painful illness, was in 1861. In the autumn he was afflicted with dropsy, which caused him most severe pains in the legs; wounds broke out on his legs after they had swelled to an enormous size, and the excruciating pain was sometimes mitigated with lotion, but generally speaking it continued both night and day. His young master says of him, "I have seen a few people under suffering, but I believe Wavin's case was the most severe I ever witnessed. I have sometimes almost shuddered when I put my hand on the latch of the door which opened to my view a fellow creature writhing under agonies which no pen can describe, and yet in the midst of these severe sufferings, he acknowledged that he deserved them, and looked on them as necessary for his soul's good, and also admitted that they were all sent in love." For many weeks he endured this chastening, and his legs he said, burned like fire. The rector of the parish visited him occasionally, of whom he spoke in the highest terms.

He expressed a wish that the old black pony, which he used to ride while able to attend to his master's employment, and which used to carry him to his appointments on Lord's days, might be allowed to draw him to his last resting place, which wish was with pleasure complied with.

He sometimes said, "I shall soon be gone, and you will be left to take up and bear the daily cross." His mind dwelt much on the sufferings of the Redeemer, which was evident from the expressions he so frequently used, such as, "Oh! that bleeding Lamb, that suffering Saviour," &c., &c. He was very patient, and when opportunity offered, he exhorted others to seek salvation before they came to a dying bed.

He told me that his protracted affliction furnished him with opportunities for preaching Christ to many he could not reach while in health, but their visiting him in his affliction enabled him to point them to the Saviour of mankind.

In December, 1861, it was evident that the light which had long been flickering would soon be extinguished, and that the pitcher would soon be broken at the fountain; the partial healings of his legs and his increasing weakness, were evidences of this. Grateful for all attentions, he used to say to his benefactors, "The Lord will repay you, but I cannot."

On the evening of December 24th, his attendants could perceive that death was near at hand, extreme weakness rendered his speech indistinct, so that it became difficult to understand him, and it was supposed that he would not speak again so as to be understood. The clock had struck twelve, and the anniversary of the Saviour's advent dawned. His eldest son was present with him, and could perceive life ebbing fast, but just before he departed he opened his eyes to the surprise of all present; he shouted with a loud voice, "Glory to the bleeding Lamb!" He then thanked those around him for their kind attentions, and his son having assisted him to alter his position in bed, could just hear him say, "That's all, that's all;" and his happy soul took its flight to the regions of blessedness and peace.

3. JOHN HATTON, of Over Lane, Burland Circuit, was born at Winsford, Sept. 16th, 1796. His parents were poor, and all the opportunity with which he was favoured to learn to read and write, was two years attendance at the Methodist Sunday school, of which he was deprived at the age of seven years. At that period he went to work with ungodly men, and being of a lively disposition, and possessing a resolute spirit, he was easily led into the vices to which youth are frequently addicted.

At the age of twenty years he was married, and went to live at Northwich, where he continued careless about his soul till it pleased the Lord to try him in the furnace of affliction. The Lord shewed towards him the riches of His grace in raising him from his bed of sickness and giving him another Gospel invitation. As soon as he could walk abroad the Primitive Methodists then missioning Northwich came singing past his house, conviction seized his heart, and he saw that hell would be his doom, if he did not flee to Christ for pardon. He put on his hat and followed the procession to a barn in York Buildings, where service was commenced, and as the minister proceeded in expounding the Word of God, John trembled, and thought the minister knew all about him, but he being ignorant of the plan of salvation, went home burdened with his sin. Soon after this circumstance he removed to Over Lane, where he went on in his evil habits until he was bereaved of a child, when he was awakened to a sense of his danger, and sought the Lord. But not obtaining mercy he thought he had sinned away the day of grace, and he earnestly prayed that God would let him feel the strivings of his Spirit; as in times past the Lord graciously heard him, and on the 12th of January, 1828, in the Wesleyan chapel, Winsford, at a prayer-meeting after preaching service, the Lord visited him in a wonderful manner; he saw, there was now hope for him, he cast his guilty soul on the atonement, received the forgiveness of his sins, and said if he had possessed a voice loud enough he would have told the whole world what great things God had done for his soul. He never forgot the astonishment depicted on the countenances of his wife and children, when they were for the first time invited to kneel at the family altar.

In 1837 it was deeply impressed on his mind that he should publicly warn the people to flee from the wrath to come, and while he reasoned on the responsibility of the office, and his own inability to perform it, he cried out in the anguish of his soul, "Who is sufficient for these things?" and Jonah-like he ran away, but he could not flee from God's Spirit,—it followed him day and night. An appointment being neglected, he officiated, and the Lord was with him. He then began to work for the Lord in earnest, and the next time he preached, which was in the tabernacle at Nantwich, nineteen souls were converted to God.

In 1849 he joined our people at Over Lane, and his name appeared on our plan as a local preacher. Through his studious habits he obtained a good knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. His ministerial labours were in great requisition, and he was the means of doing much good. The affliction which terminated in his death, was a stomach affection, which baffled all medical skill, and he rapidly declined in health. On July 14th, 1861, he took his last appointment at Ulkinton, and in September he gave in his plan to prevent disappointment. In his affliction he was frequently visited by his Christian friends, whom he always delighted to see. Although speaking exhausted his strength, he forgot his weakness, when conversing on God's love to man. As a liberal man he devised liberal things, and he gave liberally to God's cause. Whenever the writer visited him, he always found him very humble, and full of confidence in the promises of God's word. Towards his latter end, he suffered very severely, which through grace he was enabled to bear.

On February 4th, while his friends were weeping at his bed-side, he said "Do not weep for me, a few more struggles and I shall be landed safe." A short time prior to his death, he said he was going very fast, his feet were in the Jordan, its billows were very rough, but Jesus kept his head above the water. In health it was his general rule to make his accounts up with the Lord every night, and then he said if death came at midnight, or at cock crowing, or in the morning, he should have nothing to do, but gather up his feet, and die. Some time before his death he made all necessary arrangements for his funeral, and disposed of his worldly goods, that his mind might be at rest. The night before he died, his friends were weeping by his side, expecting every breath would be his last, when he said he should not go then, but he should go between five and six o'clock on the following morning. And as he had predicted so it happened; at half-past five o'clock on February 21st, 1862, his happy spirit winged its way to the regions of eternal day. His children have lost a kind parent, and the Church one of its brightest ornaments. After an early service at our chapel, the members followed the mortal remains of our departed brother to the house appointed for all living, on the 23rd of February 1862. He was sixty-six years of age when he entered on his eternal reward.

4. JESSE JERVIS, late of Talk-on-the Hill, Tunstall Circuit, Class-leader and local preacher, departed this life February 11th, 1862, in the forty-fourth year of his age, twenty-six of them having been spent in the service of Christ. Jesse was born at Wybunbury, in Cheshire, November 13th, 1818, of industrious but ungodly parents; he was one of a family of sixteen, consequently he had to begin work when very young, which left but a short period for his schooling. This period, though short, proved highly useful to him in after life, and tended to give a tone and bias to his opening mind, favourable to godliness. At the age of eighteen, in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Englesea Brook, under the preaching of our late esteemed Brother T. Batty, he received the pardon of his sins through faith in Jesus. From that time till his death he retained an abiding sense of his acceptance with his Saviour; this sense of pardon remained with him through his eventful career, and thus he was enabled to bear the reproach without, and trials within, for he endured as seeing Him who is invisible.

Perhaps few men enjoyed less of expressed sympathy, and were apparently less esteemed during life than he; although twenty-six years were spent in the cause of his Lord, yet he seemed not to be appreciated. On the whole he laboured uncheered of man, as though he had to fight the enemy alone—to face the foe himself, and stand singly in the breach, but his record was on high, and the more honour to the man who thus stands, and having done all, stands. When God wipes away “the reproach of his people,” his labours will speak for him in the Gate, for much of that human agency with which the Church here is now blest, has been raised up and guided by him. The young men of this Bethel can bear their testimony and set their seal to the fact. The Wednesday and Saturday night classes will not soon forget those instructive seasons, when he met them for Scripture reading and exposition, and for these he was well adapted. His attainment in Biblical truth fitted him to instruct others in the ways of God. When he saw the germs of rising usefulness upstarting around him, the future men of the Cross, as though he could read the future, he would say, “We shall live and not die.” He felt much anxiety for these young men, and was desirous to impart to them the “Saving Truth” of the Bible, fresh and full from the “Holy Mount;” and if we may judge from specimens, the seed sown will be seen after many days.

From him the Bible received veneration ; it was to him " The Book,"—the volume that commanded his homage, his love, his heart ; he would sometimes, in some moods of feeling, take us back to the great and long-to-be-honoured Puritan family, who distinguished themselves by a rigid scrupulousness for Bible honour, and he endeavoured to foster this feeling in his pulpit services and private discourse. The death of his wife some two years ago, bowed his frame ; he shook as when " a whirlwind speaks," and bent before the blow ; he had a tender affection for the partner of his life, and often their fellowship was especially sweet ; from the time of her death, he seemed to hang on earth with relaxed grasp ; this circumstance seemed to loosen the screws by which he was fixed ; and his devotions became more fervid, his aspirations deeper-toned.

He said, " Thy will be done." There is a peculiar solitariness surrounding widowhood, and to sharpen its pangs everything at home serves as a memento to tell of the " absent." Alone ! yet not alone with thee. The strong man bowed himself, and again looked at the imperative face of duty.

Some six or nine months ago special services were conducted at this place by Mr. J. Barnes ; many souls were brought to God ; Jesse laboured earnestly and heartily, and rejoiced as one that had found great spoil. He took a severe cold, hoarseness came on, debility ensued. He continued however to move about, though broken and emaciated, until the 11th of February last, when he took his room ; there he died ; we could not think death was so near, it seemed an ambushade, " a sudden stroke," a stab. But opinion vacillated for five days ; the Sabbath came ; there were evident signs of the monster's doings ; reason reeled ; she resumed her empire, but only by sufferance ; we saw the power and efficacy of grace ; where reason halts, faith steps in ; when reason vacates, faith holds on, and holds up, and brings through. Thou glorious power of faith, man's omnipotency on earth ! " I'm quite resign'd ; all's right." To the writer of these lines, who visited him about two hours before his departure, he said, " I'm close to the grave, and I can go the other part readily ; glory ! my crown awaits me." This is the hour of emancipation, the full release, the unclouded sky, lit up with the radiancy of heaven. He entered on his manhood for ever.

" The verge of heaven,"

Farewell until we meet thee in the great rendezvous of being ! we'll cover with affection's hands thy errors ; we'll speak with due charity of thy failings ; thine was an experiment, a trial. It is now certified, thou hast won thy character ; it is before our eyes ; we see it as a whole ; we see its items, we take as a whole its various threads and holdings, and present it to the notice of the world.

5. Departed this life in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, at Mount Barker, November 20th, 1861, Mrs. SUSANNAH STANDRIN, in the thirty-sixth year of her age.

She was brought into union with the great Eternal when about sixteen years of age, and among other relics of her early piety is the first class ticket which she received as a member of the Primitive Methodist Society at Ashton-under-Lyne, Lancashire, England. A few of the members of that society, then small and feeble, can testify that she adorned the doctrine of Christ by a meek and lowly walk and by highly consistent conduct, which greatly endeared her to all who knew her, and which raised her to the enjoyment of—

“That sacred calm which does not move,
And all the silent heaven of love.”

Possessed naturally of an amiable disposition which grace matured in her to the full fruition of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Her habits of devotion were constant, unassuming, earnest, and sincere. The lives of Mrs. H. A. Rogers and Mrs. Fletcher, with the Word of God, were her study in the hours of her retirement, and by a prayerful use of these helps to the cultivation of inward holiness, she added to her faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, &c., and was not lacking in the more illustrious grace, charity. The class-book, and the congregation with which she worshipped, tell of her punctuality at the means of grace as long as her health permitted; her habit in this respect said, “Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth.” The narrative of her Christian experience was scriptural, earnest, clear, and confident. She was no “outer court worshipper,” but had rested her hopes upon the Rock of Ages, and appealed to the Searcher of hearts as her Lord and her God.

On the 12th of July, 1851, she was united in marriage to the writer of this sketch, and she entered on her new vocation in the Foxhill Bank Branch of Haslingden Circuit, Lancashire, England. With unaffected diffidence she accepted an appointment to raise a female class, and was happily successful. The members of that class will not readily forget her untiring vigilance, faithful counsels, and earnest pleadings at the throne of grace for their spiritual well-being; but the infinitely wise God so overruled that it was her lot to suffer rather than to toil. We removed from our station at Foxhill Bank to the Knowlwood Circuit, where she had the great joy of witnessing a net increase to Zion's travellers of 120 souls in two years, and her frequent references to the Sabbath morning services in our Salem chapel at that place gave evidence how her soul prospered whilst worshipping with that congregation. The last station on which we laboured in England was Staleybridge, in which circuit she was many years before converted to God, and disciplined for a more extensive warfare, and her demeanour evinced that her profiting had been great indeed. Stalybridge Circuit was dear to her for various reasons ; it was the home of her early days, the residence of her early associates in church-fellowship, and of her natural relatives ; but on the decision of her husband to offer himself for South Australia, she readily assented, saying, " Where God appoints, I'll go."

On the 4th of August, 1857, we bade farewell to the happy homes and exalted privileges of England, and landed in South Australia, November 24th of the same year. For one year in Salisbury, and three years in the Mount Barker Circuit she pursued the even tenor of her way, often feeling as a consequence of affliction, protracted for between fifteen and sixteen years, that it was, indeed,—

" Hard toiling to make the blest shore, Where all is assurance and peace ;"—

but the voyage of life is ended. She fought the battle by her Captain's side, and by grace she hath won the day.

On Saturday morning, November 16th, 1861, we left Mount Barker for Koorunga, by appointment of the District Meeting, but at the end of the first stage, not a fourth part of the journey, it was evident that she was too far spent to proceed ; she was therefore pillowed in a chaise, and carefully taken back to Mount Barker, where, in much bodily pain, but with faith in lively exercise, she patiently " lingered into life"—

" As fades the summer cloud away,
As sinks the gale when storms are o'er ;
As gently shuts the eye of day,
As dies a wave along the shore :"—

so sank her weary frame to rest.

If testimonies in the " climax of life's struggle " are a criterion by which to judge of hope in death, hers were satisfactory. But of more importance in truthfully determining the condition of the departed, is the life by which such testimonies are preceded ; and of her it may be said, " She died as she had lived," a consistent believer in the lowly Jesus—a practical follower of the " Man of sorrows, and who was acquainted with grief," and with whom she is now glorified. On the day after her death, about 200 persons followed her to her long home, and numbers more congregated around her grave. The Rev. J. G. Wright, assisted by the Rev. H. Cole, conducted the funeral service. The coffin was let down into the grave, and her infant, which had been interred six weeks previously, was placed at her feet.

" Lov'd one ! although thy childhood's home
Holds not the treasure of thy dust ;
Who bade the pilgrim cease to roam,
Will safely guard the sacred trust."

And when Gabriel's shrill clarion shall awaken earth's entombed millions, then shalt thou have part in the first resurrection. May the bereaved husband and child, and the reader of these lines, meet thee in heaven! Amen.

JOHN STANDRIN.

6. WILLIAM DREWERY was born at North Summercoates, Lincolnshire, in 1776. Early in life he suffered a painful bereavement in the loss of his parents; but when these his earthly guardians and protectors were removed, his heavenly Father took him under his special guidance. Under the ministry of the Wesleyan Methodists, he was brought to the Lord, and made a partaker of the inestimable blessing of early piety.

Subsequently he became a local preacher, and discharged his duties as such among his early friends till the Primitive Methodist missionaries visited the neighbourhood of his residence, when he was so delighted with their lively mode of worship, that he opened his house for their service, and soon afterwards he united with them in Church fellowship, became the leader of the infant class, and also a local preacher, in the capacity of which he laboured extensively for the benefit of the rising cause in his native county.

In 1840 he removed to Hull; and about two years afterwards his wife died happy in the Lord, leaving him with a family of eleven children. During his life he sustained great financial losses, which reduced him from comparatively affluent to straitened circumstances; but he steadfastly cleaved to the Lord, and daily laid up "treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." He continued to labour as a local preacher till the partial failure of his memory and the growing infirmities of age rendered it imprudent for him to be any longer employed in the office; and as his heart was still in the work, he felt it a sore trial to be prevented from labouring as formerly. He continued, however, to attend the means of grace with commendable diligence, and at his class-meeting he often expressed himself as feeling that he was like a ship at anchor, waiting to sail into the harbour.

His last affliction was but of short duration; he being only confined to his bed about a week. I had the privilege of seeing him once during that time, and found him trusting in Christ, and peacefully waiting for the call to his Father's house above. The summons arrived on the 12th of February, 1862, when he departed to be with Christ. He "died in a good old age, an old man, and full of years, and was gathered to his people," having completed his eighty-sixth year.

JOHN PETTY.

7. JAMES SPARKE, the subject of this brief sketch, was born at Isleham, in the Ely Circuit, November, 1824. His life, to the fifteenth year of his age was strictly moral, when, under the ministry of the Primitive Methodists, he felt the need of a change of heart, and was pointed to the Lamb of God. He believed with his heart unto righteousness, and was filled with joy and peace, and received the evidence of his acceptance through faith in the Lord Jesus. The language of his renewed heart was, "this people shall be my people, and their God my God;" hence, he at once became a candidate for membership in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. Having tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come, he felt an earnest desire that others should be made partakers of like precious blessings; and from an ardent desire to save souls, he was willing to labour to accomplish the desired object, and accordingly his name was placed on the circuit's plan, on which it remained till his death, a period of twenty-three years.

As a preacher, his appearance was humble, his manner unaffected, his sentiments scriptural, and expressed in words which could not be condemned; his labours were acceptable, and not in vain. Hence, he has left some behind who will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord.

As a husband and father, he was kind, faithful, sympathetic, and affectionate. As a Christian, his conduct was exemplary, his piety genuine and steady in its development; holding fast the beginning of his confidence, he went on to perfection, his path being that of the just, shining brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Taking the Word of God as his guide, he went on from strength to strength, until he had fought the battles of the Lord. He left the scene of conflict in peace. For several years he suffered from a disease which greatly limited his usefulness, and ultimately terminated his earthly career. But he bore his affliction with patience and submission, saying, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth to him good." His departure was earlier than it was expected, but it was all right with him. The only thing that bound him to earth was his family, which he loved, and felt it hard to leave; but believing in the faithfulness of Him who saith, "I will be a Father to the fatherless," he was enabled to commit them to Him; and having done so, he fell asleep in Jesus, February 25th, 1862. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The end of the perfect man is peace. "To die is gain." What a contrast between the death of the righteous and the death of the wicked; the former is taken away in mercy, the latter is driven away in wrath. From what? Where to? Unconverted reader, think. The body of our departed brother was interred in the Primitive Methodist Chapel on Tuesday, March 4th, by the writer, in the presence of about 400 spectators. The grave is now the house of his body, but his disembodied spirit stands in the presence of God, where there is fulness of joy. Here, he was faithful over a few things; there, he is made ruler over many things. Here he walked by faith; there he walks by sight. Here he possessed a lively hope; there he possesseth the reality.

Here, he fought; there, he triumphs. Here he had fears, and conflicts; there,

“Not a wave of trouble rolls,
Across his peaceful breast.”

By his removal, the society has lost a prop; his wife, a kind husband; his children, an affectionate father. May they all meet him in heaven. Amen.

“Oh happy saint, may we
Like thee be blest;
In life be faithful,
And in death find rest.”

8. WILLIAM MURRAY, late of Harrington, Whitehaven Circuit, was the son of Daniel and Sarah Murray, and was born at Gilcrux, in the County of Cumberland, on May 29th, 1801. Of his early life we have only a partial account. His father was a praying man, and this no doubt had its influence in preserving William from that excess of folly into which many unhappily run, and in strengthening those principles which were developed in his subsequent life. Though moral in his deportment, he remained a stranger to saving religion till he was twenty-six years of age.

In February 1826 he entered the marriage state with her who is left to mourn her loss, and in November 1827, they lost their first-born child at the age of little more than nine months; under this bereavement he was led to serious thoughts about his soul, and in the following month his convictions were increased while he suffered from personal affliction, and he earnestly prayed for the pardon of his sins. In his affliction he was visited by members of the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Societies, and occasionally by the travelling preachers of the latter; it was however when alone that he realized a sense of pardon by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, which blessing he often said was as clear as the noon-day sun. Having obtained a blessed assurance of the forgiveness of his sins, he praised God, and told his friends and others what great things the Lord had done for him. Soon after he had found peace he regained his strength, and shortly after he removed to Hensingham, at which place he united with the Primitive Methodist Society, and in a few months he was appointed to the office of a class-leader, which office he sustained till he was removed by death. He returned to Harrington in 1831, and has been connected with our cause there more than thirty years.

In 1836 his name appeared on the preachers' plan, and his commanding appearance, strong voice, musical powers, knowledge of divine truth, and his possessing more than an average mental and moral attainments, with his earnestness for the prosperity of God's cause, rendered his pulpit labours acceptable and useful through the circuit. His superior ability was particularly manifested at camp-meetings and in conducting open air services, to the former of which he travelled many miles, during the more vigorous part of his life. He uniformly took a leading part in the singing and devotional parts of the services. Brother John Lightfoot, who knew him well, says of him :—" He possessed a sound judgement, and appeared to enter into all matters with much thought; few had a clearer view of the work of grace, or of the way of salvation through Christ, and he was of much service in a revival which took place at Harrington, in the way of directing sinners to the Saviour.

As a preacher he was more than ordinarily qualified for the work of the ministry. Brother Murray was known beyond the Whitehaven Circuit, having attended many District Meetings as the circuit's delegate, and twice he was elected a delegate to the Conference. Among his brethren in the district he was much respected. Of late years, apart from leading his class, and attending business meetings, he laboured only little in public. An affection in the windpipe caused him to relinquish singing, which for a number of years he had led in our Harrington Chapel. He found partial relief from his affliction in the use of proper means, but no permanent benefit was realized by him. About three months before his death, the disease became more formidable, and the effects were soon visible in the shrinking of his frame. Though able to walk in his room till within two or three days of his death, faint hopes were entertained of his recovery, and to himself it always appeared doubtful, as no radical change in the disorder could be ascertained. In the midst of suffering his mind was sustained by Divine grace, and Christ was all and in all to him. On one occasion he remarked to Brother Worsnop, in his general cheerful manner, "I have no desire to stay and suffer here, there are vast fields of bliss before me." On the Friday evening previous to his departure he became worse, and on the following morning he observed to one of his daughters, that he was impressed with the thought that he should soon leave them, and said, "I have a desire, and would rather depart and be with Christ which is far better. My afflictions are heavy; may I bear them with patience." And he prayed, "Lord, keep me faithful to the end, that I may die shouting victory through the blood of the Lamb." In the afternoon of the same day he requested one of his daughters to read to him the fourteenth chapter of Job, and the fourteenth chapter of St. John's Gospel. On the reading of the latter being ended, he said, "That will do." His wife perceiving he was worse, asked him if he could take anything; he replied, "I shall eat no more, and I shall be a new man to-morrow," intimating he should be an inhabitant of heaven, which was the case.

On the following day, February 9th, 1862, about ten o'clock A.M., at the age of sixty years, he breathed his soul into the hands of his Redeemer.

On Friday, February 14th, his remains were carried to the grave by some of the local preachers and friends, preceded by the travelling preachers, and attended by many members and acquaintances from different parts of the circuit, who were anxious to show respect to his memory, and to sympathize with the bereaved widow and her family. The service at the door, the singing in the procession, the solemn reading of the burial service, the large concourse of people, the weeping of relatives, and mourning of friends, rendered the ceremony impressive, and I trust it was fraught with spiritual interest to all who were present.

SOUNDS OF A REVIVAL.

A SERMON, BY JAMES READ, OF ADELAIDE, AUSTRALIA.

"There is a sound of abundance of rain."—1 Kings xviii. 41.

THE history of Elijah the Tishbite, is one of the most wonderful recorded in the Word of God. We know nothing of his parentage, early history, or youthful days. The sacred historian presents him to us at once upon the broad platform of life, as one of the "sons of thunder"—doing wonders—wonders which have echoed wide as the world, and which are remembered still, and will be remembered when Carmel, the theatre of his noble actions, is no more. How abruptly he bursts upon our vision! "Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead." He now stands before us armed with the authority of heaven, to accomplish famous deeds, and having messages divine. The panorama of his life passes rapidly before us. He has a prophecy from the King of kings, to Israel's wicked sovereign; boldly he stands before Ahab, saying, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word." Then obedient to the Divine command he returns to the solitudes of the desert by the river Jordan. Now he is in the lonely cave and his rocky home; the ravens of the air are made the angels of God's providence to convey him food, and he slakes his thirst at Cherith's little murmuring brook. But after a while, the brook dries up, and the ravens cease to pay their visits. But God provides for him another home. We see him at the door of the poor widow of Zarephath; she is gathering sticks to bake her last cake, that she and her son may eat it and die. Elijah lives with the pious widow till nearly the end of the third year, and then the voice of the Lord is heard again, "Go, shew thyself unto Ahab." Once more he stands before the king, and offers to meet the false prophets of Baal at the foot of Carmel; the proud monarch accepts the challenge. The vast multitude is congregated together, the deluded priests prepare their sacrifice, and begin to call Baal to answer by fire,—but he answers not. Elijah then prepares his sacrifice, and lifts his eyes and heart to heaven. His prayer reaches the throne of the Eternal, fire descends and encircles the altar, and consumes the sacrifice, and the people fall on their faces and cry, “The Lord, He is the God, the Lord, He is the God.” Then with all the authority of the Prophet of the Lord he gives two commands; the first is, “Take the prophets of Baal and slay them, let not one of them escape;” the second is, “Get thee up, Ahab, eat and drink, for there is a sound of abundance of rain.”

I. WE SHALL TAKE A LITERAL VIEW OF THE TEXT.

Elijah, having ascended Carmel's majestic summit, was wrestling alone with his God; having sent his servant out to look for the fulfilment of the words spoken at Zarephath, “I will send rain upon the earth.” His servant's eye sweeps the distant horizon; but the sky is clear, not a cloud is to be seen. He returns and says, “I see nothing.” He goes again and again, and yet again, and returns the seventh time, saying, “Behold there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand.” Elijah then knew God had answered his prayer. The little cloud increased and spreading itself on sea and land, it darkened the expansive firmament; then the drops descended, then the mighty showers, and there was an abundance of rain. Let us consider,

First.—The Giver of rain. Rain is a gift, for nothing occurs by chance. All is wisely arranged by God. He who is the fountain of all happiness, life, light and glory,—He who created the universe, sustains it and preserves it,—He who cared for His disciples on the Galilean Lake, cares for our world which He has launched like a beautiful vessel into a boundless sea of space. Creation is his garden, and He waters it with rain and cheers it with sparkling dew.

Secondly.—The source of rain. It comes from the ocean, it is drawn up to the clouds by the bright ray of the shining sun.

Thirdly.—The necessity of rain. It is indispensable in order to the growth of vegetation. By rain and the salubrious breezes, the fruits of the earth are brought to perfection; and our corn fields wave with the golden grain.

Fourthly.—Its descent. It does not always rain alike. It may be raining in some places and not in others. Sometimes its descent is gentle, at other times rapid; it comes in drops, but often in showers, and sometimes it descends in abundance.

Fifthly.—Some of the properties of rain. It is softening. It softens the earth and prepares it for the reception of the grain. It is strengthening. It pours its vivifying virtues into the sturdy oak, as well as into the little flower. It is reviving. It often revives and beautifies the face of nature.

Murmuring men have often found fault with their Creator, as to the manner of the bestowment of His gifts ; just as if He knew not how to govern the world. Sometimes it rains too much, at other times not enough for them. Happy the man that is enabled to say, "He doth all things well."

II. LET US NOW TAKE A SPIRITUAL VIEW OF THE TEXT.

Nature teaches many important lessons, she demonstrates with ten thousand times ten thousand voices the wisdom and the power of her Creator, she is obedient to His commands and always listens to His voice. If the botanist, geologist, philosopher, and astronomer were to listen aright to her, she would lead them to that Being that painted the flowers with their beauty, who gives them their fragrance,—He who telleth the number of the stars and calleth them all by their names.

First.—As God is the Giver of rain so He is the author of every spiritual blessing. It is He who gives the latter as well as the former rain. He alone can pour "showers of blessings" upon Zion and revive and quicken His church. What rain is to the earth, He is to His people. What rain is temporally, He is spiritually. One plants, another waters ; God gives the increase.

Secondly.—As rain comes from the ocean, so spiritual showers come from the ocean of God's love. His love is infinite, and like the ocean, it is in perpetual motion. It is work divine to convince, convert, sanctify, and save. But the Church, like Elijah's servant, must be on the watch-tower, and earnestly pray, "O Lord revive Thy work."

Thirdly.—As rain is indispensable, so is an outpouring of the Spirit. The whole world needs a revival. Think of popery, idolatry, infidelity, and sensuality. All these obstruct the onward march of vital Christianity ; they need sweeping away that the world may be converted to God. Though the bright sun of the Gospel is shining with greater radiance than ever, yet there are many nations still "sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death." Though in many places they are experiencing the drops, and in some places they are enjoying the showers, yet the whole Church of Christ needs a mighty outpouring of the Spirit,—we want the "abundance of rain."

Fourthly.—As rain is softening, strengthening, and reviving, so is an outpouring of the Spirit. It softens the hardest heart, melts prejudice, and bigotry dies under its influence. It strengthens our faith, hope, and love. It stirs up those that are at ease in Zion. It beautifies the Church, and makes the barren wilderness blossom as the rose.

Fifthly.—As rain in its descent is sometimes gentle and sometimes rapid, so are the operations of the Spirit. Sometimes God pours out His Spirit gently, it then descends as "the gentle breeze ;" at other times He pours it out in rich effusions, and it then comes as "the mighty rushing wind."

Lydia was gently drawn to Jesus ; but the Jailer in deep distress cried,

“What must I do to be saved?” On the day of Pentecost the Spirit was mightily poured out, and three thousand cold hearts were warmed, which made them speak with tongues of fire, “words of flame.”

Sixthly.—But fault is often found with a revival of the work of God. It is all excitement, says one; it will pass away like the morning cloud, prophesies another. But though they find fault with the rain, still rains; and though they thus find fault when God is raining mercy and pouring down righteousness, yet the Lord revives his work, and saves sinners; and when they are truly saved, all heaven is filled with holy excitement and celestial harmony; there is not a silent tongue,—not an unstrung harp; every angel sings, and every saint adores.

III.—LET US NOW CONSIDER THE SOUND OF WHICH THE TEXT SPEAKS.

Elijah’s eye of faith penetrated the clouds, and his ear heard sounds from afar in the elements; and he said, “There is a sound of abundance of rain.” The man of sight looks for signs; but the man of faith listens for sounds. When the glass goes down, or a dark curtain spreads itself o’er the sky, we say these are signs of rain. And when we hear the wild winds play, or the dread thunder roar, we say these are sounds of rain. Now just look at the signs of spiritual rain. When sinners flock to God’s house like doves to the windows; this is a good sign. When the class-meetings are well attended—the prayer-meetings thronged—the preaching services crowded—and good attention is paid to the Word of life in the sanctuary, all these are signs of a revival:—but let us consider a few of the sounds.

First.—Powerful earnest preaching is a sound of a revival. Earnestness with personal holiness will accomplish a great amount of good. Heaven is earnest to save. Hell is earnest to destroy. The world is earnest. Angels are earnest. Devils are earnest. And should not ministers, ambassadors of heaven, be earnest? They should. O for a few men to feel deeply for the world’s weal, and for the salvation of those who are unsaved. David felt when he said, “Rivers of tears run down my eyes,” &c. Jeremiah felt when he cried, “O that my head were waters,” &c. O for an earnest voice to cry—

“Stop poor sinner, stop and think,
Before you further go;
Will you sport upon the brink,
Of everlasting woe?”

Secondly.—Wrestling agonizing prayer is a sound of a revival. Elijah prayed, and the clouds were locked, and it rained not for the space of three years and six months. He prayed; and the widow’s son was restored to life. He prayed; and there was “abundance of rain.” When the Church travails in birth she brings forth. Jacob wrestled and obtained the blessing. Moses pleaded and obtained his plea. Wrestling, agonizing prayer has achieved greater victories than armies with drawn swords and glittering spears.

Thirdly.—The cries for pardon of seeking penitents are a sound of a revival. Angels love to see the tears of true repentance flow. The Saviour delights to hear the penitent's cry for pardon. It is sweeter to Him than the seraph's praise, or the archangel's song. An earnest Church delights to hear the cry, "What must I do to be saved?" A minister that is earnestly seeking the sinner's salvation, rejoices to give him information when he says, "Tell me where I may find Him whom my soul loveth." What sounds we hear coming from some distant lands! thousands are giving their hearts to God. What sounds we hear from some parts of our own land! many are turning from their evil ways to Jesus. The Church of Christ is taking up the trumpet, and inviting the armies of the living God to the mighty war; Oh that the time may soon come, when the Church shall go forth "bright as the sun, clear as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners;" and then every tongue shall be vocal with His praise, and every heart shall bow in homage to His throne. May it be so. Amen.

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

AN ADDRESS TO PREACHERS.

DEAR BRETHREN,—As preaching the Gospel is a very important duty, it becomes each of us to consider the qualifications necessary for such work. In the first place we must be Christians, that is we must love God with all our heart; personal religion is necessary to real usefulness. Jesus Christ never commits the administration of His truth to any man, however gifted or learned, who has not first received the love thereof.

Secondly. In the choice of your texts take those which strike you most in your regular course of reading the Scriptures. You should preach generally from plain texts; the most edifying preachers pay great attention to this rule.

Thirdly. Ordinarily do not preach from a text before you have written at least an outline of your subject; but do not make your private preparation into public fetters. Always aim at simplicity, unction, and ease; and when preaching, avoid bombast and jocolarity. Do not try to appear more than you are; and remember it is better to be pious without eloquence, than eloquent without piety.

Fourthly. Make it an invariable rule to have Christ in every sermon, whatever your text may be; or, rather select such texts as require an exhibition of Him. Preach Christ first, Christ last, and Christ all through. In tracing the depravity of the human heart confirm your assertions by apt and correct quotations from Scripture.

Fifthly. In the pulpit be humble, and try to avoid common catch-phrases, such as "unworthy dust," "worms of the earth," &c. You tell the people by your presence that you think yourself able to conduct the service; hence when you pray, and when you preach, do so as the Lamb of God. He believed with his heart unto righteousness, and was filled with joy and peace, and received the evidence of his acceptance through faith in the Lord Jesus. The language of his renewed heart was, "this people shall be my people, and their God my God;" hence, he at once became a candidate for membership in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. Having tasted the good Word of God and the powers of the world to come, he felt an earnest desire that others should be made partakers of like precious blessings; and from an ardent desire to save souls, he was willing to labour to accomplish the desired object, and accordingly his name was placed on the circuit's plan, on which it remained till his death, a period of twenty-three years.

As a preacher, his appearance was humble, his manner unaffected, his sentiments scriptural, and expressed in words which could not be condemned; his labours were acceptable, and not in vain. Hence, he has left some behind who will be the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord.

As a husband and father, he was kind, faithful, sympathetic, and affectionate. As a Christian, his conduct was exemplary, his piety genuine and steady in its development; holding fast the beginning of his confidence, he went on to perfection, his path being that of the just, shining brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Taking the Word of God as his guide, he went on from strength to strength, until he had fought the battles of the Lord. He left the scene of conflict in peace. For several years he suffered from a disease which greatly limited his usefulness, and ultimately terminated his earthly career. But he bore his affliction with patience and submission, saying, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth to him good." His departure was earlier than it was expected, but it was all right with him. The only thing that bound him to earth was his family, which he loved, and felt it hard to leave; but believing in the faithfulness of Him who saith, "I will be a Father to the fatherless," he was enabled to commit them to Him; and having done so, he fell asleep in Jesus, February 25th, 1862. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints." "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The end of the perfect man is peace. "To die is gain." What a contrast between the death of the righteous and the death of the wicked; the former is taken away in mercy, the latter is driven away in wrath. From what? Where to? Unconverted reader, think. The body of our departed brother was interred in the Primitive Methodist Chapel on Tuesday, March 4th, by the writer, in the presence of about 400 spectators. The grave is now the house of his body, but his disembodied spirit stands in the presence of God, where there is fulness of joy. Here, he was faithful over a few things; there, he is made ruler over many things. Here he walked by faith; there he walks by sight. Here he possessed a lively hope; there he possesseth the reality.

Here, he fought; there, he triumphs. Here he had fears, and conflicts; there,

“Not a wave of trouble rolls,
Across his peaceful breast.”

By his removal, the society has lost a prop; his wife, a kind husband; his children, an affectionate father. May they all meet him in heaven. Amen.

“Oh happy saint, may we
Like thee be blest;
In life be faithful,
And in death find rest.”

JOHN SMITH.

8. WILLIAM MURRAY, late of Harrington, Whitehaven Circuit, was the son of Daniel and Sarah Murray, and was born at Gilcrux, in the County of Cumberland, on May 29th, 1801. Of his early life we have only a partial account. His father was a praying man, and this no doubt had its influence in preserving William from that excess of folly into which many unhappily run, and in strengthening those principles which were developed in his subsequent life. Though moral in his deportment, he remained a stranger to saving religion till he was twenty-six years of age.

In February 1826 he entered the marriage state with her who is left to mourn her loss, and in November 1827, they lost their first-born child at the age of little more than nine months; under this bereavement he was led to serious thoughts about his soul, and in the following month his convictions were increased while he suffered from personal affliction, and he earnestly prayed for the pardon of his sins. In his affliction he was visited by members of the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Societies, and occasionally by the travelling preachers of the latter; it was however when alone that he realized a sense of pardon by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, which blessing he often said was as clear as the noon-day sun. Having obtained a blessed assurance of the forgiveness of his sins, he praised God, and told his friends and others what great things the Lord had done for him. Soon after he had found peace he regained his strength, and shortly after he removed to Hensingham, at which place he united with the Primitive Methodist Society, and in a few months he was appointed to the office of a class-leader, which office he sustained till he was removed by death. He returned to Harrington in 1831, and has been connected with our cause there more than thirty years.

In 1836 his name appeared on the preachers' plan, and his commanding appearance, strong voice, musical powers, knowledge of divine truth, and his possessing more than an average mental and moral attainments, with his earnestness for the prosperity of God's cause, rendered his pulpit labours acceptable and useful through the circuit. His superior a holy, zealous servant of God. Never attempt to say fine things to God ; and say the Lord's prayer in the same tone of voice as your other prayers ; and when the service is over, and you retire to a friend's house, never leave without prayer, and if possible always stay at the place at which you are appointed until the prayer-meeting is over.

Sixthly. Never neglect an appointment, and always be in time. The observance of this rule will many a time ensure you a good congregation, and will earn for you the confidence and respect of the people. And when you go to your appointments, go as a workman ; do not be disheartened by difficulties, or the coldness of the weather, nor faint with hardships and fatigue ; but go solely to glorify God. Go, brethren ; go, hearing Jesus Christ say, "Lo, I am with you alway." Go, brethren, go, fired with the zeal of many of our ancestors, who exclaimed like Wesley, "The best of all, God is with us." And when you feel discouraged, remember that "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars for ever and ever."

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

1. PARENTAL AUTHORITY.

THE ideas of obedience ought to be early and firmly associated with ideas of security and happiness. Hence the imbecility and helplessness of infancy afford us the means of effecting one salutary purpose. Entirely dependent on the wisdom and experience of others, to guard them from the danger to which they are hourly exposed, children might be easily made to learn the advantages of obedience ; and thus they infallibly would learn it, if obedience were properly enforced. Were all prohibitions made absolute, and the necessity of issuing them guarded as much as possible, so that they should not often occur, it would go far towards rendering obedience natural and easy ; for it would then appear a matter of necessity, and as such be submitted to without reluctance.

I was some years ago intimately acquainted with a respectable and happy family, where the behaviour of the children excited my admiration. One morning, on entering the drawing-room, I found the little group at high play round their fond mother, who was encouraging their sportive vivacity, which was at that time noisy enough, but which, on my entrance, she hushed with a single word. No bad humour followed. But as the spirits, which had been elevated by the preceding amusement, could not at once sink into a state of quiescence, the judicious mother did not require what she knew could not without difficulty be complied with, but calmly addressing them, gave the choice of remaining in the room without any noise, or of going to their own apartment, where they might make what noise they pleased. The eldest and the youngest of the four preferred the former, while the two others went away to the nursery. Those who stayed amused themselves by cutting paper in a corner, without giving any interruption to our conversation. I could not refrain from expressing my admiration at their behaviour, and begged to know by what art she had attained such a perfect government of her children's wills and actions. "By no art," returned this excellent parent, "but that of teaching them from the very cradle an implicit submission. Having never once been permitted to disobey me, they have no idea of attempting it; but you see I always give them a choice when it can be done with propriety; if it cannot, whatever I say they know to be a law, like that of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not." The happy effects of this discipline were soon rendered more conspicuous during the very long illness of this amiable mother; who, when confined to her chamber, continued to regulate her family through the medium of her eldest daughter, then a child of eleven years old. Affectionate as obedient, this amiable girl not only attended her mother's sick bed with the most tender assiduity, but, acting as her mother's substitute towards her little brothers and sisters, directed their conduct and behaviour, and was obeyed with un murmuring submission as if their mother had herself been present.

Was her mother so ill as to render noise particularly injurious? All was, by her care, hushed into silence. She invented plays for the little ones, which would make no disturbance, and taught them to speak in whispers. It was a sufficient reward for their forbearance to be told by her that mamma sent them a kiss, and thanked them for their goodness, and that she had been the better for it.

What a foundation was there laid for the operation of benevolence! Let us compare this with the behaviour of an indulged child, to whom the gratification of self-will had become habitual, who had never been taught to submit to aught but force, and to whom submission was consequently hateful, exciting all the painful emotions of anger, indignation, and resentment. I have known such a child make use of a parent's illness as a means of procuring the gratification of all its capricious humours; when, seeing the pains that were taken to prevent noise, it would, on the least opposition, cry out, "If you don't give it me this minute, I'll roar;" and accordingly she would roar till she had what she wanted. What are the dispositions which, in the latter case, must have naturally been inspired? To the pleasing associations attached to the gratification of self-will, the idea of inflicting pain upon others must likewise be attached. What a foundation for that cruelty which is always allied to a tyrannical disposition! Nor is this all. The exultation consequent upon thus carrying her point, must have engendered pride; and by aggravating opposition into injury, brought forth anger and resentment; and from the extravagance of childish humours, this opposition must frequently occur, so that these hateful passions must soon gain the strength of habit, and a propensity to them be for ever fixed and rooted in the disposition. Let us suppose the same indulgence continued through the early stages of youth, in the fond hope that reason will conquer passion as the child advances to maturity. Were the nature of passion, with regard to the influence it has upon the judgment, properly attended to, I believe this fond hope would soon be annihilated. On a mind under the dominion of passion, the calm suggestions of reason can have little influence, supposing the calm suggestions of reason possible in such circumstances. But it is not possible; for to a mind under the dominion of the selfish passions, that appears to be just and reasonable, which is, in reality, unjust and unreasonable in the last degree; because the idea of just and unreasonable are all, by pride, associated with the idea of the gratification of self-will.—Extracted from

2. THE FAMILY, A RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION.

THAT the Church of Christ is a purely religious institution is unquestionable, but that the family is as strictly and solely so, is not a conviction that is generally and definitely prevalent. It is regarded as exerting a high and moral influence, as being the proper nursery of the future man, and of the undying spirit; but it is far from being invested, in the popular mind, with that high and heaven-derived religious character which properly attaches to it. It is the object of this article to show that the family is as strictly a religious institution as the church. Where the form of either exists without the indwelling spirit of piety they are perverted and corrupt. The remark is equally applicable to both, for an irreligious family is as essentially an abhorrence in the sight of God as a soulless and corrupt church.

God has established the social relation of the family circle. When He had laid the foundations of the earth, and fixed the bounds of the sea, and set in sure and lasting order all material things, He established the law of marriage to regulate man, whom He had made a social and moral being. It was thus that in this institution He laid the foundation of society, on which the whole superstructure of morality and piety was to rest. Man was at that time a holy being, and all the circumstances and relations that were then ordered concerning him, had reference to the holy end for which he was created. Therefore it is that this family relation, being established by God for the right regulation and development of holy man, is a purely religious institution. Yea, and it has even a pre-eminence over the church in the fact of its pre-existence :—it was the first religious institution. It was an earthly type, pure and symmetrical, of the heavenly world; it was an appropriate nursery of newly-created beings, and was fully adapted to prepare them for that family in which God is recognized more directly as the Father, and of which, in itself, it was the lovely miniature. The church ranks after it in order of time, because it ranks after it in order of necessity. It was not until man, through the blinding influence of sin, lost sight of the great family above, that the church, with its rich provisions for man's fallen state, became necessary as a remedial institution. The church on earth is now a more extended type than the family, embodying more palpably to the darkened eye of man the heavenly world, to which it is introductory. It is a new link, inserted to reconnect the broken chain. Heaven being forgotten, the church is the "New Jerusalem which has come down from heaven," embosoming unnumbered blessings in the illustrations it affords to man of the glorious church above, in the instructions it furnishes, and in the regenerating and sanctifying grace it dispenses.

The character and perpetuity of the family, as a religious institution, is seen in the fact that God deals with and recognizes it as such. He gives promises unto the households of those who will fear Him and keep His commandment. He threatens household calamities as the consequence of parental disobedience. He enjoins religious duties in families. Alluding to His commandments and ordinances He says, "And ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up; and thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates; that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord swore unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth." The Scriptures abound with passages of the like nature, most unequivocally confirming the declaration that God deals with families as religious institutions. It is to the faithful discharge of household duties, and the consistent manifestation of family piety, that He makes the amplest promises of temporal and spiritual blessings; and to the neglect of these that He threatens the severest judgments.

Under the old dispensation, which, though ceremonial, was typical of that which is more spiritual, family sacrifices were instituted; especially the sacrifice of the Paschal Lamb by every household. And from the earliest ages of the world, as recorded in Scriptures, the heads of households were accustomed to offer their household sacrifices. And as there can be no doubt that these sacrifices were of divine origin, we cannot but interpret their practice in the patriarchal, and subsequently in all the Israelitish families, as a seal, divinely set, to distinguish them as the primary religious communities. God covenanted with Abraham and his seed; and He established circumcision as the seal and token of His solemn covenant with the families of the Jews. Thus here we have, by God Himself, in His covenant transaction, another distinct recognition of the family institution as one strictly religious. Among the ten commandments, the requirements of which are moral, and therefore perpetual, the fifth was framed expressly for the family; the second contains a striking instance of God's proposed dealings with families; and the fourth enjoins upon the parent the duty of direct and authoritative religious supervision of his household. And when it is borne in mind that these moral laws are based in the very nature of things, and therefore ever have been and ever will be binding, we can be no longer at a loss how to view the family institution. Its recognition here indicates decisively that it is in its character religious, in its origin coeval, and in its purposed existence co-extensive with the human race. We find, therefore, under the Christian dispensation, the same distinct recognition of family. Religious duties are enjoined as pertaining to the household, and parents are bidden to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. A solemn covenant is perpetuated with believers in behalf of their children, so that we may say unto the parent, as Paul said unto the Jailer, "Believe, and thou shalt be saved; thou and thy house." As far, then, as the divine dealings are concerned, the family and the church are equally recognized as strictly religious institutions. To the former, as really as to the latter, God gives his precepts; of it He makes His requirements, and with it He establishes His covenant and seals it with an ordinance. So that the assemblage of all these signs seems to establish the full claim of a family to a purely religious character.

Still another fact, which confirms the representation of the family as a religious institution, is, that the observance, the integrity, and the prosperity of this institution are found correspondent with the prevalence of true religion. Where simple-hearted piety is the most prevalent in a community, there the family relation is the most frequent, the most pure, the most happy, and the most prosperous. Religion never dwells in a community without dwelling pre-eminently in the family circles, and hallowing these nurseries of piety. There are not wanting illustrations of this fact. The history of Scotland, and of the older States of New England, occur as among the more prominent modern demonstrations of this truth. And wherever, or whenever, piety has manifested that strength which has enabled it to stem the tide of persecution, its flame has been nourished upon the domestic altar, where parents twice and thrice a day have commended themselves and their little ones to the keeping of that Saviour, for whom they were actually counting all things but loss; and in the service of whom they were not merely to confess, but to feel that they knew not what a day would bring forth.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

AUXILIARIES TO SUCCESSFUL TEACHING.

As one part of the teacher's work is to instruct the mind—to cultivate it—it is necessary that his own mind be well stored with accurate information on the subject he intends to teach. Therefore it may be laid down as a rule, that for teaching to be successful, the instructor should possess a well informed and well cultivated mind.

We should smile at the farmer who expected to have a good and abundant crop of corn, while he stinted both the labour and the seed. Let him sow sparingly, and he reaps sparingly. Let him sow bountifully, and he reaps bountifully. So with the teacher, if he come to his work with but a scanty knowledge of his subject—he will fail in one department of his work—he will fail in rearing intelligent minds. In order to prevent this failure, every Sabbath-school teacher should furnish his mind with a rich store of knowledge, out of which he may bring forth "things new and old," anecdotes, illustrations, and facts, which may in their turn serve to clear a difficulty or enforce a truth.

It is a sad sight to see a teacher brought to a stand in his lesson because he has said all he knows about the subject he has to teach, and who, to pass away the time, either repeats what he has said, or still worse, tells the children a tale to eke out the time. No wonder that the children are inattentive. No wonder that the Bible has but few charms for them, or that their playthings are more attractive than the Scripture lesson. If children are compelled to sit on the Sabbath to hear a dull dry lesson, they will soon consider the school hours uninteresting, and use every means in their power to escape its restraints. Perhaps the cause of our elder children's absence from the Sabbath-school, if traced to its source, would be found in the teacher. Children, as a rule, are fond of knowledge, and are ready to give their hearts to those who instruct them. Let a teacher, therefore, show, by the richness of his matter, that there is a vast field of knowledge in connection with the sacred volume—let him shew that he has much to communicate, and that he is willing to impart what he knows, and there will be a drawing out of the sympathies of the child to the instructor, an arousing of the curiosity which may find its full satisfaction in the perusal of the wondrously attractive story of the Babe of Bethlehem.

In order that a teacher may present rich matter to his class, he must study all the branches of Biblical illustration that fall within the scope of his subject: such as the manners and customs of Eastern nations, with the habitation, dress, and social life of the people—Biblical geography and topography, also the zoology and botany of Scripture. Nor should a teacher stop here—he ought to have a fair amount of general information.

Another point which will prove a powerful auxiliary to teaching, and help to make it successful, is the style of the language employed, and the manner of delivery. The tone of voice in which we teach, and the clearness of the language in which we convey instruction, have much to do with the success of a lesson. If the language is obscure, the lesson will not be comprehended; and if the tone of voice is either too loud or too low, the children will not receive the whole of the instruction intended for them, they will be inattentive, and of course will not be much benefited. Much of the confusion in our Sabbath-schools is the result of a want of care on the part of the teachers in the government of the voice. Some persons speak much too loudly, and thus cause noise. Now it is evident that there must be a certain amount of noise in a school, yet it should be more the busy hum of cheerful industry, than noise properly so called. It will help a teacher to keep a class quiet and attentive, if he endeavour to address his children in a clear, gentle voice, a voice which will make itself heard and felt. It must be remembered that the gentle voice is the most powerful, and that sometimes a whisper even, is the most effective.

As an auxiliary to government, teachers will do well to cultivate the eye and the ear. Children are always watching for opportunities of being idle, and often succeed in doing strange things in the very presence of the teacher. You may sometimes see a boy with his eyes apparently fixed on his teacher, occupying himself with his own affairs, perhaps eating some fruit, or admiring some treasure which he has just taken from his pocket. It is a fact also that many teachers are so occupied with their lesson that they do not see one half of what is going on around them. Now if any one wishes to be successful in the government of children, he must possess a quick searching eye. As a rule, it will be found effective to look at the children while speaking. The eye may be made to express much. You have an example of this in the Great Teacher. The impetuous Peter denies his master—yet not so much from a wish to dishonour him, as to shield himself from scorn. Not once, but thrice he renews his protestations. Now the cock crows, and the eye of the Lord is turned on the weak and hasty man. The glance meets Peter's, and oh, what wondrous expression must have been thrown into it! Not a word, and yet the conversations of the past, and the terrible prophecy, all came hurriedly back to Peter's memory, and, rushing from the power of that silent gaze, he sought a place to weep. Reader, let the Great Teacher's eye be a model for thine. The following scene, illustrates the point:—

A teacher was standing before his class, who were sitting at the desk. One little fellow was busily engaged in making a miniature man out of sundry pieces of putty. He was now industriously rolling one piece on his knee, to reduce it to the required girth of the body. A crack, however, happened to exist in the front of the desk at which he was sitting; through this the sharp eye of the teacher discerned what was going on, and, stepping a little closer to the class, he said in a low, but determined strain, "Pass to me that putty." What a look of surprise and confusion came over the young offender! A look which evidently meant, how did he know that I had putty? Can he see through wood? But though there was such a look, there was not a word, not the least attempt to deny; and the half-formed body of the image, with the parts which were to have formed the members, were all quickly passed to the teacher. The looks of the rest of the class evidently testified to the awe which seemed to fill their minds. Another look at the offending boy—a look which silently told how much the teacher was grieved and disappointed—did the work designed. Meeting the glance of the little culprit it melted his heart, and the confused look, the quivering muscle, the deep blush, and the moistened eye, bore testimony to the conflict going on within. Reader, strive to possess this wonderful power, and you will be well rewarded.

Another valuable adjunct to successful teaching, is the power of detecting dissimilar sounds; that is, the detection of every sound which ought not to be heard at that time. Do not rest content until every unexplained noise annoys you, and every improper sound grates upon your ear. Many a child has been stopped in the performance of what was evil, by the quick ear of the teacher overhearing the plan which was being confided to another; and much permanent good has been effected in the class.

The following is a case in point :—Two boys were standing in a garden belonging to a village school in Essex, one Sabbath morning. One boy was a Sabbath scholar only, the other was a member both of the day and Sabbath-school. The latter was standing near a flower-bed admiring the plants, but not going very near, because the path which had to be crossed to reach it had just been freshly gravelled, and the master had given orders that no one was to walk upon it for a day or two. The former boy went to the latter, and the following conversation took place between them :—"Why don't you go over there?" "Because teacher says we are not." "Won't I go though, for all him!" The teacher, who happened to be in the garden admiring some newly opened flowers, caught the last threat, and sent back on the next breeze a determined whisper, "Will you, my boy? I think not." The offender turned round with an astonished glance, and whispered to his companion, "What ears he has!" "Yes, he has," was the return message uttered in a lower whisper, which yet reached the boy. Another glance, and then the resolute fellow walked away, and did not offer during any part of the day to set foot upon the forbidden spot.

In addition to the auxiliaries to successful teaching above noticed, a teacher will find a little professional knowledge of immense value in the teaching and management of children. Having, as he has, to do with a being possessed of faculties and powers which are developed at different periods of life, a teacher who wishes to be successful must make himself acquainted with the nature of a child's development, so that he may know what to apply, and when to apply, that which is necessary to furnish the mind and educate the soul. If a teacher is ignorant of the nature of a child's mind, and of the most prominent characteristics of childhood, he will necessarily make a great many mistakes in teaching; he will mistake the love of activity for the love of mischief; he will mistake the love of knowledge for impertinence, and attribute natural forgetfulness to wilful inattention; or, forgetting that sympathy is the key to the child's heart, a teacher may lose many precious opportunities of attaching the child to himself; and failing to realize the plastic nature of a child's mind, may be unmindful of the effect which his own conduct has on the sensitive and impressible material with which he is brought into contact.

Again, from not knowing a little about the intellectual faculties of his children, a teacher will preach to those who have no power to understand the drift of his remarks; and expect mere babes to generalise upon things far beyond their reach, and to apply lessons to themselves, when they have no power to reason or reflect; or, on the other hand, he will leave those whose reason and judgment are matured, without proper stimulus and exercise.

It is not enough, however, for a teacher to understand the nature of the material upon which he has to operate. This, though very important, will not of itself ensure success in the practical work of teaching. We will take an illustration. A man might know the nature of a certain piece of wood, might understand its structure, and yet if required to form that raw material into a piece of furniture, would be quite unable to do so. Now, why is this? Simply because he does not know what tools are required to do the appointed work.

Let us proceed a step further in our illustration. Let it be granted, that the man does know the names of the different tools which are required to accomplish the different kinds of work, will this knowledge give him the power of using the instruments? Certainly not, he must acquire skill in the management of the tools. He must observe how others use them, and then practise with them himself. So with the Sabbath-school teacher: he must not only study the nature of the materials upon which he has to operate, not only know what appliances are necessary to do the desired work, but he must practise on the material—he must apply the tools, and then he may hope to succeed.

Can any amount of study be too great to fit one for this work? Can any amount of labour which may be bestowed upon the preparation for it be too great? Look into yonder studio; watch the artist at his work—mark the beauty of those lines, the expression of that face which is just receiving the last touches of the magic chisel! While looking and admiring, enquire how it is that the artist has such power over the block, and that out of such a rough unpromising mass, he has produced such a work. To understand how it is, you must cast your eye back twenty years, and watch the then young aspirant for honours—now he scrutinizes this block, then that; now he makes long journeys to inspect the triumphs of the great masters; now he studies the nature of lines, now he carves an arm; now he misforms a muscle; now ventures an eye; now destroys the work of his hands, and begins again. Again he fails, and again attempts, and it is not until after many trials, and many failures, that he succeeds; but he does succeed, and the peaceful folds of the drapery, the symmetry of form, and the expression of the lips and eyes testify that at last his efforts have been crowned with success; yet, what has the man made? What looks like man—the dress, the form, The eye are there; but yet it sees not, feels not,

Lives not. It is marble still.

Yours, my Christian friends, is a nobler work. It is

To take the bud, mark its unfoldings,
Furnish and adorn it with unfading Beauties. To trace upon the soul the Outlines of a nobler character.
To work for heaven, and be co-worker
With the Lord of Hosts.

Christian teacher! let the end of your work be kept in view, and let the good to be accomplished, and the reward to be obtained, animate you to study the nature of your children, and the best methods of conveying your instruction; and remember, that what has been done by others, may be done by you, if you will only set about the work in hand with prayerful earnestness, courage, and persevering determination.

MISCELLANIES.

1. THE EDITOR'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

WE presume that very many of our friends know that the appointment to the editorial office is, according to the rules of the Connexion, for five years only at the utmost; hence having fulfilled our official term, we are about to return, D.V., to the ranks of the itinerancy.

Before leaving London we deem it to be our duty, as we esteem it a privilege, to address a few words to our friends, especially to those who have been contributors to, and to those who are readers of, the Primitive Methodist Magazines.

In the first place we wish most gratefully to acknowledge the innumerable obligations under which we are laid to that gracious Providence, to whom we are indebted for life with its privileges, health with its comforts, and grace with its possessions and prospects. O that the sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit may be more richly enjoyed by us as the best preparative for future usefulness, and may we, in deep self-abasement of soul, increasingly devote our mental and moral powers to the promotion of the glory of God and the salvation of mankind. Such a course is unquestionably our duty, and we have great pleasure in the enjoyment of the fullest conviction, that every part of our duty towards God and man is, in its proper performance, a glorious privilege. With these views, or those of a kindred character, we entered on our editorial work five years ago, and as we have prosecuted our labours throughout this period, we have felt privileged, because we have believed we were acting in accordance with the will of God, and with equal if not increased pleasure we shall, if the Lord permit, resume our former position, and become once more a fellow-worker with those who labour in word and doctrine for the conversion of sinners and the edification of believers, that they may be built up in their most holy faith, and that being rooted and grounded in love, they may be able to comprehend with all saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that they may be filled with all the fulness of God. The desires of our heart, the aspirations of our soul, the passions, powers, and attributes of our nature, we devoutly and ardently hope, will be employed in this glorious enterprise, while we remain on earth, and when we die we hope through grace to meet our friends with innumerable millions of ransomed spirits which "worship God day and night in His temple."

We are deeply sensible of our obligations to many correspondents, not a few of whom have kindly, continuously, and efficiently contributed towards the serials under our editorial care, and we deem it our duty to say, that, from the general character of such contributions, they have been well adapted to promote pure religion.

While we tender our best thanks to our correspondents for their efficient help, we beg to assure them that in vacating our present position, and returning to a more limited sphere of action, we anticipate many comforting reminiscences in connection with our past and present associations. Furthermore, if in the exercise of our judgment, and in the discharge of our duties of office, we have in any cases caused unmerited pain of mind, we hereby assure our friends that such was by no means our design, hence we hope that from those persons, if such there are, we shall experience that same charity which we trust we shall ever manifest towards them and others.

The toil, care, and anxiety of office, have been more comfortably sustained from the large patronage vouchsafed towards our Connexional works. The circulation of the Large and Juvenile Magazines has, for some years, been nearly 700,000 numbers annually, and this in the midst of immense competition. However, this circulation alone would have afforded small cause for rejoicing, but from testimonies borne of the blessings which have resulted from the perusal of these serials we feel we have cause to rejoice; at the same time we ascribe all the glory, of any good which may have been realized, to God, to whom it is most righteously due.

We are quite sensible of many imperfections in the execution of the duties of our office, and while we frankly make this admission, we beg the exercise of that Christian candour, which we hope will be generously exercised, and if this be done to the extent it has been experienced in time past, we shall be fully satisfied.

Ere we finally relinquish office we beg for our successor a continuation of all that help which we have experienced at the hands of our friends, and we pray that he may also enjoy much Divine aid in the discharge of the onerous duties he will have to fulfil. Nor for the editor elect only is it desirable that much help should be afforded, the executive should by no means be forgotten, especially before the throne of sovereign grace. Brethren and friends, pray that the members of the several committees at their weekly meetings in London, &c., may be guided in judgment, and that the influence of their Christian courtesy, and official as well as personal fidelity, may be felt from the centre to the utmost limits of our Zion.

With no small degree of pleasure we bear our testimony to the Christian candour, and the harmonious co-operation with which we and our brother officers of the executive and the other members of the General Committee in London, have been enabled to labour together in seeking to conserve the best interests of the Connexion, and to more fully develop its vast resources for the benefit of the human family. Nor would we forget to make grateful record of the attention paid and the kindness evinced by those gentlemen and their employes with whom we have had to do business, and we assure the said parties that however long our life may be extended, pleasing remembrances of their conduct will not fail to occupy a place in our memory through our future days, and we pray that their present happiness and personal salvation may be fully realized by grace, through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In drawing this address towards a close we beg an interest in the prayers of the faithful, that on entering our future station or stations, and in prosecuting our work, we and those with whom we may be associated, may have the happiness of witnessing an extensive revival of vital godliness, and that the word of truth may be mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds. "Brethren pray for us."

And may we, with the Psalmist, by uniform holiness, ever say, "Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel," making the sacred Scriptures the rule of our faith, the Holy Spirit our guide, the blessed Saviour our example, and hope in the God of our salvation, the anchor of our soul, sure and steadfast. And may the Primitive Methodist section of 'the Church of Christ go forth to the performance of her several duties strong in the Lord and in the power of His might, and may the name of Jehovah speedily become great among the Gentiles, and His salvation enjoyed "from the rivers to the ends of the earth!"

And now, dear friends, farewell; may peace be with you and love with faith, from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Amen.

WILLIAM HARLAND.

2. SILCHESTER AS IT WAS, AND SILCHESTER AS IT IS.

SILCHESTER was the Caer-Segout of the Britons, and the Vindonum of the Romans. Its name Caer-Segout, was obtained from its having been the chief city of the Segontiacæ. That it was afterwards a principal Roman station is evidenced not only by its magnitude, and the mode of construction observed in building the walls, but also by the various Roman roads which branch off in various directions, and by numerous vestiges of Roman occupation that have been discovered here, but it is not certain that they were the founders of the city. It is supposed that the chief city was founded by the ancient Britons, and what confirms the conjecture is, that British coins have been found here, among which is one of gold, another of silver, well preserved. Camden affirms that the usurper Constantine was invested with the purple in this city, in A.D. 407. The British king Arthur is also said to have been crowned here, but that in his time the former splendour of Silchester was attested only by its bare walls and heaps of ruins; it having been destroyed by the fierce Ella on his march to Bath, about A.D. 473. The city in its prosperity was truly noble. The circumference of the walls measured nearly two English miles, which were of an amazing thickness, full twenty-four feet. Towers were erected on the walls at certain distances, and especially the gates were ornamented and defended by them. From these towers and battlements the garrison annoyed the attacking foe, by tumbling large stones, or pouring melted metal upon their heads. Indeed it was almost impossible to take such a city in those times, when cannon were neither known nor thought of; the usual mode being to batter the walls with an engine, called a battering-ram.

The ponderous and amazing walls of Silchester were peculiarly adapted to resist an attack of this kind. Its foundations were made with large flag-stones, from two to four feet in breadth, and four in length, and of equal thickness. Upon these stones was laid a stratum of rubble stone, or large ragged cement. This was continued to the height of two feet and a half, and then followed another layer of flat stones, &c. Besides the principal wall the whole city was surrounded by a large ditch. On the other side of the ditch was the Pommerium, or serried tract of ground, which surrounded the whole city. On this space no buildings of any kind were allowed, neither was it lawful to cultivate any part of it. In times of peace and security, it formed a pleasant kind of walk to the inhabitants, and in case of an attack by an enemy, there was no shelter to protect him from the darts and other missiles thrown from the city walls. This city in its prosperity, was not only strongly fortified with walls, towers, gates, battlements, and trenches; it was also rich in private houses, public buildings, and streets, and was, in all probability, very populous. It had four gates standing exactly north, south, east, and west, from each of which was a street, thirty feet wide, extending to the opposite entrance. Besides these, there were ten smaller streets, running in a direct line with the large ones, and intersecting each other. About 150 yards from the north-east angle of the wall was a Roman amphitheatre, the elevation ranged in five rows of seats, one above another. This was the place in which the public shows were exhibited. Here the gladiators, or naked prize-fighters, used to exhibit their skill, and here the people used to witness the athletic games, such as wrestling, feats of strength, &c. Here too, wild beasts used to be brought forth to fight with each other, and thus afford a brutal pleasure to the polished Romans. This was also the place of public execution; for when a criminal was condemned to fight with a lion, tiger, or any ferocious animal, the combat took place here; and on the sides which bounded the area, the spectators sat to view the disgusting sights and barbarous exhibitions. Oh! what scenes have taken place in this now silent and deserted spot. The lion's roar and the tiger's howl have echoed through these woodlands; the shrieks of the torn victim have here rent the air while the shouts of the multitudes, as cruel as the beasts which afforded them such pleasure, were still more awful. How thankful should we be for milder punishments and more rational pleasures! Thank Heaven for that Gospel which has ameliorated our condition! The prosperity of this city while under British dominion was short-lived. The Saxons poured into this afflicted and desolate kingdom, and like others of the noblest monuments of human skill and labour, this city was doomed to destruction. The fierce Ella flushed with victory assaulted it with the utmost fury. The greatest efforts, of the courageous inhabitants, to save the city were in vain. The Saxons entered and wreaked their vengeance on all they found. Every man, woman, and child, was indiscriminately murdered; the hoary head and the smiling infant met with no pity. The barbarians massacred all, and set fire to the uninhabited and empty buildings, thus rendering Silchester a heap of ruins; and there is reason to suppose they left the place in nearly the same state as that in which it now appears to the wondering peasant and admiring antiquary.

Silchester as it is.—Its present name, according to some writers is from the Saxon language, Sel, great or high, and Chester, a city. In its present state it is supposed to be one of the most perfect remains of Roman power in the kingdom, and from its elevated site it commands a very extensive prospect over Hampshire and Berkshire. The proudest monuments of human greatness are subject to decay. Silchester has been for 1,400 years, a heap of rubbish. A small parish church and a farmhouse, with its appendages, now stand within the ancient walls, and present an amazing contrast to the appearance, pursuits, and bustle of former ages. The inclosed area contains about a hundred acres which have long been cultivated, and are divided into seven fields, so that the humble and useful husbandman is now the principal occupant of this peaceful, solitary spot, which, in the fourth century, was peopled with Roman soldiers and was the theatre of remorseless battles, savage sports, and senseless pagan ceremonies. The scattered village of Silchester contains 490 souls.

The Primitive Methodist missionaries commenced their labours in this village about twenty-seven years ago, and through the blessing of God on the word preached, sinners were awakened and saved, a society raised, and the Lord blessed and prospered it. In 1839, a Primitive Methodist chapel was erected at a cost of £335 12s. 6d., where the doctrines of the cross have been successfully preached—not without opposition—but the cause has gone on.

After many reverses, Silchester is the head of a branch of Reading Circuit, with a society of thirty eight members. In 1861, jubilee services were held at Silchester, and Chatter Alley, of an interesting character, at which nearly £20 were contributed and promised towards the Jubilee fund. After labouring peacefully and I trust successfully, two years on this branch, I and my family bade Silchester adieu in July, 1861, to toil in another part of our beloved Zion.

NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. A Full Report of the Speeches at the Great Meeting held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, on Tuesday, May 13th, 1862, in support of the Primitive Methodist Home and Foreign Missions. E. Baines, Esq., M.P., in the chair. London: published by Thomas Church, 11, Crescent Terrace, Millbank, S.W., and sold at the Primitive Methodist Book Room. Price Fourpence. (Fourth thousand.)

MR. CHURCH has rendered good service to Metropolitan Primitive Methodism, and to the Primitive Methodist Connection generally, by issuing the publication before us. The pamphlet is neatly got up, the paper and typography are respectable, and, on the whole, the purchaser may rely on receiving a good fourpennyworth for his money. The speeches are distinguished by good sense, sound reasoning, and powerful eloquence, such as our readers would expect on such an occasion and from such speakers. The excellent chairman spoke as became a gentleman of another Christian community, on the platform of a Primitive Methodist Missionary Meeting; Mr. Spurgeon was very happy and hearty in his congratulatory address; and Messrs. G. Warner, S. Antliff, R. Key, and T. Greenbury, well sustained the credit of the Connexion in their earnest and excellent addresses, and it is no scant praise to say the report read by Mr. Penrose was worthy of the occasion, and was received with considerable demonstrations of approval. To all our friends who wish to have a good Report of the Great Metropolitan Missionary Meeting of 1862, we would say, delay not to order the one now before us. W. A.

2. The Annals of the English Bible.

By CHRISTOPHER ANDERSON. A new and revised edition. Edited by his nephew, Hugh Anderson. London: Jackson, Walford and Hodder, 18, St. Paul's Churchyard. 1862.

This book is truly what its name imports, and is one of those rare productions with which we are sometimes privileged, and which astound, please, and profit us. It is however difficult in this brief notice to give any thing like an adequate idea of the research involved, the ability displayed, the moral honesty evinced, and the information communicated. It is not enough to say that the author ranks among the masters in Israel, but he evidently feels the importance of his subject as one of the most sublime of God's.—Jehovah stooping to reveal Himself to men.

In the volume before us, the goodness and providence of God are so strikingly manifested, that as we have read and pondered, we have adored Him, the history of whose revelation, especially affecting Great Britain, supplies such a development of the combined attributes of mercy and love towards our fatherland in securing to our teeming population the inestimable boon of eternal truth, as contained in the Sacred Scriptures.

In addition to the work itself, we are favoured with a valuable preface, a full and clear table of contents, and an excellent introduction. The work itself is replete with very valuable information, and then follow a chronological index list of English bibles and new testaments, and this is succeeded by an historical index to the annals of the English bible.

To students, ministers, and all intelligent readers of the Sacred Scriptures, the work will prove a great boon, especially if they do not already possess a work of the kind; hence we recommend them to purchase it without delay. It should also have a place in every Sunday-school library throughout the nation.

3. The Providence of God, viewed in the light of Holy Scripture. By THOMAS JACKSON. London: Published by John Mason, 27, City Road; sold at 66, Paternoster Row.

We fully concur with the author of the volume before us, that "the providence of God is one of the most prominent subjects of Holy Scripture," and we rejoice that subject has fallen into the hands of our author.

The work is divided into fourteen parts, which are succeeded by several valuable notes.

The following subjects will prepare the minds of our readers for judging of the arrangement.

The 1st chapter is on "the providence of God viewed in connection with the creation. 2. With the fall and redemption of mankind. 3. In its relation to the angelic world. 4. In relation to inorganic matter, vegetation and brute creatures. 5. With respect to individuals of mankind. 6. With respect to the Hebrew nation. 7. With respect to nations in general. 8. With respect to the Christian Church. 9. The retribution of providence. 10. The remunerations of providence. 11. Providential answers to prayer. 12. The permissive providence of God. 13. The overruling providence of God. 14. The providence of God a moral discipline."

The subject is certainly a very interesting one, and it is treated in such a way, and with simplicity and force, as leads us to conclude that the author has really aimed at securing the best interests of his readers and the promotion of the glory of God.

The providence of God, we fear, is not sufficiently appreciated by many people who are professors of religion, hence the attributing to secondary causes many things which are the immediate results of a gracious providence. We hope the work will have a wide circulation; while the fact that "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," as in this work established, will have a tendency to retard the froward in their course of folly, and will prompt to more holy and extensive action all those who fear God, and labour to promote his gracious designs in this world.

W. H.

4. Passing Events Improved. By the Rev. F. FERGUSON, M.A., minister of Blackfriars Street Independent Church, Glasgow, author of "Peace with God," "Holiness," &c. Glasgow: Thomas Adamson, 165, Cowcaddens Street. Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo, 2, St. David Street. London: Ward and Co., Paternoster Row. 1862.

THE author of this work has furnished his readers with eleven good practical sermons, in which he improves passing events, of a very impressive character, to a good purpose. In his first sermon he takes up, and in a highly interesting manner expatiates on the death of the late lamented Prince Consort. The text is, "The flower fadeth; but the Word of our God shall stand for ever." Isaiah xl. 8. The subject is divided into the following propositions.

I. In what respects the late lamented prince resembled the blooming flowers of the field.

II. His sudden decay.

III. The lessons which this decay teaches.

IV. The high consolation contained in the clause, "But the word of our God shall stand for ever."

Our author's style, his very creditable method, which is neither meagre nor verbose, his matter as a whole is excellent, and abounds with stirring incidents, clearly stated without sacrificing truth to rhetoric. We recommend the work. It will do good. W. H.

5. Troublous Times; or, Leaves from the Note Book of the Rev. Mr. JOHN HICKS, an ejected Nonconformist Minister, 1670-71. Transcribed by JANE BOWRING CRANCH, with an Introduction by the Rev. CHARLES STANFORD. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 18, St. Paul's Churchyard.

"THIS is a story of old Puritan life," and in many of the incidents recorded, furnishes afflictive proof of the sad state of things in this country 200 years ago. Indeed, when men, whether Kings or Popes, whether constituting councils or synods, assume to themselves the arrogance of prescribing what men shall believe, and what they shall not believe, and when added to this they are invested with temporal power to carry out their purposes, it is impossible to say to what lengths intolerance may carry them.

The book before us is one of a class which if reading it be commenced, it will be found difficult to lay it aside until it has been read quite through. Had the work been composed of facts only, it would have been more congenial to our own views and feelings, but it nevertheless contains so many well-authenticated and important incidents, and is written in such an interesting style (though quaint), that we cannot doubt its adaptation for usefulness, and shall be much mistaken if it do not obtain a large circulation. W. H.

6. On Division among Christians, viewed in connection with the Mystery of Lawlessness. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row,

PERHAPS our author has adopted a prudent course by remaining incog. We give him credit for having stated his opinions with considerable frankness, but until his philosophy is better sustained, his logic more in accordance with sound reasoning, and his views of Church Polity less obscured by the vapours of vain imaginations, we presume he is not very likely to do the world much harm, and we wot his present cause is not likely to result in very much good. Perhaps in a future work he will more profoundly elaborate the "Mystery of Lawlessness." W. H.

7. Adaptation; or Mental Fitness between the Order of Things and Man. By THOMAS HUGHES. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co. 1862. Price 1s.

THIS work is divided into twelve sections, well adapted to aid the reader in his perusal of this interesting work, which furnishes a fair illustration of the title. Take the following as a specimen of the author's style and ability. "The human mind requires regularity and repetition. Its wants return every day; man is slow in learning, he needs the repeating of the same thing times without number. In this also the order of things is adapted to the relations and wants of man. Her agents are never tried; her laws are never impaired; her blessings are never exhausted; her truths are never falsified. She is as regular as the day, punctual as the hour, patient as the sun, and interminable as the endless." We recommend the work. W. H.

8. Immanuel; or the Mystery of the Incarnation of the Son of God. Unfolded by JAMES USHER, Archbishop of Armagh. Reprinted from the editions of 1649 and 1677. London: James Nisbet and Co., Berners Street, 1862.

WE hail with pleasure this valuable reprint of Archbishop Usher's views on a subject fraught with mysteries, most sublime, and with an interest most profound, on which the presumptuous and the heterodox fail not to exercise themselves, with an arrogance that must disgust the pious, while it may stagger the feeble and turn the lame out of the way. Against such vain or wicked scribblers, the venerable Archbishop has uplifted a shield, large enough and strong enough to withstand the most powerful missiles of the enemies of our holy religion. The reading of the work is the feasting at a banquet of fat things. We know not that we ever read a work containing clearer views on "GOD WITH US." W. H.

9. The Fathers of the Wesley Family, Clergymen in Dorsetshire, 1650-1662; (The present, the Bicentenary of their Ejection,) and references to events and changes of their times. By WILLIAM BEAL. Second edition, with many additions. London: William Freeman, 102, Fleet Street. Sellied and Smith, Plymouth; Dunsford, Devonport; Philp, Matthews, and Decker, Liskeard.

Much interesting information is contained in this work on a subject of special interest to Methodists, many of whom, we doubt not, will appreciate the labour and patient research manifested by Mr. Beal in this respectable memorial to departed worth. W. H.

10. The Drunkard's Death. Illustrated by JOHN GILBERT. London. S. W. Partridge, 9, Paternoster Row. Sold by all booksellers.

This is a work of thrilling interest, specially calculated to deeply impress the hearts and strengthen the hands of total abstiners from intoxicating drink, and if carefully read by such as tamper with this monster enemy to man's happiness, we doubt not it will be made a blessing to many, not only in retarding them in their downward course, but we trust it will lead not a few to abandon the intoxicating cup for ever. W. H.

11. The Doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood in relation to the Atonement. By JAMES BALDWIN BROWN, B.A., Author of "The Divine Life in Man." London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row.

FROM the preface of this book, we learn that Mr. Brown's "Divine Life in Man" has been subject to the intense heat of a critic's crucible, but if Mr. Brown's extracts from the pages of his criticiser form a fair specimen of the work which has appeared against him, he certainly has no cause to fear from the intemperate and unsound sentiments which are adduced in opposition to his "doctrine of the Divine Fatherhood in relation to the Atonement." We cordially subscribe to the Fatherly and Magisterial functions of the Governor of the Universe, and hence have much pleasure in recommending the work before us. W. H.

12. Our Principles; or, a Guide for those Holding or Seeking Fellowship in Congregational Churches. By G. B. JOHNSON. Second Edition, greatly enlarged. London: Ward and Co., 27, Paternoster Row.

This manual is valuable and will be appreciated, we presume, by many of the parties whose guidance the Author wishes to secure. While we are in favour of Connexionalism, we deem efforts of this kind as in perfect accordance with proper views of Christian liberty and the right of private judgment. The work is creditable to its esteemed author, and will, by the blessing of God, be useful to its readers. W. H.

13. A Guide to Health. TAYLOR'S Complete Herbalist and Reformed Botanic Practice of Medicine. Hanley: Published by Mr. Taylor, at his Botanic Depot, Broad Street, Shelton.

THE "Guide" before us abounds with useful information on many subjects, and in the hands of prudent people, it will prove a valuable aid, in many cases, to the promotion of health, or the prevention of disease. W. H.

14. Teetotalism. By C. VINES, Author of "The Dictionary Appendix," "The Sabbath," "Key to the Globes," "The Thunderbolt for Rome," &c. London: Macintosh and Hunt, 24, Paternoster Row.

THIS is a valuable tractate, calculated for extensive usefulness. We say to all, whether advocates of, or opponents to, the temperance cause, give the little work a serious and attentive reading. W. H.

REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE OF 1862.

THE Forty-third Annual Conference commenced its sittings in Bethel Chapel, Sheffield, on Wednesday morning, June 4th, at nine o'clock, and continued them by successive adjournments till Friday the 13th.

About 80 delegates attended to represent the home and colonial districts of the Connexion.

The Reports of the various stations were carefully examined, and the Connexion in general was found to be in a healthy and prosperous condition.

An increase in the number of members was reported by most of the stations; and where a decrease was reported, the Conference was very anxious to adopt the best practical measures to remedy the evil.

Legislation was sent from several of the Districts, some parts of which were after careful deliberation adopted.

Several young men were received as candidates for the Ministry, and others having honourably fulfilled their probation, and being recommended by their several District Meetings, were admitted into the number of approved ministers.

The Connexional Chapels were found to be increasing in number, and the debts upon them at the same time to be lessening.

Some of the funds—especially the Chapel and Conference Funds—were in need of greatly enlarged resources, and resolutions were adopted with the object of securing an improvement for the ensuing year.

On an early day in the sittings of Conference, a very gratifying instance of Christian sympathy was furnished by Mark Firth, Esq., a member of the New Connexion, who kindly sent a cheque for £100, one half to be devoted to the Mission Fund, and the other as the Conference should see fit.

Also on another day, the General Missionary Secretary received, through Dr. Hoole, of the Wesleyan Mission House, London, and D. E. List, Esq., a donation of upwards of £50 from W. Blanchard, Esq., of the State of Virginia, North America. These timely and liberal contributions, the Conference very thankfully acknowledged.

During the sittings of the Conference, a letter of sympathy to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, under her painful bereavement by the death of the late lamented Prince Consort, was agreed to be sent, and the loyal feelings of the Conference were very warmly expressed.

A Deputation was introduced to the Conference on Monday, the 9th, from the Sheffield Auxiliary of the United Kingdom Alliance for the Suppression of the Liquor Traffic, who presented a respectful memorial, to which the Conference prepared a suitable reply.

The Conference also resolved to petition Parliament for the closing of public-houses on the Sabbath day.

The several religious services held in our own Chapels, the Wesleyan Chapel, Carver-street, kindly lent for the Missionary Meeting, and in the Open Air, were attended with the Divine presence and blessing, and several precious souls obtained salvation thereat.

Several of the pulpits of other Churches were supplied by the delegates on the Conference Sabbath, and the Camp Meeting and Love-feasts were attended with considerable success.

An excellent Temperance Meeting was held in Stanley-street Chapel, on the evening of the 6th; and some of the delegates assisted at other meetings in the Temperance Hall, Townhead-street.

The kindness of the Sheffield friends was what might be expected among warm-hearted Yorkshire people; and the delegates felt much gratification in the society of the various hospitable families by which they were entertained.

The Numerical State of the Connexion will be seen by the following figures:

	Total Numbers.	Increase.
Members ...	141,185	5,791
Travelling Preachers	776	47
Local Preachers ...	12,414	527
Class Leaders ...	8,377	371
Connexional Chapels	2,519	109

Sabbath Schools ...	2,322	143
Teachers ...	34,757	2,019
Scholars ...	189,057	8,993

On the whole, the Sheffield Conference of 1862, will be recollected both by the delegates and e friends who so kindly received them, with feelings of satisfaction and gratitude; and it is believed that "the day will declare" that great spiritual advantage was reaped by many.

Signed, in behalf of the Conference,

W. HARLAND, President.

W. LISTER, Secretary.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

1. RHOSLLANMERCHURGOG.—Rhosllanmerchurgog is a large village, containing a population of about 800 inhabitants, and is four miles south from Wrexham. We had long thought of commencing missionary operations at the place, but many of our friends did not approve of the scheme, inasmuch as it was supposed none of the villagers understood the English language. But it being situated in the midst of a mining district, where many public works are conducted on an extensive scale, some conjectured that there might be some parties in the neighbourhood who could speak and understand English. Hence we decided at length to give the village a trial, and a small house being offered to us, in which to conduct our religious services, we opened our mission in September 1860. In the following January the writer succeeded in raising a small society of seven members, three of whom professed to be converted at the meeting which was held on the evening when the society was formed. The congregations continued to increase until the house was too small to afford accommodation for them. The converting work extended in proportion, so that often many could not obtain admission into the place where we preached. Sometimes, when the weather was very unfavourable, the meetings were held in the open air, and Welsh and English have blended their voices in praises to Jehovah. And our humble endeavours were crowned with signal success. A chapel became absolutely necessary, trustees were obtained, and efforts were made to secure a site of land on which to erect a sanctuary. While the matter was pending, the Baptists offered us their chapel at a very moderate price. We accepted their offer conditionally, laid the case before the proper connexional courts, and obtained their sanction to purchase. After the preliminaries in making out the deeds, the lawyer discovered the Baptists had never had their deeds enrolled; but thanks to our government for the recent act of Parliament, on the enrolment of old deeds, which removed the barrier. The bargain was struck, the deeds were made and enrolled in Her Majesty's High Court of Chancery. We engaged to give £150 for the chapel, £100 of which we borrowed at five per cent. per annum, and gave the chief trustee a promissory note for £50, engaging to pay £30 in three months, and the other £20 in nine months. The thirty pounds, praise the Lord, have been paid, and we hope to be able to pay the remainder next Midsummer.

The chapel is built partly of brick and partly of stone. Its situation is excellent, it is about forty feet by thirty-six. It has a good substantial front gallery, and is also galleried on each side, and will seat about 500 people. The furniture, pulpit, pews, forms, &c., were included in our purchase. We have spent a little in improving the interior of the building, and it needs other improvements which will be attended to as soon as we are able. The chapel was opened in September, 1861, by Miss Bennett, Rev. H. Wheeler, Mr. S. Evans, &c. The sanctuary was crowded on the first day, and the collections amounted to £8 5s. 2d. We are laid under great obligations to some kind friends who have very generously helped us. Our congregations have been good from the opening, and many a poor wanderer has returned home, and many sinners have been converted, within its hallowed walls, and have retired from this sanctuary singing

"New songs do now our lips employ,
And dances our glad heart for joy."

Although it is only about twenty-one months since we commenced our labours here, the last quarter-day, there were reported forty-four members belonging to the place. We have also recently commenced a Sabbath-school which promises to do well. The statistical account forwarded to the district meeting and Conference, is one hundred scholars, and twelve teachers.

Being appointed to preach at the place in March last, I went early in the morning for the purpose of visiting the school, and giving a short address to the children. Upon my arrival the classes were all engaged, and so intensely and earnestly did they appear to be engaged that no notice seemed to be taken of any thing else. The command being given to collect the books all was soon in perfect order, and the children were placed in the centre of the chapel, and after singing I asked them a few plain questions on Bible subjects, &c., &c., and their answers were both quick and correct.

Mr. Editor, I am sure your heart would have been filled with joy to have heard those tender lambs answer so many questions so satisfactorily. Having spent about forty minutes with the little ones in this institution, I commended them to the God of all grace, praying that every child might become great and good in the sight of the Lord, and that the teachers might exhibit their love to Christ by feeding these lambs. PHILIP MADDOCKS.

2. HORNSEA CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,
—At the request of our March

Quarterly Meeting, I send for insertion in our connexional serial a few notes of progress in this station, being the first year of its independent existence. In August last we held a circuit tea-meeting, and a camp-meeting on the sands: the proceeds amounted to nearly £20.

Hornsea.—The cause at this place has been low for many years—the moral soil has been thirsty and barren. Early last winter we began to receive tokens for good, the society awoke to more spirited effort, the tone of our public services was improved, and the cloud of blessing evidently came nearer. On Sabbath, February 16th, 1862, we held a revival meeting, and had a high day; after the lovefeast in the evening ten persons obtained mercy. Arrangements were made for special services, and during the week several souls were saved, and the good work continues. Additional seats have been let in the chapel, and the society and congregation are doubled. A number of young men have found the Lord, and we hope they will be useful in the cause at this and other places.

Leven.—The society here has risen from nine to seventeen members. We have also established a Sabbath-school, which promises to do well.

Riston.—At this village we have let a number of additional seats, established a Sabbath-school, and commenced a system of regular tract distribution.

Seaton.—Here a steady work has been progressing some time; and twenty have been added to the society. One man was smitten by the Spirit of God while listening at the chapel door; he returned home, his convictions increased, he became so unhappy that his rest was disturbed at nights, and for a week he brought home his dinner which he had taken into the fields to his work, but was unable to eat, and on the following Sabbath morning he obtained peace.

Aldbrough has made a little improvement. Mr. J. Wright, a friend to the Connexion, thought our chapel debt was too heavy, so kindly presented to the trustees £30 to relieve it.

Brandesburton has made some progress; a few souls have been saved; every seat in the chapel is let, and we have a number of applications we cannot supply. Our missionary revenue for the year is £5 in advance of last year. We have, for various causes, removed from the roll books since March, 1861, seventy-eight names, and received into them one hundred and fifty-three. To the adorable Trinity be everlasting praise.

THOMAS WHITTAKER.

3. RIPLEY.—We have lately opened two new places in Greenhill Lane and New Brinsley. At the former we have engaged a small chapel on rent; we have nine members in society, and have established a Sabbath-school; the prospect for good is encouraging. At the latter we have engaged a large room on rent, formed a society of nearly twenty members, got promise of a piece of land for a chapel, and begun a Sabbath-school. This we consider a good opening. Our station is prosperous in everything; the congregations are good; our chapel property is considerably improved; in two cases the debts are reduced; the schools are doing well; we have an increase of 29 teachers and 245 scholars. Our number of members has increased 100 since July 1860, 40 for the last quarter, and 61 for the connexional year. To God be all the glory! We have 20 Sabbath scholars above fourteen years of age, who are members of society; and since the numbers were taken for the March Quarterly Meeting, many more have been converted and added to the Church; so that we hope to stand better at June than we do now. At Amber Row, near Washington, a good work is going on, and our society at Washington has been greatly benefited by it.

At Alfreton, we are doing well; and Crich has greatly improved.

At Ironville some refreshing seasons have been felt, and some young men have united with us. But here we are cramped for want of room, a chapel is much needed.

At Portland Row we have a good work; the society is nearly doubled. But here, too, we are inconvenienced for want of room, and we are trying our best for a chapel.

Selston also is doing better.

Our prosperity we attribute to the Divine blessing on united and persevering labour; for all our brethren have worked well. We have employed no revivalist.

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,

Praise him all creatures here below;

Praise him above ye heavenly host,

Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

J. STEPHENSON.

4. WROCKWARDINE WOOD.—Dear Editor,—I was appointed by our last Quarterly Meeting to write you a notice of the work of God in the Wrockwardine Wood station. The same meeting passed the following resolution:—

"That this meeting records its thanks to Almighty God for the abundant prosperity with which He has blessed us, and for the increase of 433 members during the past year."

As a matter of prudence these were not all reported to the District Meeting and Conference. God has blessed us with four consecutive years of prosperity, and during that time the circuit has reported an increase of 370 members. We have built three new chapels, one at Coal-pit Bank, one at St. George's, and one at Edgmond. Also a new school-room has been built at Eaton. All these are in a working condition. Our prosperity is the result of God's blessing attending the united efforts of the preachers and members of the circuit. We have had Sabbath morning preaching at five o'clock; prayer-meetings or preaching wherever the people desired; by the master's permission we have preached at the Iron Furnaces during the dinner hour; and the women, while their husbands have been at work, have held prayer-meetings during the day. And at all these extra means, as well as at the planned services, many sinners have been converted. To God be all the glory! HENRY LEECH.

5. FAKENHAM.—Dear Editor,—In our article recording the opening of our chapel at Fakenham, which took place in December last, we stated that we had formed a Ladies' Sewing Society, which was doing well, and the bazaar, which was to be opened in a few weeks, was expected to add a considerable amount to the sum then raised. We are happy to inform you that our expectations have been realised.

On the 7th of May the bazaar was opened, and it continued open the two following days, in the British school-room, which was tastefully decorated.

The stalls, eleven in number, were set out in elegant order, and well laden with the valuable produce of industry and liberality.

On Friday, May the 9th, a public tea was provided in the chapel, after which a lecture was given by the Rev. R. Key, "On the Immortality of the Soul, established by Reason, and confirmed by Revelation."

The plan of the lecture was remarkably good; it was at once clear and comprehensive. All the divisions, which were numerous, seemed to us placed in their right logical relation, and their subjects were well defined; the execution was equal to the scheme; and the whole superstructure stood before us as a goodly temple, where earnest sceptics might find a solution of many of their soul-pressing problems, and be taught to worship and adore.

The lecturer developed an extensive acquaintance with the views and tactics of modern infidelity, as it is found both in England and on the continent. He traced it through many of its metaphysical labyrinths, brought it out, took off its mask, and held it up in the broad daylight of reason and consciousness.

The chair was ably occupied by the Rev. H. Alderslade, who for the first time since his superannuation, ten years, attempted to address an assembly. Many were moved to tears—tears of gratitude and joy—when he rose to address them.

At the close of the lecture the Rev. S. B. Gooch, made a few congratulatory remarks to the chairman, and spoke in the highest terms of the lecture, in which all must have concurred; he then prayed, and the meeting broke up.

The attendance at the bazaar was beyond our most sanguine expectations; but in consequence of the weather the attendance at the tea and lecture was not so large as we anticipated; but we did well. The amount placed in the hands of the treasurer by this special effort, after all expenses are paid, is about £20.

The managing committee hereby tender their thanks to all who co-operated with them in preparing articles for their bazaar, and to all who have in any way helped them in this special effort.

O. O. BRITAIN.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.

Dear Editor,—The services of our missionary anniversary at St. PETER'S STREET, CAMBRIDGE, were held as follows,—On Sunday, April 20th, 1862, the Rev. F. Webster, of Hadleigh, preached. The congregations were good, and in the evening prayer meeting there was a display of Divine power in the conversion of souls. On the following day about seventy persons sat down to tea, after which the annual meeting took place. Mr. Mason, of Haslingfield presided; the writer read the report, and the Revs. E. Howchin, of St. Ives, R. Eaglen, of Ely, and F. Webster, the deputation, spoke on the importance of the missionary enterprise at home and abroad. The attendance was good; a gracious influence accompanied the addresses, and the monetary raisings amounted to £18 14s. 7d., being £3 11s. 4d. in advance of last year's amount.

While we heartily praise God as the Author of all good, we also tender unfeigned thanks to the collectors for their diligence, the donors for their donations, and others who have in any way assisted in increasing our missionary income at St. Peter's, which, with that at Fitzroy Street, makes the handsome sum of £35 13s. 8d., for the town of Cambridge, in one year.

THOMAS SWINDILL.

CHAPEL OPENING.

1. WIGHTON, FAKENHAM CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We have long had a large society at Wighton, and the congregations have generally been too large for any dwelling-house to contain. Several attempts were made both by preachers and others in time past to raise a place of worship, but without success, and some were determined, if possible, to prevent our having a chapel; but the Lord has opened our way.

About twelve months ago we obtained the loan of a small barn in which to hold a public tea meeting. Finding it very convenient, several of our friends thought that it would suit them for the purpose of converting into a chapel, and prayer was offered up to God that he would open their way. A few months afterwards an application was made to the person to whom the property belonged, and the result was that we purchased the barn for the sum of £65. The opening services commenced on Sunday, May 18th, 1862, when three sermons were preached by the Rev. O. O. Britain; on Lord's-day, May 25th, Mrs. Winkfield preached in the morning and evening, and the Rev. E. B. Hickman, Independent, of Wells, in the afternoon. The congregation at each service was very large, and on the first day of opening so large that the afternoon and evening services were held on the common.

On Monday, May 26th, a public tea was provided in the chapel, after which a public meeting was held and addresses delivered by the Revs. J. Winkfield and O. O. Britain. The entire cost of purchase, alteration, &c., is about £111, towards which we have raised, by collections, donations, &c., £27.*

The chapel is an ornament to the village and will seat about one hundred persons, the sittings are all let, and several more are required. The trustees hereby tender their thanks to all the friends who have helped them in this undertaking.

* The friends have done well, but we hope they will not rest satisfied till they shall have raised at least one-third of the cost.—ED.

We have not space to name all our benefactors, but Mr. Bircham, who gave us all the lime and stone required for the alteration, and a good donation; and the friends who furnished the trays for the tea, and the pulpit with a Bible and cushion, deserve special mention. That they may all be blessed, and the chapel made the birth-place of many souls is the prayer of

O. O. BRITAIN.

CHAPEL RE-OPENING.

HOPTON BANK, LUDLOW CIRCUIT.—Our chapel at this place was erected in 1837, and was enlarged in 1841, but the debt was not reduced, it was rather increased by the accumulation of interest.* The society afterwards became very low, and continued so till about 1848, when it began to improve; and the debt was afterwards reduced a little, and during the last fourteen years we have reduced it sixty-five pounds. In 1860 we bought a plot of land for a burying ground, which cost £20, and the law expenses were £12 13s. 1d. which sums have been paid. We have recently had the chapel closed for repairs and alterations, and on Sunday, April 6th, 1862, it was re-opened, when three sermons were preached by Mr. Theophilus Edwards, of Malvern, and Rev. F. R. Andrews, our second preacher. The day was rather unfavourable, but the chapel was crowded in the afternoon and evening. The whole of the proceeds amounted to £5 5s., which is as much as we expected.

We feel grateful to all who have aided us in this good work, and we hope at last to meet them in heaven. For another year may the blessing of God rest upon us, —Amen. WILLIAM PREECE.

ORGAN OPENING.

ORGAN OPENING, OLD HILL, DUDLEY CIRCUIT.—Our people at the above place have been improving in Divine things. During the last four months many souls have been converted to God, and the Church has been blessed with a quickening. The congregations have very much increased, and the friends have become more interested in the house of God, and a new one is much needed and desired. We have been recently introducing an organ, which will much increase the value of the chapel estate. The organ, when completed, will cost between £70 and £80. It was opened on Sunday, February 16th, when sermons were preached by the writer, morning and evening, and the Rev. D. Evans, of Dudley, in the afternoon. The collections amounted to £13 14s.

We anticipate that the introduction of this instrument will very much consolidate and improve the singing, which is an important part of the service of God.

N. W. STAFFORD.

LAYING FOUNDATION STONES.

1. ASTON.—Dear Brother Harland,—R. Marston, Esq., solicitor, Ludlow, having kindly given us a plot of land on which to erect a chapel at Aston, in the Leintwardine branch of the Ludlow Circuit, the foundation-stone was laid on Wednesday, April 2d, 1862.

At about three o'clock in the afternoon a large congregation had assembled. The Rev. C. Smallman, of Ludlow, having given out a hymn and prayed, the ceremony of laying the corner stone was performed in the name of the Triune Deity by Mrs. James Nott, of the Farlands. The stone having been laid, the Rev. H. Higginson, of Dndley Port, delivered an interesting address, after which a collection was made, which, crowned with a £5 bill by Mrs. Nott, amounted to upwards of £9.

The proceedings on the ground were concluded with prayer, by Mr. J. Rutter, of Knighton, and the people adjourned to the barn of Mr. Beddows, which was fitted up for the occasion, in which they partook of an excellent tea, the profits of which will be given to the building fund.

After tea a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Mars-ton (Wesleyan), and addressed by Messrs. Norton and Downes, and the Revs. C. Smallman and H. Higginson.

Thanks to all our friends. May the great Head of the Church abundantly bless them all. Amen.

CHARLES SMALLMAN.

2. SELBY BRANCH, SWINEFLEET CIRCUIT.—At this place, on Good Friday, April 18th, 1862, the foundation stone of a new Primitive Methodist chapel was laid by Captain M'Culloch, of York, on a site of freehold ground which has been granted by the Right Honourable Lord Londesborough, and is situated at the junction of Gowthorpe and Brook Streets, Selby. The site is happily chosen, and contains a frontage of 108 feet, and an area of 1270 square yards, at a cost of £60.

At half-past one o'clock, two processions moved from different parts of the town, and met on their way to the market cross, where an address was delivered to a large concourse of people, by W. Briggs, Esq., of Leeds.

The hymn commencing—

"Blow ye the trumpet, blow!"

was then sung along Gowthorpe Street to the site, on which two platforms had been erected, the one for the speakers, the other for donors and friends. After prayer had been offered by the writer, and the Scriptures had been read by Mr. J. Dodsworth, junior, an elegant silver trowel and a suitable mallet were handed by the architect to Captain M'Culloch, who proceeded at once to lay the foundation stone, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

Although the weather was unfavourable, yet the addresses of Captain M'Culloch and the Rev. James Dawson, of Pocklington, were attentively listened to, and the collection which was made on the ground amounted to £26 6s. 4d.

Immediately afterwards 600 persons partook of tea in the public rooms, which repast was gratuitously provided by the ladies of the congregation and other friends of the cause.

The public meeting which followed was presided over by Captain M'Culloch, who afterwards called upon the Rev. J. R. Parkinson to read the report. This document contained the names of the donors to the building fund, and it elicited the applause of the congregation, as it stated, that in addition to the gift of a pump and well on the site, by one gentleman, and the promise of a clock by another, £416 13s. 9d. had up to that period been contributed in aid of the building fund.

The chairman, in addressing the meeting, stated several reasons why a minister's house should be erected when the chapel, class-rooms, and school-room were erected, and generously offered, should his plan be adopted, to contribute £25 additional to the building fund, which offer, as we have sufficient space on the site, was gratefully accepted.

The meeting was subsequently addressed by J. C. Richardson, Esq., York; W. Briggs, Esq., Leeds; the Revs. J. Dawson, Pocklington, D. Clegg (Independent); Messrs. T. Cutting, J. Morley, G. Brown, and J. Dodsworth, junior, Selby. Votes of thanks to the ladies for providing the trays, to the ministers and visitors, to the Chairman, and to the Right Honourable Lord Lonsborough, for the granting of the site, closed the proceedings of this memorable day, the total proceeds of which, including a donation of £20 from Captain M'Culloch, and £2 by W. Briggs, Esq., amounted to £62 1s. 4d. J. R. PARKINSON.

3. HOCKHAM.—Dear Editor,—The ceremony of laying the foundation of a new school-room at Hockham, Thetford Circuit, took place on Good Friday, April 18th, 1862. Of late a spirit of the highest and best type has taken possession of several of our friends, leading them to make provision for the rising generation in giving them instruction on week-days as well as on the Sabbath. A very suitable person has been engaged as governess, and great praise is due to Miss S. Finch, for the unflagging interest which she is taking in assisting to bring the object before the minds of the people, and in placing the enterprise in a workable position. Concerning this question, the "Norfolk News" says "The laying of the foundation-stone of a new school-room at Hockham took place on Good Friday, when a large concourse of persons assembled. At three o'clock a procession was formed, headed by the Thetford choir, followed by the children belonging to the Sabbath and day-schools, accompanied by the Rev. W. Wainwright and the circuit ministers, Allison and Kernish. The brilliancy of the scene was further enhanced by the presence of a number of young ladies attired in white, and hundreds of other persons, who had come from the surrounding villages. Shortly after three o'clock the Rev. W. Wainwright delivered a discourse befitting the occasion, immediately after which Miss Finch placed the stone in the niche left for the purpose, and placed on the same a donation of five guineas. A second stone was laid by Mr. Doubleday, who placed thereon the sum of £5, and Messrs. Pettit, Finch, Adams, Potter, and others, followed with similar acts, their donations varying from £1 10s. to a shilling. A public tea was provided gratuitously at five o'clock, at which nearly 200 persons were regaled, and a public meeting was held in the evening, addressed by Messrs. Wainwright, Allison, Kernish, Nurse, Addison, Carter, Clarke, and Dunnett. The whole proceedings passed off in the most satisfactory manner, and about £28 were obtained for the building fund.

4. BALDERTON, NEWARK CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—We have just succeeded in laying the foundation stone of a second chapel in this station. The following is chiefly from the "Newark Advertiser," April 30th, 1862.

The foundation stone of an intended Primitive Methodist chapel was laid on the afternoon of Easter Monday by the Rev. Thomas King, superintendent of the Nottingham First Circuit. When the stone was laid, the reverend gentleman delivered an able and lucid discourse on the fundamental truths of the Bible. The discourse, which lasted twenty minutes, was listened to with great interest by the audience, some of whom had come a considerable distance to witness the ceremony. This was followed by a few remarks from the Rev. P. Daykin, who said he hailed the event they had been privileged to witness that day with the greatest pleasure. "For forty-five years the Primitive Methodists had preached in the village of Balderton, and this was the foundation stone of the first chapel they had been able to build." He felt additional joy at the thought that this would be the second chapel which would be built since he came to the circuit last July. He hoped the praiseworthy efforts they had put forth in the circuit would increase, and that they all would redound to the eternal welfare of the inhabitants of Balderton, and to the honour and glory of God. It was not their design in such steps as they had been taking to proselyte, but to proclaim the blessings of the gospel to the people. The service in connection with the ceremony then closed with prayer by the Rev. P. Fowler, and the friends withdrew to the Wesleyan school room, lent for the occasion, where about 170 sat down to an excellent tea, gratuitously provided by the members and friends. A public meeting commenced at seven o'clock, when the Revs. T. King, P. Fowler, and P. Daykin delivered addresses. The school-room was densely crowded, and the total proceeds of the services amounted to nearly £12. The unanimous thanks of the friends were given to the trustees of the school-room, and to those friends who had given the trays for the occasion.

For several years Balderton stood as the head of an extensive circuit, including Sleaford, Fulbeck, and Newark, and for several years two of our ministers resided in the village, which is large, having a population of 1,048.

Our income amounts already to nearly £30 for the chapel. To God be all the praise. P. DAYKIN.

TEA MEETING.

DEAR BROTHER HARLAND,—Believing that you, and the numerous readers of our excellent Magazine are always glad to hear of efforts being made to advance the interest of our Zion and extend the kingdom of our Redeemer, I am happy to inform you that we are moving on a little at Gravesend. Our congregation has improved, and our Sabbath-school is prospering, but we very much need a larger and better place of worship. Land has been purchased on which to build a chapel and school-room, which has been properly conveyed to trustees on behalf of the Connexion.

On Good Friday we held our annual tea meeting for the benefit of the new chapel fund. Our present chapel was filled, and 170 persons sat down to tea. After tea we adjourned to the town hall, kindly lent by the mayor, where we held a very interesting meeting. The hall was crowded, and many could not gain admittance. The chair was taken by the writer, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. H. Green and R. Davies, our Connexional book steward, and Mr. Stallworthy. Our choir sung some excellent pieces.

I hope a better day is dawning on this town. The profits of the tea meeting and public collection amounted to £6 17s. 8½d.; the proceeds of the young ladies' sewing basket, £2 5s. 9d.; collected by books £21 13s. 8d. The amount in hand towards the building fund is £27 12s. We are anxious to make it up to £100 before we commence building.

N.B.—1. Several accounts have been omitted because the sums obtained at the services were not named. 2. We are gratified to observe that in many instances the proceeds of the above services were in advance of those of the preceding year. 3. It is still more gratifying to learn that the spiritual improvement in several of the schools is very marked. But, 4. It is not very satisfactory to hear that in some cases the preaching of the Gospel was dispensed with to make way for recitation.

O B I T U A R Y.

1. WILLIAM MARSHALL, of Litton, Bradwell Circuit, was born February 3rd, 1836. From early life he was of a quiet retiring disposition, but manifested no symptoms of religious concern till in his eighteenth year, when, drawn by the Holy Spirit, he gave himself to Christ, joined our society, and remained a steady member. In his religious experience he seldom seemed "on the mountain top," on the contrary he generally resembled Bunyan's Mr. Fearing or Much-afraid. When going with me sometimes I have spoken to him on the witness of the Spirit as the privilege of all God's people, but I never heard him speak with much confidence, not that I ever doubted his sincerity in the least. His leader informs me that he has at times seen him very happy in possession of Christian assurance; perhaps a constitutional tendency to reserve, added to a long course of debility, were his greatest hindrances. How many true Christians are feeble and sometimes full of doubts for want of freely opening their minds to some prudent, spiritually minded persons. To the last he seemed resolved to trust in Christ. Having passed from among us, of his eternal safety those who knew him best have no doubt. May the family of which he was a member meet him in heaven. T. Doon.

2. HANNAH, the fourth daughter of the late Mr. John RAINS, was born at Griff Grange, Wirksworth Circuit, July 10th, 1829. Her conversion took place in a revival at Ibble, in 1847, under the labours of Brother J. Harrison. During her fifteen years of membership she was steady, and earnest.

Thirteen years ago she was smitten by consumption, and after protracted suffering she fell a victim thereto. In the spring of last year she sank considerably, and autumn told that she faded as a leaf. According to medical opinion her life was prolonged by the kindly maternal, brotherly, and sisterly ministrations of the united family, accompanied by God's blessing.

In self-examination she was scrupulously exact, asking her dear parent if one remaining sin would exclude her from heaven; and being told Jesus forgives all, she said, "it is enough." When visited by the writer, three days before her death, she was asked, "Have you any question to ask or request to make?" She said, "No, only pray for me." adding, "I am very grateful for the blessing of pious parents; had not this been my lot I might have been lost."

At the hour of death all the family were urged to pray and meet her in heaven. Her part was taken in prayer audibly, and quoting the hymn, "Though friends and children weep around," &c.

Her work was done. The room was the verge of heaven; and without a struggle, at two o'clock, on Sabbath morning, January 5th, 1862, she passed from the house of her birth to her mansion in the heavens. Her devoted mother, six brothers, and four sisters survive, all, except two, being members of our connexion. May each of them meet her in glory. Amen. A. JOHNSON.

3. JANE ANDERSON, of Markfield, in the Loughborough Circuit, was born on the 3rd of February, 1830, and departed this life on the 7th of Jan., 1862. Of her early life but little is known to the writer, except that at the age of sixteen she received her first quarterly ticket as a Primitive Methodist; about two years ago she was appointed assistant leader; the duties of which office she performed timidly but very acceptably. The catalogue of her excellencies is of no ordinary character, but those excellencies need not be enumerated.

She was a working Christian. The sublimity of a Christian's work inspired her soul, and that work she performed willingly, tremulously, and satisfactorily; though one of the most timid of her sex she never allowed an opportunity of relating Christian experience, or of engaging in public prayer to pass unimproved.

She was a liberal Christian. With quiet kindness she was ever ready to wait on God's hungry or weary servants, and religious offerings were to her means of grace. The record of her gifts is on high.

On Sabbath morning, Dec. 22nd, 1861, she gave birth to an infant daughter, and was tolerably well until the Saturday following, when at nine p.m., she had an ague fit, which was followed by an attack of milk fever, of which she died.

Her end was anticipated. For several weeks a presentiment of death haunted her, which stimulated her to greater devotedness to God, and when the fit came on she repeated to her husband the conviction that the time of her departure was at hand.

Her last hours were full of holy experience. She could smile in the face of the gloomy monarch. Even her ravings were of glorious things illustrating the proverb the "ruling passion is strong in death." Her moments of sanity were moments of holy enjoyment, as the following utterances corroborate. On Wednesday, 2nd of January, when apparently dreaming, a beautiful smile—a beam of celestial light, played on her face, and on being asked why she smiled, the reply was, “Don’t you hear? They are singing! O so sweetly!”

“He ever lives above,
For me to intercede.”

The smile, the question, the reply occurred thrice in rapid succession. The same evening her husband (a local preacher) made inquiry as to her state and prospects, when she replied “Don’t you think it would be a sin to doubt? I have lived and prayed, I shall not be lost now; no, I shall go up to the gates of heaven, and angels will be there to welcome me!” then after a pause she said, “I shall not only go right up to the gates of heaven, but I shall go right in and then I will shout.” In a while she resumed, “There are many ties and it is hard to part, but if the Lord permit I will come and flutter around you,” then fixing her eyes on the widow of a local preacher, she said, “I shall see John and will tell him how you are getting on.” On the Thursday her hair was cut off and leeches were applied to her temples, and as the trickling blood reminded her of the blood which cleanseth, she sang in a clear shrill voice her favourite lines,— and requested her husband to help her to sing. On the Saturday she said, “Look at the blood. I stand on Jesus.”

“Sweet Jesus on Calvary,” &c.

Her death was calm as repose. On the Sabbath she resigned her infant to the care of a friend. During the greater part of that day and the night following she appeared to be dozing. On Monday morning she muttered something about Jesus, and at mid-day the darkness of death fell on her mortal eyes, but to her spirit the celestial world was unveiled, the Heaven of heavens disclosed its glories, the wings of her faith carried her to the throne of God, and near that throne,
“The crown looks glorious on her brow.”

4. MARY, the wife of James BEDSON, and daughter of James and Mary Harnoth, of Huxley, in the Chester Circuit, was born April 19th, 1840. From a child she was of a fine engaging natural disposition, which, as she arrived at mature years secured for her the respect and love of all who knew her. In her unregenerate state she conducted herself with propriety, and was mercifully preserved from vice and open immorality. At Christmas, 1855, she came to reside as a domestic servant in the house of Mr. Sadler, where the Primitive Methodists had preached more than forty years, and now being privileged with the means of grace, she was often deeply wrought upon by the good Spirit; but she continued to resist the strivings thereof till early in the year 1857, when during a revival, special services were held every night in the week, Saturday excepted. On one occasion she was observed weeping very much; Miss Bennett (who conducted the service) took her by the hand, and asked whether “she would not like to go to heaven,” she answered through her tears “Yes.” She was then led to the penitents’ form, and after severe struggling and crying for mercy she obtained pardon and peace through our Lord Jesus Christ. She joined society, and thus became identified with Primitive Methodism. At Christmas 1860, she was united in marriage to J. Bedson, a pious young man and a member of the same society; and had the great Author of our being seen good to spare her life, the union bade fair to be a happy one. As she drew near her confinement she appeared to grow in grace, and to become more spiritually minded than ever, conversing generally about heavenly and Divine things. On Sabbath, January 5th, 1862, she was taken ill, and in the midst of great pain was attacked with a paralytic stroke which deprived her of the use of one side. This was followed by distressing fits, and brought on insensibility; in this state she was delivered of a fine healthy son, who still survives. She never rallied, but continued to breathe till Friday the 10th, when she left these mortal shores, and we doubt not landed safely “In the sweet land of Eden, where the tree of life is blooming, and where saints immortal reign,” aged twenty-one years and eight months.

JOHN SADLER.

5. ELIZABETH BENNETT, of Pennerley, in the Minsterley Circuit, departed this life on the 10th day of January, 1862, aged ninety-five years. She was born at Wykey, in the parish of Ruyton-of-the-eleven-towns, Salop, but spent many years of her life in the above-mentioned circuit. She followed the course of this world till 1822, when through the agency of the Primitive Methodists she was brought to see herself a sinner, and was led to the sinner’s Friend. She forthwith united with the small society at Hope’s-gate, and though her husband was at first unfavourable to our people, she soon prevailed on him to open his door for the preaching of the gospel. Our present Book Steward, Mr. R. Davies, was the first who preached in their house, in the year 1822, and from that time forward both travelling and local preachers were welcomed to their hospitable home. From the time the deceased was brought to God till her death, she remained a consistent member of our Connexion. During the last fourteen years of her life she was feeble in body, but as strong as ever in her attachment to God and his people, and though at last, through the infirmities of old age, very few things excited her attention, she seemed quickened and revived by the mentioning of her Saviour's name. The writer saw her a few days before her death, and found her strong in faith. She said, "Jesus has been very good to me for many years, bless Him." To her daughter she said, just before her departure to the world of spirits, "I love my precious Saviour, and he loves me;" and confiding in the love of Jesus, her spirit took its flight to dwell with him in heaven.

"Her body worn with pain,
And crush'd by weight of years,
Shall in the grave remain
Till Christ the Judge appears,
Her spirit rests with God above Rejoicing in redeeming love."

JOHN THOMAS.

6. About midday on the 12th of January last the soul of sister ELIZABETH PALIN, of Crewe, Burland Circuit, was gathered to the rest that remains for the people of God. To tell, in the small space that can be afforded, the tale of a life so gentle, lovely, and pure, and of a death so triumphant and grand as hers, is a work closely bordering on the impossible.

Were we to lose sight of the moral and religious beauties that adorned her life, our task might soon be done; we should then have to say merely she was the daughter of Richard and Frances Bostock, of Coppenhall, Cheshire; born in June, 1837, married to John Palin, September 4th, 1854, and died January 12th, 1862. These registrations are made in man's books, but memoranda of a more important nature are made in the book of God's remembrance. Residing when about twelve years of age with Mr. Holland, of Coppenhall, a Wesleyan, our departed sister was frequently found at a class-meeting that good man held in his house solely for his own family, and she there found salvation. In the course of several years she induced her two brothers to give their hearts to God, and they again were instrumental in leading him to Jesus, who, now with three young children, mourning his present loss, fondly anticipates the period when the same stern power that has torn his home asunder, shall bring about a reunion in peace.

About the time of her marriage her husband became a local preacher, which important office he yet holds. Previous to our sister's affliction her walk with God was steady, calm, and decided. Her life, in God's house, in her own house, and before the world, was truly consistent, kind, and beautiful, because it was holy and good. Some months ago it was evident to those who knew and loved her that she was gradually sinking, and her friends began to whisper ominous words about consumption. Some weeks before her death she took to her bed, where, as is usual in most consumptive cases, she "lingered into life." But during those weeks of bodily weakness, what manifestations did she make of the power of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, to beautify life and sanctify death. What rejoicings! What triumphs have we witnessed! What songs have we heard! What smiles have illuminated her countenance while in faith, and hope, and love, she has looked onward to the coming glory. On one occasion when the writer and other friends waited by her couch, she suddenly exclaimed, "Friends, it's well! It is well!"

"If this be death, I soon shall be
From every pain and sorrow free.
All is well! all is well!"

On another occasion, after waiting several hours, without being able to speak to the friends who were visiting her, she exclaimed, "I shall live, I shall live, when the stars are quenched and falling from their orbits, and the elements are melting, I shall live." The last night of her life was spent in prayer and praise. About midday, January 12th, she said to some friends, "Lift me up, I'm about to sleep with Jesus;" and then

"Her voice grew faint, and fixed was her eye;
As if gazing on visions of ecstasy.
The hue of her lips and cheeks decayed,
Around her mouth a sweet smile played.
They looked, she was gone,
Her spirit had flown,
Painless and swift as her own desires!
Her soul, undrest,
From her mortal vest,
Had stept in her car of heavenly fire!
And proved how bright
Were the realms of light,
Bursting at once upon the sight!"

HENRY NEWMAN.

7. SUSAN GEORGE, the beloved wife of Thomas George, departed this life December 31st, 1861, aged twenty-six years. She was born at Wolverhampton, the 6th of August, in the year 1835. From her childhood she was taught the way to heaven by a pious mother, but the Lord thought fit to take both father and mother hence when she was very young. She then went to live with an aunt in Shropshire for a few years. Subsequently she removed to Wednesfield, where she saw that she was a sinner, and without the grace of God, she must perish eternally. She then gave her heart to God and her hand to his people, and joined our people at Wednesfield, in the Bilston Circuit. For more than eight years she was a consistent member, and for four years of that time she was a teacher in our Sabbath-school. When confined to her bed and visited by the friends she was always resigned to the will of God. She at last fell asleep in the arms of Jesus without a struggle.

R. COOPER.

8. DIED at Hereford, January 16th, 1862, ELIZA WATKINS, aged fifty-one years. Of the particulars of her conversion to God, we have no information; but that she experienced a change by Divine grace, and became a new creature in Christ Jesus, we have the clearest proof. Sister Watkins evidenced her sincerity by a truly Christian life. She united with our people about nine years since, as near as we can ascertain, and was ever a steady and pious member. Being greatly afflicted at times, her attendance at the public means of grace was prevented for several weeks together; but when at all able, our departed sister was to be seen in her place, and joining heartily in the service of God's house.

During her membership with us, in the Hereford circuit, she evidently felt considerable pleasure in supporting, according to her means, the different connexional funds, the claims of which were brought before her. Among the last things she did while on earth, and but a few days before she departed this life, she put £5 into the hands of Mrs. T. Davies for the benefit of our chapel in this city.

For some time previous to her end, our sister was entirely confined to her bed, and suffered greatly from difficult breathing, &c. She, however, possessed her soul in patience, till released from earth, in sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection.

JOHN BUTCHER.

9. DIED, January 16th, 1862, at Rhos-y-Gadfa, in the Oswestry Circuit, Miss JANE OWEN, aged fifty-one. In early life she embraced the truth as it is in Jesus, and at once joined the Church, of which she remained a consistent member to the end of her life.

Translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, she became desirous to aid in advancing its interests: hence she engaged earnestly in the Sabbath-school connected with the chapel at St. Martin's Moors, and for many years, while her health would permit, continued to use all her influence to lead those under her care to the feet of Jesus.

Her constitution, which was always extremely delicate, gradually sank under the blighting grasp of consumption, and for several years before her death she was unable regularly to attend the house of God; but He who had so often blessed her in the great congregation, still proved Himself in her retirement a God nigh at hand. Not a murmur was ever heard to escape her lips on account of her inability to attend the public services she loved so well.

Her sufferings must sometimes have been very great, but, in the midst of all she was enabled to bow with cheerful submission to the Divine will, assured that her light affliction, which was but for a moment was working for her a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. The cry "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," came to her at last unexpectedly, but she was found waiting with her lamp trimmed, and with joy she went forth to meet her Lord. "Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

H. WHEELER.

10. MATTHEW STEVENS, son of Matthew and Amy Stevens, was born at St. Ives, Cornwall, in the year 1798, and died at the same place, January 19th, 1862, in the sixty-fourth year of his age. For more than thirty years he lived a stranger to God and to real happiness, and in this period of his life he was an open sinner; Sabbath-breaking, swearing, and drunkenness, were sins that he frequently committed.

Through the leadings of a gracious providence, MATTHEW STEVENS was drawn to hear the early Primitive Methodist ministers who came to this town; the Spirit of God awakened him to a consciousness of his guilty condition; he gave up his evil practices, and sought for pardoning mercy through Jesus Christ. Having obtained a clear sense of pardon, he joined the society, and was a consistent member for nearly thirty years.

He was for a long time a useful prayer leader, an assistant class-leader, and a member of the circuit committee. Our brother was punctual in attending the means of grace; fervent in supplication, strong in faith, always looking for a present salvation; a man who loved peace, and was firmly attached to the Connexion. His unadorned simplicity caused him to be beloved by the church and by his neighbours generally.

For the last five or six years of his life he was afflicted with asthma, which disabled him from working at his calling as a fisherman; and having much leisure, he was frequently found visiting the sick and other members, by whom he was received as a messenger of mercy. He had several times told us before his departure that his work was done, that he was going home; and on the morning that he left the house of clay, he was heard to say, "The wedding garment on." "Soon be home." "Going to Jesus." His end was peace.

WILLIAM HARVY.

"Life flies away like a morning vapour,
When it rises before the beams of day;
Life burns out like an evening taper,
That sinks and expires with the night away."

11. Died at Bottesford, Jan. 8th, 1862, CHARLOTTE, the beloved wife of J. NORTON, Primitive Methodist minister, aged forty-seven. She was born at Darley, near Derby. Up to her eighteenth year, though moral, she evinced no concern for salvation. Worldly pleasure appeared a path overhung with fruit and bestrewn with flowers. Company, amusement, gaiety, music, fascinated her. But death took away her father about that time, and this brought her into deep, dark sorrow, and she found this world's pleasures were dreams only—were cisterns broken, that would hold no water—and, like the parched traveller in the desert, when with burning thirst he comes to the dried-up spring, she found "All was vanity and vexation of spirit."

About that time she heard a sermon by the late Mr. Pike, General Baptist Minister, of Derby, on the "Prodigal Son," and she resolved to arise and go to her Father. She soon found that He alone that inflicted the blow could heal. She became a candidate for church-membership, was baptized by immersion, and for a time continued in the Baptist Community. After a few years her sister was led to Christ under the ministry of the Rev. W. Antliff, then in the Derby Circuit, and in company with her sister, the subject of this sketch began to attend our means of grace, where she found a liveliness and a rich unction accompanying our singing, praying, preaching, &c., and she finally cast in her lot with the Primitive Methodists. It was not until a few years ago that her opinions on baptism underwent a change, though the subject was never touched upon between us in an unfriendly manner; but having occasion to preach on the subject at the time referred to, while conversing with my family on the subject of my studies, namely, the Scriptural mode and the proper candidates for baptism, she became convinced that however much might be said in favour of immersion, much more might be said in favour of sprinkling. In March, 1846, she became the wife of him who writes, and from the first she appeared aware of the critical position of a minister's wife. To show piety at home was ever her great endeavour, and though physical weakness prevented her from exercising in the means of grace so much as she would have liked, her wise counsel and encouraging advice have often been valuable to my sinking spirits, amid the perplexities with which we have had to contend during upwards of fifteen years of married life. A more feeling, faithful, and affectionate wife never lived, and my children have lost the best of mothers. For some time her stock of bodily strength had been but small, and evidently growing less. About two months before her death her sufferings from sickness and palpitation brought her down as weak as a child, and when recovering from these, influenza came to the attack. Her cough was alarming, and on Christmas-day, a fortnight ere she died, she became fully confident that soon we must part. She begged I would seek strength from the Lord, that we might bear the trial as became followers of Christ. I tried to pray, but words failed me; tears were all I could pour forth. About four o'clock in the morning I was obliged to leave her bedside to minister to my eldest child, who was very ill, and in my mind it was very questionable which I must first lose, mother or child. My youngest child commenced reading a psalm to her mother; it was like the appearance of Christ amid the tempest-tossed men on Galilee's lake—my poor wife praised the Lord aloud, and my soul felt that new strength was to be had from hearing the word of the Lord. And many times during her heavy sufferings have we proved that, though interrupted by tears in our reading, God spoke comfort to our souls through His Word.

During the last fortnight of her life she appeared to have but little difficulty about leaving her husband and children. She had fought the battle and obtained the victory. Many times she would tell the Lord that she was quite willing to go, and sometimes asked Him to allow the time to be short. She calmly gave directions about family affairs, and evidently longed to be with Christ. Many times she wished us to sing the hymn, "Joyfully, joyfully;" also the one commencing "My God, my Father, whilst I stray," which, though we could not sing, we repeated; also she frequently sung, "The Lamb, the bleeding Lamb." At three a.m., January 8th, she fell asleep in Jesus. Oh! how she longed to have her passport signed and be dismissed. 'Tis done, and now she's happy; the glad soul has not a wish uncrowned. J. NORTON.

12. Died at Sporle, in the Swaffham Circuit, Jan. 30th, 1862, JOHN CODMAN, in the seventy-fourth year of his age. The first forty years of his life were spent in following the hollow pleasures and maxims of this world, and in a state of estrangement from Christ. About thirty years since, the Primitive Methodists visited Sporle, and brother Codman was among the first fruits of their toil; he "heard the word gladly, and liberty found through the blood of the Lamb;" and by his hospitality to God's servants in those early days, his holy and consistent deportment in life, his calm, yet confident, assurance in prospect of death, he evinced the power and vitality of that religion which he had chosen as his portion, and which "can give solid pleasures while we live," and also possesses a power to "supply solid comforts when we die."

For over thirty years he held on the "even tenor of his way," frequently saying to his class-mates, "I and the Lord keep travelling together." When drawing to the close of his long pilgrimage, he often, in an ecstasy of holy joy, would refer to his "home in the skies." "I shall soon be home," said he to the writer a short time before his death. "Sing over my remains; sing loud, for I shall be above the skies," was his request to brother Fishpool. "All's right, I'm going to my Father's house above," were the last words of this old pilgrim, who, ripe in years, deep in experience, and meet for the saints' inheritance, passed from earth to heaven, where

"The saints in an ecstacy gaze,
And hang on a crucified God."

GEORGE BELL.

13. RHODA LONG was born at Melbury, Dorset, in the Motcombe Circuit, April, 1798. The gospel was preached in the house of her parents when she was a child. To this circumstance, perhaps, may be traced the fact that she was awakened to a sense of her danger as a lost sinner while quite young. The counsel of her pious mother, also, made a deep and lasting impression on her mind. Those who have known her from that time say, that her course of life was strictly moral; yet she lived until she was upwards of thirty years of age, before she experienced the pardon of sin. This took place about twenty-eight years ago, while the Rev. R. Davies travelled in the Motcombe Circuit; and was preceded by deep conviction for sin, which lasted for two years and seven months. About this time she was invited to hear the Primitive Methodists, and they became the means, in the hand of God, of her conversion. She joined our society at Ludwell, and, with the exception of a year or two while in service at a place where we had no society, she continued a Primitive Methodist to the day of her death. And during the period she was in service she retained her confidence in God.

In February, 1847, she was united in marriage to Stephen Long, one of our local preachers, living at the Cawseyway, near to Mere, Wilts. She became a member with the people of her choice, and in connection with her husband, laboured hard, and prayed fervently, for the salvation of the people living in that neglected neighbourhood. Many, as the fruit of their labours, were converted, and by many she was considered a mother in Israel. The sudden manner in which she was taken from us has had a tendency to awaken some of her neighbours. She was afflicted for a number of years, more or less; but for some few weeks she appeared much better, and expressed a hope that she should be strong by the summer. These prospects, however, were destined to be blighted. On the 21st of January, 1862, she arose in the morning, and attended to her household duties as usual, until after breakfast, when she was suddenly seized with trembling and sickness. She sank rapidly until the following day, when, after about thirty hours' illness, she fell asleep in Jesus, about half-past one o'clock. Her husband asked her if she was afraid to die. She answered with emphasis, "No." "Are you glad that you made choice of such a Friend so many years ago?" "Yes, I am," she replied; and stated that she was not afraid to entrust her soul in the hands of Him to whom she had committed it years before. Thus died our sister in the sixty-fourth year of her age. That we may all meet her in heaven is the prayer of

GEORGE FOWLER.

14. MRS. ELIZABETH FELTHAM, of Shapwick, Poole Circuit, was born in 1794, and died January 24th, 1862. About twenty-six years ago she began to attend our ministry, and shortly afterwards became a member of our society. Having given herself to the Lord, and united with his people, she endeavoured to walk in the way of God's commandments, and for a quarter of a century received the preachers into her house, and kindly ministered to their wants. In her lifetime she was fearful and deeply anxious about the future, but she trusted in the Lord Jehovah, and realized in her experience the truth of the promise, "At eventide it shall be light." For a little while before she died, the Saviour manifested himself to her in a glorious manner, and gave her grace to meet death with composure, and to bear testimony to the power of the glorious gospel to save. When dying she earnestly and affectionately requested her children and friends to love the Saviour, whom she had found so faithful and kind, and her pious husband to be kind to the preachers, and support the interests of our Zion. I have seldom witnessed more serenity of mind and joy of soul in the prospect of death than our beloved sister enjoyed. The glory of the Lord filled the room.

15. THOMAS COCKCROFT was born at Paper-mill-bridge, Bingley parish, November 12th, 1837, and died at Harden, in the same parish, February 1st, 1862, in the twenty-fifth year of his age. His parents being poor, and having a large family, were not able to give him a good education. But he was sent early to the Sabbath-school, and was a regular, attentive, and obedient scholar. He delighted in the school. When old enough he became a teacher. He was not content to attend on his own school days in turn with other teachers only, he was ready to teach at any time or any day. About five years since he became convinced of his wretched and dangerous state as a sinner before God. He cried mightily to God for the pardon of his sins, he believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, was pardoned and made happy in his precious love. This took place at Lane Ends, in the Keighley Circuit. He immediately joined class. More than two years since he removed to Harden, and at once sought out our society at Rycroft, in Bingley branch, joined class, and became an efficient teacher in the school. He received a note as an exhorter, but preaching did not seem to be his forte. He loved class-meetings so well that he attended two in the week. The disease that ended his life was consumption. During six months he gradually sank. At first he appeared wishful to recover. But this wish left him, and like a man of God he gave himself into God's hands for life or death. To all who called to see him, he gave a word of exhortation. His parents especially he entreated so earnestly that they began to serve God, and he had the comfort of seeing a family altar erected in the house. To his leader he said, a few days before he died, "Oh, I do love Jesus! Oh, Moses, I do love Jesus! I do long to go to heaven to see him as he is. I have given all up on earth, and I shall soon be in heaven." While he lingered on, Jesus and religion were all his theme. In this state he died in the full assurance of hope.

16. JONAS, the youngest son of Joel and Betty HOLLIS, was born May 28th, 1819, and departed this life at Irwell Vale, in the Bury Circuit, January 27th, 1862, in the forty-third year of his age. With regard to the early days of our departed brother we know very little, only that his parents died when he was very young, and soon after their death he was bound apprentice at Helmshore, in Haslingden Circuit. About the year 1838, through the entreaties of Christian friends, he was induced to attend Divine service at our chapel at Hollinbank, and soon after joined the society there. He sought the Lord sorrowing for some time, but one day, while praying in a field near the place of his residence, God pardoned all his sins, and made him unspeakably happy in his forgiving love. He now went on his way rejoicing, and felt a holy delight in attending the Sabbath school, the house of God and the means of grace. And from what we can gather his whole deportment adorned his profession. On entering the marriage state, he made choice of one like-minded with himself, one that feared God and worked righteousness, and their union was made a blessing to both. On removing to Irwell Vale, to carry on the grocery business, it was soon evident that he was wishful for soul-saving work to make progress, and he was the principal means of a Sabbath morning's class being raised, of which he became the assistant leader. A kind providence placing him in somewhat respectable circumstances, he was able to help the cause of God in a pecuniary sense, and on several occasions he gave proof that he was willing as well as able. He was the society steward for several years, and discharged the duties of his office satisfactorily. His last illness was short, but severe, and his death somewhat unexpected, but Christ was with him in his last hours. During his illness, he said to a friend who visited him, "If I die before you, I will be looking out for you, and give you a hearty welcome to glory." At another time while a friend was praying, he lifted up his hands and shouted, "Glory! Glory to God!" A short time after this, his happy soul left the cumbersome clay, to join the blood-washed throng in the New Jerusalem above. He has left a wife and four children to mourn their loss.

THE JUDGMENT.

Now had the earth revolv'd her latest round,
 Now o'er the summit of the eastern hills
 The last morn's blush was painted on the sky.
 God with ten thousand thunders rent the
 heav'ns
 And rear'd His throne on high—His great white throne,
 Wheel'd on the clouds and for the judgment set.
 Attendant flames dreadful revolv'd in rounds
 Far brighter than the sun e'er saw, and with A thousand clarions' piercing clang, the Judge
 Through hosts of rustling wings to judgment came.
 Now was the useless sun push'd back and roll'd
 Into the region of the farthest night,
 And all heav'n's starry hosts on hosts,
 with one
 Wave of th' Almighty's hand dismiss'd, broke from
 Their ranks, and thro' space hissing fell;
 while with
 His gleaming trump the high Archangel sped
 To rouse from its long sleep the slumb'ring world.
 He was the highest of the highest ones—
 Princes in heav'n and generals in the sky.
 At God's command he flew; his brow was bound
 With light, and round his head a rainbow played;
 His form ethereal he conceal'd in robes
 Of snowy whiteness, and around his waist
 A golden zone he girt,
 And earth he reached. One foot the land, and one
 The ocean trod, and with extended wings
 That wrapp'd the bending poles, a blast
 he breath'd,
 And bade the nations to the judgment bar.
 The blast they heard. From land to land
 it rang,
 Echo'd o'er ev'ry mountain, rock, and hill,
 Ran thro' the valleys, leap'd o'er ev'ry sea, Knock'd at the door of all the tombs of earth,
 And waken'd all the sleepers, loos'd the base
 Of the o'erfrowning ag'd hills, and all
 The world o'erturned! And lo! the dead arose;
 From ocean's depths and every grave they came,
 Emptied their tombs, and throng'd the air to God.
 And still that blast resounded, still the trumpet

Bellow'd its peals above the tumbling world,
 Till every cœment rent; then, as the last Affrighted soul to judgment struggl'd by,
 Died in the tomb the latest mortal left.
 Now the consuming fire came floating on
 The clouds, whose burning legions march'd from the Four winds of heav'n; at earth they met;
 quiver'd
 The crumbling ball, and melted into space.
 See! up on high the great tribunal held,
 The righteous sentence of a righteous Judge.
 From out the throne a fiery stream there
 pass'd,
 That issuing kept in twain th' unnumber'd ranks
 That wingless trod as earth the upper air.
 They are immortal now—mortality's
 Frail robe fell off for ever when they rose,
 And fluttering down, as death's last victims died.
 See! on the right th' innumerable throng
 That rapturous wait the beckon of their Lord.
 They joy with all unutterable joy,
 And murmur'g ecstasy their numbers know;
 Banners celestial angel hands unfurl,
 And seraph fingers scatter glory round.
 Lo! on the left the wicked stand array'd
 In horror black, and wild dismay complete.
 Shrieks the great crowd, as to and fro it sways
 In undulations anguish'd—waiting to Be damn'd; while demons circle o'er, and tongues
 Of pale blue fire lick up the stiff'd air.
 'Tis over. Every doom with pomp is fix'd,
 And on the pathway of the clouds, streams of The good have pass'd to people all the heav'ns.
 Angels have sung their glorious welcome
 o'er.
 Jesus hath crown'd immortal brows; the great
 Gate of the skies some great archangel shut,
 While all heav'n quiver'd with intensest joy.
 Now to their state eternal the condemn'd are gone;
 And flaming bolts at heav'n's just vengeance lit
 Pursu'd them to the door, and devils shut
 Them in. Oh! woe untold, and everlasting
 Woe! And as the echo of triumphant songs Drops from the harps in heav'n, each spirit damn'd
 Turns on his fiery couch and sobs afresh.
 Thus is the judgment past! thus the loud
 song
 Went round in heav'n, and the loud wail in hell.

BIOGRAPHY.

1. JAMES BOURNE, brother and coadjutor of the venerable Hugh Bourne, was the youngest son of Joseph and Ellen Bourne, of Fordhays, and was born on the 8th of February, 1781. In the year 1788 the Bourne family removed to a larger farm at Bemersley, in the parish of Norton-in-the-Moors, Staffordshire. Here Mr. James Bourne found a habitation till he had filled the measure of his days on earth, and his spirit entered into the joy of the Lord.

Mr. Bourne was converted to God in early life. The seed of Divine truth, sown in his heart by his pious mother, germinated and bore fruit. This took place shortly after the conversion of his mother and brother Hugh, as the three met in the same class in the Wesleyan Community. James had occasionally preached some time before his brother's expulsion from the old body, and was accustomed to make frequent excursions into remote villages to offer salvation to the poor and neglected. He was an able assistant to his brother Hugh; in 1801 we find him by his side on Mow Cop, where in after years the venerable founder of English Camp-Meetings first unfurled the blood-stained banner of the Cross. From early life the two brothers had been attached to each other in a measure far surpassing the affection of common brotherhood. Hugh being the senior by several years, took James under his special superintendency, and by brotherly tuition instilled into his youthful mind a knowledge of the deep things of God. Never were brothers more strongly cemented in oneness of mind and effort to extend the kingdom of Christ on the earth. They unitedly strove to diffuse among the masses the leaven of Gospel truth. When we consider James's numerous secular duties in connection with his farm and family, we wonder at the amount of time he spent in spiritual enterprise, and the physical labour he voluntarily took upon himself, in furthering the Gospel of our common Saviour. Amidst powerful temptations from the accuser of the brethren, and in the face of numerous insults from the mobs who gathered to oppose the good men of that day, he stood,— “ Firm as an iron pillar,

Steadfast as a wall of brass.”

Under God, Primitive Methodism is indebted to him for much of its prosperity in its early days. He often ministered to the temporal wants of many of the first evangelists of the Connexion, furnishing them with the requisites of a forty or fifty miles' journey.

In the year 1807 the first Camp-Meeting was held on Mow. This meeting was considered an innovation, and was supposed to infringe ecclesiastical law; and no small stir was occasioned thereby. Friends, who at first had advocated this sort of Christian agency, after the Methodist Conference had pronounced an adverse opinion, withdrew their countenance, and foes to the new movement mustered their energies to impede its progress. In the face of this opposition the subject of this memoir for a moment was overawed, but having sought wisdom from above, God, in a peculiar and striking dream, satisfied his anxious mind, and thenceforth he nobly stood by his brother in establishing the English Camp-Meeting system.

As the infant Connexion grew, buildings for worship were needed; and we find Mr. James Bourne ardently engaged in procuring land for chapels at Tunstall, Talk-o'-th'-Hill, Rocester, and other places. For years Tunstall and Talk-o'-th'-Hill chapels remained his private property. It would be impossible to duly estimate the labours through which he passed, and to tell the amount of money he contributed to promote the material development of the Connexion, but the day of eternity will declare it.

As the Connexion progressed, a Book-room and Printing establishment became almost indispensable. Mr. Bourne purchased a press, type, and other necessities, to perfect this scheme; and for a number of years he was the Connexional Printer and Book Steward.

In literary acquirements he was far below his brother. His education was much neglected in his youth, nor did he possess a strong desire for mental improvement. In after years his composition in his epistolary correspondence was a curiosity, and required more than common acumen to decipher it, or get at its true meaning. But he had read much, and was well acquainted with ancient and modern history, especially sacred history and geography. He could entertain a select circle of friends for hours together, while he expatiated on the characters of the Prophets and Apostles, described the different localities mentioned in the Bible where miracles were wrought, battles fought, and victories won and lost by Israel, from their exodus from Egypt, until their overthrow by the Romans. “On one occasion,” and the occurrence was not rare—relates an intimate friend of his, “while he was telling of the cruel butcheries perpetrated by the Papiats on the Waldenses and Albigenses, he threw his whole soul into the narrative, and the unction from heaven flowed so sweetly and copiously, that the family hearth was the house of God, and the gate of heaven."

In the year 1843, his secular affairs had become so prostrate, that he had to appeal to the Court of Bankruptcy for protection. As this was considered the great blot of his life, the biographers have felt it necessary thoroughly investigate the case, so that an impartial statement may be laid before the reader. When this commercial crash took place, various sinister rumours began to circulate in disparagement of the character of Mr. Bourne. It was said that his liberality to the cause of Primitive Methodism had involved him in this ruin. We reply, that while Mr. Bourne contributed most largely to relieve the temporal wants of the Community to which he belonged, God blessed him in basket and store most abundantly; consequently his failure cannot be laid upon the Connexion. Others imputed it to the largesses he made to his children. There is no evidence to prove the assertion, and his family contradict it.

Many were pleased to say that he broke to enrich himself. No! James Bourne died a poor man. His ruin was complete. He was stripped of every earthly possession. Mr. Bourne at one time was a man of great commercial credit in the Staffordshire potteries. His name, affixed to a bill, was considered a sufficient guarantee for the repayment of thousands of pounds; and it is said that at one time his rent-roll amounted to £1,000 a year. This commercial blight is attributable to the fact that Mr. Bourne became a money-lender. In the beginning he was influenced mainly by motives of benevolence, being desirous to assist honest but unsuccessful parties; this he did in many instances. But afterwards he plunged into the practice with an infatuation truly astonishing. Like David, in the cave of Adullam, there resorted to him those that were in distress and debt; and with the promise of an amount of interest which money could not bear, they obtained from him temporary relief. But in many cases, the lender received neither principal nor interest. Out of the many who failed to redeem their promises we will select three cases. The first was a go-a-head manufacturer, poor and ignorant, who, with his bland manner, succeeded in obtaining a loan of £6,000. This man knew no bounds to his extravagance. He rode the finest hunters, drove his carriage, and lived in the first style. Mr. Bourne all this time found him money to pay the wages of his men. The second was a young gentleman versed in the science of chemistry, as applied to the manufacture of earthenware. He had been in partnership, but had failed. Mr. Bourne attributed his disaster to his partner; and forthwith took this young man under his patronage. By his persuasion land was bought, and new chemical works were erected for the making of borax. In process of time, Mr. Bourne sent his protégé to America, as his agent, to get orders for earthenware.

It is said, that goods to the amount of £7,000 were sent out, for which only a few hundreds were received in return. In a short time this youth died ; and nearly every shilling was lost. The third was in connection with a glass and china depôt, in London. The master of this concern was in very embarrassed circumstances, and he turned over the whole of his business to James Bourne, who looked out for a trustworthy manager, and, as he thought, found one in the person of a working potter, in a very distressed condition. He and his wife were properly clad, and otherwise provided for, and sent to London. Here they lived in extravagance, until the concern sank in ruin, and involved a large pecuniary sacrifice. These are only samples of the manner in which Mr. Bourne often did business. While the subject of this memoir was pursuing such an injudicious course, he toiled like a slave himself, and enforced the utmost frugality in the management of his household affairs. We do not intend by the foregoing remarks to exculpate him in the affair of his bankruptcy. We think that he is open to serious censure as to the manner in which he conducted his business, as a commercial man ; and the requirements of justice demand that we should say that, in certain things in connection with this lamentable affair, we fear he had not absolutely pure hands. But he has passed to another tribunal ; and we have reason to hope he found mercy before he went.

The crash of his worldly affairs had an awfully deteriorating influence on his physical frame. From a hale and hearty and well complexioned yeoman, he soon passed into a withered, decrepit old man, with deeply-furrowed brow and wrinkled face, on which the lineaments of sorrow were deeply traced. But as he hastened to go down, some bright streaks of glory relieved the sable mantle of his sky. He regularly called his family to their morning and evening devotions, and the fire on the domestic altar showed tokens of vitality, while the patriarch, under an awful sense of his responsibility, poured out his soul to God with lamentations, regret, and strong supplication.

In the wreck of his temporal all, he lost, in many instances, long and highly-valued friendships. But, for his old companions in the field of gospel enterprise and suffering he breathed nothing but goodwill and kindness.

In the last years of his life he met in the Primitive Methodist class at Newchapel, Tunstall Circuit, and appeared often to enjoy the means of grace as he did in happier days. A near friend writes, "We visited him in his last illness. He was quite aware of the nearness of death. He spoke of his death and funeral with perfect placidity. He had no fear of entering the eternal world. On the contrary he was bold as a lion ; wrapped up in the divine assurance, and full of an unshaken confidence in God, he was as mighty in prayer as in the days of his prosperity, when the candle of the Lord shone upon his head." He departed this life January 15th, 1860, and his remains were buried near those of his brother Hugh, in the Primitive Methodist graveyard, at Englesea Brook, Tunstall Circuit, to await the resurrection of the just in the last day.

2. WATSON SMITH was born at Bredbury, in Cheshire, on the 29th of March, 1802, at which place his parents resided; shortly afterwards they removed to Denton, in Lancashire; and in 1812, they and family again removed to Leeds, in Yorkshire, where they settled; and my father was sent to a Sabbath-school belonging to the Wesleyan Society situate in a yard in Briggate. The superintendent, Mr. Ramsden, was a very pious, good, and useful manager of the school, and many have to date their first serious impressions to the fervent, earnest, though simple exhortations of this good man. During the visit to Leeds of the late Gideon Ouseley, my father received deep and lasting convictions of the need of the new birth, and subsequently, under the kind and pious instructions of the late James Farrar, he persevered and ultimately obtained pardon, and he then went on his way rejoicing in the God of his salvation. A Primitive Methodist Society was formed in Leeds, November, 1819,* and the labours of his brother and colleagues, the earnest, hard-working fathers of the society here, were being crowned with great success; and having been at some of their meetings along with his brother Samuel, and the late John Reynard, in 1820, he became a member with them. It was soon perceived that he possessed a talent for usefulness; and willingly he permitted his name to be put on the Station's plan, and at the June Quarter-day, 1821, he earnestly and zealously commenced his labours to spread the glorious news of the Gospel along with the toiling fathers of the Leeds Circuit, carrying the Word of God to Bradford, Silsden, Dewsbury, Wakefield, Otley, and to numerous and populous villages connected with them.

Of the striking incidents connected with the work of God at that early period of Primitive Methodism, I may give one out of many facts, to show how God works in His own wonderful way, to accomplish His great designs. One Sunday my father visited a distant village, and at the proper time stood on the highway side on a heap of stones, commencing his service with that old hymn,

"Come, friends and relations," &c.

The singing attracted the attention of a company of men who sat in a cottage near, reading "The Black Dwarf;" they rose up and proceeded towards the strange young man on the highway, where they stood and quietly heard the sermon, and afterwards gladly offered their house for a prayer-meeting; however, nothing particular resulted that day, but he gave out that he would visit them on the next Sabbath, and they gladly promised to attend. Left to themselves, (as one of them afterwards informed him) they considered that he was a radical speaker, and that he durst not at that time fully tell his mission, but they had no doubt he would fully open out on his next visit to them. Next Sunday they all met him at the time, and joined in singing, heard the Divine Word, and then joined in a meeting in the house. He gave out that he should be glad to enrol any of their names in class, who were prepared to join him in the great effort of soul-saving, and he would then meet them in class; nine or ten gave in their names, and he led them and prayed with them. These men had thought that it was an entirely political movement, until led in class; then a full impression of the truth broke on their minds, followed by a deep conviction which never left them until they were fully converted to God. These parties became the nucleus of our future society in that place, and all of them continued to adorn the Gospel to the end of their days; so wonderfully does God work among men for the good of their souls, breaking up and overthrowing associations which tend to agitation and strife, and setting up the kingdom of Christ in the hearts of men who have been chiefs among transgressors. During the early days of Primitive Methodism God was pleased by its agency to break up and destroy many such societies, succeeding them by societies of redeemed men and women, whose hearts were changed by the power of Divine grace.

My father laboured hard and perseveringly in the good work, and through the blessing of God, he succeeded in making impressions which are not, nor ever will be forgotten. To the present time his early sermons and his manners are spoken of for many miles around Leeds. His preaching talent was quite original. He was well accepted and useful. His voice was good, and well exercised in open air services. His attitude was bold and commanding, and never failed to fix the attention of his hearers. He had repeated calls to enter the regular ministry of the Connexion, but those calls were not satisfactory to his own mind; many of his friends and family have thought they ought to have been, and they believe that his subsequent course through life was more perplexing through his not attending to these providential calls.

Early in life he became a class-leader. He highly esteemed his class, and he was much respected by his members, who cultivated in their minds the same strong attachment to the means of grace as himself. For a length of time his class was composed almost exclusively of local preachers, and from it were supplied leaders for many other classes. He was diligent and constant in his attention to his class, and although he had to pass through many and very severe trials, and had manifold difficulties wherewith to contend in business, yet he never neglected it. In all the other offices and duties connected with the society, he was a ready and willing labourer; as trustee, as steward, as delegate, as treasurer, as leader, as preacher and member, he discharged his duties promptly, untiringly, and faithfully to the end.

During the last nine or ten years of his life, he was much afflicted by asthma, and was for several years before his death compelled by want of strength to refrain from all active labours, and use all the means he could to support himself under his affliction.

His death was very sudden and unexpected. During the last winter, up to the 18th of February, he had enjoyed better health than for some years previously. The Tuesday before his decease, he was in high spirits, and rejoicing that he had seen the rough season through so well. On that day he had a sudden attack of asthma, and had taken cold, which made him also very feverish; however, he seemed to get the better of the attack until the Friday following; on the Saturday he was unable to rise as usual, and seemed to sink; although the physician entertained no apprehension of danger, but, on the contrary, only four hours before his death, he told us he was better. During Sunday and Monday, the 23rd and 24th February, he told us he saw many of his old friends and fellow-labourers, and held converse with them, and on Monday, he spoke aloud in converse with those supposed to be present. When the messenger came he was prepared to receive him with calm resignation and composure; while we prayed, he responded and lifted up his arms, and turned his head to look around, and then fell asleep in the arms of his Saviour, without a groan or a sigh, at a quarter past one, A.M., on the 25th February, 1862. God took him.

A year or two before he died, he had the pleasure of seeing the last of his family (six) converted and united with the Church of Christ. He has left us working in the vineyard of the Lord, some as Sunday-school teachers, and the writer as a local preacher, to succeed him in the glorious work of his life.

3. ELIZABETH ROBERTS, was born at Battlefield, Hadnall Circuit, in 1798, and departed this life at Shrewsbury, on the 27th of February, 1862. Both she and her mother, who died in peace a few years ago, were brought to a knowledge of the truth through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists. Elizabeth was awakened to a sense of her lost condition, at Shawbury Heath, in this Station, about thirty-seven years ago, under a sermon preached by Mr. John Walford, shortly after which she found peace with God through faith in a crucified Saviour.

Soon after this happy event, the quarterly meeting, believing that she might be useful in calling sinners to repentance, placed her name on the preachers' plan, and on this new work she entered in the name of the Lord; with a heart full of love to God and the souls of her perishing neighbours, she went forth preaching in faith a full, free, and present salvation, and the Lord blessed her labours to the good of many souls. Though the journeys in this rural district are rather long, if Elizabeth was appointed, the societies always counted on her being found at her post; neither severe weather, dirty roads, dark nights, nor anything save affliction, prevented her from strict attention to the work assigned her. During the long time which her name remained on the plan, to the best of my recollection she never had a charge brought against her for the neglect of an appointment; indeed I believe from her conversion she passed through the world without a stain on her character.

She was a member of my class, and though she resided upwards of two miles from the place of meeting, and had to travel along a very dreary road, she was always present, unless prevented by sickness. Elizabeth was never married, hence she had to depend for support on her own labour, but she always managed to pay her penny per week class-money, and sixpence per quarter for her ticket. Towards the close of life, when, from failing health, she was unable to labour as she had formerly done, and, consequently was more straitened in her circumstances, sooner than allow her class-money to remain unpaid she gave up the use of sugar in her tea. Indeed her liberality, considering her circumstances, was great. Some time ago she came into the possession of £40 by the will of an uncle, and it is thought that £5 of this sum, at the least, were given by her to the cause of God.

In her last illness she removed from the house in which she had been living alone, and went to reside at Shrewsbury with a sister. The affliction which preceded her dissolution was severe, but she bore it with patience. A little before she departed, a friend remarked to her, "That she would soon receive the fulfilment of the promises." She replied, "I am receiving it now;" shortly after which she fell asleep in Jesus and went to receive her reward.

4. JOHN, the son of John and Ellen HANDSAKER, was born December 13th, 1824, at King's Bromley, Staffordshire. In 1845 he came to live in the vicinity of Ipstones, and soon after began to attend the Primitive Methodist Chapel, and under a sermon preached by Mr. Henry Wheeler, he was convinced that he was in a lost state. He gave the Lord his heart, believed in the atonement made by Christ Jesus, and obtained a saving interest therein, even the forgiveness of all his sins. The love of God was shed abroad in his heart by the Holy Ghost which was given unto him. May 3rd, 1848, he joined Brother Ratcliffe's class, and remained a steady and consistent member thereof till business obliged him to remove to near Buxton, in Winster Circuit. He took his credentials and joined our people at that place, improving in the word and doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ, and esteemed by the people. Subsequently he returned to Ipstones, and was put on the plan in 1851. He was diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. After returning from Buxton he was appointed to be my assistant class-leader, and while I was ill of typhus fever, from October, 1860, till the spring of 1861, he had the class to himself. After Bottom Lane had been missioned, and several souls had been converted, a new class was formed, and John was appointed the leader at that place, and he was respected by his class. For upwards of ten years he faithfully preached a present, free, and full salvation, always evincing an anxious desire for the salvation of souls.

On Sunday, the 2nd of March last, as soon as it was light, he said to his wife, "What day is it?" She told him. He said, "Praise God." He then asked her to sing the hymns beginning with—

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me."

and—

"Jesus, lover of my soul."

On Tuesday, Samuel Bould visited him, to whom he said, "I am happy!" "I am going to the better land." A little while before that, his wife intimated to him that his time here would be short; he replied, "Shorter on earth, longer in heaven."

On Monday, 3rd of March, I agreed to stay with him through the night. His father having come some days before to see him, and John knowing that his father could not hear well, he, with an earnest look at his father, lifted up his hand, intimating that he was happy and should have the victory. He asked me also to talk to his father and tell him to get ready to meet him in heaven. His wife, who attended him, said, "What do you want?" He replied, "I want to go to the better land." And throughout the day he continued growing weaker. The doctor, two or three days before, having come to see him, seemed to think him cast down in his mind, and said, "O Handsaker, you must keep up your spirits." He meekly, yet quickly replied, "My spirits have never been cast down yet." Another time his wife, anxious to know the state of his mind particularly, asked, "How do you feel now?" He replied, "Well."

A short time before he died he urged his wife and daughter-in-law to get ready to meet him in heaven.

On Tuesday night, between eight and nine o'clock, he asked me to sing—

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me," &c.

I sung the first verse, and O! what a blessed influence pervaded the place; it was as "The ante-chamber of heaven—

He smil'd, look'd up, but nothing spoke."

A pleasing calm rested on his countenance when passing through the dark valley. His confidence was strong, his faith was firm and constant, his hope blooming, his evidence clear, and best of all, God was with him. In this resigned and happy state of mind he fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, about a quarter past twelve o'clock, on Wednesday morning, March 5th, 1862, in the thirty-eighth year of his age.

T. GOLDSTRAW.

5. MRS. SARAH SMITH was born at Winnothdale, in the parish of Cheekley, 1780, and died at Mayfield, Ramsor Circuit, March 10th, 1862. This station stands identified with the infant cause of Primitive Methodism; many a hard day's conflict has been sustained within its precincts. This was part of the field of the early toil of its first missionaries. Many people flocked to see and hear those wonderful men, of whom so much had been said, and by whom so much was done; and many who came to see and hear were constrained to remain and pray. Among those was the subject of this sketch. About fifty-three years ago, William Clowes missioned this neighbourhood; Mrs Smith heard him, and while he was preaching from these words, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life," the power of the Most High accompanied the Word. She was convicted for sin committed against God, and she cried for mercy, seeking the Lord with her whole heart. She soon obtained the evidence of her acceptance with God, and the mighty change which she had experienced in her soul, was visible in her conversation and conduct. She united with our society at Rochester, and soon after her name appeared on the Station's plan, and she became a very useful local preacher. Although the station was large, the roads very rough, the journeys long, and the weather often inclement, she was punctual to her appointments,—unless unforeseen causes prevented her. She had to attend her appointments at times under very trying circumstances; through the badness of the roads she has been known to walk ten miles to an appointment in her pattens, but she had the satisfaction to know that souls were saved. She continued in her office of local preacher till old age and infirmity compelled her to desist, and of late years, her name has been found among the supernumeraries. She retained the consciousness of her acceptance with God, from the time of her conversion till her death. I frequently visited her, and prayed with her, while she occasionally shouted, "Glory, glory," "Amen, amen." She frequently said, "I was born in the fire, and I cannot live in the smoke." Several years ago she was left a widow, and her son and daughter-in-law kindly received her into their house, and with them she had her home at Mayfield, till she was taken to her mansion of bliss. When drawing near the end of her journey, she was longing for a meetness for the better country ; and when passing death's vale, she said,

" If this be death, I soon shall be,
From every pain, and sorrow free,
I shall the King of Glory see,
All is well ! all is well ! "

Soon after this, she calmly fell asleep in Jesus, in the eighty-second year of her age, having been a consistent member and local preacher for fifty-three years. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers, is the prayer of the writer. W. ROOKE.

6. THOMAS PARKER, late of Arthur's Hill, Newcastle-on-Tyne, was born at Hanstey, Allendale, Northumberland, April 5th, 1801. In the early part of his life he was a lead-miner, as was his father, who departed this life in 1822, leaving a widow and eight children, several of whom were too young to provide for themselves;—while their widowed mother was considerably involved in debt, on the rent of the farm, occupied by the family. Persevering industry, and frugality on the part of Thomas and his elder brothers, by little and little removed that burden, and their mother was comfortably supported to the end of her life. From that time, it was often observed, the blessing of God rested upon our departed friend, in regard to temporal matters ; verifying and illustrating the fifth commandment and other Scriptures in relation to filial duty. But while diligent in business, he was ignorant of God, and addicted to various forms of vice and the vulgar sports of the neighbourhood in which he lived. Soon after the Primitive Methodist Preachers visited Catton, where he resided about thirty-two years ago, he became a hearer, and was awakened to a sense of his guilty condition. The plain earnest preaching of Mr. J. Wilson came home to him with so much directness and power, that he believed that a certain person had told the preacher all about him. His convictions were so strong and pungent that for a time he could scarcely either eat, sleep, or follow his employment ; and one of his brothers said if he went on in that way much longer, he would require to be taken care of. But the hand that wounded soon made him whole. He went to an experienced man, a class-leader, for instruction, willing to do anything or make any sacrifice that he might find peace with God. And although he did not obtain the blessing then, he returned home, "burdened, sick and faint," fully resolved to follow the advice he had received ; and after praying, with tears, for a considerable time, he retired to bed. But his wounded spirit would not allow him to fall asleep ; so he continued in prayer, till reflecting on what the class-leader had said to him about believing, he began to say, " Lord, I believe, I do believe," and he was suddenly enabled to believe with his heart unto righteousness. Having received the atonement, he rejoiced in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. Instantly springing from his couch, he went to his mother's bedside, exclaiming, "The Lord has pardoned all my sins." From his previous character his conversion excited considerable attention in the neighbourhood. And no sooner had he given praise to God for the happy change wrought in him, than he began to seek the salvation of others. His nearest relatives received, as they claimed, his first attention. He commenced family worship, at once, making the reading of the Scriptures a part of it; and very soon some of his brothers and sisters, who at first were offended at his loud praying and faithful exhortations, were awakened and became partakers of like precious faith. His aged mother, who had previously thought herself all right, having been an attendant at the Wesleyan chapel, and tolerably decent in morals, was also convinced of sin and brought into Gospel liberty. He took up his cross and went from house to house, telling his neighbours what great things God had done for him; exhorting them to seek the same grace. After a while his name appeared on the Hexham Circuit plan; and for some years he fulfilled his appointments with punctuality and earnestness. His preaching talents were not of a superior order; but his singleness of purpose and earnestness of manner commanded the confidence and respect of his hearers. A great revival of religion broke out at Catton about that time, and many members were added to the society, several of whom have gone to glory, and others are still fighting the good fight of faith.

In 1840, two years after his marriage with her who now laments her loss, he removed to Arthur's Hill, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Not long after his removal he was appointed along with a worthy brother, still living, to take the oversight of a new society that was raised up in that part of the town; and from that time he took a leading part in the cause at that place, sparing neither time, nor labour, nor money for its advancement; and it did advance; sinners were converted from time to time, additional classes formed, the place of meeting improved, and the society became one of considerable importance. He was concerned in the establishment of a flourishing Sabbath-school, in which he took a lively, practical interest, and was rewarded with something more than the warm attachment of the little folk. Brother Parker was always at his post of duty; regular in his attention to all the means of grace, both on Sundays and work-day evenings; punctual in his attendance, and ready to take his part in the services of the Lord's house. He also stirred others up to attend; visiting not only the members of his own class, those in particular who were ready to halt, but occasionally the unconverted likewise; and inviting such as came in his way to go and hear the Word of life. He was a lover of open-air worship, and strove to promote that Primitive Methodist practice in the society. He incessantly watched over the best interests of the society and Sabbath-school at Arthur's Hill, and frequently observed that he could not feel content if the work of the Lord was not going on. Our departed friend had a great desire to see a new and larger chapel at the place, towards which he promised £50, on condition the other members would engage to raise an equal sum. And although he died before this object was accomplished, the members of his family have intimated their readiness to redeem that promise, alike from respect to his memory and love to the cause, with which two of them are identified. Mr. Parker had been affected with a liver affection for many years, from which he occasionally suffered much. On Sunday, January 19th, 1862, when returning from Nelson Street Chapel, he suddenly fell in the street in a state of insensibility, injuring himself considerably, and was confined to his bed for a few days. Not long after he had a similar fit, but not so severe. Those two attacks were forerunners of his sudden dissolution. On the Lord's day previous to his departure hence, he enjoyed the services three times in a high degree. A lovefeast being held in the chapel in the afternoon, he spoke his experience with more than ordinary fervour, and in the evening sat with great interest and profit under a discourse on that delightful passage, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." On Monday evening he conversed at considerable length with his eldest son, who is a local preacher, about the affairs of the society, and of the Sabbath-school, and expressed his satisfaction at the evidences of peace and prosperity, stating at the same time his solicitude about the approaching anniversary of the school, saying that he intended presenting the children with prizes at his own expense. On the day before his death he was at the market, and otherwise engaged from morning till evening, seeming better than usual. That night after returning from the chapel, in company with the preacher, referring to his having recently re-perused the History of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and the Life of W. Clowes, he said, if he were able, he would like to live and labour exclusively in the work of the Lord. At family worship he prayed with uncommon earnestness, particularly for the conversion of those who were near and dear unto him. Next morning he was a little later than usual in rising, but took a hearty breakfast; and being told by Mrs. Parker that they had had family worship, he read a chapter and retired to his room for prayer, after which he went into the yard; in a few minutes he returned rather hurriedly, and putting his hand to his forehead, went down on his knees by the side of the arm chair, and groaned twice. His family were around him immediately, and he was lifted up into the chair. The doctor was brought in, who said nothing could be done for him. He never spoke, and in a minute or two ceased to live. He died on the very spot where for upwards of twenty years he had been wont to kneel at family worship.

FURTHER REMARKS ON HIS CHARACTER.

1. Mr. Parker was a devout man, a man of prayer. Soon after his conversion, he formed a habit, which became strengthened with his advancing years, of retiring frequently at stated times for prayer, and the reading of the Scriptures, with occasional fasting. And it is reported of him, that while he was engaged as a local preacher, not unfrequently, instead of taking tea on the Sabbath afternoon, when from home, he would seek retirement for those spiritual exercises, which he felt to be equally necessary to his soul's health and the success of his labours.

2. Ample testimony has been borne to the excellence of his character in the domestic relation, by those who had the best, if not the only opportunity of knowing him. A kind husband and a careful affectionate father, he was both prophet and king in his own house; not only maintaining the regular worship of God, but exercising a wise control over his children, and training them up in the way they should go. His son, who has supplied the principal portion of the materials for this sketch, says, he literally attended to that Divine command, Deut. vi. 7., "And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."

3. We have perhaps said enough to show that he loved Zion, that he was identified in heart with the Church of which he was a member, that he exercised a similar care for her interests, to that for his secular concerns. His attachment to the denomination to which he had been indebted, through grace, for his conversion, edification, opportunities of usefulness and immortal hopes, was strong and permanent. He firmly believed its doctrines, heartily approved of its polity, highly appreciated its ministry, constantly read its literature, and sincerely rejoiced in its enlargement and prosperity.

4. As a tradesman he was remarkably industrious, and from all that ever came to our ears during twenty-one years' acquaintance, conscientious, carrying his religious principles into all the transactions of life. One of his rules was, never to engage in anything upon which he could not ask the blessing of God, and he could not ask the Lord's blessing upon an unjust transaction, or a very hardly driven bargain.

5. He was, for many years, a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks, and frequently pleaded that cause which he considered to be intimately connected with the purity and credit of religion, as well as with the comfort and respectability of social life. We do not, however, wish to hold him up as a perfect man. Justice requires us to add, that while his character, as to its general outlines, was good, and, in some of its features, excellent, it was wanting in symmetry or proportionateness.

The passive virtues were not developed, in an equal degree, with the active ones. He had not obviously thought so much on "whatsoever things are lovely and of good report," as on "whatsoever things are true and honest." His soul was not always according to knowledge.

His humility, meekness, gentleness, forbearance, and prudence were not proportioned to his decision, fidelity, courage, seriousness, and industry ; he was not so amiable on his human side, as he was zealous God-ward. This imperfection of character was no doubt, mainly attributable to an ardent temperament and the want of early culture. One of his relatives, who has contributed something to this memoir, says very significantly, that as his intellectual and moral faculties had been so long neglected, grace had all to do for him. How important, then, is right training and early piety.

The faults, as well as the virtues, of our departed friends speak to us ; and happy are those who honestly endeavour to profit by both. May the writer and the reader, with the bereaved family of Thomas Parker, have grace so to live, that we may be prepared for as sudden a decease as his was.

7. MR. JOHN BEECROFT, the subject of this brief notice, was born at Wilford, near Nottingham. He was sent to a Sabbath-school in this village, where he received such good impressions as to cause him when he attained to riper years often to express his gratitude to God for the benefit of Sabbath-school instruction. At the early age of fourteen he was converted, and from that time pursued the heavenly way. His daily care was to walk worthy of his high and holy vocation, and to adorn the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things. Soon after his conversion, he united with the society at Canaan Street Chapel, Nottingham, and greatly valued the communion of saints.

He was apprenticed to a cordwainer, who became addicted to intemperate habits, and pursued an extremely vicious course. This circumstance rendered the early Christian life of our friend thorny ; and it might have proved disastrous. But John knew the source of strength. As often as he had opportunity, he retired and held communion with his heavenly Father. Nor did he pray in vain. The youthful Christian was supported in the day of trial, and was enabled to hold fast his integrity. His connection with Canaan Street society opened his way to a path of usefulness. He became a teacher in the Sabbath-school, and while he was yet a youth he was called by his brethren to sustain the important office of local preacher. This office he filled with credit to himself and benefit to the people.

When about twenty years of age he removed to Boston, in Lincolnshire. The cause at this town was feeble compared with that with which he had been connected, but he did not join another community, as some have done under such circumstances ; but he immediately connected himself with the society, took his place on the plan, became superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and with all his mind and strength, in season and out of season, on work-days and on the Sabbath, sought to promote the interests of Primitive Methodism, and win men to Christ. After a few years' residence at Boston, by the advice of his physicians he returned to his native air for the benefit of his health, and though a number of years have elapsed since his return, his kind, earnest, self-denying labours are still gratefully remembered by the people of Boston.

On his return to Nottingham, though unable to resume his labours as a local preacher, he felt he must be at work. He consequently accepted the office of superintendent of the Sabbath-school, an office for which he was particularly qualified. His wisdom and tenderness, his even temper and genuine piety, rendered him a suitable instructor of youth; while his urbane and Christian demeanour made it a pleasure for his fellow-teachers to labour with him. Some persons, who might be useful, mar their usefulness by their vanity, their hastiness, or their uncharitableness, but our brother was gentle, calm, considerate, and affectionate, and hence he secured the esteem of all with whom he associated.

Mr. Beecroft filled the responsible office of class-leader. His class was a large one, and prospered greatly under his care. He was a model leader; he watched over the interests of the members as one fully aware of the important trust committed to him. He was greatly beloved by his class. No wonder; he counselled them, sympathised with them, wept and rejoiced with them, as though they had been his children. When any of them were stricken, he mourned; when they rejoiced and prospered in good things, his heart was glad. He had no greater joy than to know that "they walked in the truth."

His affliction was a long one, and of a very depressing nature, but he murmured not. He most firmly believed in the wisdom and goodness of his Heavenly Father, and that the afflictions he was called to endure were "working out for him a far more exceeding and an eternal weight of glory." Hence he calmly waited for the salvation of the Lord. Sister Beeley, his assistant leader, visited him several times during his last illness, and invariably found his confidence in God unwavering. Sometimes he appeared completely absorbed in contemplating the glories of the heavenly world, and often those sweet lines, so frequently sung in our class and band meetings, were on his lips, and filled his heart with ecstatic emotion—

"We sing of the realms of the blest,
Of the country so bright and so fair;
And oft are its glories confessed,
But what must it be to be there!"

"Oh, grand, grand!" he often exclaimed;

"What must it be to be there!"

I had the privilege of visiting him, in company with my colleague, the Rev. J. Woodcock, a few days before his death. He was quite conscious at that time that the mortal strife was nearly at an end, but he was quite ready for the change. He had a "desire to depart and be with Christ," which he knew was "far better" than remaining longer in the world. Seeing the anguish of his dear wife, he tried to comfort her. "Why should you be so troubled, my dear?" said he. "It is all right." We prayed together, and felt it was the gate of heaven. After this he talked with his sister of heaven, and dwelt much on the soul-cheering thought of the reunion of friends there. "You will meet me there," he said, "and Hannah," his wife, and several other persons he named, whom he expected to meet in his Father's house above. Soon after this he sank into a state that rendered him incapable of conversation, and on the 30th of January he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

"One gentle sigh his fetters broke;
We scarce could say, 'He's gone,'
Before the willing spirit took Its station near the throne."

His mortal remains were interred in the General Cemetery, Nottingham, by the side of those of the late Mr. J. Barker, his fellow labourer, who had only just "gone before."

We may truly say of our departed friend that he was loved by all who knew him. He was a good man and a true Primitive Methodist. He had been connected with the Society for thirty years. He had a name without reproach, a character without a stain. He lives in the affections of his Christian brethren, and his memory is blessed. By his removal Canaan Street society has sustained a serious loss—the loss of a pious and devoted labourer. The officials, too, have lost a wise and judicious counsellor, and the children a constant and faithful friend! We sorrow, but not as those that have no hope. We believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that those that sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him.

THE PRIVILEGES OF THE SONS OF GOD.

A SERMON, BY GEORGE DUNN.

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—1 John iii. 2.

THE declaration that the world by wisdom knew not God, has been attested by universal experience. But what the unaided mind of man could never discover, God has revealed in His Word; and in that blessed volume the brightest manifestation of His character shines forth in the gift of His Son to save a lost world. But the love of God, displayed in the work of human redemption, is a stupendous theme, and cannot be fully grasped by the most gigantic created intellect. Apostolic minds were not equal to the full conception, nor the pen of inspiration to the complete description of the mighty subject. Hence, when St. John contemplated this love as manifested to believing souls, he exclaimed, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Beloved, now are we the sons of God," &c. We proceed to notice—

I. WHAT IS IMPLIED IN THE WORDS, "SONS OF GOD."

They have a general sense, for all mankind are the offspring of the Creator. God is the Father of us all, and therefore are we all the sons of God by creation. There is a special sense in which these words apply to the Jews, for it was by Divine interposition that children were raised up unto Abraham. But it is not in the creative, nor in the supernaturally generative but in the regenerative sense, that believers are the sons of God. They are born of the Spirit, born from above, born of God : therefore are they the sons of God—sons by adoption and grace. This implies a passing from death unto life, a change from nature to grace. And this great change is the result of the love of the Father, the merits of the Son, the agency of the Spirit, and the instrumentality of faith. God loved the world ; Jesus died to save it ; the Holy Ghost convinces of sin, reveals coming wrath, excites in the sinner's breast a desire for mercy, and then leads him to the Lamb of God to obtain salvation. And while gazing upon the Crucified, hope animates his bosom, faith springs up in his heart, and casting his soul with implicit confidence on the blood of the covenant, he obtains peace and joy through believing, for—

"Soon as his all he ventures,
On the atoning blood ;
The Holy Spirit enters,
And he is born of God."

Those who experience this process, are conscious of the change. Hence we read, "And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father." And again, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God."

II. WE NOTICE THE PRIVILEGES OF THOSE WHO ARE SONS OF GOD.

1. They are heirs.

"Heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ." Jesus, who is their elder Brother, inherits all things, and has possession of the inheritance in behalf of his brethren, who are co-heirs. They are now in their minority, but their coronation day will come, when they shall receive a sceptre, a throne, a crown, and a kingdom—for "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever."

2. They bear the family name.

They have received the white stone with the new name written therein. Sons and daughters of the Most High God, they can boast of a lineage and heraldry more honourable than those of the titled sons of earth. Behold their shield ; on one side shines the Sun of Righteousness, and on the other sparkles the bright and Morning Star. It matters not what may be their origin, occupation, or condition, the land of their birth, or the colour of their skin, they belong to the household of faith, are sons of a king, members of the royal family of heaven, and destined to bear the name of their God, and to possess the Morning Star.

3. They possess the family likeness.

By looking into the Gospel glass they behold the glory of the Lord and are changed into the same image from glory to glory. They have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which after God is created in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness. Their moral features have been cast in the Gospel mould, and they reflect the likeness of their Divine pattern. But though sanctified in heart and life, they are not yet complete. What that higher glory is which heaven confers, we cannot tell,—for it doth not yet appear what we shall be. It is not made manifest ; the thin and almost transparent curtain, which separates the present from the future, hangs suspended on the feeble fingers of life. But when the summer of life shall end the frost of death will approach, and freezing the fingers of mortality, the curtain will drop, and the sanctified soul shall pass away to paradise, leaving the mortal coil to await the resurrection morn, when all the sons of God shall know by experience what that loftier state of existence is. For what doth not yet appear shall be made manifest when the Saviour appears. For He who is the Resurrection and the Life shall come, and at the trumpet's blast the dead shall hear His voice and leave their graves ; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised, and we shall be changed. He will change our vile bodies and make them like unto His own glorious body. For when He appears we shall be like Him—

In body.—The body of the Saviour will be the model for that of the believer, for He will change it and make it like His own. Hence the resurrection is not a creation, but a transformation ; we shall not have a new body, but the old one restored, refined, and glorified. What may be its true nature, or what is involved in its change doth not yet clearly appear. But it is at least evident that, when freed from the dross of mortality, and exempt from disease, pain, and death, it will enjoy immortality, be vigorous with new life, and bloom in eternal youth. The King immortal and eternal, who died once, but now liveth to die no more, will be our life, and when He appears we shall be like Him.

We shall be like Him in mind.—For our mental powers will be stript of their infirmities and endowed with pristine power and excellence. Then the glorified saint shall be blest with an eternally retentive memory an imagination governed by truth, an unerring judgment, and an understanding no longer beclouded by sin, but transparent as a sea of glass, from which will be reflected the express image of the Divine Redeemer.

We shall be like Him in character. The Redeemer was holy, harmless, and undefiled. Hence He could challenge His enemies to point out a blemish in His character. Yet His virtues were not recognised; His motives were impugned, His words were misconstrued, and His actions condemned. So His brethren with purged conscience and cleansed affections may be ripening for glory. Justice, mercy, and humility, characteristics of the Saviour, may mark their career, yet are they maligned and the subjects of reproach and shame. But the Judge shall come to vindicate His brethren and Himself, and their righteous character will be acknowledged before an assembled world. For, when He appears we shall be like Him.

We shall be like Him in happiness. The Redeemer when on earth was emphatically a Man of Sorrows. His sorrows arose from the sufferings He endured for sin, and which He patiently bore, having respect to His vast reward. But when the days of His anguish were over, He shook off His sorrows, and entered the joy that was set before Him. And now infinitely happy in Himself, His presence fills all heaven with gladness, and makes the paradise of saints on earth. And when He who is the spring of all their joys shall appear and wipe away all tears from all faces, they shall enter into the joy of their Lord. In His "presence there is fulness of joy, and at His right hand there are pleasures for evermore." In this happiness the sons of God will participate; for when He shall appear we shall be like Him.

We shall be like Him in glory. When the Redeemer dwelt on the earth, His glory was seen occasionally as it glimmered through His tabernacle of clay. But when He had finished His Divine work, and the servant's form was no longer needed, He transformed His outward frame and entered heaven, where His body, soul, and divinity shine forth in one united blaze of glory. In reference to this glory, the sons of God have delightful anticipations. They rejoice in hope of the glory of God; for when He shall appear, the earthen vessels will be changed, and their immortal spirits covered with a house not made with hands, shall realise a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

For we shall see Him as He is, in honour, majesty, and glory. We shall see Him because we shall be like Him, and be like because we shall see Him. Through their assimilation to Christ, the saints will be able to gaze with unfailing eye upon His glorious face. When God revealed Himself to Moses, He placed him in the cleft of the rock, and covered him with His hand. And when Jesus was transfigured in the presence of His disciples, and appeared in glory with Moses and Elias, a bright cloud overshadowed them. Mortal eye could not bear the sight, nor gaze upon the unveiled face of God. But the saints in their glorified state shall be able to gaze upon Him when every obstacle is removed. As the eagle can look upon the natural sun, when unclouded, with unmoved eye, so the sons of God shall see the Saviour eye to eye, as He shines forth in all His unclouded splendour in the world of glory. And in this will consist their highest bliss, for

“The saints in His presence receive
Their great and eternal reward;
In Jesus, in heaven they live,
They reign in the smile of their Lord.

“The flame of angelical love,
Is kindled at Jesus's face;
And all the enjoyment above,
Consists in the rapturous gaze.”

We learn from this subject,—

1. The necessity of submitting to the Gospel plan in order to be brought into relationship with God.

2. The high honour and dignity conferred on believers.

3. The encouragement to be derived from their future prospects.

In conclusion. Let sinners repent and believe the Gospel, that they may enjoy the privileges of believers. And let us, who are now the sons of God, keep looking unto Jesus with steadfast eye, so that when He appears we may be like and see Him as He is through everlasting ages. Amen.

PROVIDENCE DEPARTMENT.

A REMARKABLE ESCAPE FROM PERIL.

THE following narrative of a remarkable and providential deliverance is from the pen of Mr. Calderwood, Civil Commissioner for the district of Victoria, South Africa:—

“In 1854 a very serious alarm arose in the colony, amounting in some localities almost to a panic, that the Kaffirs were about to fall upon the colony in overwhelming force, and it was believed that the Fingoes would join them against us. Jokweni, the most powerful of the Fingoe chiefs, was named, on what appeared good authority, as having entered into alliance with the Kaffirs against the colony, and it was feared that most of the Fingoe tribes would follow his example. About the middle of November of that year I was appointed by Lieutenant-Governor Darling, then Acting Governor of the colony, as Special Commissioner to inquire into the state of all the Fingoe locations and tribes in the Eastern province.

“Some said it was madness in me to go as I did in such circumstances among the Fingoes, for I should certainly be murdered. Others seemed to think that I was in league with the Fingoes, and would advise them against the white man. A third party, who can see through millstones better than their neighbours, said it was foolish to appoint me, as I could get no information from the Fingoes, because they hated me as an oppressor. I spent, notwithstanding, two months amongst these people at that time, and I never spent two months more comfortably, or probably more usefully. I went alone with two native men, one a Kaffir, the other a Fingoe. I had the most intimate and unreserved intercourse with all the leading men. I got more of their mind, and saw more of their real state than I had done throughout the many years during which I had been in Africa. I was everywhere treated with the utmost kindness, and received the most encouraging proofs of confidence in myself and of loyalty to the Government. But, what I valued more than all, I had many precious opportunities of proclaiming the truth as it is in Jesus to attentive and interested congregations, and my sabbaths during that period were more than usually refreshing to my own spirit.

"I not only conversed privately every day with some of the chief men, but I also held many public meetings and encouraged all to state freely anything of which they could complain. I shall give a few specimens of the sentiments expressed on these occasions, as illustrating their mode of thinking and speaking, and showing what the English Government has done for them, and how they feel towards it.

"With reference to reports that they wished to return into Caffraria and join the Kaffirs, sentiments such as the following were strongly and generally expressed. One of Jokweni's leading men, lifting up his right hand, and pointing eastward, said, 'We left that country. It is true it is a country of corn. We left much food there. But we were between fire and water in that country. We could not sleep there. We can sleep here. We do not desire to go back.' The chief Umhlauli, a judicious man, said, 'We have here in this country cattle, goats, and corn; and we have a great thing—we can call these things our own. We owe this to the English. In the land which we left we had to bend our knees, and fold our arms, and sit on the ground; but here we can stretch ourselves, and rest, and feel safe. We have much to thank for.' Sitting on the ground as here described is an attitude of great fear.

"An old man of the same tribe said, 'We have a new thing in this land, which the Fingoes could not have in the land from which they were brought. When that sun goes away, we can lie down and sleep; and when the sun returns, we rise up and actually find that we are not dead—we have not been killed.' The allusion here is not an exaggeration of the present state of the Zulu country.

"The chief Mabanhla said, 'When I was a boy the Fingoes were on the road only; we had no home. We were scattered, and could not rest. I and others have got beards under the English Government. We can find rest. We dwell at peace and are secure.'

"Nobanda, another chief, said, 'The Fingoes were once a people. They had long been no people. They had been the dogs of the Caffres. They could only milk and plough for the Caffres. But they have been made a people again by the English Government. They have now a home and property. God had put it into the heart of the Government to be a blessing to them.'

"Sobekwa, another chief, whom I have long known, referring to suspicions against the Fingoes, said to me, with much point and feeling, 'When you came to this country first, you were on my place. You spoke to me the word of God. I have been under your care ever since. You know me ; I know you. Say, now, do you believe that I can now return and take a cowhide as my clothing ?" He wore a good suit of European clothes. I could not help saying that I did not believe that he could. I had indeed not the smallest doubt of his fidelity. These are samples of much that was said to me, and I have every reason to believe that these statements express the feelings that prevail among the old and middle-aged of the Fingoes.

"I had only left the last-named chief, Sobekwa, and reached my waggon, which stood about seven miles from his kraal, when I received from the Civil Commissioner of the division in which I then was a hurried note, to the effect that two farmers had been driven from their places by armed Kaffirs, and that the Gaika fighting men had already passed into the strongholds of the Amatole Mountains, and would no doubt fall upon the colony immediately. This was sufficiently alarming in any case ; it was doubly so in mine. I was alone with two men and my waggon-driver and leader, about seventy miles from home, and my path thither lay exactly through a part of the mountain range said to be occupied by the savage warriors.

"What was to be done ? I had sent reports into my own division that all was right with the Fingoes, and that I did not think there would be war. The alarm was consequently subsiding. The people were in some measure thrown off their guard ; the whole country might in a moment, without warning, be deluged in blood, and my own family involved in the general ruin. It was clearly my duty to act promptly, whatever might be my own personal risk. The country in such circumstances must be warned, though I should fall in attempting to give that warning. I take to myself, however, no credit for having acted simply from a cold sense of duty. My feelings were intensely interested, and these alone would have led me to face any danger, even though the public safety had not been in such jeopardy.

"I called my two native men immediately, and told them all that I had heard and what I intended to do. I have ever found it best to deal openly and frankly with the natives generally, when I can place any dependence in them. It is a very bad heart indeed that is not in some degree subdued and benefited by a feeling that it is trusted.

"The Fingoe man who was with me was not a converted man, but he was one whom I had long known and could entirely trust. He was both strong in body and in mind. He was a true-hearted man, and less sensible to fear than almost any man I ever met. I would rather have had him with me that night than any white man I know, though I know white men in Africa who would face any danger. I told this man that I should start immediately on horseback, and send at the same time a message to the nearest Fingoe chief to protect and forward the waggon the best way he could. I added, that if he would go with me I should be glad ; but, as the danger was great I should not insist, unless he were himself quite willing, but I should go myself at any rate. I do not remember the exact words he used, but the idea conveyed to my mind I shall never forget. It was to this effect, that he should of course go, and most willingly ; and that if I fell, we should fall together.

"He had one horse of his own. I told him to take one of mine, reserving two for myself, so that we could have each a led horse, as the journey was long and very toilsome. While the horses were being got ready, and my attendant was getting something to eat, I went alone, and kneeling down behind a small bush, poured out my heart for my family, myself, and my country, to Him who has said, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.'

"We had not gone far before a severe thunderstorm broke over us, and saturated the ground with water, so that it was both difficult and dangerous to travel in the mountain. That mountain is connected on the one hand with Winterbergen, and on the other with the Amatole, and is one of the principal mountain ranges, though not the highest, in South Africa. It forms the source of several considerable rivers, and it is no easy task to pass through it in wet or stormy weather. In the winter time native travellers have frequently perished there.

"Before entering upon the more difficult part of the journey we came up with a gentleman in the service of Government, with his waggon outspanned, and unable to proceed further that night. A waggon could not travel in the state of the road at the time. He had just come from an exposed part of the Queen's Town Division, and informed me that what I had heard of the threatened danger was quite true. I should most gladly have accepted his kind invitation to remain all night, for it was just getting dark, and the storm was commencing anew, and there was no danger in remaining there. Besides, the rivers were likely to be flooded, and it was considered impossible for any one to pass over the mountain in such a night. The case, however, was urgent. Life and property to a very great amount were at stake, and it would have been torment for me not to make the attempt. I felt, too, that I was in the path of duty, and therefore I could not hesitate.

"It now soon became dark, and the rain fell heavily. A stream which had to be crossed three times in the mountain was before me. It was not of any consequence in ordinary times, but likely to be dangerous in such weather and in such a night. As we began to ascend the first mountain—for it is a succession of mountains rather than one—the path was very steep, and slanted much towards a deep ravine, so as to be almost impassable for any conveyance, even in fine weather,—my horse fell. Then I would willingly have returned to my friend's tent; and, had I been prompted only by feeling, I should have done so. But a sense of duty in a real difficulty rises superior to mere feeling or affection, and I struggled forward as though I could not help it.

"I had reason that night to be truly thankful for 'the lightning of the thunder,' terrible though it sometimes was. As we descended towards the ford the rain had ceased, and there was a partial calm. It was very dark, and the river rushed and roared as though swollen to an impassable state. We stood still. It seemed madness to go forward; but it was now nearly impossible to go back. The storm was again approaching. I silently prayed for guidance and protection, and then dismounting, I desired my attendant to put my saddle upon my large horse, which was a powerful animal. At the same time, I asked him what he thought of our attempting to cross in the dark. As natives often do in a difficulty, he replied cheerlessly, 'Andazi,'—meaning not simply 'I don't know,' which is its literal translation, but in the tone in which it was given, 'I very much doubt.'

I remarked to him, 'I shall go first—the danger is mine.' He did not speak, but in a partial atmospheric gleam, which at the moment prevailed, I saw his countenance faintly as he made a movement plainly indicating that I should do no such thing, but that he would first face the danger. As soon as we were ready, I mounted rapidly, and spurring my horse passed him. The stream at the point of crossing is so situated that if we once entered there was no return, and therefore, should it be too strong, we must either cross or be carried down. At the instant I was descending the outer bank a flash of lightning revealed to me the state of the river. I knew the ground well, and immediately I saw the stream was yet, with proper care fordable, though swollen. I called out, 'All is right—we are safe, thank God!' and passed through.

"Some will say, 'How fortunate! What a striking coincidence! It was a remarkable chance.' But the Christian will say, 'Prayer was heard there. God makes a 'way for the lightning of the thunder.' He, and He only, directeth it in its mysterious path. My heart felt it and my judgment assented without a doubt, as I exclaimed, 'God hears prayer, and ruleth over all'."

"It now became exceedingly difficult and even dangerous either to walk or ride, because the path was very wet, and often nearly precipitous. I now changed my horse again, taking a small pony, too spirited for such a time, but I could better trust his sureness of foot. In order to avoid a part of the road which I knew would be impassable that night, we turned out of the usual line, and in the darkness lost our way. I knew we were approaching somewhere the summit of the mountain, and was beginning to feel a little anxious, when suddenly my horse reared, almost unseating me from the saddle. I spurred him to go forward, but he reared again, and sprang violently back, so that I could scarcely keep my seat. At that moment a vivid flash of lightning illumined the country round, and what did I behold! I was in the act of forcing my horse over a tremendous precipice, the height of which I cannot with certainty tell. It was near the summit of a high mountain, and the descent is nearly precipitous to its base. A very great depth from where I stood is perpendicular rock. I was stunned, as though the lightning had struck me. I dismounted and stood amazed, humbled and filled with profound gratitude that the God of mercy should condescend to teach me in such a wonderful manner as He that night had done—that He guides all the affairs of men, and hears and answers prayer. The emotions that filled my heart at that moment cannot be expressed. I felt that although I had done nothing and seen nothing else in Africa, I had not come to it in vain, in having obtained such experience of the doctrine of providence, and of the power of prayer. I trust my chief object in recording this narrative is to proclaim the Divine glory, and induce many to seek to realize the glorious truth that God is ever near us, and that there is a living power in the prayer of faith, not only for the obtainment of direct answers, but to sustain the mind in severest trial.

"I dared not again mount my horse that night, and it was indeed nearly impossible to do so. We groped about with our hands until we found the path by which to descend the mountain; and to descend that mountain in such a night was a difficulty of a most formidable kind. I cannot tell how often I fell, my horse sliding after me and nearly upon me. I was covered with mud, and no one could have known me but by my voice. The fatigue of body was almost more than I could endure. Yet the deliverance I had experienced was so marked and striking that my mind was joyous and jubilant, as though wholly independent of the body. We were now descending into the bushy country, where we had reason to expect that every moment we might fall in with the enemy. Yet my mind was in such a state, from what had occurred, that I could scarcely refrain from almost shouting, in the words of Watts' paraphrase of the 121st Psalm—

'I'll go and come
Nor fear to die,
Till from on high,
Thou call me home.'

"These are precious experiences, and teach the blessed power of religion far more powerfully than the best-sustained reasoning.

"It was past midnight when we reached the foot of the mountain, where we obtained shelter, and we reached home next day, sorely tired, but deeply thankful."—From The Sunday at Home.

JUNIOR PREACHERS' DEPARTMENT.

THE SUBSTANCE OF AN ADDRESS

Delivered to Messrs. T. MEREDITH and J. BALL, on the completion of their Probation, at the Public Meeting, held on Monday Evening, May 5th, 1862, in connexion with Manchester District Meeting.

By WILLIAM ANTLIFF.

MY DEAR BRETHREN,—The task assigned me of addressing you in presence of this large meeting, on subjects of the highest importance, is no light or easy one. But I feel that the more plain and practical, the more appropriate will be the observations I shall address to you. Let me, then, in the outset, congratulate you on the honourable position you now occupy. You have passed through your probation as candidates for our ministry, and now have acquitted yourselves creditably in the examination to which you have been subjected. Your brethren, in District Meeting assembled, have unanimously recommended you to the Conference for reception into the number of approved ministers. And, in a short time, in all likelihood, you will be accepted by the highest assembly in the Connexion, as entitled to stand side by side with those whom our Church regards as her authorised expositors of God's Word, and administrators of all ministerial functions. True, you have received no formal ordination,—nor have any of us; but if we have been divinely called to our work, and are otherwise suitably qualified for it, I apprehend the lack of that ceremony will but little affect either our efficiency or our credit. The great point is to be placed where Providence would have us, and to do the work assigned us, that we may realize the reward awaiting us. I trust, my brethren, you have full satisfaction that you are called to the work of the Primitive Methodist ministry. And, I believe, you have no hesitation in assuring us that in this work you hope to live and to die. Believing you give a sincere and conscientious preference to our ministry, let me submit to your consideration a few thoughts in regard to the most likely means for becoming eminently successful therein.

1. Let me suggest to you that the prime pre-requisite is deep personal piety. Whatever talents you may possess, or however diligently you may cultivate them, unless you be deeply pious your labours will never be eminently successful in winning souls to Christ, and advancing the highest interests of the Church of your choice. Aim, therefore, at a high standard of personal holiness. Be not content with a superficial or ordinary measure of religion. You are to be leaders and ensamples of the flock, and hence you should always be in advance of those under your care. If a minister be below his people in piety, the danger is that they will sink to his level, while if he be above them, we may hope he will be the means of their elevation. You know well that a Church cannot be what it ought to be unless it be above the world; nor can a minister be what he should be, unless above the majority of the Church. Live up to your privileges, fulfil your personal obligations, and by the cultivation of deep-toned piety, seek to bring up the people of your charge and to save multitudes from sin and death.

2. Attend sedulously to the acquisition of useful knowledge. By this, I mean the kind of knowledge which your ministerial duties will require. Be sound theologians. Study the works of Wesley and Fletcher, and try to be familiar with the leading Methodist doctrines. Wesley's sermons and his Notes on the New Testament, you know, are regarded as the standard of our doctrines. Do not be afraid of the trouble of reading and re-reading those valuable works. Compare them with Scripture, and so far as in your judgment they agree therewith, let them be your rule of faith. I would also suggest that Watson's Theological Institutes, Dr. Cooke's Tracts on Theology, my friend James Garner's Dissertations, and John Petty's Plain Sermons, deserve, and should have, your careful and repeated attention. Above all, make the blessed Bible your daily companion and guide. Do not affect novelties of doctrine or style, but be content to be Primitive Methodist preachers. Pray over the Bible; study it sometimes on your knees. Mix all your studies with earnest prayer, and believe for divine light and help, and assuredly you will receive them.

And besides a sound theology, you should acquire as much general information as practicable. Know something respectable about the grammar of our own tongue—the rules of argumentation—the figures of speech and beauties of expression—the physical sciences, and the science of mind. An acquaintance with men and things in general will be requisite. Keep your eyes open, and try to improve all your opportunities. Guard against a desultory course of reading. Choose good works and persevere in the study of them. Do not spend either your time or money in trash. An abundance of it surrounds us in these days. But be old-fashioned enough to look after the old writers, standard divines, best authorities, and abide by them a good deal. Many of us have great cause for regret, that in our younger days we were left to ourselves as to what we should buy, read, and study. Hence a good part of our time and money was worse than wasted. You have greater advantages ; there are brethren now who are both able and willing to guide you in these things. And do not be afraid of asking their advice, and do not be too vain to follow it. Have a care of spending too much time among papers and periodicals ; for while some knowledge of them is important, if you give too much time to them you will suffer serious loss. And when you have resolved on the study of any particular subject—say the History of England—do not fly off very soon to some other. Dr. Clarke says he has known many men begin the study of Hebrew, but very few who have really learned the language. The reason was, they grew weary and wanted something fresh. I do not know that it is necessary that you should learn Hebrew, or any other dead language, but this I know, if once you earnestly begin such a study, you had far better persevere than soon relinquish it ; for a volatile turn of mind must be subdued, or you will never attain to much eminence or usefulness in the Church. Master yourselves. Be determined to acquire habits of order, regularity, and perseverance. Pray for patience in such things, and try to act out your prayers and resolves. May God help you ! Let me also remind you that as Primitive Methodist preachers you will need a good knowledge of our rules and usages. Read the rules well, and observe the usages of the Connexion. Familiarize yourselves with the leading facts in our history, and understand, if possible, the reason for every law. Many of our young brethren, I fear, are very remiss in these things. Their idea seems to be that they must read magazines, pick up fine expressions, weave them into their sermons, and be very flowery and poetical in their preaching. Now, I entreat you, do despise this sort of thing.

It is really contemptible. Do you be men and not babies ; and think for yourselves, and think soundly and soberly, and speak as you think. Give me a man who often preaches the same sermon, rather than one who is all for flash and novelty. Study your own sermons, and do not be plagiarists. Use your legs and not stilts. Cultivate your own abilities, and be yourselves. Avoid mimicry. It is loathsome. It makes men into monkeys ; and one would rather see monkeys turned into men.

3. Pay attention to your conduct and character. Avoid foppery. Be neat and cleanly in your appearance ; but abhor pedantic airs and priestly arrogance. Do not affect the gentleman, except in the best sense of the word. Have a care of frivolity. Be steady in all your deportment. Many eyes—not always the most friendly—will be upon you. Give no occasion to the enemy to gainsay or blaspheme. “Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion walketh about, seeking whom he may devour.”

In your intercourse with the people never forget, and never let them forget, you are ministers of Christ. Carry the spirit of your Master into all your exercises. Be punctual in the discharge of all your duties. Never leave till tomorrow what should be done today. In official meetings and business act in a conciliatory and Christian manner ; and let none suppose you wish to be “lords over God’s heritage.” Treat all persons with Christian courtesy, wherever you go, and whatever you do. At the same time be firm in the maintenance of godly discipline, and prudently sustain the laws of the Connexion. Try early to fit yourselves for taking the superintendency of a station, and remember a good superintendent is among us a real desideratum. Keep a good conscience, and conserve to the best of your ability, the credit of the community.

And, finally, my young brethren, let me exhort you to live for usefulness, and live to God. Remember "the time is short;" and "what thine hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." In a few years the senior brethren present will be with those whom some of us have known and loved in years past, but who are now resting from their labours—"where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest." What you do should be done quickly. Be worthy sons of worthy sires. The fathers have dropped their mantle; be it yours to catch and wear it. So far as you are concerned never let Primitive Methodism decline for want of holy, industrious, useful preachers. Cultivate all the graces that adorn the Christian and the ministerial character, and rest not without a large measure of spiritual power, and abundant tokens of the Divine approval. Win souls to Christ by all means; and win many. You may be burning and shining lights. Oh, will you not resolve so to be? Heaven help and bless you! And let all the people say, amen.

FAMILY DEPARTMENT.

HOME INFLUENCE.

A DYING father, whom we well knew and highly respected, anxiously inquired whether his absent son had arrived. He wished to see that son, before he bade a final adieu to his beloved family; "for," said he, "he stands greatly in need of home influence." The sentiment which this affectionate parent expressed made a deep impression upon our mind, and, from personal experience and common observation, we believe that this home influence moulds the great mass of society, controlling the mind through all the varied changes of life.

The division of the human race into families—the uniting the branches by the most tender of all earthly ties—is one of the wise plans of our Creator; and, when implicitly acted upon, society becomes elevated, purified and happy. But the least deviation from this order brings blight and ruin, not only upon individuals and families, but upon whole communities. Infidelity and scepticism formerly, and in this day Socialism and other false systems, unblushingly use arguments and satire against the solemn contract of marriage, and would propose, in its place, a connection less binding and sacred, and thus throw society back into a state of vice and brutality. They well know that matrimony, first celebrated in Eden, when God Himself gave the bride, lies at the foundation of all morality, and is the very salt that preserves the virtue of society; and hence their unwearied efforts to undermine its influence.

We know, from our own experience, that the impressions of right and wrong which our youth receive, under the influence of home, will never be eradicated from their minds. These blessings, to them are immense, if the parents are faithful. A thought of the past has often served to call back the prodigal child, after years of folly, to cheer the evening of a parent's life with unspeakable comfort and happiness; while others, who with bursting heart have received the sad tidings of the wanderer's death, perhaps on the stormy sea, or the battle-field, far away from home, have been filled with thankfulness at the recital of penitential feelings and tender regards felt for those dear parents.

All right training and sound morality commence at home. Obedience is here at first enforced, from the motive, not of duty only, but of affection—a motive which is, by far, the strongest chain to bind society together. The government of a family is an embryo of that which a nation should be, if it would become a harmonious and prosperous people. The child that is obedient at home finds no difficulty to transfer the same duty to his preceptor at school, or to him under whom he is learning a profession or trade. The influence of his home has been preparatory to the carrying out of this important duty, and renders him, through life, one of the best of citizens; because, from those innate principles which were planted in him at the very dawning of reason, he reveres and respects the laws of his country; and, like the stern Roman of olden story, he would perish in the camp of his enemies, rather than forfeit his word, or tarnish the honour of his country.

But it is at home that the tenderest sympathies and the most useful affections of the heart are called forth. If the family is in health and prosperity, how is enjoyment heightened by each one being an equal participator, and where no one wishes to appropriate anything to himself alone? It is thus that we learn to suppress those feelings of covetousness, selfishness, and ambition which have filled the world with crimes and blood.

But when adversity, affliction, or death first enters the family home, then, how do the springs of sympathy and keen sorrow burst forth, and bind yet closer the several members together. Here we learn that even poverty and disappointment may be alleviated. Here we see the means of improvement, by teaching us our dependence upon each other, and we can but admire the wisdom of Providence in the institution of the family compact, while we feel how sad and lonely would be our condition in the world were we isolated individuals, without the gushings of sympathy which our confidence in each other now entitles us to feel.

In making home influences of a right and lasting kind, of course much will depend upon the heads of the family. We often see some children eager to break away from the restraints of home; while others leave the scenes of their childhood with the keenest sorrow. Where parental authority has been sustained by wisdom and kindness, instead of sourness and sternness, it unites the child to the place of his youth, and its effects upon the heart are lasting—inspiring the mind with the same kind and benevolent feelings—which seldom fail to gain him friends when abroad in the world, and thus facilitate his path to success and usefulness.

There may be decision without tyranny, and we may be fully obeyed, not from fear, but from a heart overflowing with love, if we commence the training early, and never insist upon any point unless it is reasonable—remembering the saying of the ancient philosopher, who, when his servant had offended him, said, "I would strike you if I were not angry."

Nothing can be more interesting to a parent's mind, when his children are scattered about in the world, than to receive from them their testimony of gratitude, that they had parents whose example and precept laid the foundation of their happiness and success; and there are few parents but may be so highly favoured.

The affection and obedience which Washington awarded to his mother have never been, and, perhaps, never can be surpassed. The principles in which that mother had educated him led him to obey her, when his inclination urged him to enter the British navy, and that act of self-denial was amply rewarded, not only by the gift of the highest honours his country had to bestow, but in the feelings of admiration that burst from every liberal heart throughout the world.

But when we contemplate what effect the influence of home will have upon the eternal destiny of our offspring, we behold a still higher motive, why we should render the family abode everything to allure and guide our children to the religion of the cross. If we are faithful, we shall most strictly exclude everything, in conversation, books, or example, which would in the least weaken their struggles against vice and scepticism. It is recorded of Robert Burns, the poet, that when he gave up his family altar, the last restraint of a religious nature, which he had imbibed from the home of his youth, left him, and his career in dissipation and folly hastened the termination of a life which his countrymen valued, and which every son of genius deeply lamented. There is scarcely a doubt of it. Let the home influence be vicious, let the fountains of the soul be poisoned at home, or, what is almost equivalent, let the parent fail to cast into those fountains the pure waters gushing from "Siloa's brook," and all the counter influences that may be exerted are inefficient and well nigh powerless.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL DEPARTMENT.

OUR SENIOR SCHOLARS—HOW CAN WE BEST TRAIN AND PREPARE THEM FOR THE WORK OF TEACHING?

Let the office of the teacher be exalted in our schools—its high and noble mission, its Christ-like character, the blessings promised to those who labour for the salvation of others; let the principle be enunciated, that having themselves tasted the benefits of religious instruction, the scholars should seek to impart the same blessing to others. Let it be assumed that this is a duty incumbent upon all, though all may not be called to discharge it by teaching in the Sabbath-school; yet if God's providence does not call them to other spheres of usefulness, that has a strong claim upon their services. And further, let it be understood, that one of the objects of Sabbath-school instruction is to provide them with such preliminary training as may fit and prepare them for undertaking this work.

Some will urge the objection, "Why seek to prepare all alike for the work of teaching, when obviously only a portion of our scholars can ultimately be so engaged?"

To this I answer, that the field of labour is large, and as already urged, might be very widely extended if we could obtain more labourers. There can be no fear but that we shall, for many years to come, find abundant employment for all the teachers we can successfully train; though no doubt many, very many, who now quit our schools from a distrust of their own powers, from a consciousness of their inability to teach, and from a dislike for the work, engendered by the failure of their crude attempts, when instructed how to teach, find the work pleasant and delightful, and enter into it con amore; and even, after receiving such instruction some prove to have no aptitude for the work, or lack that tact which no instruction can impart, or by God's providence are called elsewhere, or from various causes do not remain in our schools as teachers, we have done them no harm. A man's aptness to teach, and capacity for wisely applying the knowledge he possesses, can scarcely fail to be useful to him in whatever station of life he may be placed.

Others may object, "Why not leave the young people to make their own choice, and instruct only such as express a wish to become candidates for the office of teacher?" To do this would be practically to limit the class to so few as to render the attempt abortive, from lack of that interest which can only be imparted by the stimulus of numbers. Many who cherish a secret desire would be deterred by timidity, a spirit of bashfulness, or fear of being thought presumptuous from coming forward prominently as candidates; others would be prevented by an undue estimate of the difficulties; others again from indifference; and so scarcely any would enrol themselves. To attempt to carry on this work with a class of only three, four, or six would be hopeless; the thing must fail and go to the limbo of departed schemes; but, make it part of a system which follows on as a matter of course, applicable to all alike, and bashfulness would not be taxed, imaginary difficulties would not arise, and indifference would be won over to love and earnest action.

I would have the Senior Class in every school emphatically a Training Class, in which, while on the one hand scriptural and religious instruction is duly imparted, the training of the scholars for the work of teaching shall be kept distinctly in view, and made an important feature in the arrangements.

The great desideratum will be the teachers; provide them, and the rest will be mere matter of detail. Something more would be requisite than is sought for in the teachers of our senior classes as at present conducted; for those who undertake to train others, should possess peculiar qualifications. Assuming that they are pious, have a partiality for teaching, and are desirous of devoting their talents to the service of the Redeemer; it is desirable that they should also be well acquainted with the rules and principles, the theory and practice of teaching, as an art. These are not acquired intuitively, but must be studied and worked out like the rules and principles of any other profession; but they are not difficult of attainment, and most persons who have received a good education—a class daily enlarging—may, by brief application, and a studious perusal of some few of the books which are recognised as standard authorities on the subject, soon gain such proficiency as would at all events, suffice for commencing—subsequent study and practice would keep them in advance of their pupils.

The scholars, as now, would consist of youth of both sexes above fourteen or sixteen years of age, who having mostly passed through the other classes of the school, would therefore be tolerably well grounded in general scriptural knowledge. The arrangements as to the room, and other accessories of 'physical comfort, the rules for regulating the attendance, and other subsidiary matters, should be based upon the suggestions contained in "Watson on Senior Classes," and Blacket's Young Men's Class."

In proceeding to offer a few suggestions as to the course of instruction to be pursued, I do so with considerable diffidence. The ground, so far as I know, is untrodden, and I cannot, therefore, avail myself of past experience. My ideas must be taken as suggestive only, and will, I have no doubt, be considerably modified, if not altogether set aside, by subsequent discussion. The course of instruction should be systematic. The teacher should carefully arrange a well digested system of instruction, which should occupy the attention of the class during a period of, say two years. This course to be pursued in something like the following order:—

On the first Sabbath in each month a lesson by the teacher, specially designed to show how the great fundamental principles of education may be made available in teaching Sabbath scholars. Thus, the necessity and advantages of adaptation, may be shewn by giving three lessons upon the same subject, prepared for infant, elementary, and advanced classes: the right use of illustrations, art of questioning, exercise of memory and judgment, the means of securing attention, suitable simplicity, and other matters would, in turn, be dealt with. These lessons might be given to a class of children, called in for that purpose from the adjoining school—the class to have their Bibles before them, and follow the lesson, making constant use of note-book and pencil to record the leading points.

On the second Sabbath a review of the previous Sabbath's lesson—inquiries, comments, and discussion by the class generally, founded upon their notes, with explanations and summary by the teachers.

On the third Sabbath, a practice lesson by members of the class in rotation, to be followed, after dismissal of the children, by brief criticism by the teacher; or, in cases where an objection is felt to giving a lesson, then a written outline lesson may be substituted, which should show what arrangement of the subject was considered best, the illustrations to be used, the points upon which the scholars should be questioned, the parts upon which observations would be offered, and the particular truths or lessons to be enforced and applied. This also to be criticised by the teacher, and occasionally by some two or three of the class, who, in turn, should be appointed to this duty.

On the fourth Sabbath, a Preparation Class. Information on geography, history, chronology, manners and customs, &c., to be furnished by members of the class, selected by the teacher. This, whilst instructing the class in the right preparation of a lesson, would also be adding to their scriptural knowledge, and would enable the teacher to make an application of the subject to their own hearts and consciences.

When a fifth Sabbath occurs in a month, it might be spent in devotional exercises. These engagements to occupy the afternoon only; where members of the class can meet in the morning, the ordinary religious instruction might be given, without any reference to training. Free expression of opinion to be encouraged, and for this end a conversational colloquial style will be found most suitable; criticisms must not be allowed to degenerate into personalities, and the subjects of the lessons should, if possible, be announced on the previous Sabbath. But the system will not even thus be complete; and in order to the consideration of some matters which cannot consistently be undertaken on the Sabbath, it will be necessary that the class meet also one evening in the week. There need not be much difficulty in this; for when young people reach the age of sixteen and upwards, they mostly enjoy some extent of evening leisure, and parents or friends will seldom object to their attending such meetings as I propose. To meet the convenience of those who may be engaged in business, these meetings should be short, say not exceeding an hour, or an hour and a half. Brief and animated lectures should be given upon educational topics, entering more largely and minutely into detail than could possibly be attempted on the Sabbath; and also, lectures on Biblical illustration, as the birds, animals, insects, trees, and botany of the Bible—mountains, rivers, cities of the Bible—manners and customs of the people, &c., &c. In the delivery of these, the help of friends might be obtained, and the Biblical series should, if practicable, be rendered more interesting by pictorial illustrations.

Then, to interest the class and give them something to do—a very essential ingredient if the class is to be maintained—to identify them individually with its prosperity, let all contribute in some way, however humbly, to the general stock. To this end let the members from time to time furnish a series of biographical sketches, say the Patriarchs, the Apostles, and the Warriors of the Bible; the women of the New Testament, the Prophets, Paul, Moses, David, and other prominent characters, &c.; then, historical sketches, embracing the events of particular eras, the poetry, the idols, the types, the peculiar styles of the various books; the prophecies and their fulfilment, &c. In fact, the field is boundless, and there is scarcely a limit to the topics upon which the young people might be encouraged to exercise their talents. They would at the same time increase their acquaintance with the truths of the Bible. Occasionally controversial subjects might be discussed, short readings from various authors, bearing upon the lesson for the next Sabbath; or, the class might together read "Paley's Evidences," "Butler's Analogy," "Conybeare and Howson's Life and Writings of St. Paul," or some other works on the critical study of the Scriptures. At least once a quarter have a social tea-meeting, where difficulties, objections, encouragements, and progress can be talked over; let there be a little singing and music, perhaps a microscope, stereoscope, or a few choice photographs occasionally, and always abundance of kindly, friendly, Christian feeling. Let the work be regarded as serious, important, calling for earnestness, self-denial, and all the other cardinal virtues, if you will; but studiously avoid anything that shall make it wearisome, heavy, plodding, dull. God's arrangement is, that the season of youth shall be one of vivacity, liveliness, and cheerfulness; and when, in dealing with young people, we oppose that arrangement, or in our wisdom try to set it aside, no wonder that our projects fail; and therefore I would urge, that in order to attract and retain our senior scholars, in connection with these several engagements, they should all be characterised by consistent cheerfulness.

After pursuing with tolerable regularity a two years' course, such as I have mapped out, any young person of moderate abilities ought to be well informed on the principles of teaching, and should be expected to go and put those principles into practice. If there are no vacancies in the school with which the class is connected, openings can no doubt be found elsewhere; thus diffusing the leaven of good and efficient instruction. This, however, is no part of my subject; I have to deal with the training of them, not what is to be done with them afterwards.

Such is a rough outline of my proposal; the details might, nay must, be filled in to suit circumstances. In a purely voluntary undertaking, individual judgment must have scope; but so long as the principle is admitted and put into practice, I am not anxious about this particular plan; there will probably be little difficulty in suggesting a much better. I admit that such classes could not be established in every school, some are too small and feeble to attempt it, but in all schools where there are now senior classes meeting in separate rooms, the plan is feasible. It cannot be successfully attempted without earnest effort and much self-denial, but nowhere are these virtues more practised than in our Sunday schools; and I am persuaded, that if it commends itself to the judgment of the teachers, difficulties will not stand in the way of its accomplishment; and the day will soon come when we shall thus undertake to train and prepare our senior scholars for the work of teaching.

1. A VISIT TO THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE.

HAVING for once a Sabbath evening without any particular engagements, I recently resolved, in company with a friend or two, to visit the Great Metropolitan Tabernacle, and to hear the celebrated Spurgeon. We were at the doors half an hour before the time of service, but found the front of the tabernacle already besieged by a large number of persons, and while waiting for the opening of the doors, which we had to do twenty minutes or more, the number kept rapidly increasing. There were evidently many strangers there, who, like ourselves, had gone just for the once, either to gratify their curiosity or for some other purpose. The regular seatholders were admitted by ticket at side doors, so that they could secure their places before the strangers were allowed to enter. About seven minutes before the service began, all the doors were opened, and then a terrible rush and a painful crush was witnessed. We could not keep the company of all our party, but we had each to look to himself as best he might. Being carried in by the crowd, volens, volens—we at length reached a projecting seat in one of the bottom aisles, where by-and-bye, the crowd becoming adjusted and composed we were moderately comfortable. And what a sight! It was truly magnificent. I apprehend the appearance of the place has something to do with the immense attendance. The building is evidently constructed on first rate principles of science, both architecture and acoustics. And the light and elegant appearance of the pillars that support the galleries, the framework and the filling up of the gallery fronts, and there are two galleries round, together with the style of painting and ornamentation, give to the whole edifice an air of unusual grandeur. It is also well lighted and ventilated, and the floors slightly rise towards the entrance, so as to render the position of hearers near the doors much better than otherwise would be the case. The front is built of stone with fine corinthian pillars, and a considerable area is provided between the gates and the steps. There are two platforms in the building, the lower one being used by the choir, and the higher by the preacher. It will be supposed that when the congregation, perhaps 5,000 persons rose to sing, the sight was glorious. Nor was the sound aught less. The hymns were announced by Mr. Spurgeon himself, which we hardly expected; as it is usual in dissenting chapels for some one else to relieve the preacher of this. But his magnificent voice was a valuable accompaniment of this part of the service. And some good old-fashioned hymns he gave out, and some fine congregational tunes, "Rousseau's Dream," for example, were sung. Truly it did one good to hear, "Come ye sinners, poor and needy," &c., (which was among the first Primitive Methodist hymns we ever heard) sung by that immense multitude in right good earnest. There seemed to be a large amount of divine influence in the place. And then a portion of Scripture was read very distinctly and impressively by the preacher, and a running exposition, as good as a sermon, accompanied it. Some most pithy, pungent, and impressive remarks Mr. Spurgeon made. Then the prayer was plain, scriptural, and fervid. And when the sermon came, although the preacher complained of exhaustion, he threw so large an amount of soul into it, and evidently sought to make every utterance tell on both saint and sinner, that we could not help wishing we had his gifts, and could wield them in such a congregation. No one surely can doubt that the Lord has raised up this extraordinary man for the accomplishment of great good in this metropolis and the nation. The sermon was short, comparatively, about forty or forty-five minutes long, and wound up with a powerful peroration; and then the benediction closed the service.

From the whole we draw the following conclusions:—

1. The Primitive Methodists have reason to be grateful that through their agency Mr. Spurgeon was converted to God. And not a little does it redound to his credit that he so freely and frequently avows the fact, and expresses his obligations. His cheerfully granting the use of the Tabernacle for our Metropolitan Missionary Meeting, speaks well for the sincerity of his professed love to our denomination.

2. What an example has Mr. Spurgeon placed before ministers in general. In him there are no pomp or parade, no Germanising theology, no tricky oratory, no mere clap-trap. Our firm conviction is that although his splendid voice, his youthful appearance, and his singular expressions may have aided him in gaining his extensive popularity, he is infinitely more indebted for his success as the most popular minister of the day, to his great zeal and earnestness than to all besides. And why should not any minister of ordinary capabilities be successful? Let him live for it, pray for it, believe for it, labour for it, and God will assuredly give him success. We cannot expect all men to be Spurgeons any more than we can expect all stars to be Jupiters, but in our several spheres we all may be very useful if we will resolve by Divine help we will be. Let us rejoice in the success of this eminent servant of Christ, and as far as in us lies, all, ministers and people, emulate his zeal and success.

3. In estimating the good results of Mr. Spurgeon's labours, we must not confine our observation to his own congregation. We have a strong conviction that very largely to him are we indebted for those special efforts that have of late years been put forth both in the Establishment and out of it—in London and in the country. We very much question whether St. Paul's and Westminster Abbey would have been opened for special services if there had been no stir at Exeter Hall, and Surrey Gardens. And while we thank God for the great good which has been effected in the above named places, and in theatres and elsewhere by the holding of special services, we bless God that the popularity of Mr. Spurgeon has contributed to bring about such a result, and that Primitive Methodism has been owned of God to be the means of Mr. Spurgeon's conversion and subsequent success. Greatly too has the spirit of sectarianism been subdued by these events; and among various sections of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, the great amount of spirituality and brotherly love called forth and delightfully developed of late years, is, we think, traceable to the same causes. O may the day soon dawn when "Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim;" but all sects and denominations shall more earnestly and harmoniously labour to bring about the great results to which Mr. Spurgeon seems to direct his eye and aim continually, viz., the salvation of sinners, and the establishing of saints; the glory of God in the evangelization of mankind!

2. THE PASSOVER AT JERUSALEM.

WE were very anxious to see the Passover kept in Jerusalem, and by the kindness of Mrs. Finn, we received an invitation to the house of one of the most respectable Jews for that evening—the night of our Good Friday. We went there between eight and nine o'clock, and found the whole family—including four generations—assembled in the principal room, which was well-lighted with lamps and several wax candles; these they were obliged to ask the Mooslim kawasses, who came with us, to replenish, when they burned out, later in the evening, as the Jews cannot kindle a light or do any kind of work during the feast. We were placed upon the divans at one side of the room, the women of the family, with the servant and children, remaining together at the bottom of the room, only one of the women, the venerable mother of the master of the house, being seated with the men and boys, who were altogether in one corner, with a small table before them, covered with silk and velvet cloths, richly embroidered with gold, some of which were heirlooms of great antiquity. A little boy, one of the youngest members of the family, then asked, "What mean ye by this service?" (in accordance with Exodus xii. 26); upon which all the males stood up, rocking themselves without ceasing a moment, and recited very rapidly, in Hebrew, the story of the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. Then a boy repeated a very long legendary tale in Spanish, with a rapidity that was perfectly astonishing. All had books before them, and continued rocking their bodies to and fro, while only one was speaking. This is an illustration of the text, "All my bones shall praise Thee." After a long time the men sat down, when a long white and black cloth was placed upon their knees, and the old mother brought in a metal ewer and basin, and poured water upon the hands of each, which were wiped in the cloth, while they continued reading out aloud. Then the master laid a white cloth over one shoulder, and removing the coverings from the table, he took one of the large cakes of passover bread, till then concealed, and breaking it in half, tied it into the end of the cloth, and slung it over the shoulder of the youngest boy, who kept it for ten minutes, and then passed it on to the next, and so on, all continuing to recite from the books without stopping; after this the mother brought another basin, and the master took up a glass vessel containing a mixture of bitter herbs and vinegar, and some other ingredients, and separating ten portions from it with his fingers, threw them into the basin—these represented the ten plagues of Egypt. There were plates of lettuce and other herbs, and the bones of the roasted lamb, in dishes on the table, besides the unleavened bread, and four cups of wine; three of these, at certain parts of the ceremony, were passed round, and partaken of by each individual, including the women and baby; one cup of wine remained untouched, which was said to be for the prophet Elijah; and we were told that in most families, towards the end of the supper, the door of the room is opened, and all stand up, while the prophet is believed to enter and partake of the wine: among rich Jews this cup is frequently of gold, with jewels. Some other dishes were laid on another table containing nuts and dried fruits, of which they afterwards partook; except in this, the females entered into no part of the ceremony. All were dressed in their best and gayest clothes, with jewels and flowers in their hair. Before the conclusion, they wished each other the usual wish, that at the coming of the next Passover, they might all be in Jerusalem, and the usual prayer was offered, that by that time the Messiah might have come to redeem Israel.—Egyptian Sepulchres and Syrian Shrines, by Emily A. Beaufort.

3. THE BACKSLIDER.

"Sick lies the man, bewildered, lost, afraid;
His spirits vanquished, and his strength decayed;
No hope the friend, the nurse, the doctor lend;
Call, then, a priest, and fit him for his end!
A priest is called, 'tis now, alas! too late,
Death enters with him at the cottage gate!"

ONE dark windy night in December, —59, while labouring in the N— Circuit, I was about to retire to rest, when a loud and hurried knock was heard at the door. On its being opened, a messenger requested my immediate attendance at the dwelling of a female who was said to be dying without religion. Complying with the urgent call, and slipping on an overcoat, I hastened away. The snow was falling rapidly, the wind howling mournfully, as it swept through the streets and pent alleys. A more wintry night I do not remember ever to have encountered; I felt my mind instantly impressed with strange and solemn thoughts in relation to the misery of the lost in hell, upon whose guilty heads the wrath of God shall beat in 'one eternal storm. "God shall rain upon them snares, fire, and brimstone, and an horrible tempest. This shall be the portion of their cup;" while all hope of being saved shall be taken away.

On reaching the abode of the unhappy creature, to whose afflicted mind I strove to minister instruction and relief, I found her dwelling in a miserably dilapidated place. The steps of the stairs creaked and bent beneath my feet, so as to excite my fears of being unceremoniously precipitated into some cellar or coal-hole.

On arriving at the top of the stairs, I saw at a glance that everything bespoke the most abject poverty. The furniture was scant, and of the rudest and most antique character. In one corner lay a sleeping infant, swathed in rags, with unwashed hands and face; its hair was matted and entangled like the mane of an unbridled colt.

The dying woman was stretched on a straw pallet, the covering which covered her attenuated form was insufficient to protect her from the cold which found its way through the broken squares of the window, some of which were partially stopped with rags, while a few embers flickered at the bottom of the grate.

The face of the sufferer bore traces of great bodily pain, which was augmented to intensity by her extreme mental anguish. A probation of some seventy years had been mercifully afforded her, but madly perverted. The past of her history had been all but one scene of rebellion against God, disloyalty and disaffection to Christ and the interests of His kingdom.

She had at one period of her life made a professed surrender of herself to God, but she had abandoned the Rock of her salvation. Now the hand of death was upon her, the work of a lifetime was crowded into a few short hours, and those of the most disadvantageous character, because of affliction. An invisible power, an irresistible force was compelling the shrinking spirit to advance towards the gulph from which it recoiled with horror. "I am dying, and I am not prepared to die." "My sins are not pardoned." "Oh Lord help me, and I will serve thee." These, with other expressions of a similar character, were uttered by her, in such a pitiable tone as to draw tears from the eyes of all present.

In vain I attempted to comfort her with the assurance of God's readiness to pardon all such as are of a broken and contrite heart, who approach Him through the mediation of His Son. The name of Jesus was no charm to her; it served to awaken within her the bitterest recollections of the past: mercies slighted, grace abused, opportunities neglected, convictions resisted.

In my appeals to the throne of grace I felt much embarrassed, and in this unhappy state of mind I left her. In three short hours she closed her probation, leaving behind her no ground for hope of her having obtained the great and essential preparation for the bliss of heaven.

Reader, art thou prepared? Thou too must die; perhaps soon; it may be, suddenly. Stand on thy guard. Take oil in thy vessel; savour in thy converse; unction in thy prayers; devotion in thy life.

Art thou a Christian? Take heed unto thyself, and keep thy heart with all diligence.

"O, that I had watched more," said a dying Christian to me. What my Lord says to me, He says to thee, to all, "Watch, watch, and pray."

Let not Satan successfully insinuate that thou art well instructed in the things of God, and understandest the privileges of the saints so well that the necessity for thy watching is not so urgent as in the days of thine infancy. Be not deceived; this is a common and also a successful delusion. Take care lest thou shouldst be its victim, and be lost for ever. Be on thy guard, and watching unto prayer, and may we meet in heaven.—

Amen.

4. HINTS ON A PREACHERS' READING ASSOCIATION. I

DEAR EDITOR,—If you deem this article admissible into your useful and widely circulated monthly, and of use to the persons for whose profit the hints are intended, I shall feel obliged, having for years felt a growing anxiety for the mental improvement of our ministry, both lay and itinerant, that we may be better qualified to discharge our public duties more efficiently. Not that I think mental improvement all that is necessary to make a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed" in winning souls to Christ. No; I would have every part and power of the servant of God sanctified and baptized with fire, his heart yearning and burning for the welfare of men and the glory of God. Still, at this epoch of the world's history, and its rapid and mighty march, and the increasing demands of our societies and congregations, there is great need of mental store in the minds of our preachers and teachers, with aptitude and skill to dispose of it to the best advantage, in order to attract and arrest the wandering sinner in his eager pursuit of happiness,—the object of every man's seeking, and also for the edifying of the body of Christ. I am happy to find that I am not the only one by hundreds in our Zion who feel thus.

There is an awakening up, a march, a strife, attention, methods, and means in operation which are producing manifest improvements. I glory in the present measures and view them as preludes to great and good results at no distant future. May the moral and the spiritual ever have their hands on the helm of our minds, and the Holy Spirit help our infirmities, for these will cleave to us while we "our bodies feel."

During the past ten years I have often thought that our facilities for improvement might be greatly increased by forming what might be called mutual reading associations on our stations amongst our preachers of both classes, and also amongst our Sabbath-school teachers, especially when Sabbath-school libraries cannot be raised. Something like the following plan may be rendered practicable in most of our stations for obtaining and reading some of the first class works in English literature.

First.—Let the travelling and local preachers form themselves into an association for the purpose of mutual improvement.

Secondly.—When formed let them consult with each other about the most useful books on theology and Biblical literature, and get one for each member of the association, each one subscribing an equal share of the whole cost.

Thirdly.—Each member to have the reading of all the books by paying for one, and when the books have gone their round, and are not wanted in a second course, they can be deposited in a cupboard at some convenient place for future reference, or be mutually divided or sold, as the association may judge best.

Fourthly.—The association can make its own rules of management in reference to the time and manner of changing, &c.

Fifthly.—In large stations the association may be divided into branches for the purpose of facilitating the change of books, &c., subject to the principal association and rules adopted.

Sixthly.—When a member removes to another station he can have a book, paying or receiving the difference according to its value; or otherwise he may have returned a proper proportion of the money he paid.

If such a system, or something like it, were entered into spiritedly, methodically, and perseveringly, we feel sure much good would be the result. Although many books, yea, many good ones, are cheap, yet for those whose time and means are limited, there needs a choice selection, and many of the first-class books are still at a rather high figure.

In an association of this kind our young travelling and local preachers would have the collective counsel of their senior brethren, and by that would save the needless expenditure of much money, and the waste of much precious time. In this department many of us, no doubt, have committed some most egregious blunders, I confess myself to be one of that class, hence my solicitude that others may escape the same misfortune. Another important advantage arising out of a well-organized association will be, it will tend to make many more persevering and attentive readers, when they know that the book must be given up in a few weeks, and not to be had again for many months. When it contains much precious store, and readers wish to possess much of it and to make it their own, it will quicken and strengthen their mental digestion, and stimulate them to cultivate their memory, and to cast all they acquire in their own mental mould.

We would suggest the propriety of all the members that could make it convenient meeting once or twice in the year, on some leisure day, for the purpose of mutual conference and prayer, and to encourage each other in the name of the Lord. At such meetings they might give their views of the books they had read, the advantages derived therefrom, and throw out hints for future improvement.

In two of my stations we formed associations something like the above, which we have every reason to believe have been of great use to most of the members. Such, indeed, has been acknowledged. Perseverance will be found necessary, for there is no royal road to knowledge. No putting it on like the changing fashions. We must read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest if we would grow therein.

5. THOUGHTS ON THE SECURITY OF THE FAITHFUL FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST.

OVER the Christian are the wings of | lighted by the refulgent glory of the Almighty, and his pathway is | his Maker's reconciled countenance;

around him are thrown the everlasting arms of love. For the trial of his faith and the good of others, he travels for a short time in this wilderness, but is not permitted to be alone one moment—a company of angels are his appointed and constant attendants, while he has for his companion and guide the Holy Spirit of the Most High; in case of a slip or wound, he being beset by dangers, Jesus, the “great Physician,” is ever present to wash and heal, lest he should fall. Deity entrusts him in no other hand but His own, which is most powerful. When his pilgrimage is ended, his heavenly Father commands his removal to the fair clime, to which he is conveyed by a commissioned convoy of pure intelligences. On heaven’s verge the Saviour waits the blood-washed one’s approach.

He comes! and now the tear is wiped, while the heavenly host re-strike their golden lyres, from which peals forth the sweetest melody; unthought of welcomes salute the conqueror, who, through the Lamb, hath realised salvation; robed in the golden and substantial vestments of holiness and glory, he basks felicitously in the presence of the great Three One, enjoying the reciprocal love and companionship of angels, and the unnumbered company of pure and glorified spirits; with expanding knowledge he searches out the revealing mysteries of those unmeasured realms, until wrapped in wonder, lost in love, filled with praise, he casts his given crown at the feet of Jesus, and ascribes all the glory to the Lamb; thus he lives! he lives! he lives!! on, on, and on, but dies no more. ## NOTICES OF PUBLICATIONS.

1. Revival Truths. By the Rev. S. GARRATT, B.A. London: Partridge, Paternoster Row.

THIS is a small book, by a clergyman of the Church of England, in defence of the recent revivals. It is creditable to his Christian piety and candour. He defends the doctrines taught, and the results witnessed in religious revivals; and he does so with considerable ability and success. Some of his opinions are open to doubt, especially what he says on repentance and faith; but there is nothing in the production of which we need speak in terms of decided disapproval. The writer is evidently anxious that his brother clergymen should enter into the revival work, and we wish him success in his efforts to secure this object.

2. Jesus, the Soul's Need. By C. A. POTTER. Author of “A Trophy of Grace.” London: Freeman, Fleet Street.

THIS is a pithy little work, full, brimful of Christ. The following selection from the headings of its numerous sections will show this. Jesus, for the Soul’s Salvation. Jesus, the Lamb of God. Jesus, the Mediator. Jesus, the Way. Jesus, the Guide of Life. Jesus, the Life of the Soul.

Jesus, the Light of the Soul. Jesus, our Strength. Jesus, the Soul’s Sanctifier. Jesus, the Soul’s Refuge. Jesus, the Good Shepherd. Jesus, our King. Jesus, the Sure Foundation. The doctrines are sound, the style is plain and pointed, the object is the salvation of souls, and therefore we heartily commend the book to all our readers.

3. Death's Bondage Broken: from the Note Book of a Country Pastor. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder. Birmingham: Hudson and Son.

WE have an account, in this pamphlet, of the deliverance of a lady invalid from the fear of death, through faith in the crucified and risen Saviour. The visits and ministry of “a Country Pastor” were owned of God to her spiritual welfare. Many who, through fear of death, are subject to bondage, might find instruction and consolation from the perusal of this sketch.

4. The Freemasons' Hall Addresses. By the Rev. J. DENHAM SMITH. London: Partridge, Paternoster Row.

THE present production consists of several addresses delivered in Freemasons’ Hall, London, during some special religious services that were held in the month of November, 1861. They are characterised by great fervour and power, and contain some happy illustrations of Scripture, and pungent appeals to the conscience of both saint and sinner. Some of the respected author's doctrinal views are not Methodist, and cannot be by us endorsed; but his zeal to save souls, and the substance of his addresses, we can, and do, most cordially commend. Every effort to pluck brands from the burning, if conducted in a scriptural and judicious manner, we pray God to prosper.

5. Imputed Righteousness.

6. The Great Transaction. By EDWARD STREANE, D.D. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder.

DR. STREANE is an eminent London minister. He is of the Baptist persuasion, and of the Calvinistic school. But his Calvinism is of the moderate or Baxterian type, and he is not offensively obtrusive on the subject of immersion. Indeed, he is too much the scholar, the gentleman, and the Christian, to seek to give needless offence to other sections of the church by the mode in which he pleads for the peculiarities of his own. In the two little works here named, he presents the peculiar views to which we have referred, but in such a way that we have but little objection to make to what he says. And we can very cordially recommend these ably written works to the perusal of readers in general on the grounds of their candour, their piety, their clearness and terseness of style, and their obvious design and adaptation to do good to precious souls.

7. Progress: or, the International Exhibition. By WILLIAM ANDERSON. London: Freeman, Fleet Street.

THIS is an eloquent pamphlet by our esteemed friend, the Rev. W. Anderson, Congregational minister. It discourses of progress as developed in things in general, and in the International Exhibition in particular. It will afford both pleasure and profit to the reader.

8. Words to the Wise: or, Church and Dissent. By JONATHAN DALGLISH, Primitive Methodist minister. London: R. Davies, Sutton Street; and Jarrold and Sons, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THE author says in his preface,—"Having for about three years laboured in several of the towns and villages of Norfolk, where priestly power is often exercised in a very arbitrary manner . . . and as I have met with a tract entitled 'Reasons for not joining the Primitive Methodists' in the hands of our members . . . I have published this lecture, hoping that with God's blessing it will serve the purpose intended, namely, that Primitive Methodists may be able to give an answer to him that reproacheth them." It is an out-spoken, cogent, and apposite production. We hope it will have an extensive circulation, especially in those parts where Popery and Puseyism are zealously striving to lead men from the truth.

9. The Junior Clerk: a Tale of City Life. By EDWIN HODDER. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder.

TO this tale of City Life a very earnest preface is written by Mr. Shipton, the secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, in which the writer says:—"The author has described the following tale to me as a fiction. It may be so to him. But for every one of its statements I could supply a fact. It is not merely true to nature, as a narration of the means by which young men may be led—it is true as a record of the ways in which many have been, and many still are being—led to dishonour and ruin." The temptations to which young men are subject—evil company, the pipe, and above all, the glass—are set forth in appropriate language, and the case of George Weston, the hero of the story, reads a useful lesson to young men in general. Would that all young men could read this book, and that the evils described were shunned, and the good recommended pursued by them. Let them avoid the intoxicating cup as they would shun the plague, and have a wholesome dread of "fast" companions. Let them watch against temptation, and pray for grace to enable them so to do. Let them join the Church of Christ and read good books, be guarded against indolence, and always be usefully employed, and the manifold evils into which George Weston ran they may avoid. We trust the book will be extensively read, and we are sure it will do good.

10. Central Truths. By CHARLES STANFORD. Author of "Joseph Alleine: his Companions and Times;" "Power in Weakness: Memorials of the Rev. W. Rhodes," &c., &c. Second Edition. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, St. Paul's Churchyard.

THIS work consists of sermons on the following subjects. Foundation Stones; the Apostles' Doctrine; the Apostles' Fellowship; the Unction from the Holy One; Prevalent Errors on Justification; Our Anchor Within the Veil; the Tempted High Priest; the Causes of Unsuccessful Prayer; Peculiar Hindrances to the Efficacy of Social Prayer; the Eleventh Commandment; the Presence of God Our Rest; Sowing on the Waters; Solemn Troops and Sweet Societies." The style of the talented author is graceful and accomplished; the tone of thought earnest and powerful; and if our readers wish to see a specimen of the best thoughts delivered from the modern pulpit, we commend them to this excellent volume.

11. The Psalmist: a Collection of 400 Psalm and Hymn Tunes, suited to all the varieties of Metrical Psalmody. Newly Harmonized for Four Voices. Edited by VINCENT NOVELLO, Esq. The Vocal Score. London: J. Haddon, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street; Novello, Dean Street, Soho, and Poultry; and all Music and Booksellers.

THE character of the work is guaranteed by the fame of the able editor. The music and arrangement are of a high order, and for families and congregations the work is equally adapted. An able preface on sacred music, and a quantity of blank paper bound up with the volume, and designed for additional tunes, give increased value to the publication.

N.B.—Other works must lie over till next month.

HOME RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

WORK OF GOD.

1. HOLBEACH MARSH.—Mr. Editor,—You will be glad to hear that camp-meetings have neither lost their attraction nor usefulness in this locality.

On Lord's day, May 25th, 1862, we held a camp-meeting in the Marsh, six miles from Holbeach. The weather was fine, and the people came up in great numbers. We resolved to spend a considerable portion of the day in praying services, which we believe answered well. The sermons preached were short and powerful. The people "received the word with all readiness of mind," and before the day closed several souls were made happy in God. We pray that they may "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made them free."

A few years ago, the place in Holbeach Marsh, where we now preach, was deemed one of the most wicked places on the face of the earth. It was a public house, and went by the name of "Sots' Hole." Often on the Lord's day two or three hundred of the very worst of characters would assemble for fighting and drunkenness, until the farmers became much alarmed, and succeeded in getting the publican removed; but still sin abounded.

A little more than two years ago it pleased the Lord to send a disease amongst children, and in one family three lay dead at once. The coffin maker, while measuring them, was convinced of the need of salvation, and rested not until he found peace with his heavenly Father. There was not a place of worship within three miles; therefore Mr. W. Bailey resolved to open his large workshop for preaching. He sent for our people, having first at his own expense made forms and a temporary pulpit. Soon a society and Sabbath-school were raised. We have now eleven members, and about forty children in the school. The services are well attended. The reformation in the neighbourhood is so great that many are led to say with astonishment, "What hath God wrought!"

2. HAZELBURY, STURMINSTER BRANCH.—"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

Fifteen years ago, a chapel was purchased at this place. It was much too dear, that was bad; but what was worse, scarcely anything was raised at the time; indeed the money borrowed to pay for the deeds was not refunded till within this year. Yet the friends have done something, by raising the walls and erecting a gallery. The children of the Sabbath-school too, have raised the funds, and erected a gallery for themselves; but no reduction of the £128, the amount of mortgage, has been effected till now. Within these two years God has revived His work, and that has altered things altogether.

Some time since, while talking over the case of this chapel, with Mr. James Moore, of Hinton, as I was at his house to pay him £40, in connection with another chapel interest, he said that if the trustees of Hazelbury Chapel would give him a bond to pay him an annuity of £2 for his life—which he hoped would not be long—he would present them with the £40. This was gladly accepted, and desire was excited to raise the amount to £100. The General Chapel Fund kindly promised £15 for that purpose. Mr. H. Harris, the mortgagee, engaged to forego £5, and Brothers R. Brown, G. Elsworth, and E. House, three trustees, volunteered to beg or give £5 each. G. D. W. Digby, Esq., cheered us on with his best wishes, and a cheque for £5 to shew that he wished well. The Hon. W. B. Portman, M.P., liberal as ever, forwarded £2. C. Jupe, Esq., of Mere, whose hand is ever open to all deserving objects, handed over five sovereigns, and prayed God's blessing upon us. A number of friends gave £1 each; indeed our applications for assistance met with a general, generous response. To wind up the affair on Sunday, June 8th, Brother W. Hazell preached us two soul-stirring sermons in the chapel, and the writer preached once in the chapel, once in the open-air, and conducted a powerful procession.

On Monday we assembled to tea.

A wedding party was present; the bride presiding at her own gratuitously provided table. Mrs. Foot, too, ever ready to lend a hand, presided at her own tray; and the public meeting which followed, crowned all. The hearty, racy, cutting, unctuous speech of Brother Hazell, surely never will be forgotten. With a few pounds we have to come in, we shall raise the £100, and reduce the mortgage that amount; and £10 is promised on the "golden system," for the usual anniversary in September. The trustees purpose to sell the present premises, and build a better chapel in a better situation; and they will thus, by God's blessing, have a mighty influence for good in this neighbourhood. That God may preside over and bless all our future movements here, is the earnest prayer of
GEORGE WARNER.

3. GREETLAND.—On Lord's day, June 8th, 1862, we held our annual camp-meeting at Greetland, in the Halifax Circuit. The morning was spent principally in missioning the village. A good influence was felt by the speakers, the praying host, and by many who listened to the word of life. Owing to the unfavourable state of the weather, we held the afternoon service in a large room in a factory belonging to John Fox, Esq., in the neighbourhood of West Vale. The attendance was good, and many felt it good to be there. In the evening we held our lovefeast in the chapel, which was well attended and well sustained, by quick, short, and lively speaking. At the close one soul professed to find "Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write."

WILLIAM BIRKS.

4. LUTTERWORTH MISSION, DUNTON BASSETT.—Dear Editor,—The members and friends of the above place have for some time past been impressed with the importance of chapels being free from debt; it was therefore resolved that means should be used for the liquidation of the debt on their chapel, and on May 25th and 26th, 1862, the resolution was carried into effect.

On the 25th, sermons were preached in a marquee in the British school yard by the Rev. M. Lupton, General Missionary Secretary, of London. The attendance was large, and numbers were melted into tears by the blessed influence that accompanied the enunciation of the truth.

In the same place on the 26th we had a tea-meeting and bazaar; 254 took tea, and 400 visited the bazaar. The total receipts were £46 10s.; contingent expenses, £4 10s. With the balance of £42 we have been able to pay the interest and reduce the debt £38, leaving only £32 on the chapel. To all who have assisted us we tender our sincere thanks, and earnestly pray that they may ere long join the glorified in heaven. W. WEAY.

5. FROME CIRCUIT.—It is with much thankfulness to God that we furnish the readers of our Large Magazine with a short account of the progress of the work of God in this Circuit. Our prospects at the commencement of the winter were anything but cheering. Our second preacher was laid aside through illness, and his appointments were either wholly or in part supplied by the local preachers. Our superintendent's wife, also, had a very severe attack of sickness, in which her life hung in the balance for many weeks, which greatly interfered with his attention to the welfare of the station. Gradually, however, the cloud passed away, and our second preacher was able to resume his labours on a small scale, and the superintendent to give more attention to the working of the Circuit. Our winter campaign commenced at Nunney, on the 1st of December, and night after night our zealous friends laboured and toiled, and at 1 P.M., held prayer-meetings, and God gave them thirteen souls as a reward for their toils.

Our special services for this year commenced at Frome, Longbridge, and Downhead, early in February. We had to struggle with, and through much spiritual apathy at each place, especially at Frome; but God there saved a few souls. The cry for mercy was soon heard at Longbridge, and increased at each public service until the whole of the villagers became deeply impressed, and the inquiry became general, "What must I do to be saved?" Services were held at 9 A.M., 1, and 7 P.M. of each day, and at each service for nine successive weeks, sinners were found in deep distress, or rejoicing in a sense of pardon. During the day family after family in the village was visited, and many striking conversions took place in sick-chambers, and among aged decrepit people, who were not able to leave their homes. One case particularly deserves notice. An aged female, near a hundred years old, who had lived all her life in sin, was brought to Christ, and enabled to rejoice in His forgiving love, and after nine weeks witnessing a good confession, she passed away to the skies rejoicing in God. At the February renewal of the society's tickets, twenty-three persons had been received into the society on trial, and still the work rolled on. At the May renewal of tickets, we received eighteen into society, while twenty joined other societies; and since then twenty more have cast in their lot with us.

Special services also have been held at Mells, Blatchbridge and Tytherington. At Mells, our friends went from house to house holding prayer-meetings every night for ten weeks, and God gave them four souls, and a mighty quickening in their own spirits. At Blatchbridge where we have had only three members for nearly two years, God has blessed our labours, and thirteen have been converted, and joined the society. At Tytherington, where our cause has been very low, with only ten members for years, about thirty have been converted, most of whom have begun to meet in class. Here we have commenced erecting a new chapel, the foundation-stone of which was laid by our superintendent on the 21st of June, and two sermons preached by him on the 22nd, to large congregations in the open-air. While these special services were being held at the above places, the work of God broke out at Wanstow, and night after night sinners were converted. Our few members at Wanstow who have struggled on for many years amidst much discouragement, have been cheered by an addition to their numbers of fifteen souls, while many who have been converted here, have joined a neighbouring church. From Wanstow the work spread to the neighbouring hamlet of Leighton, where twenty souls have found peace, and united with us in society.

Our financials in every department have prospered with our increase of members.

At Cobford and Leigh a few souls have been brought in, and throughout the circuit we number 108 converted during the year. To God be all the glory.

EDWARD POWELL.

CHAPEL OPENINGS.

1. BRADFORD, YORKSHIRE.—Many of the members of our Connection are aware of the early struggles the missionaries of Primitive Methodism sustained in seeking to obtain a footing in this town. How while they were assailed with shouts of derision and scorn, together with showers of missiles of an offensive as well as with some of a heavier character, the standard of the Cross was first reared by them in the old market place, now demolished.

About the year 1821, one of these devoted men, and a few early adherents of the cause from Leeds and Dudley Hill, entered Bradford by the old road, and startled the day dreams of its inhabitants by their heavenly melodies. Many soon believed, and were saved; and their hearts being filled with God's love, they met, and "spoke often one to another," and with all the ardour of their "first love," they desired to extend the limits of the Redeemer's kingdom, and to spread the honours of His name. In furtherance of this object, a preaching room was opened; it was part of an old building that stretched across a street (in the same manner as the bars in our county town) running obliquely to and from the west of Westgate, and called either from its ugly and dirty state or from the immoral and degraded condition of its inhabitants by the name of "Devil Street."

In this early stage of our growth, Bradford was a branch of Leeds Circuit, and here amongst the infant society John Coulson, George Tetley, and others, preached, prayed, and laboured. But the Conference of 1823 deemed it prudent to make Bradford the head of a circuit.

The cause had grown with time, and the old place which had previously served the purpose of a school warehouse, much better than the conveniences of our society, became inadequate to accommodate the congregations; then they deemed it necessary to erect a chapel that would serve them for years. This idea took root, and a portion of land at the east of Manchester Road was purchased, and eventually the chapel in which we so long worshipped was reared. It was not to be expected that our friends in those days would meet with that hearty response to their appeal for aid, which we should look for now. Our cause was then little known, and amongst many sections of God's church was looked upon coldly where it was known; besides our town was poor and small, and the aspect of the times did not afford grounds for the hope of much pecuniary aid.

Bradford of that day was little like the Bradford of to-day, with its ever increasing population of 150,000 inhabitants, its gigantic manufactories, palatial warehouses, and magnificent buildings. Then it was a small town, containing only 14,000 inhabitants, and its staple trade of spinning and weaving worsted stuffs, was such that on a fine summer's day, dozens of females might have been seen sitting in the sun, employed with the spinning wheel; and from the country lanes came weavers with their work upon their shoulders, trudging into the quiet town that had little to disturb its rest, or awaken its interest, except the notes of the horn of the mail coach; which rumbled along the streets, bringing its bag of eightpenny letters, and a few solitary passengers.

Can it be wondered at, under such circumstances, that when the whole premises, consisting of chapel, school, house, and eight cottages were at last completed, there rested a debt on them of nearly three thousand pounds sterling? which for years has lain like an incubus upon the efforts of the society, and has required a continual strain to fulfil our engagements and honestly pay our way.

The chapel itself after standing about six and thirty years was discovered to be on fire, on the afternoon of Thursday, Feb. 14th, 1861, and notwithstanding the indefatigable efforts of the fire brigade, it was soon wrapped in the embrace of the devouring element, which roared and leaped with fury. The slates of the roof cracked, slid down, and fell, and the burning beams followed them in rapid succession. The whole building was one mass of fire from top to bottom, and while the flames and smoke ascended in the air, showers of sparks fell upon the excited, and in many cases, sorrow-stricken crowd. Gradually the fire consumed the whole of the combustible materials in the chapel, and died out. From the time of the first alarm being given, scarcely an hour elapsed before all was destroyed; and pulpit, staircases, galleries, organ, pews, floors, cushions and books were reduced to a blackened mass of ashes.

On the Saturday evening following a large number of the officials and congregation assembled in the damp and dilapidated school-room which had, by dint of much labour been made somewhat tenantable, and by the light of a few dim candles, amid the smell of burnt wood, we essayed to sing,

"In darkest shades, if thou appear,
My dawning is begun;
Thou art my soul's bright morning star,
And thou my rising sun;"

and felt glad in our hearts, that under the storm of misfortune that had burst so unexpectedly upon us, we could feel that our trust was in Christ, and our hope in God.

After much careful consideration, we came to the determination to purchase the premises, if possible, from the mortgagee; and chose

Charles Rhodes to treat with him in order to effect this object.

In compliance with our wish, Mr. Rhodes immediately communicated with the mortgagee, but to his demands we were unable to accede, and therefore we had to give up to him the possession of the premises. Thus driven from the spot we had so long occupied, we were glad to find a shelter, not a home, in the temperance hall. But as often as the Sabbath morning came, and we turned our feet from the accustomed path to the old sanctuary, hallowed as it had been by the worship of the God of heaven, and made sacred by the memory and presence of the dead there entombed, we felt as the Jews did by the Babylonish waters, and we too, dropped many a tear, as we remembered Zion.

Matters stood thus for a "weary while;" weeks rolled over, our preachers left the station, and in this state of things our present superintendent, the Rev. William Jackson, and his worthy colleague, the Rev. Christopher Hallam, found us.

On Mr. Jackson's arrival, he began to look into our affairs in earnest, as the sequel will prove; he put himself in communication with Mr. Rhodes and the mortgagee; and after much anxiety and trouble, on the 30th of July, 1861, the society were virtually accepted as purchasers of the premises. In about a fortnight after, the whole society was called together, and they promised to contribute about £300. Begging books were immediately issued, trustees were chosen, the contract of purchase signed, the plans and specifications prepared, and the various works let on the 15th of November. The building was begun, and carried on with vigour, as the weather was as favourable as could be desired: and on the evening of Friday, May 9th, 1862, the Rev. William Jackson preached the opening sermon.

On Sunday, May 11th, Charles Rhodes, Esq., the Rev. Henry Dowson (Baptist) and the Rev. W. Jackson preached; and on the Sunday following the Rev. J. P. Chown (Baptist) and the Rev. J. A. Bastow, of Alston, officiated. The services were crowded, and both day's labours were crowned with salvation,—several souls being brought to Christ.

On Monday evening, May 19th, a tea party was held in the school rooms connected with the chapel, when 560 persons sat down to a capital tea. After tea a crowded public meeting was held in the chapel under the presidency of Charles Rhodes, Esq., when the Revs. W. Jackson, J. A. Bastow, H. J. Betts (Baptist) C. Hallam, J. Maylard, and Mr. Charles Neal, addressed the meeting; during the evening's proceedings the writer laid before the friends assembled, a full statement of the receipts and expenditure, in connection with the trust premises and building account, from which we take the totals.

Space will not allow us to mention more than the names of a few of the larger donors, for instance, Titus Salt, Esq., Charles Rhodes, Esq., Messrs. E. Ripley and Sons, gave £50 each; Mr. Alderman Brown and Mr. Charles Neal, £20 each; F. Crossby, Esq., M.P., William Murgatroyd, Esq., Messrs. W. and S. Watson, Mr. Joseph Hanson, and Messrs. W. Chapman and Son, £10 each; and Manoah Rhodes, Esq., the gift of two clocks, one for the inside of the chapel, and the other for the school.

The cost of the re-erection of the chapel is about £1,200, and as we have already paid £200 off the amount of the purchase money, we shall only have £1,600 on the mortgage of the chapel, schools, house, and cottages, which under the Divine blessing, we intend to reduce by repeated, and if possible, by annual efforts.

The chapel (which will be connexional) is built of stone, and has a noble and imposing appearance. The front elevation is in the Tuscan order of architecture, having plain and circular-headed ornamental windows, and noble entrance doors; the whole is surmounted by an apex, having bold tuscan cornices, and in the centre is a clock turret, in which is placed a public clock, raised by the voluntary efforts of persons residing in the immediate vicinity, who were waited on by Brother Charles Neal.

The pulpit is constructed in the centre of a platform, capable of accommodating about thirty persons, which is supported by four corinthian pillars, under this is the communion table, enclosed by strong yet neat turned balusters, and a massive mahogany rail. The pews in the gallery and on the ground floor will seat about 700 persons.

The ceiling is a neat and chaste design, with a cornice thirty inches in girth, a neat panelled mould and scroll ornaments in the angles, and a splendid centre flower thirteen feet diameter; around this flower at equal distances are fixed four gas chandeliers, of the "sun light" pattern, surrounded by a plastic moulding; the bottom is lighted with pendants of a similar description suspended from the gallery ceiling. This mode of lighting is well adapted for buildings devoted to sacred purposes, as the lights may be increased without annoyance to minister or people; and as they cast no shadow, while they yield a beautiful light, they have been universally admired.

In conclusion the trustees and officials in connection with this place, acting upon the precept of the great Book, "Honour to whom honour"—while bearing their testimony to the self-denying labours of our other ministers, especially make mention of the zealous assiduity of our worthy superintendent, the Rev. William Jackson, whose untiring labours and unwearied application both at home and from home, are deserving of the highest praise, and we gratefully acknowledge, that to his unabating energy, we owe the rapid and successful accomplishment of our cherished hopes, the erection of this place of worship.

And now, by God's blessing, having "quenched the violence of the fire," and "escaped the edge of the sword, and out of weakness" having been "made strong," it remains for us to "wax valiant in fight" and "put to flight the armies of the aliens." That we may do so, and that this place may be the birth-place of many, many souls, is the heartfelt prayer of

WILLIAM PEEL.

2. SPORLE, SWAFFHAM CIRCUIT.
—Dear Editor,—It is with pleasure that we inform you and your readers that we have just completed our neat little sanctuary at this place. The building is 39ft. by 27ft. outside measurement, and 16ft. from floor to wall-plate, and the roof is covered with slate. It has folding doors 6ft. 6in. height, each door 2ft. wide. In front there are two circular-headed windows, and a circular-headed fan-light over the doors, also two windows on each side. There are two aisles; the centre floor is boarded and fitted up with seats, all of which are let. The chapel will accommodate with sittings about 220 persons. We have a platform at the end of the chapel, and the total cost of the building, including land and law expenses, is £250, towards which we have realized nearly £100. The chapel was opened for religious service on Lord's-day, June 8th, and following day. The Rev. J. Ashworth, of Peterborough, preached three sermons on the Sabbath, that in the morning in the chapel, those in the afternoon and evening in a meadow, kindly lent for the occasion—eight hundred persons were present in the afternoon. The Rev. W. Woods, Baptist minister, Swaffham, preached on Monday at 3 o'clock, P.M., and a public tea took place at 5, after which a public meeting was held. The chair was taken by T. Lindsey, Esq., and addresses were given by Revs. J. Ashworth, W. Crown, G. Bell, T. Walker, and Mr. J. Fuller, and £14 were promised towards the first anniversary.

We tender our hearty thanks to Mr. T. Lindsey, for a donation of £10; to Mr. J. Fuller, for £5 5s.; to Mr. W. Gummatt, for £5; to Mr. S. Jarrold, for £2 2s.; to Mr. Cook, for £1; to several of our working men, for £1 each; to several others for smaller sums, and to all our friends who have aided us in any way in erecting this house for God. May it long echo with his praise. Amen.

WILLIAM CROWN.

3. SHOREHAM, BRIGHTON MISSION.—The Primitive Methodists have preached in Shoreham for above twenty years, but they had only a small room, until about three years ago; but we then obtained a large room that would seat about 200. We soon found, however, that we could not possess it long, and we could not go back to our old place, for it would not hold half the congregation. Hence we at last succeeded in obtaining an eligible plot of land for £72, on which we have erected a very neat and substantial chapel, 31 feet by 36, at a cost of about £440. Towards this sum we have collected nearly £175, including £20, the proceeds of a bazaar held last June, £12 at the laying of the foundation-stone in March, and £10 at the opening. The opening took place June 1st and 8th, when sermons were preached by the Revs. W. Baitson and J. Hall, from the Isle of Wight; and tea-meetings were held on the 2nd and 10th. We have already let sixty-one seats, and the chapel is likely to do well. We have ground behind for a school or an enlargement of the chapel. We tender our thanks to all who have helped in any way, and especially to some who prefer that their names should not be mentioned; and above all, to the bountiful Giver of all good. May it be the birth-place of many precious souls, is the prayer of

WILLIAM COOPER.

4. DEAR EDITOR,—BRIGHTON is a small village, situated ten miles from Yarmouth. Our people have for some time had a good cause here, but greatly needed a chapel and school-room. The neighbourhood for several miles round is entirely under our influence, there being no other place of worship except the Church of England. We have purchased land, and built a commodious connexional chapel, and a good school-room.

The building is 37 feet by 34, and 15 feet from floor to wall-plate. The school-room is the whole length of the chapel, and there is an opening of 20 feet long and 5 feet 6 in. high in the wall of the chapel, with shutters, so that we can shut the school-room up from the chapel, or open it, that the school may have the benefit of seeing and hearing the preacher.

The chapel was opened on June the 8th, when three sermons were preached by the Rev. R. Howchin.

On June, 15th, the Rev. H. Gunns, preached morning and evening, and Mr. G. T. Goodrick in the afternoon. The cost is about £190, towards which we have obtained £60, and the whole required by rule will shortly be raised. May peace and prosperity abide with us. Amen. RICHARD HOWCHIN.

CHAPEL RE-OPENING.

PATRINGTON. — The Primitive Methodists of this place have long been in want of a more suitable place of worship for the accommodation of the congregation and Sabbath-school.

The old chapel was built in 1841, under the superintendency of the Rev. H. Knowles, and at that time was considered a good building. The cost, including land was £270, and the debt left upon it was £223. Efforts were made at different times to improve the interior appearance of the chapel by painting the walls; but owing to their dampness little improvement was effected. Provisionally more land was purchased at the first than was required for the chapel. On this spare land attempts have been made to erect a school or a minister's house, but these have been frustrated by the trustees being divided in their opinions, some advocating, and others opposing the undertaking. Such being the state of things, the September Quarterly Meeting took up the subject, and resolved that a new trust or additional trustees should be obtained, and that there should be an enlargement of the chapel, and a new school erected. After a few preliminary meetings the new trustees were appointed, and Mr. Wright, architect of Hull, was employed to furnish the necessary plans and specifications. At length the building was let to Messrs. Holmes, of Hull, and Soulsby, of Patrington, for the sum of £429 14s. 6d.

The building was opened for Divine service on Sunday, June 1st, 1862, when three sermons were preached; that in the morning by Mrs. Dixon, and those at two and six by the writer. Both chapel and school-room were crowded to excess. On Monday a tea-meeting was held, when 240 sat down to a comfortable tea, gratuitously provided by the friends. After which addresses were given by Rev. Messrs. Tongue and Rudd, of Hull Second, and P. Jackson, of Preston. Mr. Normandale presided in the absence of Mr. Alderman Hodge, who had been expected.

On Wednesday a stirring discourse was delivered by the Rev. John Petty, of Hull First, and the different items read over by the writer, which had been raised towards the erection, amounting to near £120, and as the bazaar was not wound up, and some collecting cards not brought in, it was hoped that the third of the entire cost, including palisading, interior paintings, &c., would be raised within the period specified by connexional rule.

The chapel is a noble edifice, with five circular-headed windows in the front. It is at the corner of two streets, the chapel facing the one, and the school the other. It is fitted up with a rostrum over the front door, large enough for a missionary platform. The school-room being at the opposite side, the preacher has a good view of both the congregation in the chapel, and the children and teachers in the school. The chapel will accommodate 350 hearers, and with the school, which is joined to the chapel by sliding doors; on special occasions room may be made for 500 persons. "We have already let many additional seats, and have 143 scholars in the Sabbath-school. We would heartily thank the friends who have contributed to the erection, and earnestly pray that it may be made the birth-place of many souls.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARIES.

1. BRIGHOUSE, HALIFAX CIRCUIT.—Here we have an up-stairs room, in which we hold preaching services. And on Sunday, April 4th, 1862, the anniversary sermons were preached at half-past two, and six o'clock, by W. Birks, in the Odd Fellows' Hall, hired for the occasion. Our choir from Halifax did us good service on the occasion, and we realised £4 5s. We are happy to state that several friends have contributed donations towards the erection of a chapel in this neighbourhood, and we trust that the time is not far distant, when Brighouse will be blest with a Primitive Methodist chapel.

WILLIAM BIRKS.

2. LYNN.—Dear Editor,—It is my pleasurable duty to chronicle an interesting and successful course of services in connection with the celebration of the third anniversary of our Lynn chapel. On Sunday, April 6th, 1862, three powerful sermons were delivered by the Rev. T. Greenbury, of Scarborough, to crowded audiences.

On Tuesday evening, 8th, the Rev. T. Greenbury, delivered a lecture, on "True Heroism."

On Wednesday evening, 9th, we had a public tea, in Stepney chapel school-room, when about 350 persons partook of the sumptuous repast, most of which was gratuitously provided.

After tea, a public meeting was held in our chapel, London Road. The writer presided. Mr. W. Lift, the treasurer, read the report. The speakers were the Revs. T. Greenbury, W. Sanderson, J. Hearnshaw, (Wesleyan), G. Hallett, (New Connexion), and G. E. Gull, B.A., (Independent.) The spiritual tone of the meeting was high.

On Sunday, April 13th, the services were resumed, when the Rev. W. Sanderson, preached in the morning and evening, and the Rev. J. Hearnshaw, in the afternoon. The whole of the collections amounted to nearly £30, and the proceeds of the tea to nearly £17. During the past year an additional site of freehold land adjoining the chapel has been purchased for £100, and three vestries have been built at a cost of £156 7s. 6d. The total income from various sources for the past year, amounts to £272 17s. 8½d. Since the erection of the chapel the Ladies' Sewing Society has raised £173 3s.

In connection with the visit of Messrs. Sanderson and Greenbury, tea-meetings and public meetings were held at Terrington and Marham, in aid of our chapels at these places, which were numerously attended. At Terrington, Mr. Greenbury delivered a lecture in the Wesleyan chapel, on "Infidelity, its nature, sources, evils, and results." T. LEWIS.

SCHOOL SERVICES.

1. MOUNT ZION CHAPEL, BROWN-HILLS, LICHFIELD CIRCUIT.—On Sunday, April 27th, 1862, anniversary sermons in behalf of the Sabbath-school were preached in the above chapel. The Rev. M. Nicholas, of Toll End, preached morning and evening, and J. B. Knapp in the afternoon. On the morning of the day, the sun shone forth in all his glory, and as the hour of prayer drew near, devout souls who "love the habitation of God's house," were seen wending their way towards "God's holy mountain."

The congregations were good throughout the day, and at night some were unable to gain admittance. A gracious influence attended each service. The pieces recited, and the hymns sung by the children, did them great credit. The collections amounted to £18 4s. To God be all the praise.

J. B. KNAPP.

2. BOLLINGTON, MACCLESFIELD CIRCUIT.—On Sunday, May 11th, 1862, the anniversary of the above school was held, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Harland, of London, to large and deeply interested congregations. The friends of the institution liberally contributed towards its support upwards of £43. Taking into consideration the depression of trade in the village and neighbourhood, we are astonished at the amount realised. But the friends of Sabbath-schools at Bollington have a mind and heart to give. One circumstance connected with this anniversary, it may not be out of place to notice. It is customary on anniversary occasions for the teachers and scholars to procession the village, and sing at several places. On Sunday, after singing opposite the mansion of a gentleman, a kind friend to our school, some of our party were called into the breakfast-room, where were the owner of the mansion, his lady, the younger branches of the family, and also a clergyman of the Church of England, who had come from London to preach in the village church on behalf of the schools connected therewith. We were kindly received by both parties, and the gentleman before referred to, as usual, gave us £1 for our school, and the clergyman also gave us £1 and his good wishes for our success. Now sir, we look on this with pleasure; not the gift of the £1 only, but the Christian spirit manifested. Is not this another token of the breaking down of the partition wall which has kept the sections of the Church of Christ too far apart? May the Most High ever bless the pious efforts of His people of every name. Amen.

FOREIGN RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THOUGHTS ON THE DIFFICULTIES OF THE MISSION-WORK IN AUSTRALIA.

WHY HAS NOT PRIMITIVE-METHODISM ADVANCED MORE RAPIDLY IN AUSTRALIA?

FRIENDS in England have often asked this question as they have pondered over our limited number of members. I distinctly remember some years ago, hearing some honoured brethren gravely discussing the propriety of abandoning certain missions altogether, because it was supposed they did not yield a reasonable return for the amount of labour bestowed on them. I trust the following thoughts will throw some light on this rather painful subject. The state of society in these colonies is very unsettled. It is almost impossible for friends in England to appreciate fully the difficulties arising from this fact. How often our hopes have been excited by welcome friends flocking to our chapels, only to leave us to-morrow. Many of our members go into the interior, and however desirable it may be that the means of grace should be extended to them, in many instances it is not only impracticable, but clearly impossible, inasmuch as by following them we must neglect our proper spheres of labour; and besides this, people are so widely scattered in the bush, that to find a moderate sprinkling of them would involve an expenditure of money which our exchequer could not supply,—for travelling is neither so cheap nor so pleasant as might be supposed from reading certain books on Australia. I have paid half-a-guinea for a night's accommodation for myself and horse, and have been told I was "favoured." To obviate such expenditure, I have frequently slept in the open bush. I once travelled a journey of 200 miles, practising the greatest economy, and suffering not a few inconveniences, and my congregation consisted of six adults, and about as many children. And besides discouragements of this description, a missionary when paying these visits must feel very anxious about his pulpit at home. Friends in England will naturally suppose the local brethren will see to that. But local preachers are very scarce on many of our stations. The contrast between an English plan and some of our colonial ones is indeed a curiosity; the former possessing perhaps from 50 to 100 preachers, while some of the latter contain only six or seven, and those far apart, and withal perhaps only exhorters just commencing; and yet we are surrounded by churches whose pulpits are filled by men who would do honour to any pulpit in England. The draught on our mental resources is often very great, for it is very far from the truth to suppose that ignorance is a leading vice in these colonies; and while the migratory habits of the people are unfavourable to spiritual progress, the composition of society needs a little explanation. Our missionaries who have laboured in the north of Ireland would be more likely to form a tolerably correct opinion on this matter, than friends whose lives have been spent in England; not that we wish it to be supposed that the people here are all or even principally Irish, still the Roman Catholic element is very strong. The Archbishop of Sydney sometime ago stated that one-third of the population of New South Wales was of that persuasion, and there are very few converts made from popery anywhere, and especially in Australia, where they have so large a staff of priests and sisters of mercy to preserve their interests. We have also a very large sprinkling of Scotch people who are almost entirely Presbyterian, and though they are far from being well supplied with ministers of their own, they have always been remarkably backward in adopting the church polity of Methodism,—hence one great reason why Methodism, including all its branches, has never made much progress among Scotch people in any part of the world. The remainder of the population, which is principally English, is greatly divided. Nearly every other church had been years in the field, and tolerably well established before we began, and it ought to be observed that the population in its entirety on some of our stations is exceedingly small. We have cities here not much larger than a good sized English village. Take as examples Newcastle, Brisbane,—and very shortly Goulburn and Grafton will be added to the list. But perhaps our English friends suppose there must be villages around the towns and cities. To a very small extent this is correct; for instance, Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide have them, but in the interior it is not so. I have in my mind's eye at this moment an inland town at the head of one of our missions, where there is not a village within eighteen miles, and three years ago I visited every family in it, and found every man a papist except one, and he was a publican. Certainly there are villages laid out in all directions on Government maps, but until they are inhabited they are of no possible use to the missionary. If a spirit of genuine revivalism were secured, no doubt it would soon produce a mighty change; but this is what we have never witnessed in Australia to any great extent—the “love of gain” operates as an awful barrier against it. It is often difficult even to carry out a week's protracted meeting, as the friends can scarcely afford so many evenings. Many of our members of course are noble exceptions to this worldliness; but some (I speak it with the deepest sorrow) prefer going into neighbourhoods where the means of grace can never reach them; far away into the bush, and all for the sake of a little gain, which, by the bye, often turns out to be no gain at all, but a serious temporal loss, and of course invariably a spiritual one. In one instance (I am thankful I know no more), a brother who had been extensively useful as a local preacher in England, finding our cause very young and feeble, went over to a neighbouring church which had been established for years, in order to advance his worldly interests. As missionaries we have need of the sympathies and prayers of all the friends in England. We often labour in the midst of discouragements known only to ourselves and God. There is little or no poetry in our toil; it is a stern reality. We have not much to do with the heathen, but with Englishmen whose worldliness has developed itself to an extent that they themselves would have believed impossible before they left their native shores. We need more missionaries, and you are quite right, Mr. Editor, in appealing to our pious intelligent young men to come out; but let them not expect large flourishing churches, they will be mistaken if they do, as some of our brethren before have been, who have complained, perhaps not unjustly, that the real state of affairs had scarcely been made clear, and those very brethren have themselves laboured with honour and success, but without materially altering the state of affairs. Another serious drawback has been the want of an efficient system of exchange among the missionaries. With such a feeble staff of local preachers we have become almost congregational, that is, a missionary is found every Sabbath in the same pulpit; hence the excessive draught on his mental powers. He must spend a very great portion of his time in his study, and in some measure neglect that very important part of ministerial duty, family visiting; for if his pulpit become feeble, his prospects are blasted at once. The establishment of young churches requires a great amount of zealous effort on the part of the missionary, especially as nearly everything depends on himself; but a man must be almost more than human to carry everything forward with zeal and success under such circumstances for a long period. Upon the whole, the life of a colonial missionary is one of great labour; much anxiety, few encouragements, and small successes, demanding extensive information on almost all subjects, great firmness, unwearied diligence, and strong faith in God; but with all its discouragements and difficulties, I feel thankful to God that I have been for the last seven years, still remain, and expect to live and die, a PRIMITIVE METHODIST AUSTRALIAN MISSIONARY.

OBITUARY.

1. DIED at Flixborough, Winterton Circuit, January 28th, 1862, SUSANNAH GODFREY, aged eighty-two years. She had been a steady member of our society about fourteen years. Her conduct was such as becometh the gospel. She possessed a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. She was regular in her attendance on the means of grace. While her health and strength permitted, she took an active part in the services of the sanctuary. The infirmities and afflictions of old age she bore with entire resignation to the Divine will. By her frequent ascriptions of praise to God, she indicated the cheerful and joyous state of her mind. In the prospect of death she expressed her unshaken confidence in Jesus. He was her only hope. She departed this life in the prospect of a "joyful resurrection."

"Like a shock of ripe corn,
She enter'd heaven above;
Ripe in unfeign'd faith,
Ripe in hope and love.

Death brought the pilgrim sweet release,
Her end was calm, her end was peace."

May her sorrowing friends and the writer meet her in heaven. Wm. WHITE.

2. EMMA GILBERT, the subject of this sketch, was born at Hinckley, April 24th, 1834. From a child she knew the Scriptures. Although her parents were not religiously inclined, she attended Stockwell-head Sabbath-school till she was fifteen years of age. She was then taken from school and was led away with the vanities of this life. In 1853 she was married to Thomas Gilbert, and for six years they both lived in disregard of religion, seldom attending a place of worship, but desecrating God's holy day by walking the fields and lanes in search of pleasure. In the spring of 1860, she had a dream of future punishment, which made a deep impression on her mind, and on the mind of her husband, and brought them to our chapel Derby-road, Hinckley. They received the engrafted word with meekness, were made new creatures in Christ Jesus, and became members of our society, "being instant in season and out of season."

Her last illness was of short duration, yet her confidence was bright, and her hopes were firmly fixed upon the Rock of Ages. She had an impression from the first that she should die; but this gave her no alarm, her peace was made with heaven, and she waited her Lord's time. On Sunday, February 9th, she said to her husband, "I shall not die to-day; but I shall die to-morrow." He asked, "who told her?" She replied, "My dear Jesus." Her friends came round her bed. She exhorted them to meet her in heaven. Getting hold of her mother's hand, she said, "Mother, will you meet me in heaven? but you must go to chapel." Her brothers and sisters were next in like manner addressed. To her husband she said, "Thomas, I know you will meet me in heaven." On Monday, February 10th, 1862, her happy spirit took its flight to the Paradise of God, in the twenty-seventh year of her age. On Thursday her remains were interred in our beautiful cemetery; and on Sunday, February 16th, her death was improved by the writer in our chapel at Hinchley, to an overflowing congregation, from Psalm xxiii. 4. But, what is more important, ere the service concluded, one female came forward to join our church, and so fill up our broken ranks. May the Lord help us. Amen.

ARTHUR BRANLAND.

3. ELIZABETH DYSON, of Greetland, Halifax Circuit, was born Oct. 16th, 1842. When a child she was distinguished by a meek and quiet spirit, and by a modest and retiring disposition. When she was about twelve years of age, she began to attend our Sabbath school; and as she made considerable progress in learning, and was piously disposed, she was put into the select Bible class, soon after she was fourteen years of age. In those early days she was admired for her regularity, orderly conduct, and thoughtfulness.

Four years ago she attended a course of revival services at her usual place of worship, and became deeply concerned about her soul's salvation. Yes, such was the deep distress of her mind that she could scarcely sleep till she had found peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

At the close of the week, at the fellowship meeting, February 13th, 1858, it pleased God in mercy to grant sweet peace to her troubled heart. She then united with the people of God, and she continued a member till the day of her death. During these four years she was an ornament to our society, and she attended the public and private means of grace when health permitted.

It was her constant practice, morning, even, and at noon-day to retire and hold converse with her heavenly Father, who rewarded her openly. When I had the pleasure of seeing her in her usual place of worship of late, I beheld in her countenance marks of consumption, and indications of her approaching end. But in all her afflictions she was patient and resigned to the Divine will. To her mother she said, "Do not fret, mother, the Lord will do what seemeth to him good." Again she was heard to say "Praise the Lord, bless the Lord." And being assured that all things work together for good to them that love God, she said, "I shall miss many things, that is, the evils of this life, if I die." She talked as calmly about her departure as if she were about to take a journey of pleasure, and made arrangements for her class-mates and the writer to attend her funeral. She also spoke of her religious enjoyments. To her companions she said, "I have no fear of death. Religion is the one thing needful. I have a bright prospect of heaven." A similar statement of her safety she gave to the writer when he visited her. Thus talking, and blessing, and praising God, she departed this life for a glorious life in heaven, on the 13th day of February, 1862, in the twentieth year of her age.

A. WORSNUP.

4. HANNAH GILL, of the Park, in the Allendale Circuit, departed this life, January 17th, 1862, aged fifty-eight years. She continued without a personal interest in the work of Christ till July 1852, when through the agency of Primitive Methodism, she became conscious of her lost and undone condition, and was consequently induced to fly to Christ, the sinner's only hope and help. But for several years previous to this, her conduct was such as was calculated to put to the blush many a professed follower of Jesus. Within five years after her conversion she had the satisfaction of knowing that all the members of her family were converted to God, which indeed seemed to be the full realization of her highest earthly wish. She regularly attended her class till November 1858, when she became heavily afflicted with a tumour in her mouth, in consequence of which she had to undergo a severe surgical operation in Newcastle Infirmary. After several weeks confinement her health again began to recruit. But the return of the tumour rendered another operation necessary, in August 1859, which her wasted energies never surmounted, her constitution having been sapped thereby. In 1860, heart disease made its appearance, which eventually proved the cause of her death. But never during her heavy and protracted illness, was she heard to murmur or complain at the dealings of her heavenly Father, knowing that He is too wise to err, and too loving to be unkind. The call of the writer (her only son) to the Primitive Methodist ministry, (which took place nine weeks before her death) was to her a heavy trial. But though it awoke the strongest emotions of a mother's nature, it never called forth an expression of unwillingness for him to go. On being interrogated on the subject, she replied, "Yes, since the Lord wants him he must go." Her death was somewhat unexpected by the family, and consequently tended to deepen their grief. But they mourn not as those without hope, she having left behind in the records of holy living and happy dying, a bright testimony that she had on earth received a meekness for the inheritance of the saints in light.

On the day previous to her death, one of her daughters asked her if she was happy. "Yes," she replied, (as well as her faltering voice would admit) "Jesus will not leave me now." She then requested a chapter of the dear old Book to be read;—many a time its precious promises had lifted up her head. Surely they would not lose their virtue now? No. The 14th chapter of John's Gospel was read; and when these sweet words fell upon her ear, "In my Father's house are many mansions," "Yes!" (she exclaimed) "I shall soon see them, and occupy them for ever." And then, as if the symphony of the skies had caught her spirit's ear, she exclaimed,—

"And when I lose this stammering tongue," I'll sing as loud as they."

She then earnestly and affectionately requested the members of the family present to meet her in heaven. A short time before her spirit took its flight to its father-land, she exclaimed, "I am not afraid to die; all is well!" These were the last words she spoke. "All is well" gladdens our hearts below. "All is well" echoes through the courts above. May the reader and writer strive with all our ransomed powers, to meet with those who have gone before, and especially to meet Jesus there!

JOHN GILL.

5. Died at Binbrook, in the Market Rasen Circuit, on the 10th of February, 1862, JOSEPH HOGG. Our friend's early life was spent according to the course of this world, in folly and sin; but about thirty years ago, he was induced to attend a camp meeting held at Binbrook, and while the gospel message was being proclaimed, light broke upon his mind, and the all-absorbing question with him became, "What must I do to be saved?" His mental struggle was great, but he soon found peace in believing. His goodness, however, was as the early dew, it soon passed away. During his apostasy he frequently reflected on the times of refreshing and seasons of grace he had enjoyed in the communion of saints, and he at length resolved to return to the Shepherd and Bishop of his soul. Twenty years ago he was restored to the favour of his Heavenly Father, and joined our society at Binbrook. His piety, during his Christian life, was unquestionable. As an epistle, he was read and understood by those who surrounded him; he was remarkable for his attachment to the ministers of God: he loved their company, converse, and prayers. He was also a lover of God's Word, and made it the guide of his life; its precious promises cheered and enriched his soul, and sustained him amid the trials of his pilgrimage. Prayer was his delight, and he believed in its power with God. He was accustomed to pray for each member of his family separately at the throne of the heavenly grace, and his prayers were answered on their behalf; and he had the unspeakable happiness of seeing some of his family converted to God and united with the church. Three months ago, when returning from a visit to his daughter, his horse stumbled and fell, and threw him out of the cart. By the injuries he sustained he was for some time confined to his bed; and his sufferings were severe, but he bore them with Christian patience. During his affliction I visited him, and found him exercising an unwavering confidence in God, and calmly waiting the coming of his Lord. When visited by some of his class-mates, he gave satisfactory evidence of his acceptance, and told them that when he was gone, they need not be afraid to tell the people Joseph Hogg was gone to heaven; they need not make use of "ifs" and "buts," for he was going direct to heaven. When asked if the angels had come to bear his spirit home, he replied "Yes, they have all come;" and then, without a lingering groan, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus. WALLIS ANDREW.

6. LEAH NORTH died Feb. 2nd, 1862, in the twenty-ninth year of her age, at Kensington, Hammersmith Mission, Middlesex. Before her marriage her name was Linney, and the place of her nativity was North Marston, Buckinghamshire. At the age of two years and eight months her mother died, and her father, distressed in mind from his loss, enlisted as a soldier. So poor Leah was left to the care of her relations, who were very kind, and sent her to a week-day and Sabbath school. The instruction she received there was not entirely forgotten by her, though, like many others, she was deluded with the short-lived pleasures of sin. When in this state the Holy Spirit powerfully operated upon her mind, and at the age of thirteen she resolved to lead a new life; but her goodness was as the morning cloud and early dew, that passeth away. She again gave vent to the propensities of a depraved nature. Her besetments were music, dancing, and ungodly company; she followed this course till about the age of seventeen, when, under the influence of the Spirit, she was led to a Primitive Methodist place of worship, and under the soul-stirring sermons and powerful appeals to the conscience of brother John Wright, who was stationed in the Aylesbury Circuit, her soul was awakened from sleep. She at once resolved she would serve the Lord; she acknowledged her ignorance of the plan of salvation, but preachers and members took her by the hand, and she soon rejoiced in the happy sense of sins forgiven. In the year 1851 she united in marriage with Isaiah North, and shortly after removed from Aylesbury Circuit to Hammersmith Mission, and ever since she has been in the society there. Her conduct adorned the doctrine of the gospel; her life was hid with Christ in God, and the evidence of her acceptance in Christ, realized at her conversion, she never lost. Her affliction was short, but her sufferings were great, but she endured all without a single murmur or complaint. Before her affliction she dreaded death, but the Almighty, who had given her grace to live, now gave her grace to suffer—grace to part with all things, even the darling babe from her breast, and grace to die; the dark entrance to the grave was now lighted up with the hope of the gospel; death had lost its sting, and the grave its victory. To every question relative to her happiness and safety she readily responded, while heavenly joy beamed in her countenance. She trusted fully in Christ; in Him she lived and died. A pious and affectionate husband and four children mourn their loss. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like hers."

H. ELTON.

7. DIED at Southbergh, Rockland Circuit, January 31st, 1862, aged sixty-one, MARY WHYETT. When about thirty-four years of age, she began to sit under the Primitive Methodist ministry; soon the word produced its blessed effects on her heart. Godly sorrow was followed by faith in him who is able to save; and then she said, "This people shall be my people and their God shall be my God." But after some years she lost her confidence through unwatchfulness; no rest however could she find until she returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of her soul. She again joined our people and continued a member until she died. Her affliction was severe,—she was not able to lie down in bed for ten months, and the last three weeks of her life she could not bear to be removed from her chair. But she bore all with the greatest patience. She had however, a hard struggle to give up her husband and a grandson that she had brought up; but at last she became fully resigned, and said, "The Lord's will be done." From that time her confidence grew stronger and she repeated several times,

"There I shall bathe my weary soul
In seas of Heavenly rest."

Her aged mother sitting by her side, she reached out her hand, and said, "Mother, mother, my dear mother, you must lead a different life, or you will never meet me in heaven!" Then, turning to her husband, she said, "I must leave you; that crown of bright glory is waiting for me." On one occasion, the writer said to her;

"Yonder's my house and portion fair,"
she smilingly said,

"My treasure and my"—

but could say no more, but clasped her hands in token of victory. Sister Bowen came in and said, "The Lord will give dying grace;" and she said, "Living grace too;" and thus departed to be with Jesus.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

EARTH has another vacant chair, but heaven has gained another redeemed spirit.

8. CATHERINE TOY, the subject of this sketch, was born at Penzance, Cornwall, in May, 1838, and died at St. Ives, February 7th, 1862, in the twenty-fourth year of her age. Her parents came to reside at the latter town, when Catherine was in her childhood, and for more than twenty years they have held sittings in our chapel; yet I believe most of the family remained unrenewed by grace, till rather more than two years ago, when our departed sister, according to her own statement, became decided for the Lord. One of our leaders states that while in chapel he was much concerned about her immortal spirit; and though the enemy repulsed him, and would have kept him back, he took up the cross and spoke to her on the subject of religion: deep conviction took hold of her, and in the week following, when he saw her, she desired him to pray for her; and after a long and mighty conflict the Lord spoke peace to her soul. And a few days before her departure she told me that at that time she understood what she had long wanted to know, and that was the meaning of the "still small voice," and added, "I have retained a consciousness of sins forgiven to the present time."

My dear friend appeared always to look at the sunny side of things; with beautiful simplicity she dwelt on God's mercies, as well as on his chastisements; so that she saw the bright side of the cloud. In her class meeting her language was that of holy confidence: often did she exclaim, "I do love Jesus! yes, I do love him more and more! Bless his holy name." Her soft cheerful voice, and kind loving looks were spontaneous, and acted like magic on her class of girls in the Sabbath school; hence they esteemed her highly, because she always endeavoured to imbue their minds with the high principles of Christianity. She said, with tears flowing down her cheeks, just before her end, "I always did love little children, and many times when they have been naughty in other classes, they have been sent to me. I have spoken kindly to them about Jesus, and they have learned their lessons with pleasure. Only the other day, a little girl came to ask me how she could get converted?" Here her feelings seemed to overpower her. Alas! that her life's journey should be so soon ended. Her constitution was delicate, disease took hold of her lovely frame, and on February 3rd, I saw the spirit would soon wing its way to glory. I said, "You are going home;" "May I go?" was her reply, I said, "Yes." "Oh! praise Him, I shall soon be home." In the course of the day when her dear mother and other friends were weeping, she said, "Don't weep, Ma, I trust my removal from you will be the means of drawing you nearer to Christ." She had often prayed for her parents, and had also set before them a good example, in reference to temporal and spiritual matters. On the Lord's day, when she returned from school, instead of sitting down to dine with the family, she would take her Bible, and retire to her chamber to read and pray. She did not approve of cooking and feasting on the Holy Sabbath, she knew that the soul must have supreme attention, and she worked out her idea of holiness in the practice of every day life. Her devotedness to the Saviour testified to others that she felt the power of that delightful sentiment of Paul, "While we look not at the things that are seen; for the things that are seen are temporal; but the things that are not seen are eternal."

Her modest, neat appearance was commendable. She did not conform to the world in dress; O no, her treasure and her heart were in heaven, and when the rude hand of death was unclothing her immortal spirit, she exclaimed, "I have made every sacrifice for Christ. Bless his holy name. He brought me through persecution and affliction, and he will not leave me now!" At another time she said, "My feet are in the river, but I fear no evil." A holy quiet reigned within, and it may be truly said, that our young sister passed into eternity without a struggle or a groan, under the shinings of the eternal ones, to a land of celestial light and love, where all is one brilliant flood of glory. To my sister, Catherine Toy, it was not the valley of death, but the valley of the shadow of death." I trust that her holy example and earnest prayers will be the means of drawing her dear parents to Jesus.

Her bereaved mother filled her daughter's place in my class last week, and her only and very dear brother, joined friend Jennings' class last Sabbath; so that I hope, although the reaper has cut down one of our flowers, others will bloom and unfold beneath the beams of the Sun of righteousness. May it be the case for Christ's sake. Amen.

JANE HARVEY.

9. MARY ANN HORLOCK, of Newport, Isle of Wight, was born March 9th, 1811, and died January 21st, 1862. She is said to have had serious impressions from her childhood, but she did not experience a change of heart, until about sixteen years of age, when a sermon, preached by the Rev. J. Bishop, in Wodehill Chapel, Newport, from "Will ye also go away?" was the honoured means in God's hands of her salvation. She joined the Primitive Methodist Society about the year 1840, and retained her membership until the time of her decease.

She was a Sabbath-school teacher for at least twenty years, and was distinguished for her regular attendance, and faithfulness in the discharge of her duties. She suffered much, but bore her sufferings with Christian calmness and resignation. Her last words were "Come, Lord Jesus, come!" W. BAITSON.

10. MRS. SARAH CROXSHALL, whose death we here record, was born at Aston-on-Clun, in May, 1837. Her parents are members of the Established Church, but sometimes attend our meetings. She began to attend our services when quite young, and formed a very strong attachment to our people. She was induced to attend a camp-meeting some six years ago, at Leemore Common, where she became convinced of her lost state. The next day she attended a tea-meeting held at the same place, and in the public meeting after, found redemption through the blood of Christ. She at once joined in Church fellowship with us. Her life was remarkably consistent. She preferred plainness of dress to the fopperies of fashion, and the quiet discharge of her home-duties, to gossip in neighbours' houses: She was very retiring in disposition, and noted for affectionateness and kindness. She was married to Brother E. Croxshall, now one of our local preachers, in December, 1860. Their life was happy. The meetings were held in their house. She was a strong-built, blooming woman, who to all appearance, had a long, useful, and happy life before her. But often where we least suspect it, the Destroyer stands with uplifted arm to crush the earthly house into the dust. It was so in this case. Our beloved sister was taken ill in the third week in January of the present year, and to the surprise of her friends she said she was sure it was unto death. She heard the voice of the messenger of God calling her home. Some people, the doctor included, thought it advisable to remove the meetings, but she insisted on their being continued there, affirming that the praises and prayers of God's people in her house were more valuable to her than anything else. She was calm and happy through the whole of her brief affliction; sometimes her language was that of triumph. She frequently alluded to her departure. The fear of death was removed. She died in the triumph of faith at Holderly, in the Church Stretton Branch, of the Bishop's Castle Circuit, February 8th. In her death the Church has lost a valuable member, her husband an affectionate wife, the ministers a sympathising and helpful friend, and the world a good citizen. She is gone, and we meekly bow to the will of the Highest. But her light has not been extinguished, only lost in the eternal brightness. WILLIAM JONES.

11. Died at Newbury, February 10th, 1862, ANN WOODWARD, aged twenty-two years. She was the subject of early impressions, which saved her from many vices, to which youth is generally exposed, and she was blessed with a pious father, who endeavoured to restrain her youthful mind, and to impress it with the things belonging to her present and future well-being.

Notwithstanding these privileges she remained a stranger to experimental religion until the sixteenth year of her age, when she was prevailed upon to make a surrender of herself to God, and through faith in the sacrificial merits of Christ she obtained peace. Rejoicing in God her Saviour she united with us, and continued a consistent member of our society until she changed mortality for life. Her class-meetings now became her special delight, which was evinced by her constant attendance, her place at the house of God being seldom empty. She was indeed a pattern.

During the year 1861, she was laid up for a long time with fever, and it was then thought that she never would be able to be out again; but she so far recovered as to be able to walk about. She took cold, however, which completely prostrated her again, and brought on her end with great rapidity. Her sufferings were of a painful nature, yet they were borne with becoming patience and Christian fortitude. Some few days before her death she was particularly earnest in her exhortations to her mother, entreating her to seek God, and meet her in heaven. She also remarked, "When I arrive in the happy land" I will sing, "There will be no more sorrow there." As her extreme weakness rendered speaking difficult, she was requested, provided she should not be able to speak at the last moments of life, to wave her handkerchief in token of victory if all were right; and this she was enabled to do for several seconds; and after a few convulsive struggles her happy spirit took its flight to rest. Her mortal remains were placed in their resting-place on the 14th day of February, amidst weeping friends and relations. The death of our sister has been the means in the hands of God of leading a brother and sister of hers to seek peace through believing, and they have filled up her place. May they all meet in heaven.

THOMAS CUMMINS.

12. Died at Biggleswade, in the Bal-dock station, February 22nd, 1862, MARY ARNOLD, one of the oldest members of our society there.

In the year 1848, Brother J. Guy made his appearance in this town as a Primitive Methodist missionary. He sounded the Gospel trumpet, and many flocked to hear him, among whom was sister Arnold. While listening to the truth, "as it is in Jesus," she was convinced of her sinful state and fled to Christ, found peace through believing, and at once united with the infant cause. At that time the class met in what is commonly called a "Van hovel, or a Gig house." She remained with the people of her first choice until death.

The affliction which terminated her earthly career was painful and protracted, yet she did not murmur. I visited her several times during her affliction, and always found her resting on the great atonement. She frequently repeated those sweet words of Wesley,

"I the chief of sinners am,
But Jesus died for me."

On Saturday, February 22nd, she said her confidence in Christ was strong; and after advising her daughter to meet her in heaven, she waved her hand in token of victory, and left the ranks below to join the ranks above, in the fifty-third year of age. ROBERT HILTON.

12. WILLIAM GULL was born in 1795 at Wolverton, in the Lynn Circuit, one of the most rural and picturesque hamlets in Norfolk.

In early life he followed the occupation of a coast sailor. The manifestation of his desires, inclinations, and pursuits, was seen in his leanings toward the pleasures of sin, merry company, the giddy dance, the sparkling glass, and the drunkard's song. Subsequently he gave up the seafaring life, and settled at his native village as an humble labourer.

About twenty years ago a gracious revival of religion broke out there through the instrumentality of the Primitive Methodists; and William Gull was one of the converts. The Lord said, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love! therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee." He cast in his lot with our people and adorned his profession by a holy life. His class-leader, Brother Abraham Claxton, gives him an excellent character, as being a steady, consistent, honest, unassuming Christian,—doing justly, loving mercy, and walking humbly with his God. Though poor and burdened with the cares of a large family, he was never behind in his contributions to the best of all causes. In his estimation the Saviour eclipsed everything,—was all his salvation and all his desire. His duty was his delight, and his delight was to be at the means of grace; to him they were well-springs of gladness, "Times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." It was at one of these meetings, the last Sabbath that he was privileged to enjoy on earth, that he joined in singing the impressive lines,

"How many to their endless homes,
This solemn moment fly!
And we are to the margin come,
And shortly we must die."

How true in his case. On the following Saturday he was taken seriously ill, but managed to get through his day's labour. When he reached home his family saw that he was very unwell, and requested that some medical advice should be sought; but he refused, saying, "I hope I shall soon be better." Though very ill his friends never saw him more cheerful and happy. He went up into his room, committed his soul in prayer to God, and got into bed; and while his wife was preparing some necessary things for him, he had sweetly fallen asleep in Jesus. He died February 15th, 1862. Thus the blessed religion which he had enjoyed and professed for twenty years, and which had often cheered and encouraged him on life's rugged path, now enabled him to turn the very grapple into certain conquest. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Brother Gull had finished his week's work and was ready for the Sunday rest; but the Saturday eve of life was come, and ere the morning sun dawned upon the earthly Sabbath, the Master called him

"From the wayside lodging,
To the sweet home of peace."

And he began the eternal Sabbath in heaven.

"Chime on, ye bells, again begin,
And ring the Sabbath morning in,
The labourer's week-day work is done,
The rest begun—

Which Christ has for his people won."

W. THORSEY.

14. My dear mother, LIZZY BENNETT, of Old Radford, Nottingham Second Circuit, departed this life 17th February, 1862, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. From my earliest recollections, she feared the Lord, and was united with the Primitive Methodists, at Selston, in the Belper Circuit. And to her precepts and example, under God, I attribute my first religious impressions; and never while memory holds its seat, shall I forget her solicitude for my spiritual weal. Her earthly career was connected with trials of no ordinary kind for many years. And under some of these trials, as she subsequently informed me, she was assailed with powerful temptations; but grace enabled her to triumph. The luxuries of life she had not; but still her habitation was a scene of cleanliness, comfort, and order: economy and industry, were the habit of her life. And I trust her practical lessons, both of a moral and religious character, will not be lost upon her surviving children. She lived to see her four sons converted to God. John and Thomas are local preachers in the Belper Circuit, Henry is an exhorter in the Nottingham Second Circuit, and myself a travelling preacher in the Pontefract Circuit. And I hope and pray that the sudden removal of my dear mother to the eternal world, will, under God, lead all her sorrowing children to seek a saving interest in Christ.

The evening before her departure she attended the public worship of God, and after some religious conversation with my brother Henry, who had been speaking in public at Old Lenton, they retired to rest. About four o'clock the next morning she was awake with a cough, and in a few minutes expired, without articulating a single word. "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

W. BENNETT.

1. THE SILENT LIFE.

THE inward and the silent life,
 Ah! who shall tell of this?
 The life that's hid with Christ alone,
 To Him confest, to Him is known.
 The life of perfect bliss.

The life that's rooted deeper down
 Than passion, lust, or pride;
 And yet upspringing higher far,
 And grander, too, and mightier
 Than anything beside.

The life that loves to be alone,
 And feed on solitude,—
 And ponder on God's Holy Word,
 And watch and wait upon the Lord,
 And thus get fortitude.

And yet that learns to feel for all,
 Who fellow-feeling claim;
 To laugh with those who laugh, and mourn
 With those by grief and anguish torn,
 Or sin and madd'ning shame.

That longs, uprising from itself,
 With all its main and might,—
 To take the sword, and shield, and spear,
 And with a heart that knows no fear,
 To battle for the right.

And battle with no craven hand
 Or cold half-hearted zeal,—
 But, foremost in the Holy War,
 To be an earnest warrior,
 Doing his duty well.

Be this my part. O may I live
 In Christian fealty,— Spending each day the silent hour,
 Learning Thy love, Thy truth, Thy power,
 Growing, O Christ, in Thee.

Teach me Thy will, that thus I may Triumphant march on,—
 And love to live, and live to love,
 And labour here, but look above,
 Until my journey's done.

WILLIAM JEVES STYLES.

2. MUSIC.

'Tis not in the harp's soft melting tone
 That music and harmony dwell alone;
 'Tis not in the voice so tender and clear,
 That comes like an angel's voice on the ear:
 They both are sweet, but o'er dale and hill
 For me there's as beautiful music still.

I hear it in every murmuring breath
 That waves the bells of the purple
 heath;
 In the watchdog's bark, in the shepherd's
 song,
 In the rustic's laugh, as it echoes along;
 In the whizzing sound of the wild bird's wing,
 There's music, there's music in everything.

There's music in the evening breeze,
 When it sweeps the blossoms from the trees,
 And wafts them into the moonlit heaven,
 Like fairy barks from their anchors driven;
 And they through the clear and cloudless light
 Float in a waveless sea of light.

There's music too when the winds are high,
 And the clouds are sailing through the sky;
 When the ocean foams and lashes the shore, [roar;
 And the lightnings flash and the thunders
 Then, then, in the tempest's jubilee,
 There's music, and beauty, and grandeur for me!

There's music, sweet music, where insects play, [of day,
 When they burst into life and the light
 And shake such sounds from their shining wings,
 As the wind makes in murm'ring o'er
 'harp strings;
 In the song of the birds, in the rippling streams,
 O, these are such sounds as we hear in our dreams!

There's music most blest in the house of prayer,
 O the sweetest and loveliest of music is there!
 While hearts and voices together blend,
 And their mingled tones above ascend;
 There is the holiest music given
 From the heart's warm altar up to heaven.

BIOGRAPHY.

1. MEMOIR OF MR. RICHARD TURNER.

WHEN a good man dies he leaves behind him that which is infinitely more precious than earthly riches or worldly honours—a good name, fragrant with many a virtue. Fame may raise for him no chiselled monument to perpetuate his memory—history may fancy she has nothing worthy of record, and poetry be silent on the subject; yet though bard, sculptor, and historian pass him by, he has nobler honours than they can give, for his record is on high, and his sterling virtues will raise for him a monument in the hearts and affections of the pious; and the influence of his life shall be felt through coming time. If he alone is truly great who is truly good, then it is clear that the deeds most worthy of record are those accomplished through the piety and prayers of God's saints; for they are the great benefactors of their race, the noblest sons of men. To record their deeds, and pay some tribute of affection to their memory, is a grateful task, yet withal one of such solemn importance, that it is desirable some angel's hand should guide the pencil.

The subject of the following sketch, Mr. R. Turner, of Halton, Preston Brook Circuit, commenced his mortal career in February, 1812, at Risley, in the parish of Winwick. Up to the age of fifteen, he lived after the course of this world. About that time the providence of God led the Primitive Methodists to labour in that part of the country. Through the singularity of their appearance and mode of worship, he, in connection with many other ungodly youths, was constrained to go for the purpose of making sport; but while he listened to the plain, earnest, and pointed appeals of the preachers, the arrow of conviction entered his heart, he was made to see the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and feel the weight of his burden.

About that time powerful revivals were taking place in the country around, and among the rest, this hardened spot, where resided the subject of this sketch, was visited with a copious outpouring from on
